Turf, 63, has spent much of her career working with Segal, 69, and has helped to set the retailer's style and strategic direction. After starting in part-time sales in 1968, she became a store manager. She moved to Crate's corporate headquarters in 1972. She took over merchandising in 1975, rising to executive vice president of merchandising and marketing until 1996, when Segal named her president, a title she will retain.

As for going green, Crate has got a head start. It got rid of packing peanuts in 2006 and has been moving to eco-friendly catalog practices for years. Last year, it advertised its sustainable furniture in national magazines and just recently created a section on its Web site to tout its green strategy.

Crate is introducing more sustainable upholstery and chair frames, using soy- and corn-based foam for its cushions, offering barware out of recycled glass and relying on bamboo, one of the world's most replenishable plants, in everything from dining tables to cutting boards.

To be sure, Crate is not alone. The green trend is happening industry wide from Pottery Barn to Wal-Mart. Can Crate's history as a trend-spotter and retailer with an eye for detail allow it do it any better?

"To be a successful retailer, you have to have something unique," said Turf. "Our mission is to have the product stand on its own."

COURTESY BARBARA TURF

Barbara Turf, CEO of the Crate and Barrel, is heading the effort to make the company environmentally friendly.

COURTESY CRATE&BARREL.COM

Crate and Barrel, the popular home supplies store, is joining the trend in becoming environmentally friendly. Other stores "going green" are Pottery Barn and Wal Mart.

CHECK THE ARTS BLOG
FOR THE SPRING CONCERT LINE-UP!
www.allaccessarts.blogspot.com

Take out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings.
- No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Free to no spam

By posting on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Need Experience?
Located in the Campus Center Basement.
What:
Business Manager
Where:
The Daily Collegian
When:
Next Year
All majors accepted!
If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.
Now Accepting Applications!

SUMMER POSITIONS AVAILABLE!
UNIVERSITY HELPLINE OPERATORS

The University Helpline is looking for responsible, highly motivated undergraduate students to staff a telephone line designed to provide help to current and prospective undergraduate students and their families. We are seeking students who are positive, energetic, have excellent communication skills, and enjoy working in a team environment. Staff will be trained in all aspects of Bursar, Financial Aid, and Housing Assignment policies and procedures. There are both Full Time and Part Time, and Work Study and Non-Work Study positions are available. You must be presently enrolled and in good standing as an undergraduate student.

June 16 – August 29, 2008
Starting Salary $8.25/hr

Applications are available in the Students Affairs Office, 319 Whitmore Building. Applications are due to the Student Affairs Office by 5:00pm, Tuesday, April 22, 2008. If you have any questions, please contact Sylvia Langford, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at 545-2300.

Genes may increase cancer risk

Human genome studies show new risk for cigarette smokers

BY JEREMY MANIER
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

CHICAGO — In the latest project to use the findings of human genome research to assess individual health risks, a suite of new studies has found a genetic variant that can increase smokers' risk of getting lung cancer by as much as 80 percent.

One of the research teams, deCODE Genetics of Iceland, already has incorporated the discovery into a package of tests it sells to the public, offering consumers genetic profiles that estimate a person's risk for 26 conditions including prostate cancer, diabetes and even male-pattern baldness.

Authors of the three cancer reports published Wednesday in the journal Nature employed a powerful new method to scan thousands of people's genomes looking for links to disease. The results suggest that scientists are beginning to reap the benefits of the Human Genome Project, which promised a new era of personalized medicine based on an individual's genetic risks.

But experts caution that many of the emerging tests are brand new and have severe limitations.

For example, none of the new findings in the new lung cancer study would change doctors' basic advice regarding cigarettes: If you don't smoke, don't start, and if you do smoke, try to quit.

Kari Stefansson, chief executive officer of the Icelandic company, conceded that its lung cancer test would not aid a typical person's health decisions but argued that "knowledge is never evil in and of itself."

"As a diagnostic test, I think, it is of no value," said Stefansson, who also co-wrote his team's report. "I am actually even a little bit afraid that some may look at it as a green light to smoke, and that's something I would not want to contribute to." Several experts pointed out that although an 80 percent higher risk may sound significant, all smokers are at high risk of lung cancer. The risk for smokers without the genetic variant is about 14 percent, compared with 23 percent for those with the variant.

The usefulness of such genetic information for ordinary consumers is a subject of intense debate among researchers and genetic counselors.

Genome-wide tests are at such an early stage that the risk assessment a consumer gets today may well be obsolete next year, if not next month.

"There's a serious concern that people will be flooded with information that changes over time, and they'll have little idea how to use it to improve their health," said Dr. David Hunter, a professor of epidemiology at the Harvard School of Public Health, who co-wrote a commentary on the research in Nature.

Yet Stefansson said the field is moving so fast that he thinks wide-ranging genetic profiles of individual patients will be common practice within five years.

The road to such tests began in 2001 with the completion of the Human Genome Project, which mapped out all the genes that most people possess.

That blueprint varies slightly from person to person, often in the form of tiny variations called SNPs, or "snips." Scientists have made steady progress this decade in cataloging millions of points where people's genomes frequently vary.

The lung cancer studies released Wednesday used a type of analysis called genome-wide association, scanning about 300,000 genetic markers for variation and seeing how they match up with people's diseases and habits.

Scores of similar genome-wide analysis studies have been published since early 2007, as improved lab techniques made such work almost routine. In March, groups from America, Britain and the deCODE team published papers showing about a dozen genome regions that affect the risk of prostate cancer.

"The effect of any one of these genetic markers is small, but we're looking at complex diseases where many genes have a role," said Dr. Stephen J. Chanock, chief of translational genomics at the National Cancer Institute, who led one of the recent prostate cancer studies.

Each of the three new lung cancer studies used data from thousands of people, and the deCODE study had the largest sample with about 40,000 participants. All three research groups zeroed in on variation in a portion of chromosome 15 that was previously known to affect cells that respond to nicotine.

The researchers disagreed on whether the genetic variants make people more likely to stay hooked on cigarettes, or if they directly affected the development of cancer. The deCODE group found a direct link with smoking behavior, but the other two teams did not.

"Future studies will tell us whether the effect has more to do with smoking or lung cancer, but my intuition is it's a combination," said Chanock, who co-wrote the Nature commentary on the lung cancer studies.

Stefansson said his study found that smokers who had one copy of the genetic variant smoked an average of one more cigarette per day than people who lacked the variant. Smokers with two copies of the variant smoked two more cigarettes per day than those without the genetic quirk.

Some of the genes involved play a role in how the brain handles nicotine, which lends credence to the idea that the genetic variants influenced smokers' behavior. The genes also can affect how other parts of the body respond to nicotine, said Dr. Chris Amos, whose University of Texas group published one of the new studies.

"It raises the possibility that there's a direct effect through nicotine in activating cells that go on to become cancerous," Amos said.

Several experts pointed out that a test for the variant would not greatly improve doctors' ability to predict which smokers will get lung cancer. "Because the predictive value is so low, (the test) seems unlikely to be something that people will clamor to have," wrote Nancy Cox, a professor of human genetics at the University of Chicago, in an e-mail response to questions.

If the genetic variation does affect whether a person gets hooked on cigarettes, that could lead to targeted interventions for people at high risk of nicotine dependence. Stefansson said the link to smoking behavior shows how complicated the role of genes can be.

"We've always looked at lung cancer as a purely environmental disease caused by smoking, but now we have a genetic variant that makes you go into this environment repeatedly," Stefansson said. "The distinction between nature and nurture gets completely blurred."

COURTESY KRT

Through recent studies of the human genome project, scientists have discovered that having a certain gene might increase a smoker's risk of getting lung cancer.

Overshadowing solar panels

BY PAUL ROGERS
SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS

SAN JOSE, Calif. — A smackdown between Silicon Valley environmentalists that has made national news is coming to a close, with chain saws buzzing.

Richard Treanor and Carolynn Bissett of Sunnyvale, Calif., were criminally prosecuted because redwood trees in their backyard cast a shadow over their neighbor's solar panels. On Wednesday morning, they plan to have a tree trimmer chop the two redwoods that a judge ordered removed in December, in effect ending the case.

"We're out of dollars. No more money for more lawyering," Treanor said.

They've spent $37,000 in legal bills, he said, and can't afford to appeal the ruling.

Although they lost the battle, in the future tree owners may yet win the war.

On Monday, state Sen. Joe Simitian, a Palo Alto Democrat, introduced a bill that would change California law so that anybody whose trees were planted before a neighbor's solar panels were installed can't be required to cut them back or chop them down. That would apply even if the trees grow up later and cast a shadow over the solar panels, as happened in this case.

"There are legitimate competing interests here," Simitian said.

"This is a goal to try and balance those competing interests. I think most folks will find it a fair balance."

Under Simitian's bill, it would continue to be illegal for trees to cast a shadow over solar panels if the panels were installed before the trees were planted. But if the trees were there first, they have the right to stay.

The solar-redwood scuffle, first reported in the San Jose Mercury News, turned up on CNN, Fox News, National Public Radio and other outlets as an "Only in California" kind of squabble.

But with mounting concerns over global warming, and incentives for solar power growing in many states, how to balance trees with solar power's need for sunshine is an issue that isn't going away.

The showdown began in 2001, when neighbor Mark Vargas installed a 10-kilowatt solar system on his roof and on a 10-foot-high trellis.

Vargas said he first asked Treanor and Bissett to chop down eight redwoods that the couple had planted from 1997 to 1999 along the fence separating their yards. The trees range in height from about 20 to 40 feet tall. Later, he asked them to trim the trees to about 15 feet high.

"I still think it is sad that we couldn't have figured it out between neighbors," Vargas said. "I offered to pay to remove the trees."

Treanor and Bissett liked the trees for privacy. They suggested Vargas move his solar panels, which make up an array that is about three times the size of a typical residential system. He said doing so would reduce the amount of electricity they could generate for his five-bedroom home and electric car.

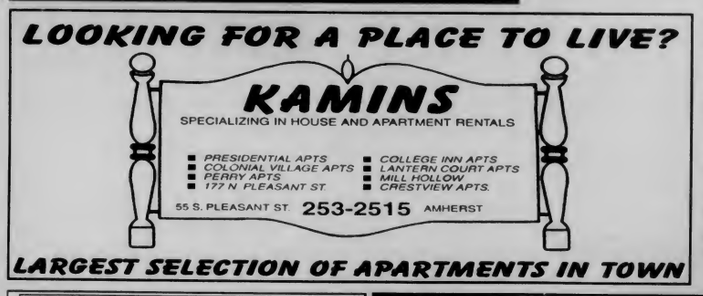
After several years of failed mediation, Vargas filed a complaint with the Santa Clara County district attorney arguing that the trees violated California's "Solar Shade Control Act," a rarely used law signed in 1978 by former Gov. Jerry Brown.

Prosecutors agreed and ordered the trees cut under penalty of $1,000 a day fines.

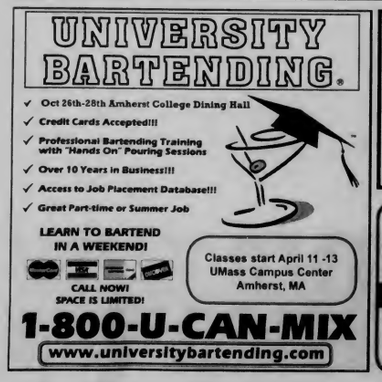
In December, Santa Clara County Superior Court Judge Kurt Kumli found the couple guilty of violating the Solar Shade Control Act. In a partial victory for each side, he ruled that six of the trees can remain and the two generating the most shade must be "altered or removed in such a way so that 10 percent or less" of the solar panels are shaded.

"We're not against solar power. We are 100 percent for it," said Treanor. "But trees are as important for many reasons — habitat for wildlife, noise reduction, storing carbon — as solar. All we want is a balance."

Vargas says it's not fair for neighbors to reduce the capacity of anyone to generate clean power from the sun. If any of the other redwoods grows too tall, he said he'll seek to have them removed also because eventually they will form "an 80-foot fence." He noted he recently donated $250 to the national Arbor Day Foundation.



"I don't have a problem with trees," he said. "I have a problem with redwoods growing 20 feet from my house."



CAURTESY ALTERNATIVE.COM

When it comes to the environment, people are trying to find ways to balance installation of solar panels with the planting of new trees.

Owls sitting atop conference, Spiders only other unbeaten

COURTESY DUQUESNE ATHLETICS

Temple's Whitney Richards was named the Atlantic 10's Co-Player of the Week along with Duquesne's Kat McNish. The award is Richard's second this season.

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Temple improved its standing in the Atlantic 10 this week with a pair of key wins over conference rivals La Salle and Massachusetts, scoring a total of 30 goals over the two games. The Owls exploded for 18 goals in an 18-12 win over the Explorers and followed that up with a 12-9 victory over the Minutewomen.

Midfielders Whitney Richards and Berkley Summerlin each scored seven goals in the Owls' wins.

Summerlin scored four goals with two assists against the Explorers (0-11, 0-4 Atlantic 10) and led the Owls (8-3, 5-0 A-10) defensively, forcing four turnovers in their 18-12 win. Senior Hillary Richards added to her sister's offense (four goals, four assists) against the Explorers with nine draw controls.

Temple ended the first half with a 13-5 lead. Midfielder Chelsea Rosiek scored the team's first goal two minutes into the game. La Salle responded quickly with back-to-back goals within 10 seconds of each other to bring the game to 2-1.

The Explorers lost the lead after the Owls scored six unanswered goals to end the half. La Salle outscored Temple in the second half, but it was not enough to cover the first-half deficit.

Summerlin and Whitney played a big part in the 12-9 win over UMass (3-9, 1-2 A-10) as well with three goals each.

Whitney's contribution to the Owls this week earned her the A-10 player of the week honors. She currently has 29 goals and 21 assists.

Temple's A-10 record is its best since the 1998 season. The Owls' next game is Friday against George Washington.

LADY DUKES OFF THE SNIDE

Freshman Liz Fey scored the game-winning goal Friday in a high-scoring, but close 15-14 decision over George Washington.

Attack Meghan Frederick broke the tie at 13 a piece before Fey's free-position goal maintained the lead for the Lady Dukes (4-8, 1-2 A-10) despite giving up another goal with 4:39 remaining in the game.

Junior Kathleen McNish had a season-high eight points while midfielder Ashley Wood recorded her fifth hat trick of the season. Jenna Faulkner broke the Colonials' (3-9, 1-3 A-10) fast start with a goal 3:30 into the game.

A-10 Lacrosse

Frederick ended the half with a last second goal to give the Lady Dukes a 10-7 lead at the half.

Sophomore Sarah Carson started the half with a goal 34 seconds into the game to extend DU's lead to 11-7. The Lady Dukes extended their lead to 13-8 before GW responded with five unanswered goals to knot the game up.

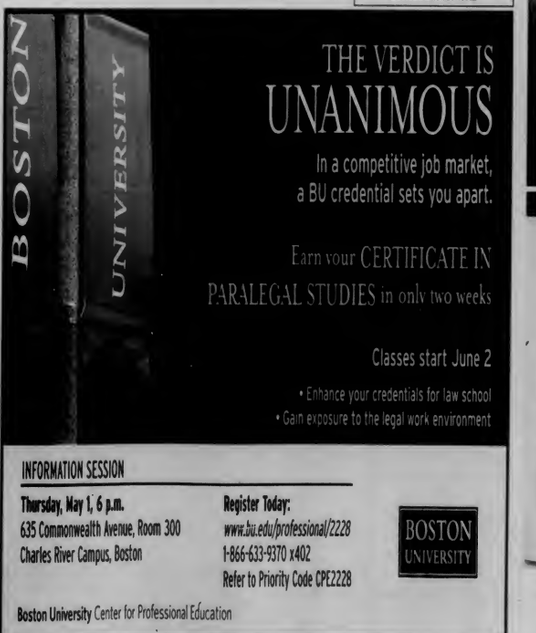
However, it was not enough to keep DU from winning its first A-10 game.

RICHMOND UNBEATEN IN A-10

Richmond improved its record this week with wins over Duquesne and St. Bonaventure. Attack Lexie Marrocco scored the game-winning goal with under 10 seconds left in the game to push the Spiders over the Bonnies, 10-9 on April 4.

St. Bonaventure (2-8, 1-3 A-10) threatened Richmond's (6-7, 4-0 A-10) perfect conference record early in the game with a 9-5 lead and just over 13 minutes left to play. The Spiders responded with five unanswered goals to record the third A-10 win of the season.

Junior Allison Furstenburg and Marrocco finished with hat tricks while junior Mandy Friend and freshman Anne Ryan each scored two goals.



Richmond found itself in a similar situation two days later against Duquesne after being down six at the half, 11-5. The Lady Dukes out-shot the spiders, 28-4, in the first half with five more draw controls.

Richmond came out in the second half with Ryan scoring her first of two goals that game in under 30 seconds. Senior Jenna Hubbard continued the rally with two goals of her own to shrink the deficit to three. The Spiders controlled the defensive side as well, keeping DU scoreless for 19 minutes. Richmond outscored the Lady Dukes 10-2 in the second half, keeping its undefeated record in-tact.

Friend was one of seven Spiders to score with four goals of her own. They host Temple on Sunday in their next conference game. Temple is the only other undefeated team in the A-10.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

UM downs BC in five

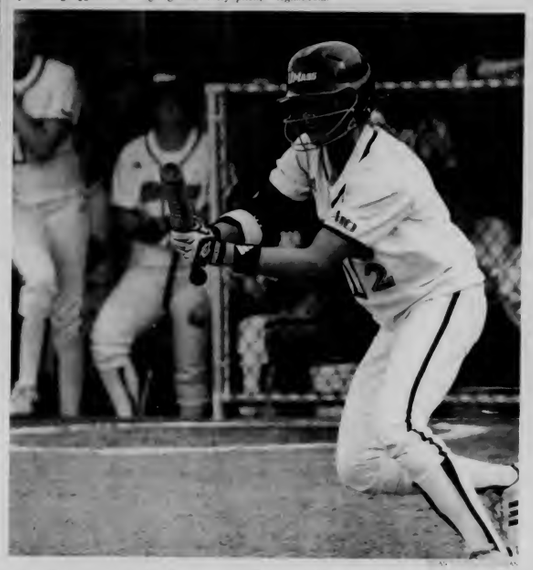
SOFTBALL from page 10

with how we handled ourselves at the plate."

The Eagles called for a pitching change and brought in freshman Allison Gage. Gage got junior Whitney Mollica to ground into a fielder's choice as BC could only get the runner at third, letting in the second run. Junior right fielder Samantha Salato hit a single up the middle, scoring Proctor from second to make it, 3-0. Sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves flied out, but knocked in another run.

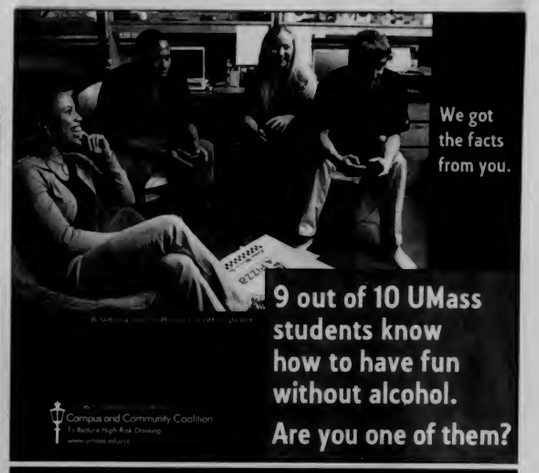
With back-to-back singles from freshman designated hitter Lindsay Maroney and junior second baseman Carly Morin, the Minutewomen pushed the lead to 7-0. Normandin, who started the inning, knocked in the eighth and final run with a double. She tried to stretch the double into a triple, but was called out at third to end the inning.

Williams said she and the rest of the offense was "just being aggressive and going after every pitch, every ball that's on the plate."



Mollica was the only batter to strikeout in the bottom of the fourth inning. What is more impressive is that not only did the Minutewomen have one strikeout, but they only had one walk. UMass was able to connect for eight hits and put the pressure on the BC defense, making the Eagles commit three errors.

"Our discipline gets better every game," Sortino said about the offense. "You would be looking for those things to start happening and they are."



Junior pitcher Brandice Bilschmiter came off her perfect game performance with a one-hit shutout against the Eagles. The hit went about three feet in front of the plate and it was a close play at first base. Balschmiter only had three strikeouts, while walking one and hitting a batter.

"I thought Brandice really struggled today to get ahead and I thought they put a lot of balls in play," Sortino said. "Coming down this last one-third of the season we've got to be a little bit better than that."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Shortstop Whitney Williams went 2-for-3 against Boston College with a leadoff home run in the bottom of the first inning to straighaway centerfield.

Check us out on Facebook!

Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.

Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.

Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.

If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.

We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.

Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com

TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

UMass dominant at home

Minutewomen cruise against Quinnipiac on senior day

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Masha Pozar and the Minutewomen swept Quinnipiac, earning all seven points yesterday. It was the final match at home for Pozar and the team's two other seniors, Kristin DiPiero and Sarah Jackson.

Amidst all the fans, the senior day celebrations and the fact that it was their last home tennis match for the year, the Massachusetts tennis team shut out the Quinnipiac Bobcats, 7-0.

Captain Masha Pozar played in the match of the day winning the super tiebreaker 10-5. Her experience along with an array of supporting words from her teammates, coaches, and fans guided the way. At the end of the match she visited her parents, who traveled from Slovenia for the day's match, in the fan section who then embraced her with an emotional congratulatory hug.

UMass	7
Quinnipiac	0

"I kept telling her to grind," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "The longer the points lasted the better she did."

Pozar teamed up with familiar doubles partner Candynce Boney to defeat Quinnipiac's Adrienne Markison and Amanda Petruzzi, 8-5.

Boney also won her singles match, besting Petruzzi in straight sets, 6-3, 6-2, extending her team-leading singles win total to 16. Despite the win, her performance wasn't as dominant as it was this past weekend against George Washington and Temple, where she won all four of her matches.

"She did what she had to do," said UMass coach Judy Dixon. "When she plays her game she's one of the better freshmen in the conference."

Boney was awarded the A-10 Rookie and Player of the Week on Monday. It is the second time she has been honored with both awards in the same week. It was the fourth time that the freshman star has earned the A-10 Rookie of the Week award.

Traveling from Pennsylvania, Kristin DiPiero's parents came to witness their daughter's final home match as a senior, they weren't disappointed. Kristin, alongside her doubles partner Carly Ludmer, won easily, 8-3, in the No. 2 doubles position.

Laura Danai teamed up with Maude Lecluyse at the No. 3 doubles spot. They handled their Bobcat opposition easily with an 8-2 victory. The pair have won eight of their last nine doubles matches.

At the No. 3 singles position Kaitlyn Carpenter impressed everyone with her strong forehands, backhands and serves, overwhelming her opponent in straight sets 6-0, 6-2.

After suffering her first loss in eight matches Saturday against Temple, Laura Danai got back on the winning track, defeating Bethany Huard 6-1, 6-0.

Maude Lecluyse was also victorious in her singles match, defeating Kasey Rosenberger, 6-2, 6-2.

The Maroon and White didn't let their fans down on possibly the last chance they'll be able to watch their hometown team play before the fall. Each match's conclusion brought a roaring cheer from the crowd that sported members of the Massachusetts basketball team.

Pozar now needs just four singles victories to become the all-time leader in UMass history and pass former teammate Michelle Spiess (63, 2003-07).

The win yesterday is the Minutewomen's fifth in a row and brings the team's overall record above .500. At 10-9, and 4-0 in the conference, the Minutewomen have two more meets on the road before the A-10 Championship begin April 18.

The Minutewomen are back in action this Saturday when they take on conference opponent Rhode Island. Their final match of the regular season is April 15 at Boston University.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Pozar 'grinds' out a victory

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

At the end of yesterday's No. 1 singles match there was a moment when you knew that one of the match's participants loved the game. Masha Pozar squeezed her parents tight against her while tears ran down her face. She had just won the match of the day that sported not only a tiebreaker, but also a super tiebreak – yes there is such a thing.

With her parents from Slovenia sitting in the crowd and it being her last match at UMass, Masha Pozar had some extra pressure on her shoulders in yesterday's thrilling match that produced every imaginable tennis shot possible.

Early on, the match looked as if it was in Pozar's control when she took an early 3-0 lead. At that point she displayed an assault of forehands, backhands and blistering serves.

She captured the first set with no signs of real weakness, 6-2.

Quickly, almost out of nowhere, it started to go downhill. Pozar began to rip shots back at her opponent that caught the net instead of clay.

In sure point opportunities she perhaps got too excited or anxious and rocketed the ball over the line on the opposite side of the court much to her opponent's fortune.

Quinnipiac's Adrienne Markison captured the hard-fought second set, 6-7(4).

After the tiebreaker was split both ways, the match went into a super tiebreaker.

During the super tiebreaker points you could hear Pozar's coach, Judy Dixon, yelling her words of advice.

"Grind, grind," Dixon said to her captain during the match. However, she was not telling Pozar to just keep working. Dixon had a plan in mind.

"I kept telling her to grind," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "I wanted her to keep hitting the ball over, to stretch each point out."

The advice paid off. The longer the volleys went, the better Pozar performed.

Pozar went up 5-1 early in the super tiebreaker. When Pozar committed an unforced error, she looked down, smiled, and nodded her head, knowing that the mistake she just made was one that wouldn't cost her the match. The confidence in the team's captain showed.

She later won the super tiebreaker, 10-5, and the match.

Watching the match, one couldn't fail to realize why Dixon chose Pozar as her captain; she dug down deep and fought through her struggles until the very end, like a captain should.

After shaking her opponent's hand, then her coach's, she jogged over to her parents where she let go of the emotions that weren't left on the court.

It seemed fitting that one of the longest matches of Pozar's collegiate career was her final one on the UMass campus.

It was one the fans will remember for a while, and one she won't forget.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Pozar won her final match on her home court in dramatic fashion, defeating Quinnipiac's Adrienne Markison in a super tiebreaker.

FROM THE PRESS BOX

For more coverage of all UMass sports, check out the Daily Collegian's sports blog at ...

dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

EChecking
The ultimate in convenience plus lots of cool stuff, like...
• FREE ATM Transactions, Nationwide*
• FREE Debit Card
• FREE ESB Online Anytime Banking and Bill Pay
• FREE E-Statements
• FREE First Order of 50 Checks
• No Minimum Balance Required
Anytime Checking
ESBOnline Anytime Banking
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank • 413-527-4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield
Member FDIC Member DIF
*$10 minimum deposit to open E-Checking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 6th from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

the $4 $4 $4 DEAL
New! Wow!
3 Small 1 topping Pizzas
ONLY $4 each + delivery
Domino's Pizza
AMHERST/HADLEY
413 - 256 - 8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes... we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

(turds)

		4		9		6
				2		7
1	8	9		4		2
6				1		5
		1			8
	5		6			9
	7		8		4	9 5
	9		3
	1			5		2

ACROSS
1 Crude dwelling
6 Borscht vegetable
10 Hermit creature
14 "Crocodile Dundee" star
15 Bullets and shells
16 Husband of a countess
17 Way overweight
18 Make certain of 20 To have and to hold
22 As an alternative
23 Rockies grazer
24 Come in second
25 Pain in the neck
28 Altar vow
30 Infer
34 Fail to mention
35 Yellowish pink
37 Hide hair
38 Spiral fastener
40 Foxlike
41 Dance for two
43 Place-kicker's prop
44 Within reach
47 Clash of clans
48 In one's dotage
50 Aries or Taurus
51 Elder or older
52 Nosh
54 Be in debt
56 Certain
59 Ghosts
63 U-turn on command
65 Diameter halves
66 Housecoat
67 Annapolis inst
68 Vote in
69 Kettle of fish
70 Mardi Gras follower
71 Quench

DOWN
1 High school course
2 King of the road
3 Seemingly forever
4 Tape container
5 Prepare to be knighted
6 Purses
7 Australian bird
8 Cyber note
9 Transport to Oz
10 Mad point
11 Cost per unit
12 Geometric calculation
13 Ran in the wash
19 Way up
21 Snow runners
24 Coarfish
25 Snail mails
26 Host
27 Femme fatale
29 Short run
31 Kind of peace or ear
32 Top fashion magazine
33 Wear away
36 Talking starling
39 Hardwood
42 Finally
45 Sad
46 Let go of
49 Points of debate
53 Put an end to
55 Telegrams
56 Cultivated tract
57 One woodwind
58 Steals from
59 Theater assignment
60 Something to think about 61 Clock sound
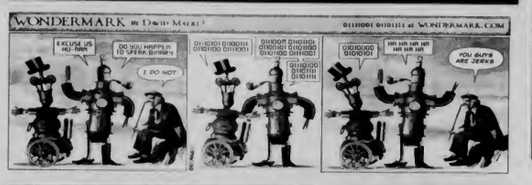
62 Location
64 "Situation Room" channel

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, Apr 11 - Thu, Apr 17
UNDER THE SAME MOON 2:30 4:45 7:00 9:15
TAXI TO THE DARK SIDE 2:15 7:15 No 2:15 Sun
Flowers of Saint Francis Sun 4/13 2:00 Thu 4/17 7:00
Hampshire College FACULTY FILM FEST! Sun 4/13 7:00
persepolis 5:00 9:30 No 9:30 Sun
THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 5:15 7:30 9:45 No 7:30 Sun or Thu
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org



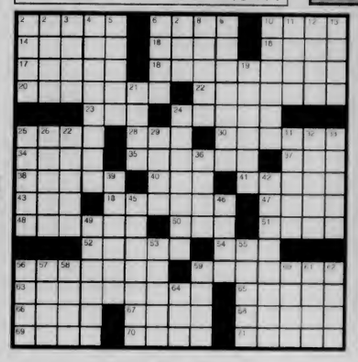
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, April 11 - Thu, April 17
The Band's Visit 5:15 7:15 9:15 PLUS 3:15 Sat & Sun AND 10:15am Wed
SHINE A LIGHT 7:00 9:30 PLUS 10am Wed
JUNO 5:00 PLUS 3:00 Sat & Sun
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstttheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 586-5848

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Some men get the world. Others get ex-hookers and a trip to Arizona."

— Kim Basinger as "Lynn Bracken" in L.A. Confidential

WONDERMARK By David Malki



DREAM NATION By Louis Coppola

ROLLERCOASTER OF FEAR By Tom Frink

Stop reading this fill and go read a copy of THE MINUTE. FOO!

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Laundry can be a vicious cycle. Stop washing your clothes and stop wearing them too. Problem solved.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
At 9:00, hold a candlelighting ceremony to honor the time slot where new episodes of Grey's Anatomy once stood.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
At less than $1 a piece, dropping live goldfish down the back of people's pants is an affordable and squirmy prank.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Wow, the name of our magazine is the same as your nickname. That's swell.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are unethical and therefore will fail your ethics class. Unless of course, you cheat.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Quick, change all your passwords. Someone has found them out and is stealing your identity as we speak.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Any minute now, you will be famous.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The coccoon of winter is crumbling. It is time to emerge as the furry moth that you are and embrace springtime.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Ease up on the face-frosting. Too much make-up is worse than no make-up at all.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
April 10, 2008 comes but once in a lifetime. Make it count.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Due to the fact that Target is now selling Ramones shirts, it is no longer cool to wear Ramones shirts.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You must be as the dancing Lobster with jovial feet and terrifying claws.

To do list:

1. READ THE MINUTE!
2. Apply to be comics editor.
3. Submit caption at www.dailycollegian.com/caption.
4. Wax Bikini line.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Student Union Art Gallery presents "Line Scape and Sound Fields" by Francesca Caruso, Sophia Flood, Brendan Dean and Kyle Nilan 4/7-4/18. Reception Tu 4/8 5-7pm. Gallery hours: M-Th 10-5 and F 10-3. Free. 545-0792

APT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen, floor to be worked on. 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1600 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Studio, 1, 2, 3, 4 bedrooms available. Going fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

ACCOUNTANT
REPRESENTATIVE, SALES
REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

EMPLOYMENT

University Bartending classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information. Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

ROOM FOR RENT

A BETTER LIFESTYLE
Private Suite in charming 4 bedroom/3 bathroom house near conservation area in Amherst. Friendly, responsible male or female to share w/professional man + 6 yr old daughter + 1 cat. $650/mo including utilities. Reduced rent for part-time nanny. Call Jonathan 413-253-2535 or 413-222-3006

Near Amherst Center $475 Inclusive Reduced Rent for Part Time Nanny. 549-7789 Strong St.

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+ 4 Bedrooms $1500+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH
providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Balschmiter throws another gem

Brandice Balschmiter followed up her perfect game at George Washington last weekend with a one-hit, complete game shutout, as the Minutewomen defeated Boston College, 8-0, in five innings. The team plays four games in three days this weekend, all at home, against Saint Joseph's and Temple.

Leadoff homer by Williams sparks offense

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams opened up the game by singing the national anthem and then led off for the Massachusetts softball team with a homerun in the bottom of the first inning.

UMass crushed Boston College, 8-0 in five innings. Williams went 2-for-3 including a bunt single to continue a seven-run rally in the bottom of the third inning.

"I felt very good when I hit it. It hit the sweet spot," Williams said of her lead off homerun. "I swung really hard at it, but I felt it could go out. I wasn't sure with the wind."

UMass	8
BC	0

Even though the wind was blowing out toward center field where Williams hit it, UMass coach Elaine Sortino thought the ball would have gone out regardless. The ball carried toward dead center at the 220 mark, a couple rows up in the bleachers.

"That wind wasn't really enough to carry anything, especially how low she hit it. It never got up in the wind. It was a line drive," Sortino said.

Eagles sophomore pitcher Taylor Peyton, who gave up the homerun, struggled against the explosive UMass offense in the third inning. Sophomore Carly Normandin started things off with a single up the middle. Sortino wanted to advance the runners and called for a drop bunt from Williams. Williams saw a gap and pushed a bunt between the third baseman and the shortstop for a base hit. Then left fielder Lauren Proctor walked to load the bases.

"I thought our short game was good even when we had to take a pitch. We did a good job with that," Sortino said. "I was really pleased

See SOFTBALL on page 5

UMass reaches Beanpot final

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team will play at Fenway Park for the 13th straight season in the annual Beanpot Tournament on April 16.

For the first time in seven years it will be taking part in the championship game, rather than the consolation.

UMass defeated Harvard, 3-0, last night in the first round of the Beanpot in Lynn behind stellar pitching from junior Mike Dicato to advance to the championship where it will face Boston College.

The Minutemen (9-12, 3-6 Atlantic 10) last won the Beanpot in the 2000 season, when they defeated the Huskies, 13-8.

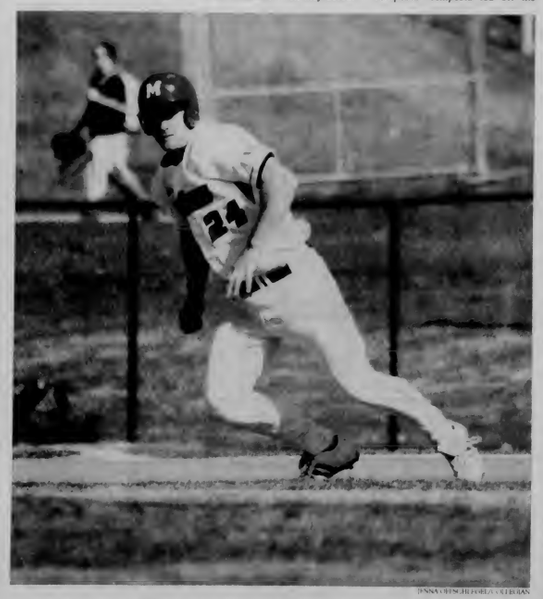
Last night's game against the Crimson (2-23, 1-7 Ivy League) was scoreless through five innings, but that changed on a run-scoring single by Mike Donato in the sixth, scoring Adam Tempesta. Tempesta led off the inning with a double and was moved over to third base on a sacrifice bunt by Jim Macdonald.

UMass	3
Harvard	0

That one run was all that UMass and Dicato needed. The right-hander allowed just three hits in 6 2-3 innings of shutout work, and the first hit didn't come until the start of the sixth inning. Matt Rogers led off with a single, but Jeff Stoeckel immediately lined into a double play, eliminating any possible threat.

Dicato came out for the seventh inning but ran into serious trouble, allowing a double, walk, single and a hit-batsman while recording just one out. He caught a break when Taylor Meehan tried to extend his leadoff double into a triple but was thrown out. With the bases loaded and two outs, UMass coach Mike Stone summoned junior reliever Nathan Monroy into the game.

Monroy needed just two pitches to end the inning and the only real threat by the Crimson all game long, inducing Sean O'Hara to ground out to second base. Monroy also pitched the final two innings for the Minutemen, allowing just one hit and one walk.



UMass added two insurance runs in the eighth inning, one on a Tempesta sacrifice fly (scoring Brian Baudinet, who doubled and advanced to third on a Ryan Franczek bunt single) and another when Bryan Garrity singled home Franczek with two outs.

Dicato earned his first win of the season and struck out six, walking two. Monroy recorded his second save.

Baudinet, Tempesta and Andy Tuetken all had two hits for UMass. Taylor Meehan had two of the four hits for Harvard. Crimson starting pitcher Anthony Nutter allowed nine hits and three runs in seven innings.

The Crimson entered last night's contest with a victory in their previous game against Cornell, which ended a 17-game losing streak.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Brian Baudinet hit an RBI single in the Minutemen's 3-0 win over Harvard in the first round of the Beanpot Tournament. UMass plays BC on April 16 in the championship game.

Ford interviews for Providence job

Michael King
Collegian Staff

Less than 24 hours after men's basketball coach Travis Ford announced that he no longer wanted to be considered for the head coaching position at Louisiana State University, Ford interviewed for the Providence job Wednesday afternoon.

Multiple media sources reported yesterday that Ford was a candidate for the job. ESPN's Andy Katz confirmed yesterday that Ford was on campus at Providence as part of the interview process. Meanwhile, FoxSports.com reported that PC offered the job to Ford Wednesday afternoon.

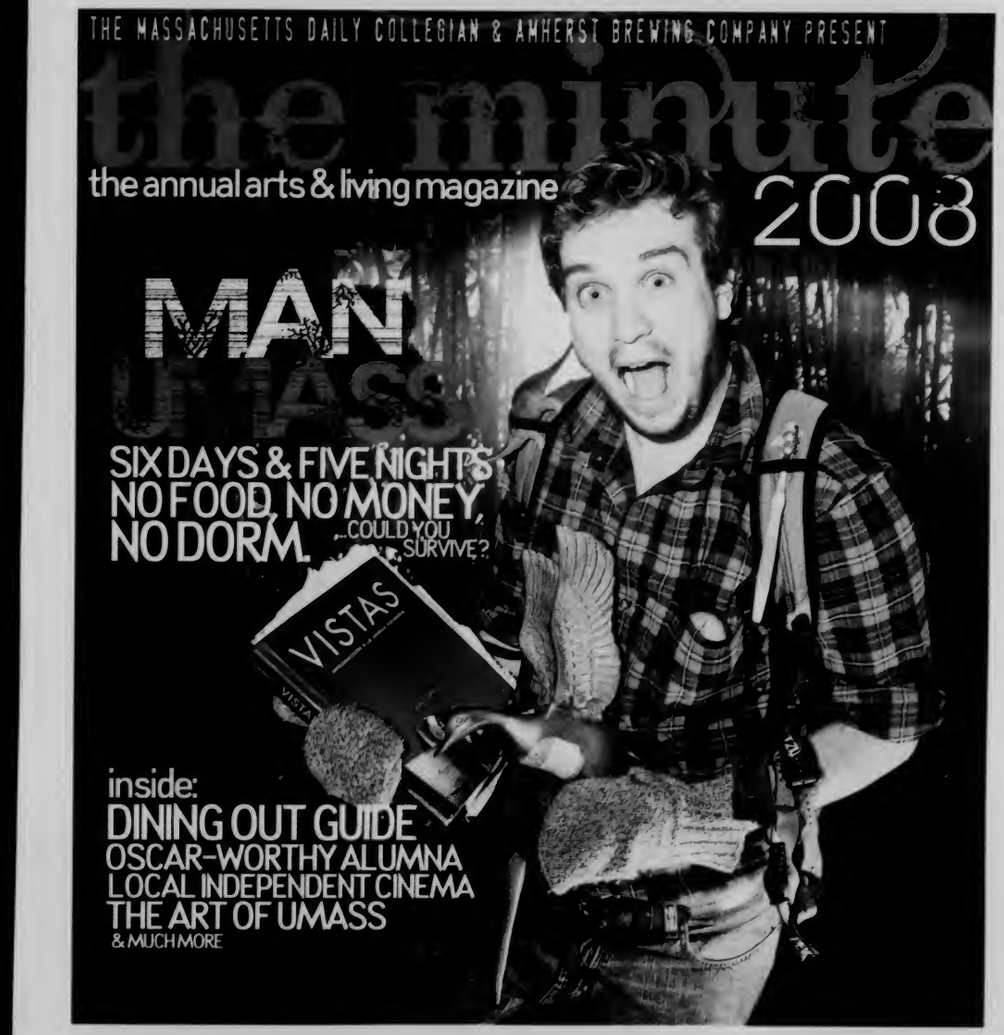
Providence is searching for a replacement for Tim Welsh, who was fired after 10 seasons. The school unsuccessfully recruited George Mason coach and PC alumnus Jim Larranaga for the position last week.

UMass coach Travis Ford could be leaving after all.

In a statement released by UMass Tuesday night, Ford was clear that he did not want to be a candidate for the LSU position.

"There has been a lot [of] misinformation circulating about me and the job at LSU," he said. "I feel that it is necessary to state that I do not want to be considered for the job."

Before the Minutemen completed their season, there was rampant speculation that LSU would hire Ford to replace John Brady, who was fired in February. Now the school appears to have reached an agreement with Trent Johnson of Stanford. Though, no official announcement has been made.



Providence fired Welsh after 10 seasons of mediocre results. Though he maintained a 160-143 record, he led the Friars to only two NCAA Tournament appearances (2001 and '04) and a pair of 20-win seasons.

The Friars finished 12th in the 16-team Big East conference last season with a 6-12 record. Providence had one of the younger teams in the Big East in 2007-08 with one senior. The team finished with a 15-16 record overall.

Ford also has a connection to Providence through UMass alumnus Rick Pitino. Ford played for Pitino at Kentucky during the 1990s and Pitino coached at Providence before taking the UK job. Pitino also served an influential role in the hiring of Ford and former coach John Calipari at UMass, and there's speculation that Pitino is currently fulfilling a similar role with PC.

Ford completed his third season at UMass last Thursday with a loss to Ohio State in the finals of the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Square Garden. The Minutemen finished with a 25-11 record and will lose three seniors to graduation. Ford joined the University after spending five seasons at Eastern Kentucky.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

THE CLOCKWORK

6
MECCA FOR MOVIE LOVERS
HISTORY-RICH AMHERST CINEMA OPENS DOWNTOWN

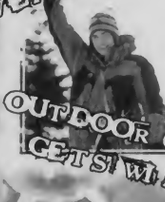
9
LYNN MARGULIS
SASSY SCIENTIST DOES IT HER WAY

SOUNDS OF THE VALLEY
12
Local band plays 90's rock!

14
SUT JHALLY
MEDIA CRITIC EDUCATES UMASS

16
DANCE THE NIGHT AWAY
BALLROOM BRINGS GRACE TO UMASS

WHAT IS THAT SUPPOSED TO BE?
18



THE STORY BEHIND UMASS'S RANDOM ART

BRAVING THE ELEMENTS
20
COLLEGIAN COMICS EDITOR GOES HOMELESS

Sex dolls and Oscar nods

24
UMass alum reaches for the stars

28
Big head, small ego
Sam the Minuteman in it for the team

GET IN ON THE ADVENTURE
26

OUTDOOR CLUB GETS WILD

Art goes green

30
Studio arts building environmentally friendly

Subs, tacos, pizza
32
A glimpse of the best

38
The Last Minute
Behind the clockwork

Amherst Cinema answers local film enthusiast's prayers

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA

The lobby is overflowing with awaiting spectators. The line swerves around an imaginary rope. People stand patiently. There is not enough room to hold the growing crowd. The concession stand line has been swallowed up by the line waiting to see a movie. People are trying to get a cup of tea or some popcorn, while others wait for the theatre showing "Juno" to open up. "Juno" has sold out every Saturday night since its debut at Amherst Cinema. It's the Cinema's "bread and butter." Soon it will be relocated to Northampton's Pleasant Street Theatre.

On Nov. 22, 2006, the movie-loving crowd of Amherst and surrounding towns was given a new place to view movies. Amherst Cinema had finally been completed and opened. The people of Amherst dreamed of a cinema to show them the movies they yearned for.

For many years, the Pleasant Street Theatre in Northampton cornered the market on independent films. The theatre was less than state of the art. The sound quality was poor. The film projectors were old and broken. The screens were not the correct size for the picture formatting of movies. There wasn't stadium seating and people over six feet tall become obstacles to other viewers and the projectors.

Pleasant Street was neglected for years. And it was showing.

Amherst Cinema opened and offered everything that the high-priced chain movieplexes offered. The theater opened with stadium seating, state-of-the-art sound and projection equipment, and comfortable seats. It is a state-of-the-art cinema that satisfies movie lovers by playing 35mm prints of movies.

The story of Amherst Cinema goes a long way back. The building the cinema is housed in has a rich history. It was once a part of Amherst Academy in the late 19th century and early 20th centuries. It was the livery for the school that was a landmark in Amherst's Center. Amherst Academy was a school that many now-famous individuals had attended, namely Emily Dickinson and Sylvester Graham (inventor of the great graham cracker).

A fire downtown in 1926 transformed the livery forever. The building was bought and a theater was built inside. The theater had an orchestra pit and a stage for musicals, plays and concerts. It also had a movie cinema built to show film reels. The theater was a popular spot, and in 1955, Samuel Goldstein purchased the space.

The theatre space was renamed Amherst Cinema, a place that became a popular mainstay for local film buffs. People even went to see the films as the building was deteriorating. Film lovers wrapped themselves in blankets in the winter to stay warm because there was no heat. But after years of health and safety code violations and the mismanagement of taxes, the building was closed.

A group of local film enthusiasts, movie lovers and historians purchased the building with dreams of constructing an all-encompassing art building inside. But with a lack of funding and practical planning, they had to give up their dreams and ask for help from someone who had the know-how to create their dream.

Barry Roberts, a local builder and philanthropist, had the money the community needed to improve the cinema, but on certain terms. The idea of establishing an art gallery in the building wouldn't bring in the revenue needed to pay for the building and the fees. So a plan was proposed to build shops, cafes and a new cinema that could bring in revenue while keeping the building a local hot bed. Once all of the finances were paid off, the cinema would be completely free from any financial constraints.

Now the cinema is independent of corporate ties. It is a non-profit organization that is striving to once again provide that place for the people of Amherst.

"Money is hard to come by," said Debra Roberts, the general manager of Amherst Cinema. "If we pursue films only that will make money, we will not be showing the films that we want to show. We want to show films that are important to the community, films that are important to the world."

The movie industry is a tough one, and running a cinema runs parallel with filmmaking. You have to find an audience and give that audience what they want. Roberts seeks out films she thinks will fit the taste buds of the moviegoers in Amherst. But she has to raise money to show those films and the money is hard to come by.

Amherst Cinema only gets 50 percent of ticket sales. When showings aren't selling out, the cinema loses money. The films distributors don't only take profits, they also set the schedule for the showings. This often impedes the ability of some would be patrons to see a film. Distributors want a film shown a certain number of times a day at certain hours. This can restrict the flow of people who would like to see a film and limit the film's run in a Cinema with only three screens.

That means the idea of keeping a film on the screen for a month or more, which is common in many cinemas, is not possible. Debra Roberts explained, "We want to keep films longer, but we can't because we have to show films that are important to the community."

That doesn't sit well with distributors – the cost of the film is never fully covered.

Budgeting is difficult when you only have three theatres. One theatre is large, around the average size for any Regal Cinemas or AMC across the country. The other two house around 45 people. Cinemas aren't making profit on the size of a crowd, but on the devotion of fans all week. They need a constant flow of people to make a profit.

Where does the funding for the films come from? It comes from donations and grants. Roberts has to write out numerous grants to gain the money necessary to keep the films the people of Amherst want shown. She then has to hope guests go to the cinema. When asked when the cinema has "sold out," she replied, "Almost every night."

[illegible] Hadley was rocked by a fire that destroyed many businesses, including a [illegible] concession stand for [illegible] popcorn [illegible] Roberts [illegible] leave the confines of their homes. It has been successful. The program does not impede on the scheduling of movies; rather, it takes an early showing of a film and designates it as a "baby-friendly" movie once a week.

Roberts has also come up with some other unique ideas for the cinema. The best example is the concession stand, which is a reflection of Roberts' personality. She is "an academic and food lover," and she has taken it upon herself to create a unique concession stand menu. It is also a reflection of the towns in the Pioneer Valley.

Roberts named the "Whole Enchilada" after [illegible] Hadley was rocked by a fire that destroyed many businesses, including a [illegible] concession stand for [illegible] popcorn [illegible] due to popular demand. But she has added fair-trade coffee to the menu, a widely popular item at her cinema. She brought up the fact that her sister is a chef, something that has helped her bring in some more nutritional items like sandwiches, soups and salads. She came up with the idea of a healthier concession stand because she hated the stuff being sold at the big-time movie cinemas. "Small nachos are gross," she said after explaining the failure of the sandwiches and soup attempt at the stand.

Amherst Cinema has recently purchased Pleasant Street Cinema, and is working on merging. The two movie theatres are non-profit and independently owned. There are two cinemas with a mission to give the people of the Pioneer Valley a broader view of films in the world today.

With a number of special events, the cinemas are bringing a small piece of Amherst to the rest of the Valley. The upcoming [illegible]

SpiritHaus
SPECIALTY BEVERAGE CENTER
Celebrating 36 YEARS at 338 College St, Rt.9 East, Amherst (413) 253-5384
From 7 ounce Bottles to 1/2 Kegs
We have the LARGEST selection of Domestic, Imported, and Microbrewed Beers and Ales in the area.
CHECK OUT OUR SELECTION OF:
Single Malt Scotch • Small Batch Bourbons • Tequila
Rum • Vodka • Whiskey
1,000 Wines from Around the World
ICE • CUPS • ALL PARTY SUPPLIES
Mon. - Sat. 9am - 11pm Sun. 12pm - 6pm

Get Dressed.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Detecting bull, detecting DNA:
Lynn Margulis reaches new scientific heights

By Stephanie McPherson

With a rough voice, tousled grey hair and hands waving animatedly, University of Massachusetts Distinguished Professor in Geosciences Lynn Margulis stands in front of a Biology 280 class, guest lecturing on the importance of microbes and the role symbiogenesis plays in evolution.

"The answer to all my questions is always bacteria," she says to the class, continuing on to say that bacteria do everything all other life does, "except talking – they don't do talking."

The woman standing in front of the class is small in stature, but there's something about the compelling way she engages the class that commands instant respect. This is a woman who has worked for NASA, written or contributed to countless published works, won the National Medal of Science, and is in every intro to biology textbook written in the recent past.

Her list of accomplishments alone, however, is not what makes her one of the most prominent microbiologists in the world. It's her straightforward attitude and unrelenting spirit – the same qualities that propelled her down the winding and sometimes controversial road to where she is today.

Born on the South Side of Chicago in 1938, Margulis attended O'Keefe Elementary School.

"When I was in [elementary school] I was bad, because I was bored," said Margulis. "I've always tried to do what I'm supposed to do. I just laughed at goodie goodies, and made trouble, and chased boys, and I was bad."

In the fourth grade, her parents moved her from O'Keefe and enrolled her in the University of Chicago Laboratory School, which changed her life completely. She said. As a little fourth grader, Margulis had to take the train every day from the South Side to Hyde Park to get to school.

The Laboratory School [illegible] university-affiliated admissions program to the University of Chicago after only two years of high school, you [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

This experience enforced the idea that, according to Margulis, "the words 'I teach' doesn't mean 'you learn,' it means 'I learn.'" It was through teaching these biology classes for years that she gained the biological training critical to her future work.

In 1963, she received her Ph.D in genetics from the University of California Berkeley. She moved, with Sagan and her children, to Boston to work at Boston University. Soon after, in 1964, Margulis and Sagan divorced.

She met her second husband, Thomas Margulis, while in Boston. They married and had two children, Jennifer and Zachary. In 1982, the pressures of Margulis's intense career grew to be too much, and they divorced.

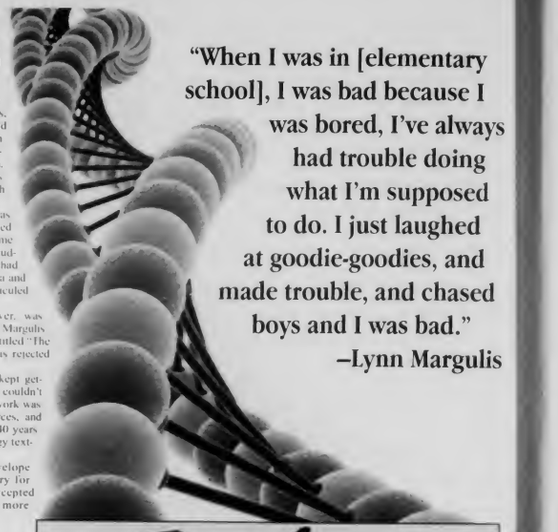
After 22 years at BU, in 1989 Margulis moved to Amherst to take up her teaching post in the geosciences department at U Mass.

Curious Beginnings

While working on her master's at Wisconsin, Margulis encountered a professor by the name of Hans Ris. According to Margulis, "he was a wonderful, wonderful teacher, he was the kind of teacher that let you do things for yourself." It was through him Margulis first discovered the endosymbiotic theory, the idea that two microbes have fused together to become one, forming a brand new organism.

The idea, originally proposed by Constantin Mereschkowsky, was considered utterly ridiculous within the scientific community during the time of Margulis's education. She didn't even give the idea too much thought at first. Her work, as a geneticist, was focused more on the curious beginnings of cytoplasmic heredity.

A famous phrase in the science world says that "there are two kinds of genetic systems — nuclear [traditional Mendelian genetics] and unclear [cytoplasmic heredity]." True to her nature, Margulis was more attracted to the intellectually challenging problem of the "unclear" genetics.



Her research led her to look more closely at the origins of cells' organelles, which are specialized structures found inside the cell. Her studies in that region led her to take another look at endosymbiosis, particularly in the mitochondria, the organelle from which a cell gathers its energy, and chloroplasts, in which photosynthesis occurs.

Because chloroplasts are green, it was easy to see that they, in fact, contained DNA. Further studies proved the same true for mitochondria. Through these studies and more, Margulis and her team had convinced themselves that mitochondria and chloroplasts were formed by the oft-ridiculed process of endosymbiosis.

The scientific community, however, was not all that willing to listen. In 1966, Margulis tried to publish her findings in a paper titled "The Origin of Mitosing Cells," but she was rejected about 15 times.

According to Margulis, the paper kept getting sent back "basically because I couldn't conform." Her stubborn faith that her work was correct kept pushing her to new sources, and finally her paper was published. Over 40 years later, it's a theory that is touted in biology textbooks of every level.

Now, Margulis is pushing the envelope again. While the endosymbiotic theory for mitochondria and chloroplasts is accepted worldwide, she is working on a more

"When I was in [elementary school], I was bad because I was bored, I've always had trouble doing what I'm supposed to do. I just laughed at goodie-goodies, and made trouble, and chased boys and I was bad."
–Lynn Margulis

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
Free Delivery
(413) 585-8989
Hadley (Min. $15.00)
Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
蝶 蝴
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Mon. – Thurs.: 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

Goten
OF JAPAN
STEAKHOUSE
FAMOUS FOR CAPTIVATING CUISINE PREPARED AT YOUR TABLE
EARLY BIRD SPECIALS
Tues.-Thurs. 5-6 PM
Saturday 12-3 PM
Sunday 4-5 PM
HOURS OF OPERATIONS
Monday Closed
Tues.-Fri. 5-9 PM
Saturday 12-10 PM
Sunday 4-9 PM
104 Old Amherst Rd. SUNDERLAND off Rt. 116
413.665.3628
www.gotenofjapan.com

controversial addition to the theory at her lab in the Morrill Science Center at U Mass.

Margulis is taking on traditional science once more by proposing that undulipodia, the things that make certain cells move, were also formed endosymbiotically.

"I remember having this sort of insight as a genetics student at the University of California — [thinking], 'My God, if it's true for mitochondria and it's true for chloroplasts, it must be ultimately true for the undulipodia,'" she said. "We've been working on it ever since, and the data is now coming in. I mean it's coming in definitively, it's fabulous."

The Circular System of Life on Earth

Margulis seems to be drawn to theories that have a touch of controversy. Such is the case with another of her ongoing projects — the Gaia hypothesis.

First put forth by British scientist James Lovelock and named for the goddess of the Earth, Gaia portrays the Earth as one giant superorganism, where one system regulates another and so on and so on. Life is not adapted to the environment, but it's making and responding to the environment, and the environment responds to life.

Before she ever heard of Lovelock, the insatiable mind of Margulis had this question bubbling in the back of her mind: it was well acknowledged that oxygen in the atmosphere is a product of life, but Margulis couldn't figure out why no one was discussing the origins of the multitude of other gases that can be found in the Earth's atmosphere.

"Everybody says that oxygen in the atmosphere is of biological origin from photosynthesis, but they never ... [talk about] nitrogen oxides and so on," said Margulis. When she brought these questions up to friends, "literally eight people, independent occasions, said to me, 'You gotta go look up Lovelock,'" she said.

And a new collaboration was formed. Lovelock, an eccentric scientist from the English countryside, proposed the idea that all these reactive gases are produced by biological systems. Margulis's extensive knowledge regarding which microbes produce which gases helped Lovelock legitimize his hypothesis with hard scientific proof.

The first time Margulis and Lovelock really sat down in 1972 to discuss Gaia in full was to record a conversation to be used as a lecture for a class at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The pair, along with Stewart Wilson of MIT, worked from 9:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. When they were finished, they pressed play to listen to a little of what they had spent all day on.

And "zero came out," said Margulis. "They hadn't pressed record."

She and Lovelock made plans to meet up a different day, and Margulis said, "If that hadn't happened, we would never have published two papers because I didn't get what he was saying" the first time around.

According to Margulis, Gaia and endosymbiosis are related in that Gaia is the ecology and endosymbiosis is the evolutionary process. The Earth and those living on it could fundamentally not exist without either theory.

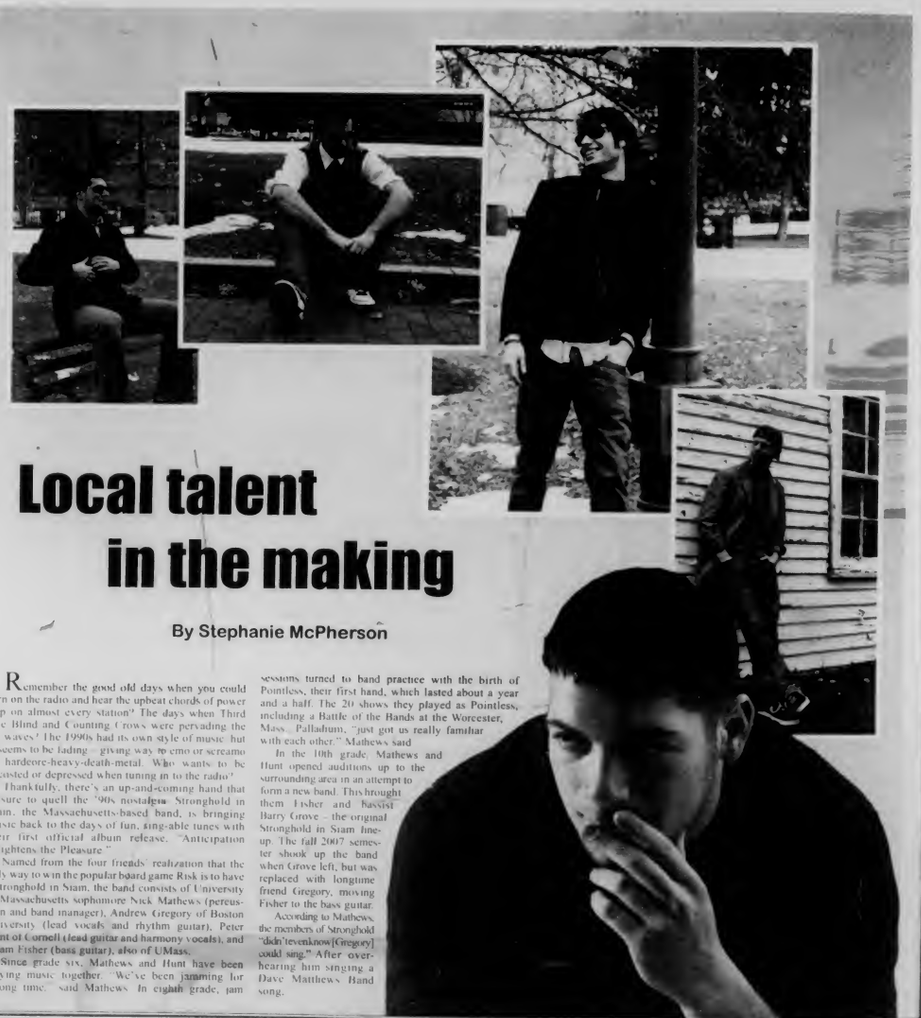
"Next time, no brains."

At UMass, Margulis teaches an environmental evolution course, which is open to seniors of any major, focussing mainly on Gaia. She draws from the schooling experiences that have shaped her so much — environmental evolution has no tests and frequently puts the students in the teacher's seat. When she is not teaching her own class or guest lecturing for others, she is working in her lab.

Carolina Galan, a UMass junior double majoring in biology and Spanish, has been working with Margulis since late summer of 2006.

"Everyone in the lab is motivated, interested and excited to learn something new ... the conversation doesn't focus solely on science, but ranges from politics to history to travel," said Galan in an e-mail interview. "It is a wonderful, open atmosphere in which I feel free to ask questions and explore a range of ideas."

Bruce Scofield, a 59-year-old Ph.D candidate in geosciences, has been assisting Margulis in her classes for seven years.



"She has a wide-angle perspective on science: doesn't get mired by details and can spot a phony 10 miles away," said Scofield, also via e-mail. "Her work is both revolutionary and foundational ... she works on the pure level and is not driven by corporate concerns."

Margulis's frank attitude towards life allows her to say what she means, and nothing less. In regards to the multiple crises the world is now facing, Margulis said, "The way we live is nuts. I have this very strong feeling that one should work hard at what one can change and get somewhere with."

She said, "Try to walk lightly, have a lighter footprint, but try to participate in activities that are gonna get somewhere because otherwise you are just hitting your head against the wall."

And it is true that for any question Margulis asks, the correct answer is "bacteria." She says that, after global warming and all the wars and harmful things humans are doing, "I just have this image of troubadours ... they're all sorts of microbes if you look closely and they're singing ... this song that used to be popular in my mother's generation ... 'Got along without you before I met you. Gonna get along without you now.'"

She quotes a famous naturalist in saying, "The algae are laughing ... 'Next time, no brains,' they're saying." And Margulis is laughing with them.

Local talent in the making

By Stephanie McPherson

Remember the good old days when you could turn on the radio and hear the upbeat chords of power pop on almost every station? The days when Third Eye Blind and Counting Crows were pervading the air waves? The 1990s had its own style of music but it seems to be fading – giving way to emo or screamo or hardcore-heavy-death-metal. Who wants to be accosted or depressed when tuning in to the radio?

Thankfully, there's an up-and-coming band that is sure to quell the "90s nostalgia. Stronghold in Siam, the Massachusetts-based band, is bringing music back to the days of fun, sing-able tunes with their first official album release, "Anticipation Heightens the Pleasure."

Named from the four friends' realization that the only way to win the popular board game Risk is to have a stronghold in Siam, the band consists of University of Massachusetts sophomore Nick Mathews (percussion and band manager), Andrew Gregory of Boston University (lead vocals and rhythm guitar), Peter Hunt of Cornell (lead guitar and harmony vocals), and Adam Fisher (bass guitar), also of UMass.

Since grade six, Mathews and Hunt have been playing music together. "We've been jamming for a long time," said Mathews. In eighth grade, jam sessions turned to band practice with the birth of Pointless, their first band, which lasted about a year and a half. The 20 shows they played as Pointless, including a Battle of the Bands at the Worcester, Mass., Palladium, "just got us really familiar with each other," Mathews said.

In the 10th grade, Mathews and Hunt opened auditions up to the surrounding area in an attempt to form a new band. This brought them Fisher and bassist Barry Grove – the original Stronghold in Siam line-up. The fall 2007 semester shook up the band when Grove left, but was replaced with longtime friend Gregory, moving Fisher to the bass guitar.

According to Mathews, the members of Stronghold "didn't even know [Gregory] could sing." After overhearing him singing a Dave Matthews Band song, they "forced" him to join.

Despite the distance between them, modern technology has helped Stronghold produce new material. Writing new songs can be done via the Internet. Mathews will "send a little riff to Pete ... he adds some and sends it back ... [it's] constantly bouncing back and forth," he said. When they finally meet in person at a rehearsal, they have a new song ready to play.

All the songs on "Anticipation Heightens the Pleasure" are originals, music and lyrics by Mathews, Hunt and Gregory. While they consider themselves power-pop, and are, as a band, heavily influenced by Third Eye Blind, they draw from a multitude of musical genres and artists.

Gregory, according to Mathews, "wouldn't be playing music if it wasn't for Dave Matthews." Hunt cites classics like Pink Floyd, Steely Dan and Eric Clapton as inspiration. Fisher draws from 1990s pop punk and the likes of Green Day, and Mathews is influenced by Keith Moon, the drummer from The Who.

These different influences are evident on their release. Each song has a different feel and a different story with very quotable lyrics, like "Right about now the rain sounds better than your overrated sex appeal," from "Three Days Drunk."

"We try to diversify while still falling under line of 'power-pop,'" said Mathews. The song "Sweet and Beautiful" immediately draws listeners in with an incredibly catchy guitar riff. "Three Days Drunk" and "On the Rebound (Round Round)" are both a little louder and harder than the other tracks on the CD. "Little Black Dress" has a more pop punk feel.

"Florida Keys" sounds like a song that would have been on the Kiss 108 Top 30 countdown circa 1997. With well-crafted background instrumentals and story-like lyrics ("The rum flows like money, the sky's always sunny. And the locals shoot the breeze by the shore"), this song has another surprise at the end – an accidental shout out to Disney's "The Lion King."

According to Mathews, Gregory was just trying to "diva it up" when he sang Simba's very recognizable wail from the end of "Hakuna Matata." It was unintentional, but "we're so proud of that," said Mathews.

Stronghold is currently unsigned, but that's "not to say there haven't been offers," said Mathews. They are currently working with artist development firms to tidy up songwriting skills and make them a more marketable, professional band. Getting signed seems inevitable, but Stronghold is holding out until they can find a label that will let them keep their freedom.

"We don't want to sell our songs ... we want to maintain song rights ... we don't want to turn into a band where I don't get to play drums," said Mathews.

So far, Stronghold in Siam boasts an impressive list of venues played. In December of 2007, they opened for Bowling for Soup at the Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts. In Boston, they've covered the Middle East (pitaro, the Middle East Downstairs, the Avalon and T.T. and the Bear's, to name a few. They are also staples of the Cornell music scene and the Nines.

"Anticipation Heightens the Pleasure" is available on iTunes, a big step for any band. It signifies that they are "evolving from a bunch of kids who play music to a real band," Mathews said.

They have a Web site, stronghold-in-siam.com, and a MySpace page, where select tracks from "Anticipation" can be heard. They are worth a listen. That way, you can say you were Stronghold in Siam fans before they hit it big.

"None of us thought we'd ever get as far as we have," said Mathews. But now that they are right on the brink, "we're going to go for it," he said.

Stronghold in Siam is not the only local artist garnering national attention.

Keep a lookout for these other acts.

DFY is a foursome from Amherst who has been influenced by the likes of Radiohead, Pink Floyd, Jimi Hendrix, Yes, Tool and Ween. They compare their sound to Phish, The Mars Volta and Led Zeppelin. Together since October of 2003, they recently released their second album, entitled "Princess," and can be seen playing venues all over the Amherst area.

Picked on Sally describe themselves as punk/rock and hail from Fairfield, Conn. Some of their influences are Saves The Day, Elvis Costello, Alkaline Trio, Ben Kweller and The Bouncing Souls. They formed in 2003 and recently recorded a new album in March.

The Problemaddicts of Massachusetts are a group of five hip-hop/rap artists who practice different styles of hip-hop but share the same desire to reunite the genre. They hope, with their well-crafted beats and meaningful lyrics, to bring some of the depth back to a style of music that has become increasingly shallower.

Leaving London is a UMass-based quartet. They describe themselves as a mix of rock, funk and power-pop and cite influences in the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Third Eye Blind, John Mayer, Dave Matthews Band, Prince, Radiohead, Incubus and Led Zeppelin.

We, like explosions From Foxboro/Amherst, Massachusetts, embodies an indie-rock/post-punk vibe all their own. Its unique sound interpolates six musicians whose influences lie on a broad spectrum, encompassing everything from The Beach Boys to the Blood Brothers. Coordinating outfits and all, their humorous brotherhood is so contagious that it seems almost innate to these guys.

Shaping a better tomorrow

Professor Sut Jhally reflects on his time in the Valley

BY MICHELLE ABBASCIANO

He has a Ph.D in Communications, his bachelor's and master's degrees in sociology and history, and is a renowned professor of over 23 years at the University of Massachusetts. Chances are, if you've taken a sociology class at UMass (or anywhere in the country, for that matter), you have studied his concepts and arguments, read one of his books or articles, been to one of his lectures or are at least familiar with his work.

Sut Jhally is a professor of communications at UMass, but with such an impressive background, it might surprise some that Dr. Jhally chose to teach at this public college in Western Mass. After teaching at the University of New Hampshire for one year, Jhally opted for a change of scenery, and was offered a position at UMass. Almost at once, he knew it was a good fit for him.

"I have never regretted for one moment being at UMass..."

"I have never regretted for one moment being at UMass. I love the University and I love the surrounding area," says Jhally. "In many ways, this is a unique place in the world as education and intellectual pursuits are the fabric of life for so many people here. I am also very proud of working at a public institution where so many people have been given opportunities to learn what they might otherwise not have."

After listening to Jhally speak for even just a few minutes, it becomes quite evident that he does not just want to simply get his opinions out there; he wants to eliminate ignorance and give people the adequate tools they need to form opinions of their own.

Perhaps that is the reason why he decided to use his talents, degrees and extensive knowledge and research to teach students and instill in them a way of thinking much different than what they are used to, and especially different than the ideas that the media and government have drilled into their minds.

"I don't believe in a divide between teaching and research," said Jhally. "I started teaching as a graduate student and loved it from the start, as it forced me to translate the high level theoretical material I was looking at in my research into a form that someone who was not an expert would understand and relate to."

The material that he is trying to get across to people is important and critical for everyone to know about, especially young adults, like college students. They, along with teenagers, are unfortunately the main target of the negative messages music videos and advertisements are sending the young people in our world today.

"It was very exciting to see that if presented in a way that students could relate to, knowledge could end up having an effect beyond the 'ivory tower,'" Jhally says. "And that perspective has informed my film work as well."

Teaching is but a single bullet point on this distinguished man's resume. Jhally is also the founder, president and executive director of the Media Education Foundation (MEF). This is the organization that he began in 1991, with one basic goal in mind: to educate the public on various controversial, but often overlooked, topics of concern, such as violence and sexual exploitation in media (especially in music videos), commercial images and advertising, political issues, the 9-11 terrorist attacks and the problems with the pop culture that surrounds us.

With so many controversial topics, disapproving opinions, and frank criticisms at hand, it may seem as if Jhally would have to overcome many obstacles and fight to get his messages across. Fortunately, this was not the case.

"No one was being discouraging," says Jhally. "It wasn't that difficult to launch the MEF because there was not a pre-existing model that I was trying to plug-in to. I was kind of making it up as I went along and responding to situations as they developed."

One of Jhally's most important films that he has created to date is "Dreamworlds: Gender/Sex Power in Music Videos." The film attempts to "examine the stories contemporary music videos tell about girls and women, and encourages viewers to consider how these narratives shape individual and cultural attitudes about sexuality."

He has made three of these installments, with the latest and most prominent one released last year. These controversial videos created quite a stir when they were first released – so much so that MTV attempted to sue Jhally when "Dreamworlds 1" was first produced.

Jhally maintains that his work is not to force his ideas, beliefs and morals on other people. Instead, they seek to offer young adults a powerful tool so that they may understand the prominent and ceaseless influence that modern day music videos and pop culture have on them and society. "Dreamworlds," along with the dozens of other films Jhally has produced, is meant to "inspire viewers to reflect critically on images that they might otherwise take for granted."

Pop culture aside, another significant aspect to Jhally's views and background is his scrutiny of politics and the American government. He has written countless articles on the topic and even has multiple films on it, including "Hijacking Catastrophe: 9-11, Fear and the Selling of the American Empire" as well as "Peace, Propaganda, and the Promise: Land, U.S. Media and the Israeli-Palestinian Conflict."

Both are highly informative and critical films and shed a truly different light on past and popular beliefs about our country. The videos are eye-opening and crucial, but above all else, they are powerful.

These scathing political opinions did not simply appear in Jhally's mind one day. They were acquired, shaped and built over the years with the help of Jhally's two most influential persons: Stuart Hall, a British cultural theorist, and Noam Chomsky.

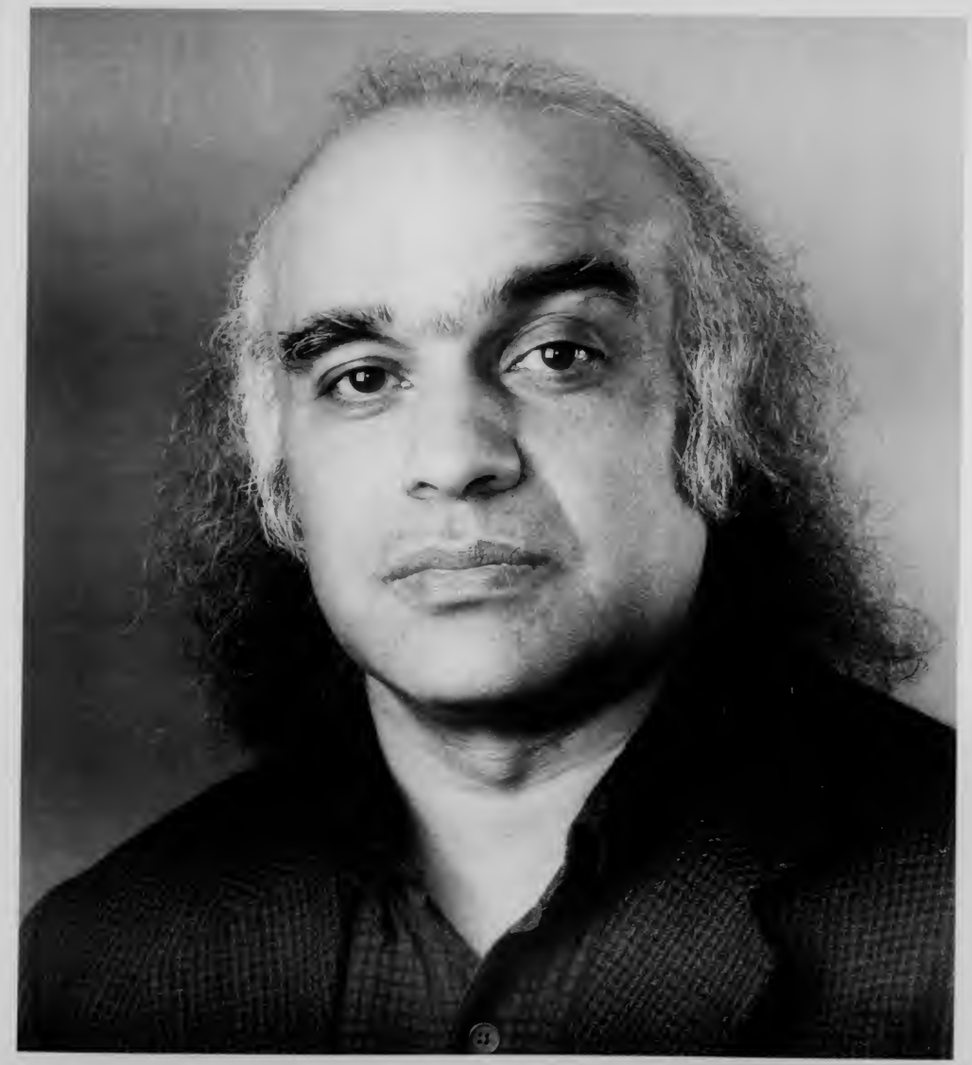
Although it's difficult to single out one or two individuals because Jhally's influences come from so many different places and people, those two men are the most inspirational and have shaped his work and way of thinking most prominently.

"Stuart Hall was very influential in my early thinking," said Jhally. "He insisted on doing research in the most objective, analytical way when you are dealing with the most pressing and important issues for the society and communicating that knowledge beyond the academy to ordinary people to make ideas matter beyond the academy."

Chomsky has also been very important for Jhally in terms of how he lives what he believes to be an impeccable, intellectual and political life.

"His courage in always dealing with the most important political issues of the day has inspired me in my own work," says Jhally.

The professor has also been lucky enough to work with both Hall and Chomsky in his films.



Given the present condition of the American government and political crisis in which the very foundation of democracy appears to be at risk, it has never been more important for individuals of power and persuasion to take a stand in addressing the major issues of our time. It is critical for public intellectuals to question authority and hold it responsible for its consequences.

Jhally has proved himself time and time again to be one of these individuals, and is constantly concerned with "social justice attempts to break down the illusion of unanimity that seems so prevalent in the dominant media, all levels of government, and the commanding heights of corporate power."

As one of the most important theoreticians of cultural studies, Jhally's work has influenced so many people, and changed countless minds and opinions, as well as altered the way people view their culture, society and the world around them.

"I am very happy with the work that I do and the work that I have done," says Jhally. "Our job is to give people the analytical tools to make their own moral and ethical judgments about how to act in the world. If my work has allowed people to do that in a conscious way and changed they way they thought they could act in the world, I'd settle for that."

"I am... very proud of working at a public institution where so many people have been given opportunities to learn what they might otherwise not have."
– Sut Jhally

Bringing back the Ballroom

By Elyse Horowitz

Have you ever wanted to learn the steps of the salsa, or the sway of the waltz? Can you see yourself swinging away in the arms of your partner, floating along the dance floor? If so, you should consider joining the ballroom dance club at the University of Massachusetts.

Along with the grace and elegance it teaches to all who participate, the ballroom dance club also provides a way for its members to meet and share the art of dance with each other in a variety of forums and events.

In addition to being one of the few registered student organizations on campus that incorporates students from the Five College Consortium, members are also given the pleasure of learning steps from the UMass ballroom dance team during their weekly lessons in the Fine Arts Center.

Ballroom dance team captain Chris Broderick explained that over 25 years ago, ballroom dance was initially offered as a class for one or two credits as part of a physical education requirement. Eventually, the University discontinued the program, and ballroom dance was, for a short time, sponsored by the dance department as a social dance.

In the 1980s and '90s, a competitive element was added, giving birth to the ballroom dance team. Although they took a hiatus from competing for around 10 years, the team and club now coincide.

"The best part of being able to go to [the ballroom dance] club is helping teach others and share my love of dancing," said Jessica Eaton, a sophomore on the ballroom dance team. Eaton, whose parents were both professional ballroom dancers, has spent two semesters on the team, and has participated in five competitions since becoming a member. Most recently, the team traveled to Cambridge, Mass., for the 17th Annual Harvard Invitational Competition, where couples competed in standard, Latin, smooth and rhythm dance categories. They also performed at UMass's "Eruption," which took place on Feb. 29 in the Student Union Ballroom. Additionally, the ballroom dance team is planning to attend the 2008 MIT Open Ballroom Dance Competition in April.

Senior Jacqueline Callander, who has been on the team since the spring of 2005, joined the ballroom dance club with her roommate before deciding to try out for the team.

"When I first joined the club, it was all about being able to do what I love, dance. Since then, the club has given me the opportunity to share my love and knowledge with tons of people throughout the Five College community", she said. Callander has been the club publicist, team captain and is currently the club treasurer.

"The best part of being able to go to [the ballroom dance] club is helping teach others and share my love of dancing."

–Jessica Eaton

If you're interested in simply learning the steps of ballroom dance without having the pressure of competing, the club is open to anyone within the Five Colleges to participate in, and no try-outs or auditions are necessary.

Nicole Cameron, a junior and a ballroom dance team member, says that it is a great opportunity for all who join.

"For those who have no time for a commitment, I would recommend the ballroom dance club," she said. "It's great even if you have no dance experience, we can teach you the basic steps."

Each instruction begins with a demonstration from the team members, who attend almost all Monday night lessons in addition to their two other weekly practices. The attendees of the lesson split up by gender and form two lines across the lobby of the Fine Arts Center. One team member instructs each gender, covering topics such as foot movement, hand placement, time keeping and posture.

"The first hour and a half is for learning the basic dance steps. The last 30 minutes is used for club members to relax and mingle and practice," Elton said. "It's great because the club gets to learn a new dance every week and then practice it here."

"There's a lot of technique that trickles down," said team member Amanda Kohr. Since the team learns from professional ballroom dancers, they have very precise performance skills that they can share with members of the club.

President of the ballroom dance club Angie Punwani says that TV shows, such as "Dancing with the Stars" and "America's Best Dance Crew," "definitely make ballroom dance more popular." But those routines are more for entertainment than competition.

"Collegiate competitions don't allow lifts or flips, although some people come to the lessons expecting to do things like that," she said. However, the experience gained is more than worthwhile.

LIQUORS 44

80° 1.75 liter $20.99
Ciroc Vodka 750 mls $27.99
Tanqueray GIN 1.75 liter $30.99
Captain Morgan $25.99
Jose Cuervo LIME MARGARITA 1.75 liter $13.99
1.75 liter $22.99
Jose Cuervo 1.75 liter $34.99
Jose Cuervo BLACK 750 mls $22.99
Coconut 1.75 liter $25.99
COCKTAILS GRAND COSMO 1.75 liter $15.99
BELVEDERE VODKA 750 mls $28.99
COCKTAILS MOJITO 1.75 liter $15.99
Grand Marnier 750 mls $29.99
Pommegranate READY TO DRINK 1.75 liter $15.99
GOLDEN 1.75 liter $16.99

AT THE HADLEY LOCATION
450 Russell St. #9 • Campus Plaza
413-253-9344

Visit us at our other locations:
NORTHAMPTON • 238 King St.
HOLYOKE • 44 Lincoln St.

FULL REDEMPTION AT ALL LOCATIONS

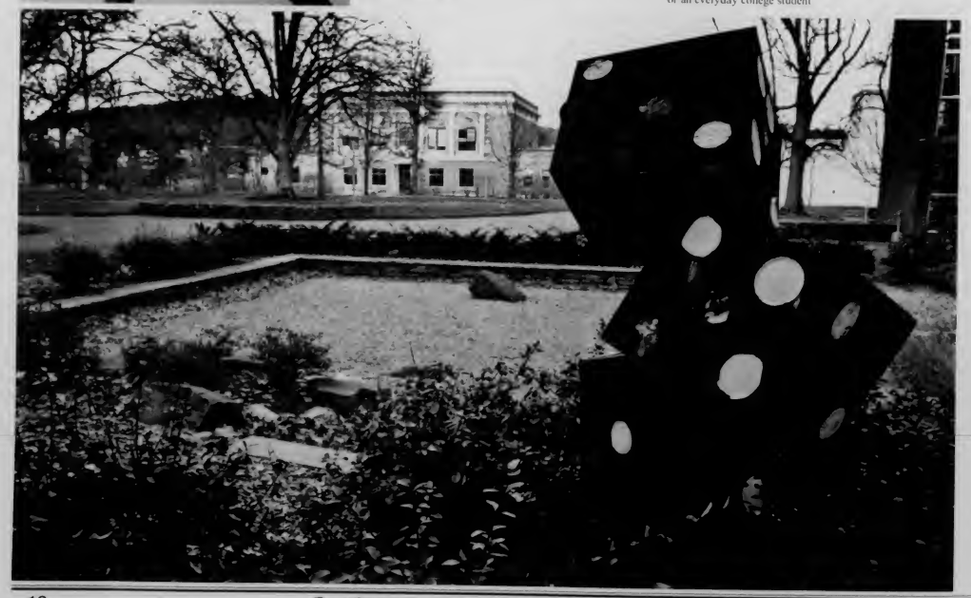
NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS

DON'T DRINK & DRIVE

More than just scenery: the truth behind campus artwork

By Holly Seabury

The seemingly mysterious art around campus – elaborate paintings of University scenery, the dice in the Bartlett Hall garden, a red — thing by the Haigis Mall bus stop – is always the topic of discussion. Who made these works and how did they get there?



Perhaps the most noticed yet unfamiliar piece of art on campus is Robert Murray's "Quinnipiac" that stands 18-feet tall and alone outside of the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts.

Murray's work was originally part of the 1975 inauguration of the Fine Arts Center and was the first piece of public art to be included in the University Collection. "Quinnipiac" involves a "dialogue" between two sheets of steel.

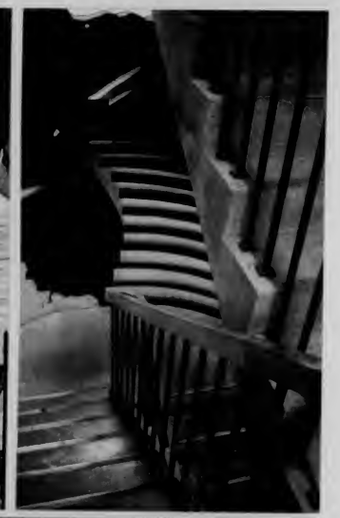
On the other side of the Fine Arts Center is a work that many may not have known was art at all. "Isle of View" by George Trakas is the bridge and surrounding area that crosses over the campus pond.

Began by Trakas in 1981, "Isle of View" includes the island, seating areas, pathways, bridges and decking at the south end of the pond, right outside the Fine Arts Center. According to the commission of the University Gallery, "George Trakas belongs to a generation of artists who chose to work in the landscape, bringing sculptural ideas into play with a chosen site."

One of the more mysterious and interesting works on campus is the Bartlett "dice," which originally was not meant to be dice at all. The COR-TEN steel sculpture is entitled "Playfully Nodding to its Fall," created by Steve Oakley in 1983, who was then a UMass undergraduate.

According to Sally O'Shea, program director of the arts council, "It is not intended to be dice or a place for placement of paper plates, but it's impossible to keep up with the removal of them." The sculpture was originally on the west side of the campus pond, where it has been replaced by a seating area.

Another familiar work on campus stands in between Coolidge Hall and the Hampden Gallery in the Southwest Residential Area. A white, vine-like arc is set in a small, springy courtyard so that people walking through can stroll under the sculpture, created in the 1985-1986 school year by Caroline Gould and Todd Richardson, students at the time. Gould now works at University Career Services in Goodell.



UMass holds plenty of murals and paintings throughout its campus, but perhaps some of the most recognized are Garrett McCarthy's, who painted the large mural in the Whitmore Administration Building's cafe, of the building at sunset, the 25-foot mural in the Worcester D.C. of the campus pond area and two in the Campus Center basement – one of the McGuirk Alumni football stadium and the other of the Fine Arts Center – among five others "floating around campus."

"I was actually contacted to paint scenes of the University after I had graduated [in 1986]," said McCarthy. "I was a UMass grad with an art degree, working for a company that made paintings in Friendly's restaurants. Somehow someone found out about me and saw that I was a good candidate for making murals of the campus, for the campus."

McCarthy, 46, now lives in New York with his own art studio, and from time to time makes visits to UMass as well as to other locations where his art is featured. He said that he is impressed with the care of the murals on campus, noting that even after more than 20 years, faculty and students have been gentle.

The background of the pieces of art around campus may lead to a better understanding of the work, though their meaning to campus is entirely up to the onlooker, a child, a professor or an everyday college student.

My name is Adam Szajgin. I am the comics editor for The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and a full-time student at the University of Massachusetts. I am afraid of heights and I get cold very easily. Also, I'm not a huge fan of spiders. I have never trained with the British Special Forces, but I was a cub scout for a little while. Once, while playing tennis, I sprained my leg really bad. It hurt a lot. Although it may not sound like it, I assure you, I am almost as badass as I am good looking. In the interests of life, liberty and the eternal pursuit of outlandish decision making, I agreed to spend a week in the wilderness of UMass foraging for food and fighting for survival.
This is my story.

The rules of my quest, as determined by myself and fellow members of the Collegian staff, were quite simple. I would live for a full academic week, from the last Sunday of spring break to my last class on Friday, out in the wilderness of UMass. I would not be allowed to enter my own apartment for any reason, and thus would carry all of my belongings with me through the duration of my exploit.

I could not spend money or engage in monetary exchanges of any kind. To make my task a little bit more difficult, I would not accept charitable donations in the form of food or money from any of the many compassionate students on campus. If I wanted something for free, I would have to negotiate, charm or steal. This condition effectively precluded the prospect of sitting on the ground and begging for change, meals or sexual pleasuring.

I should also point out that I do not have a meal plan. Repeat: no meal plan.

Sunday morning arrived and brought with it an end to a spring break filled with sun and breasts – oh wait, that wasn't my spring break at all. Let me take that again.

Sunday morning arrived and brought with it an end to a spring break filled with torrential rain and backbreaking manual labor. I drove back to my apartment from my hometown of Beverly, Mass., stopping at The Collegian to do the comics page for the next day, threw all my clean laundry on the floor, and started to pack up my things. When my backpack was full (see list of supplies), I packed up my tent and sleeping bag, gave an affectionate yet manly nod to my roommate, and headed towards campus.

Before I continue, I must briefly explain the choice to bring a tent and sleeping bag. If Bear Grylls makes a fire in the woods to keep warm, everyone applauds his outdoorsy prowess. If I make a fire next to the campus pond to ward off hypothermia, I get arrested and charged with arson. Do you get it now? OK, back to the adventure.

I got to campus around 11:30 p.m. and saw a lovely tent site prospect in the giant field in front of North apartments. I trudged through the muddy grass and plopped near a drainage gully under the "shelter" of a final little tree. I set up my tent, did 6,000 push-ups, braided my manly chest hair and went to bed. It was a little cold, but nice. This wouldn't be so bad after all, I thought.

I was wrong. Very, very wrong.

At one in the morning, I was shocked out of sleep by a loud, blaring noise. I sat up as quickly as humanly possible. Jackie Chan has cat-like reflexes, but my muscles are actually made out of millions of tiny cats, so like I said, I sat up fast. It took me a minute to figure out where on Earth I was and a minute more to figure out that the obnoxious honking noise was a car alarm in the parking lot less than two hundred feet away from me. Survivorman Les Stroud may have to worry about hungry pumas and deadly spiders, but it is common knowledge that car alarms are the most annoying thing on the face of the planet.

Fear not, I am a man of the great outdoors and my body quickly adapted to this bumptious auditory inconvenience. The alarm would freak out for one minute and remain silent for another before repeating the pattern. My sleep-deprived mind deduced the pattern, and I found myself sleeping one minute at a time.

I woke up at six in the morning to find that the bottom of my sleeping bag was covered in snow. Either UMass had been covered in an avalanche, or water had condensed on the inside of my tent, frozen and snowed down upon my feet. A brief glance outside the tent proved the latter to be true. I packed up and headed off in search of food.

I dropped off my tent and sleeping bag in one of the Campus Center lockers without actually paying to lock it. I would leave these items there throughout the week. After numerous failed attempts to catch and eat a duck, I headed to Franklin DC to eat my weight in scrambled eggs, which possessed a rather perplexing texture. I will not go into the details of how I found my way into the DC, but let us just say I was slippery, like an eel. I was able to do this throughout the week at every DC on campus at least once. Jason Bourne could learn quite a bit from me.

I ate like a king and stocked up on fruit. My backpack was a banana bonanza with apples aplenty. I felt like a nomadic fruit bat. On the way out, I stopped at the dining services office. I stunned the lady at the desk with my intoxicating pheromones, a hunting technique I learned in Burma, and with a wink and a smile (thus classifying this as charm), I was able to acquire three coupons for free lunch in any DC.

Then I had another important mission to complete. Over break, my cell phone charger had mysteriously stopped working. As of Sunday night, I had one blinking bar of battery, and by morning my cell piece was officially deceased. Before you judge me for bringing a phone with me into the wild of UMass, hear this. I have a very short, very loud Jewish mother. She is much like a mosquito, and when she goes too long without hearing from me, she starts freaking out and calling hospitals. Additionally, I decided it would be best not to tell her about my foray into immersion journalism until after the week had ended, lest she freak out and lecture me for three hours about how I will catch a cold.

Plus, somewhere in the recesses of my mind, I still hope that I might actually get a booty call one day. I needed my phone.

I hopped a PVTA bus and headed to the Verizon store on Route 9. I asked the attractive female if they carried the charger I needed. She walked over and pulled one off the wall. Now came the tricky part: how could I get a new phone charger without spending any money?

The girl – I believe her name was Steph – told me I could return the charger within 15 days.

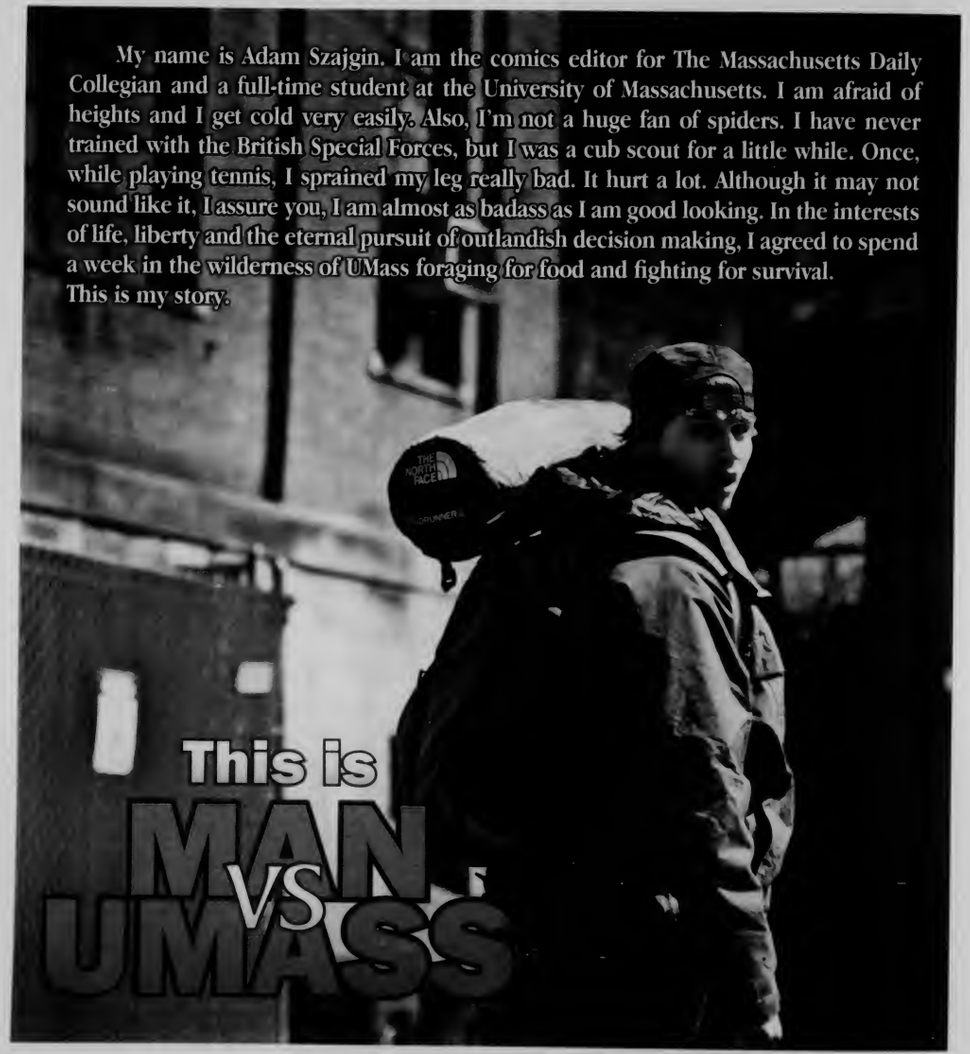
"Well, well, well," I said. "I'm getting a new phone in 10."

I proceeded to engage the strumpet in witty banter regarding the price of phone chargers and all sorts of other things. Also, I told her I liked her shoes. Slowly but surely, I eroded her professional demeanor to reveal a smitten kitten. Wow, I am a pimp.

Eventually, she realized that it was silly to charge me for something I would ultimately return, and she disappeared into the back room. She came back and handed me a second-hand charger, a gift from her to me.

Other than the fact that I was sporting my entire life in my backpack, the rest of my day was fairly normal. I went to Spanish class, realized how much I suck at Spanish, went to work and morphed into a puddle like Alex Mack so I could score a meal at Worcester DC.

Night fell and it was once again time to seek shelter for the evening. I set up my tent between Van Meter and Orchard Hill, pretty much the world capital of hippy lounging. There weren't many people, and after a couple questions, the few tree huggers left me alone. At one point I got hungry, so I sucked on a peppermint tea bag that I had stolen from the DC in an effort to satisfy my cravings. I slept well.



Apparently, at around 5:30 a.m., the temperature at UMass drops like 60 degrees because every night I would go to bed and the cold would be bearable, but in the morning I would wake up convulsing and shivering. On this day, I woke up at 6:30 a.m. completely unable to feel my fingers despite the fact that I was wearing gloves.

I thought March was supposed to go down on a lamb – or was it out like a lamb? I forget. Either way, I was freezing my chops off.

On Tuesday, I went to my nutrition and theater classes. Both are a bore in print as they are in reality. As a welcome contrast to the mildly shitty, I continually found myself sweating under the heat of the March sun and the weight of all my possessions.

My name is Adam Szajgin. I am the comics editor for The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and a full-time student at the University of Massachusetts. I am afraid of heights and I get cold very easily. Also, I'm not a huge fan of spiders. I have never trained with the British Special Forces, but I was a cub scout for a little while. Once, while playing tennis, I sprained my leg really bad. It hurt a lot. Although it may not sound like it, I assure you, I am almost as badass as I am good looking. In the interests of life, liberty and the eternal pursuit of outlandish decision making, I agreed to spend a week in the wilderness of UMass foraging for food and fighting for survival.
This is my story.

The rules of my quest, as determined by myself and fellow members of the Collegian staff, were quite simple. I would live for a full academic week, from the last Sunday of spring break to my last class on Friday, out in the wilderness of UMass. I would not be allowed to enter my own apartment for any reason, and thus would carry all of my belongings with me through the duration of my exploit.

I could not spend money or engage in monetary exchanges of any kind. To make my task a little bit more difficult, I would not accept charitable donations in the form of food or money from any of the many compassionate students on campus. If I wanted something for free, I would have to negotiate, charm or steal. This condition effectively precluded the prospect of sitting on the ground and begging for change, meals or sexual pleasuring.

I should also point out that I do not have a meal plan. Repeat: no meal plan.

Sunday morning arrived and brought with it an end to a spring break filled with sun and breasts – oh wait, that wasn't my spring break at all. Let me take that again.

Sunday morning arrived and brought with it an end to a spring break filled with torrential rain and backbreaking manual labor. I drove back to my apartment from my hometown of Beverly, Mass., stopping at The Collegian to do the comics page for the next day, threw all my clean laundry on the floor, and started to pack up my things. When my backpack was full (see list of supplies), I packed up my tent and sleeping bag, gave an affectionate yet manly nod to my roommate, and headed towards campus.

Before I continue, I must briefly explain the choice to bring a tent and sleeping bag. If Bear Grylls makes a fire in the woods to keep warm, everyone applauds his outdoorsy prowess. If I make a fire next to the campus pond to ward off hypothermia, I get arrested and charged with arson. Do you get it now? OK, back to the adventure.

I got to campus around 11:30 p.m. and saw a lovely tent site prospect in the grassy field in front of North apartments. I trudged through the muddy grass and plopped near a drainage gully under the "shelter" of a frail little tree. I set up my tent, did 6,000 push-ups, braided my manly chest hair and went to bed. It was a little cold, but nice. This wouldn't be so bad after all, I thought.

I was wrong. Very, very wrong.

At one in the morning, I was shocked out of sleep by a loud, blaring noise. I sat up as quickly as humanly possible. Jackie Chan has cat-like reflexes, but my muscles are actually made out of millions of tiny cats, so like I said, I sat up fast. It took me a minute to figure out where on Earth I was and a minute more to figure out that the obnoxious honking noise was a car alarm in the parking lot less than two hundred feet away from me. Stay-in-your-car Lars Stroud may have to worry about hungry pumas and deadly spiders, but it is common knowledge that car alarms are the most annoying thing on the face of the planet.

I eat, not. I am a man of the great outdoors, and my body quickly adapted to this bumptious auditory inconvenience. The alarm would freak out for one minute and remain silent for another before repeating the pattern. My sleep-deprived mind deduced the pattern, and I found myself sleeping one minute at a time.

I woke up at six in the morning to find that the bottom of my sleeping bag was covered in snow. Either UMass had been covered in an avalanche, or water had condensed on the inside of my tent, frozen and snowed down upon my feet. A brief glance outside the tent proved the latter to be true. I packed up and headed off in search of food.

I dropped off my tent and sleeping bag in one of the Campus Center lockers without actually paying to lock it. I would leave these items there throughout the week. After numerous failed attempts to catch and eat a duck, I headed to Franklin DC to eat my weight in scrambled eggs which possessed a rather perplexing texture. I will not go into the details of how I found my way into the DC, but let us just say I was slippery like an eel. I was able to do this throughout the week at every DC on campus at least once. Jason Bourne could learn quite a bit from me.

I ate like a king and stocked up on fruit. My backpack was a banana bonanza with apples aplenty. I felt like a nomadic fruit bat. On the way out, I stopped at the dining services office. I stunned the lady at the desk with my intoxicating pheromones, a hunting technique I learned in Burma, and with a wink and a smile (thus classifying this as charm), I was able to acquire three coupons for free lunch in any DC.

Then I had another important mission to complete. Over break, my cell phone charger had mysteriously stopped working. As of Sunday night, I had one blinking bar of battery, and by morning my cell peace was officially deceased. Before you judge me for bringing a phone with me into the wild of UMass, hear this. I have a very short, very loud Jewish mother. She is much like a mosquito, and when she goes too long without hearing from me, she starts freaking out and calling hospitals. Additionally, I decided it would be best not to tell her about my foray into immersion journalism until after the week had ended, lest she freak out and lecture me for three hours about how I will catch a cold.

Plus, somewhere in the recesses of my mind, I still hope that I might actually get a booty call one day. I needed my phone.

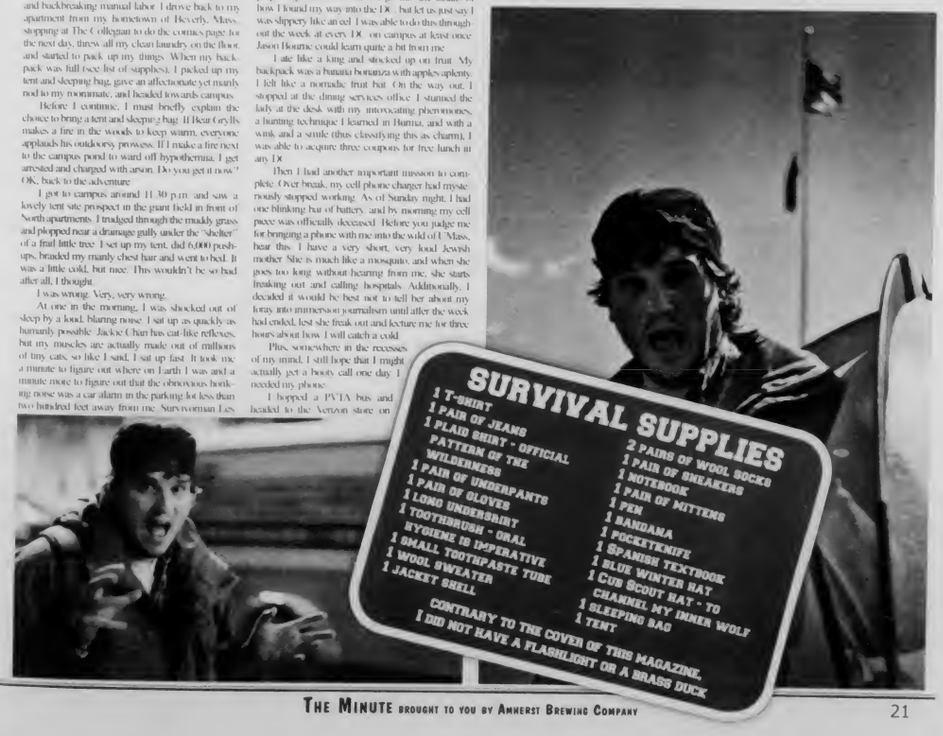
I hopped a PVTA bus and headed to the Verizon store on Route 9. I asked the attractive female if they carried the charger I needed. She walked over and pulled one off the wall. Now came the tricky part: how could I get a new phone charger without spending any money?

The girl – I believe her name was Steph – told me I could return the charger within 15 days.

"Well, well, well," I said. "I'm getting a new phone in 10."

I proceeded to engage the strumpet in witty banter regarding the price of phone chargers and all sorts of other things. Also, I told her I liked her shoes. Slowly but surely, I eroded her professional demeanor to reveal a smitten kitten. Wow, I am a pimp.

Eventually, she realized that it was silly to charge me for something I would ultimately return, and she disappeared into the back room. She came back and handed me a second-hand charger, a gift from her to me.



Other than the fact that I was sporting my entire life in my backpack, the rest of my day was fairly normal. I went to Spanish class, realized how much I suck at Spanish, went to work and morphed into a puddle like Alex Mack so I could score a meal at Worcester DC.

Night fell and it was once again time to seek shelter for the evening. I set up my tent between Van Meter and Orchard Hill, pretty much the world capital of hippy lounging. There weren't many people, and after a couple questions, the few tree huggers left me alone. At one point I got hungry, so I sucked on a peppermint tea bag that I had stolen from the DC in an effort to satisfy my cravings. I slept well.

Apparently at around 5:30 a.m., the temperature at UMass drops like 60 degrees because every night I would go to bed and the cold would be bearable but in the morning I would wake up convulsing and shivering. On this day, I woke up at 6:30 a.m., completely unable to feel my fingers despite the fact that I was wearing gloves.

I thought March was supposed to go down on a lamb – or was it out like a lamb? Either way, I was freezing my chops off.

On Tuesday, I went to my internship and theater classes, both are as boring in person as they are virtually. As a welcome contrast to the nightly dinners, I continually found myself sweating under the heat of the March sun and the weight of all my possessions.

The heat was nice at the time, but its effects would ultimately prove undesirable.

At night I retreated from the heart of campus to set up my tent in the meditation garden of the Durfee conservatory. Although it got a bit nippy, it was the warmest night thus far.

At some point during the night, my shelter was visited by some kids engaging in the smoking of mind-altering substances. They did not acknowledge my tent, and as I fell asleep, I listened to their drug-infused banter about most of life being "mad chill." I do believe they were right.

I awoke on Wednesday morning to the startling and pungent realization that I smelled worse than the backside of a flatulent zebra.

My body had become a hazmat site, and I was in desperate need of a shower. I spent most of the morning and most of my Spanish class contemplating the best place on campus to cleanse my manly assets. Eventually, I decided that I would go to Northeast and shower in Johnson, seeing as that was the part of my body most in need of a good scrubbing.

After Spanish, I snuck into Hampshire DC, ate some pasta, stole six apples, checked out the mad fly honeys, wished the pasta lady a happy birthday and had a warm cup of tea. Then I packed up my junk and headed toward Northeast.

When I arrived at Johnson, I was forced to wait on the stoop for someone who actually belonged there to swipe her card and open the door. Eventually a girl came, and as she held the door for me, her face seemed to suggest that my funky odor was offending her olfactory senses. Regardless, I thanked her and followed her through the doorway. On my way in, I noticed a stack of Daily Collegians. Being the master of survival that I am, I had the foresight to pick up three copies of the Collegian to compensate for the fact that I did not have a towel.

In the bathroom, I checked all the shower stalls for cleanliness and potentially usable resources. The first three stalls proved filthy and useless, but the fourth stall seemed reasonably clean. I mean, there were no signs of poop, so that's good enough for me. Additionally, in the lower right corner of the stall was a glorious prize: a bar of soap!

Now, I know what you're thinking – picking up a bar of soap off of the ground in a shower and using it is insanely disgusting. Well, let me just say – actually, you're right. That was gross.

And not only did I use soap that had been tainted by the hairy and potentially bacteria-ridden elbows of a man named Biff, but I was also sans flip-flops.

In an effort to minimize direct contact between my bare feet and the floor, I exercised a move known as the "frightened flamingo" wherein I would stand on one foot for a period of time and then switch to the other foot. However, it was not fully accurate because – as amazing as I am – my knees do not bend backwards.

I emerged from the shower almost completely clean, but if you sniffed closely my armpits still resonated with a hint of the odor that was once my magical symphony of stink. I carefully separated the pages of The Collegians that I had brought in with me and proceeded to cover my naked body with the past day's headlines. After a quick pat down and a little rub (of the papers, not my package), I removed the sheets one by one.

Although efficient, this technique left my body covered in black streaks and fleeting word segments. On my shoulder, you could peruse the news section while sports had transferred onto my rusty guy thigh. Who knew The Collegian actually served a purpose?

When I started to get dressed again, I realized how wrong it felt to have achieved this state of cleanliness only to put on the same rank pair of undies I'd been wearing all week.

This simply would not do.

So, I got dressed commando style, marched my way over to building D of the North Apartments, and headed into the laundry room. The first dryer I checked had some serious prospects, but the clothes were too wet. The next dryer I checked yet again had a nice selection, but they were women's underpants. While those might be right for my roommate, that's simply not my thing.

Plus, they were all thongs, and I think the wilderness of UMass demands something with a full back.

The last dryer I checked was just right. I found a pair of regular boxer shorts with a lovely fish pattern. Perfect! Now I know what you're thinking. You're calling me a thief and all that jazz, but don't you worry your little head, Deputy Do-gooder. I didn't steal anything. I left my dirty underpants behind. For the underpants fairy in North who had unknowingly helped me out – it was a fair trade.

I went to my office in The Collegian and did my work for the day, and then I proceeded to the library to get down to my homework. Whilst sitting in the

DESIGNED FOR YOUR CONVENIENCE...

WITH ALL THE CHARM OF SCENIC NEW ENGLAND

- wall to wall carpeting
- central laundry facilities
- modern appliances - including disposals and dishwashers
- central heat and hot water included
- individually controlled room zone AC
- 2 full baths in all 2 & 3 BR apts
- 2 and 1/2 baths in each 4 BR apt

FROM AMHERST CENTER (Rte. 9)

Turn South onto Route 116 toward Holyoke. Next, make a right onto East Hadley Road (approx 1.5 miles from Amherst Center). Then, take your first left onto Riverglade Drive. You will find Mill Valley Estates located at the end of the Riverglade Drive.

420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE, AMHERST MA • 413-253-7377

Mill Valley ESTATES

library, amid a flurry of intellects and Uggs Boots, I began to consider where I would set up my tent for the night. Perhaps Garber Field? Nah, I wouldn't want to wake up to a beating. Suddenly it dawned on me. I should sleep in the library. However, this is Man vs. UMass, and I couldn't just lie down on a couch and sleep, because that would be both reasonable and convenient. Instead, I conspired to actually set up my tent and sleep on the highest floor of the library I possibly could.

I got up from my work space and scurried to the elevator. I pushed the highest number I saw, 26, but it wouldn't work. So I settled for 25, and up I went. When the doors opened, I saw a floor entirely populated by a species of student I like to call Homo librarians or "Library Dwellers." As much as I would have loved to help these people, I was a man on a mission. I found the stairs and marched up to the 26 floor – not technically the highest floor, but 27 and 28 are filled with elevator rigging and heating-related machinery.

Oh snap – the door to the 26th floor was locked. I took a closer look at the locking mechanism and realized it was about as effective as the Bursar's Office. I removed my trusty pocket knife and, drawing upon my elaborate archive of Samurai skills, I picked the lock. It took me like four seconds. I quietly squealed in delight, took a quick look around the empty room, making sure to relish the gorgeous view, and headed back down to the learning commons.

After doing a little more work and a lot more Facebook stalking, I took my stuff and headed to a floor with less traffic to while away the hours before bedtime. I figured the tent and sleeping bag sitting next to me in the highly populated learning commons could threaten my objectives for the evening.

I spent the next three hours on the ninth floor eating old apples that I found in my backpack and thumbing through art books with the indecent hope of finding an artist who only painted naked women. What? Like you wouldn't do that.

At midnight, I returned to the 26th floor, removed my pocket knife and commenced with the B and E. Once again, the integrity of the lock proved easier to compromise than former New York Governor Spitzer's marriage vows. I set up my tent in the middle of the room, brushed my teeth in the private bathroom, and went to bed with the sincere hope that an angry, peg-legged custodian wouldn't come in at three in the morning.

But alas, my hopes were dashed.

At two in the morning I awoke from a sleepy stupor to the sound of jingling keys and an opening door. Crap! No, not in my pants. "Crap!" There, that's better.

A man in a blue shirt approached my tent with a stern look on his face. Let's keep in mind, I am in my underpants, in a sleeping bag, in a tent that's in the middle of a very large room on the 26th floor of the library. I quickly sat up and said the first thing that came to mind.

"Well, this must look rather awkward."

"Yes," he said, "it most certainly does."

I emerged from my dwelling and explained my situation to the man. We talked a bit and he seemed jolly enough. He asked me for some form of identification. I lied and said I handed in my wallet when I started writing the story. This seemed like a good idea at the time until he told me that because I lacked ID, he would have to call the cops. Shit.

A police officer was already waiting in the lobby when we got off the elevator. I'm pretty sure he was 12 years old and incapable of even growing a beard. The constable asked me my name and what I was doing. I went through my little schpiel while some flabbergasted onlookers listened intently. He radioed in my name to verify that I was in fact a registered UMass student. While we waited for the verdict he lectured me on the ever-increasing prevalence of methamphetamine use by vagrants in the upper tiers of the Dubois. On the inside, I thought, "What the hell is this guy telling me all this for?" On the outside, I smiled, nodded and showed a little skin. You know, just in case that was his type of thing.

The station finally radioed back, making outlandish claims that my SPIRE account was inactive. The dickens you say? I am most surely a student. I look, I have got the debts to prove it. I pleaded with the officer and had the people at the desk look up the seven overdue books in my library account to prove that I was a student. He finally accepted my argument and booted me out of the library.

So I took my stuff and headed over to the statue of Chief Metawampe near the Student Union. I set up my tent, and went to bed. It was 3:15 a.m.

The next morning, I was refreshed and ready to start my day. I had slept well minus the part of the night where I woke because the statue had farted. Then I realized that didn't make sense because everyone knows that Native Americans don't fart.

I attended classes and began to come to terms with the fact that my adventure was ending. It had been a harsh journey, but I really wanted to step it up big-time for my last night in the wild.

I decided I would spend my last night in the concrete jungle of Southwest with no tent and no sleeping bag – just me against the elements.

Throughout the day, as I informed people of my decision, they scoffed at the absurdity of my choice. The fellows even called me an "asinine aardvark with poor taste in condiments."

Although I am entirely sure the man was crazy, I am not entirely sure of what he meant. What I did know was that My Loose Marbles and I might have had a few things in common.

When I got hungry, I turned into Sub-Zero from Mortal Kombat and froze all of Worcester DC. Everyone was trapped in ice – so I just walked in and took a bunch of food.

At work, I took off most of my clothing in an effort to dry my underthings before a cold night. At low temperatures, even a little sweat can kill. Although the people in my office were slightly frightened by my actions, they knew my nudity was not sexual harassment. This was survival.

Armed only with a backpack, I headed into Southwest at roughly 10:30 p.m. that fateful Thursday night. As I walked under the overpass, I noticed that there was a great deal of wildlife activity in the area. I would have to be as stealthy as possibly.

I also noticed that it was starting to rain.

My first task was to find shelter and a place to sleep. I wandered around scouting out the region before stumbling upon a nice ditch behind a bunch of bushes next to Crampton. The foliage would hide me while the slight overhang would provide some shelter from the elements.

I spent the next four hours wandering around. I read a packet that was given to me earlier in class that day, and I listened to two girls fighting somewhere in the upper floors of Mackimmie. I guess one girl had sugar-shacked up with the other's BF. LOL!

The two were so loud that at one point it drew police attention. At first this concerned me, but soon they disappeared to drive around really fast and use their sirens to blow through red lights.

At midnight, what had previously been a very delicate sprinkling of rain turned into an absolute downpour. I sought shelter under an overhang near the Pita Pit and although this made me very hungry, it was important to stay as dry as possible.

At 2 a.m., the Southwest festivities began to settle down. I decided it was safe to retreat to my "bed" for the night. I walked back to Crampton, slipped behind some bushes, and prepared. The overhang had protected an area that was roughly two feet wide from the falling water, so I took out a pile of newspapers that I had collected and spread them out on the ground. These would offer insulation from the exothermic effects of the icy-cold ground.

I lay on my side, using my backpack as a pillow. While I would have preferred to sleep on my back, this would have excluded the left side of my body from the protection of the overhang, and I would have been soaked. I tried to fall asleep, knowing full well that if I tossed or turned, I'd be like a wet T-shirt contest without any of the fun.

That night, I fell asleep staring at a wall of rain falling through the glow of a floodlight, set against the towers of Southwest. It was cold and somewhat miserable, but it was actually really nice.

That is, until I woke up at 5:30 in the morning to discover that the rain had turned to snow and the temperature was somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 degrees. The mind-fuel digital alone [illegible] me to drift under the protection of sleep and drape me in a blanket of ice. Crap, I [illegible] this time. I knew it was in my pants because that would have been within Southwest dog standards, but still, sparkles, perhaps. I could find a clean pair of leggings to [illegible] a sexy [illegible] flavor.

I had to start moving and warm up so I started jogging laps around Southwest. At this time, the football players were getting up to go for their Friday run. They laughed at my slow pace, but they all knew I was the toughest guy out there. I had slept in the snow and rain in a ditch in Southwest, using newspapers as a blanket.

I ran until the sun came up, and then I headed to the library to do the Spanish homework I had been putting off since Spain conquered Mexico. My hands could barely find the keyboard because they were so numb, and it took forever. A lobster could have typed faster than me.

After class, I picked up all my things in the Campus Center and started walking down North Pleasant Street towards my apartment. When I got in, I found my roommate watching weird anime cartoons. Ah, the life of an indoor cat. Again, our greeting was affectionate yet masculine. I gave him a quick rundown of the night, he laughed at my misfortune, and I went into my bedroom to make sweet love to my bed.

It was over. I had done it. I had beaten UMass.

I learned a great deal throughout the week about myself and about the students of this campus. People were curious about what I was doing, but even when I was sleeping, I never felt unsafe or unwelcome. Although I've always known this to be the case, pushing on-campus existence to the edge of insanity cemented that idea in my mind. Even late at night in Southwest, the people I saw were not rabble-rousers, but friends and lovers walking each other home.

This campus is a wild place, and everyone's got their own life to worry about. Between classes, jobs, relationships and waking up next to a poor decision with buckteeth and a lazy eye, we're all after the same thing. At the end of the day, at the end of the week, we're all just trying to survive.

The write stuff:

UMass alumna talks struggles and Oscar nod

By Heather Waxman

Acclaimed screenwriter Nancy Oliver has become a breakthrough success with her crafty writing for one the most-talked about movies of the year, "Lars and the Real Girl."

The movie received an Oscar nomination for Best Original Screenplay and critics have even dubbed it this year's "Little Miss Sunshine." The University of Massachusetts alum never imagined it would become such a hearty success.

"I wrote it for kicks to amuse myself," actually, Oliver says.

The film revolves around Lars, played by Ryan Gosling, who becomes taken with, and wants to marry, a sex doll he orders off the Internet. Lars' family and friends, including his brother and sister-in-law, played by Paul Schneider and Emily Mortimer, decide to play along with Lars' delusion, rather than risk losing him completely.

Set in the small town of Cheney, Wash., a quirky and lovable cast of characters populate the film.

"I'm from Seattle, I had a lot of experience with that," Oliver says. "I'm not from Cheney, but I'm familiar with the environment," she says. "My sister-in-law is a lot like Mary, the pastor [in the film]. I have a bunch of them in my family, I'm pretty sure, in different settings."

Before writing "Lars and the Real Girl," Oliver's career path was a bit unconventional. After graduating from UMass, she moved to Florida to pursue a career in theater.

"I wanted to be an actress," Oliver says. "I got my equity card, I was working in regional theater. I was auditioning for everything. I was the assistant stage manager for the Weed Festival and Gasparilla. I mean, really."

She wrote for advertisements, magazines and newspapers as an editor.

"I knew writing was a theme and life was a thing also," she said.

Oliver tried everything she could to escape writing and made some rather unconventional career choices. When all of her friends set out for New York and Los Angeles, she decided to stay in Florida.

"I had lost all hope of making it," she said. "I decided I wouldn't continue writing."

Luckily for Oliver, long time friend Alan Ball, screenwriter of the Academy Award winning "American Beauty," refused to let her give up. He spent years trying to convince Oliver to make the move, but the Easthampton, Mass. native opted to remain in Florida, supporting herself with various odd jobs.

Florida State University. They founded the General Nonsense Theater, a satirical ensemble of comical skits, which they wrote for and starred in.

She confesses, "I was a terrible student. I didn't do anything but be in shows. It was bad."

The pair took their talents to another avenue of entertainment – music. Oliver was the vocalist for their no-name band, which quickly fizzled as their love for film took the front seat.

"Yes, I sing and play piano, but not well," she modestly said. "But writing itself is musical. You have to have an ear and a sense of rhythm."

You know that one ruthless fly that just will not leave you alone? Alan Ball was exactly that for Oliver. He buzzed into her ears via telephone one particular day with a tempting proposition, and the rest is history.

Something ticked in Oliver's head like a time bomb, and she agreed to pack up and move to Los Angeles. There, she wrote and co-produced Ball's soon-to-be hit HBO series, "Six Feet Under," where she remained for three years.

Shortly thereafter, she accepted an offer to be a script reader for Ball, which she proudly continues to do today.

Despite creating a heart-warming Oscar-nominated film, Oliver's taste in the silver screen gears more towards the nitty-gritty, taking preference to martial arts and extreme action-adventure sequences.

"My feeble explanation … when I see things blow up, it's like candy," she said.

> "I was a terrible student. I didn't do anything but be in shows. It was bad."
> –Nancy Oliver

"I mostly wrote papers," she says. "I mails week was not fun."

Oliver admits what she learned in college – not only academically, but socially as well – was a priceless experience.

As for her UMass experience, Oliver could not be a prouder alum.

"I loved UMass," she said. "I am very proud I went there. I took courses at all five colleges except for Mount Holyoke."

She majored in English and, impressively, scored a spot in the honors program.

"College really is a great lesson in life and I really encourage everyone to do it," she said.

So, what's next for the Oscar-nominated screenwriter? Oliver is currently buried underneath two projects. She is working on a movie for Warner Brothers called "Handyman."

"It's a southeastern western film," she says. "There are people who are interested in it but no cast yet."

She is also one of six writers for a new HBO series, "True Blood," based on a slew of books by Charlaine Harris. The series delves into the lives of the ever-popular blood-sucking vampires.

"There's lots of sex, blood, science and fun. Lots of hot guys taking their shirts off, which was nice," she says with a chuckle.

Considering Oliver wrote Lars, her most successful venture to date, merely "for kicks," achieving her dreams has been sweeter than the shots of syrup in your early-morning Starbucks Latte.

I am so lucky," Oliver says.

Where are YOU living Next Semester?

Check Out
Puffton Village!

EXCELLENT LOCATION...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments—
1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts

PUFFTON VILLAGE

1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

BREAKING OUT!

The UMass Outing Club offers an escape from the monotony of daily life on campus

By Shayna Murphy

O a University is known for a lot of things. Booze. Riots. An encroaching police force and rising tuition fees. One thing it isn't known for is its student organizations.

But the Outing Club is looking to change that.

Established in 1922, the Outing Club gains distinction as one of the oldest – and most revered – student organizations on campus. Administered entirely through the student body it comprises, the Outing Club has been staging voyages to far-off locales for years now.

Current president Andy Carroll reflected his thoughts on the organization in a recent sit down. In addition to discussing the club's history, Carroll divulged information on its preferred activities. Among the most popular, he estimated, are hiking and canoeing.

However, the club also stages kayaking, skiing, caving and white-water rafting adventures.

To stage these activities, the club visits a variety of places. For hiking, Mt. Monandok and Mt. Sugarloaf work well, while for canoeing, the club traditionally navigates the Connecticut and Deerfield Rivers. For longer journeys, the club has also gone to the Appalachian Mountains.

When not frequenting the treacherous waves of the Connecticut River or braving Appalachia country, members of the club can often be found hanging out at their cabin.

The cabin is a structure built in 1978 specifically to accommodate the club's needs. Located in Bethlehem, New Hampshire – a site chosen for its proximity to the scenic White Mountains – the cabin houses many of the club's getaways.

The Outing Club offers a plentitude of opportunities for students craving an escape from the daily monotony of campus living. However, most people don't seem to be aware of its limitless possibilities.

Of its [illegible] start-of-the-semester attendees, Carroll estimated [illegible]

[illegible]

Reason number one: I have never done this before.

[illegible]

Reason number two: I don't have any money.

Well, none of us have any money. That's kind of the downside to going to college. While the Outing Club does advertise paying membership, payment is not a prerequisite for joining the ranks, either. For the meager sum of $20, students can obtain full-time club status. Those who don't are still welcomed in attendance for outings, but don't enjoy quite the same access as those who do.

Reason number three: I don't have the appropriate equipment.

One of the best bragging points attached to the Outing Club is their extensive gear locker. Containing everything from first aid kits to an ice ax, it's a verifiable candy store of wilderness survival equipment in there. Hours for the gear locker vary from day to day during the week. Taking things out, for any length of time, requires both a deposit and a rental fee, in addition to club membership.

Reason number four: I'm hermitic and don't care to subject myself to the company of others.

Well, the Outing Club has a career track for you, too, fabled campus demographic. All fee paying members are privy to private raids of the gear locker. If you have the will, they offer the way. You can even drive yourself up to the club's spacious cabin and lock yourself away for days without threat of interruption or distress.

Just make sure to pack along a sleeping bag, in case of any overnight travels. For as Carroll points out, the Outing Club doesn't typically cover the cost of hotel stays. Whether you're lodging at the cabin, or backpacking through burly mountain terrain, beds don't come mandatory.

Part of the wilderness experience, after all, is learning how to rough it.

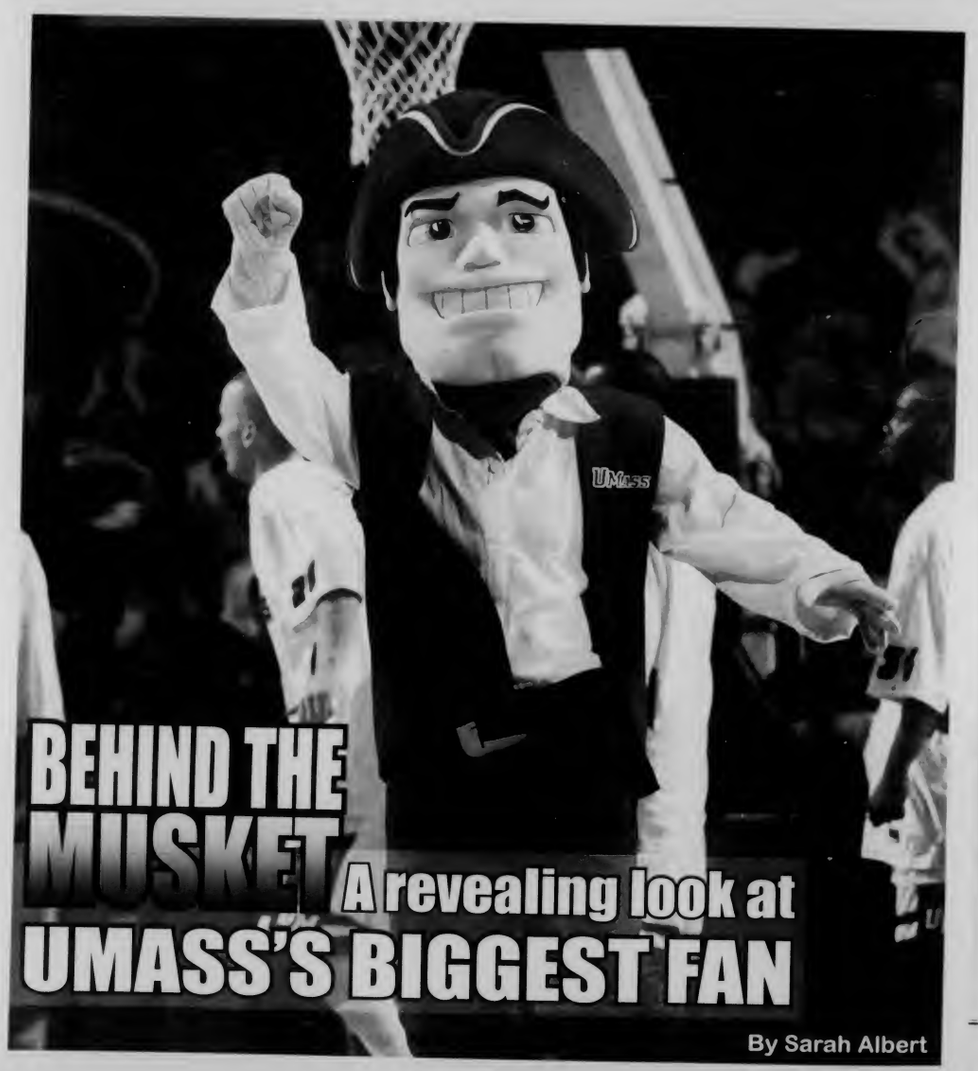
Although efforts have tapered off some in recent years, The Outing Club has previously lent its name to a number of conservationist efforts. The Club practices a 'Leave No Trace' policy on each of its adventures, a policy that encourages members to treat the environment more like home and less like a personal trash can.

The Outing Club recently joined forces with TOMS Shoes for the purpose of social activism. You may have noticed them tabling in the Student Union a couple of weeks back, sandwiched between the musical stylings of "Skullfunked" and Earth Food's free dessert bar. The club is hoping to recruit students for its April 16 walk across campus.

The catch? They kind of, sort of… want you to walk barefoot.

The club is hoping that the activity will bring attention to the plight of impoverished children the world over. But don't dismay. Even if a barefoot trek down the hill isn't quite your thing, TOMS offers numerous other ways to get involved with the fight to raise poverty awareness.

The Outing Club is the type of RSO you could really bring home to your mother. It's fun, well-organized, and socially responsible. It also offers a wealth of new experiences from which you could glean new skills, and maybe even some new friends.



So what are you waiting for? Join already.

BEHIND THE MUSKET

A revealing look at UMASS'S BIGGEST FAN

By Sarah Albert

You've all seen him. I mean, how could you not? Whether it's a YouTube video, a sporting event, a Relay For Life race or a cheerleading competition, he's been there, big head and all.

That's right, we're talking about the University of Massachusetts mascot Sam the Minuteman, and just like Visa, he is everywhere you want to be.

As the most devoted UMass fan in history and one of the top mascots in America, this guy truly defines school spirit and pride. Long before you dedicated readers were even born, Sam was reppin' the Maroon and White day and night, and not just on campus.

He's traveled to games all across the country, and supported professional teams such as the New England Patriots, the Boston Celtics, and the Connecticut Sun. He's rocked out in venues with kids of all ages, has made guest appearances at Mohegan Sun, Madison Square Garden and the TD Banknorth Garden.

Don't worry though, he saves his best work for the Minutemen and women, and his loyalty to UMass never ceases to fail. Sam works hard on the court, ice, field, sideline, bedroom and wherever else a real super fan is needed.

Sam has only been the official mascot of UMass Athletics since 1972. The University had been known as the Aggies and the Statesmen in previous years, and later the Redmen. In the spring of '1972, a group of Native Americans from New York wrote a letter to the UMass administration asking if it was aware of the defamatory connotations of the word "Redmen," and if it could be curtailed. The student senate, through a poll of the student body, came up with several options for a new nickname, including "The Minutemen," and Sam was born.

He has accomplished much in his career. In 2005, he was the runner-up in the Capital One All-American Mascot Challenge, behind Nebraska's Herbie the Husker, he also received the honor of Playboy's Mascot of the Month in October of that year. Sam is also the star of the highly successful ESPN "This is Sportscenter" commercials with tennis pro Andy Roddick.

He may be in his mid-thirties, but that doesn't stop him from acting just as wild as UMass's official fan club, the Maroon Platoon. Sam braves the long hours and even the feisty fans so he can cheer on his teams.

Collegian So, Sam, how is life as the most recognizable man on campus?

Sam It's great! I spend a lot of my time practicing routines with the cheerleading squad, traveling with the sports teams and going to almost every home game. UMass has. You've probably seen me dancing with Lil' Dude or out on the football field with our famous band, but my duties don't just end there. I work for UMass year round, not just during hockey season.

C That sounds like quite the job.

S It is a big commitment. I even drove out to upstate New York for the men's basketball game this season. I love supporting the teams and watching my school win, especially during close games like UMass versus Syracuse. Orange is a strong team, and when they had that 22 point lead we all got a little nervous, but our boys didn't fail us. They came back for the win, and it was one of the most exciting games this year! I had to rush back to Amherst so I could watch the softball girls play the next day, but even though I only got 4 hours of sleep, the game was totally worth it!

C It's more than just cheering, isn't it?

S Oh yea. I have to use different skills at each event I attend. I may be asked to skate during the puck throws, take a lap around the turf, do stunts with the cheerleaders, or run the flag before the game any given day. And a couple times a year I compete against other mascots to show my pride for UMass.

C What is a mascot competition like?

S Well, there are two types: the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Universal Cheerleaders Association. In the NCAA, all the Division I mascots compete against each other, but the UCA is open to everyone. We get the crowd going, make some good-hearted jokes against each other, and perform like champions to try and prove we are the best. Last year, I was ranked 6th among all competitors, and placed 2nd in the Capital One Mascot Challenge.

C Are those your favorite kind of events?

S I like showing off for the camera, but I have the most fun participating with other UMass athletes, either with the cheerleaders or any of the other varsity teams. The fans get a little rowdy during an intense hockey or football game, and I've been grabbed a few times – by the ladies AND the gents – but I guess it proves how much I'm loved. That's why I'm nationally ranked as one of the mascots who attends the most number of events. It's all for the fans and the players, baby.

C What is your favorite sport?

S Hmm, that's a tough one. I definitely like to go to big events so I can hang out with the larger crowds, but I really love all athletics and chances I get to be with fans. It totally pumps me up to run around with the students and do routines with the cheerleaders.

C Have you always been this active?

S Actually, I've made a lot of progress since the swingin' 1970s. Like most UMass fans, I had a beer gut and was known for wildly running around campus, but now I'm more focused. I've had a little lipo, some wardrobe reconstruction, and a lot of experience, so now I really can do it in a minute. But seriously, I'm a dedicated fan and super happy with my career. My head might be big, but that didn't stop me from doing the Thriller dance in the Mullins Center, now, did it? GO!

REVITALIZING A UMASS COMMUNITY

By Andrea Murray

The University of Massachusetts Studio Arts Building stands as a gateway into campus. Right across the street from the Fine Arts Center, its Tellow art department building, the new building stands on one of the University's most prime pieces of real estate.

The SAB has been in the works since the fall of 2002, when former chancellor John V. Lombardi committed to the idea. It will finally bring together various sectors of the University's studio arts, once strewn about campus, into one building. Hill Oedel, the chair of the department of art, led this journalist on a tour of the new facilities.

The new building is set to be open for classes in fall 2008, but will host a few events in May and June. At this point, the building is mostly finished; lighting and furniture and some amenities are all that is left to be taken care of. The building is designed by well-known, Cambridge-based architects Graham Gund Partnership Incorporated.

"Part of the idea behind the building is that work would be visible from outside. Folks coming by would see art and art being made," says Oedel.

The building's color scheme is made up of white, maple and metallic tones with splashes of color for good measure.

One of the standout characteristics of the building is that many aspects of it are variable. Tables are on wheels with locking mechanisms. Ventilation systems can be adjusted to be near work locations. Certain walls throughout the building can be rotated or rolled back to open or close off spaces.

The building is shaped as two big arms stemming off of a large middle common space. The courtyard common area comes with an ample elevator and stairs, and has an open feel with movable walls.

Upstairs, the common area has massive windows and supplies comfy chairs as well as cafe-style tables and chairs for a dining area. This space will serve for gatherings such as art shows, guest lectures and other events. A vending area with a sink and cabinets is located off of the common area and will provide the opportunity for food to be served at events. There is a track lighting system in this room that is programmable so that students may use them for light-based art. These are the lights that are currently visible from outside of the building.

The architects worked very closely with the campus's Environmental Health and Safety department to ensure sufficient needs were met. The ventilation systems in the building are state of the art and are found throughout.

Almost every department is supplied with ample storage space, cabinets and sinks. Technicians will be located close by all work areas. The walls were created with a layer of plywood and then a sheetrock layer on top, which allows for work to be tacked up time and time again without ruining the walls.

The SAB will truly bring the studio arts community together on campus. The building will house digital arts, black and white photography, printmaking, ceramics, wood, metals, painting and drawing. Undergraduate, graduate and faculty studios will all be under one roof, which serves to inspire collaboration and the exchange of ideas.

The move will free up spaces across campus in the some eight satellite art buildings. Oedel says that the Architecture / Design Program of the art department will gain a larger presence in the FAC as a result. Overall, the art department will not miss some of their former spaces, like the "Art Barn" and annexes across campus that were temporary buildings.

"There was wildlife living there, birds and squirrels," says Dan Wessman, a woodship and photography technician at UMass.

A special room in the SAB is the spray room that allows students to use fixatives or spray paints inside in a well-ventilated room. No longer will the FAC's steps be marked up with spray paint paper outlines – or at least they won't have to be.

There will also be a digital-based room that will have large scale digital printing capabilities. In addition to the typical printmaking facilities, there is a printmaking dark room, which is used for polymers.

One wing will house 3-D sculpture. Rooms include a plaster and mixed media room, ceramics room, a throwing room, a clay instructional studio, clay prep and glazing room and a kiln room, which will have two electric kilns and one gas kiln.

The 2-D department has several large workspaces, including a room just for oil paints. There are two large undergraduate studios that have high ceilings and partitioned mini rooms.

The artistic capabilities do not stop inside. There is an amphitheater located outside of the building that Oedel says they hope all students will use. Close to the amphitheatre there are three sculpture pedestals with lighting capabilities that could be used for display of art or critiques of student art.

The UMass Web site notes that this building will be one of the "greenest" on campus and that the building used sustainable materials, operable windows for natural ventilation, and energy and water conserving measures.

A good deal of the windows will be frosted, especially rooms where figure models would be used. The building sports wireless Internet and ample power and Internet ports as well.

All instructional spaces will have the option for natural window lighting, partial light shades and light blocking shades throughout. Digital projection systems will be installed in all major classrooms.

The building will remain open to the public throughout the day, but will only be accessible via UCard to those enrolled in SAB classes and staff after hours.

Need More Space?

LOFT BEDS
BUNK BEDS
Twin-Full-Queen

866-739-2331
CollegeBedLofts.com

DINING OUT

A LOOK AT SOME NEW AREA FLAVORS

CUSHMAN MARKET AND CAFE

By Kate Olesin

Cushman's Market and Café has a long history, evidenced by its antique beams and old hardwood floor, and has seen different owners within its walls.

Today, Cushman's is a hideaway café and local market in Amherst that's a great place to come read or grab a sandwich.

Located at 491 Pine Street in Amherst, Cushman's is slightly removed from the hubbub of the downtown area, which has its own selection of coffee shops and cafés. Many students are unaware of Cushman's simply because it only just reopened in 2005 for business under the management of couple and local residents Rebecca Schwartz and Pete Sylvan.

"Owning [Cushman's] is really about being able to contribute to the community," said Schwartz. "We have a friendly, local and unique place we're keeping the tradition going."

Schwartz, Sylvan and their two children live just up the street. Though they both have other jobs – Schwartz is an architect and Sylvan owns his own import wholesale business – owning the market and café takes up all their time.

And they couldn't be happier.

"There's such a strong community presence here," said Schwartz. "It's not just a chain store. We wouldn't have bought it if there was a Cumberland Farms here."

Cushman's started out in the horse-and-buggy days as a local grocery store, and has remained a market since it opened in 1892. Between 1936 and 1965, it became Rackliffe's Food Market, and around 1981, it changed names again to Whittemore's New England Food Market.

Schwartz and Sylvan bought the building two and a half years ago and added in windows, bought a permit to make the backside a café and added seating and vibrant color with local artwork to attract visitors.

"It's undergone a number of resurrections," said Schwartz.

Complete with wireless Internet, a large sandwich, panini and burger menu, coffee, desserts and cookies, the café brings a crowd, which is filled with people of all ages: students, children, families and older Cushman's fanatics. Like the market adjoining the café, the food is made from natural and fresh produce and meats.

The café does breakfast and lunch, and on Thursdays and Fridays cooks rotisserie chickens that customers looking for an easy meal can buy and take home. They are so popular, according to Schwartz, you usually have to reserve one.

But with over 19 sandwiches, paninis and burgers to chose from, you can't go wrong.

"The Lady Rowena" is a popular sandwich choice with goat cheese, pesto and a tomato, set on a baguette with crisp, fresh lettuce for $6.25. Served with chips and a pickle, this light but chewy sandwich (due to the bread) has such a simple design, but is bursting with fresh cheese and pesto flavor, which gives it a local, Amherst feel.

The meal was topped off with a natural and flowery tasting "Citrus Hibiscus," a Vermont-made micro soda.

Some other sandwiches include the "Mity Nice," with cheddar cheese, tomato, cucumber, red onion and stone ground mustard on a baguette for $5.50. For the kids, there's the "Pony Boy" – essentially a peanut butter and strawberry jam sandwich on sourdough bread for $3.50. Or try the "Corvette" charburger, with sharp Vermont cheddar, bacon and caramelized onions on a bun for $7.50.

Breakfast is served daily until 11 a.m. and on Sundays from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. It includes a dish like "By the Sea" – three scrambled, farm fresh eggs, smoked salmon and caramelized onions served with a toasted bagel.

Cushman's also serves homemade soup in a cup or bowl, which can be combined with half sandwiches or quiche for a meal deal.

Sundays are special for the market and cafe.

Besides the extended breakfast hour, you can also go and enjoy live jazz while you order from the coffee bar or enjoy the local art that adorns the walls. Once the warm weather returns, Cushman's will open up its patio, a feature of the cafe popular among customers, who sit outside sipping drinks and watching the trains pass by.

The market is also complete with local food and all the essentials that students might need, including laundry detergent, beer and the card you forgot to get your mom for her birthday. The market and café also accept OCMP.

Cushman's has a history of selling unique, and somewhat weird, gifts, according to Schwartz.

"A lot of students come and like to buy the Mapleline Farms milk, especially the chocolate milk," Schwartz said, referring to the Hadley farm. "They also like the glass bottles."

If you come back with your empty glass milk bottle, you get a dollar off your next glass bottle of milk.

The market has a wine and beer selection, which, although small, is reasonably priced and stocked with well-known and local brands. It sells French Rabbit wine, which comes in a recyclable box and protects wine against ultraviolet rays for $9.99. Berkshire Brewing Company, Paper City Brewing Company and The People's Pint are just some of the beer sold in the market.

Yet it's the customers – not just the creative products – that keep Schwartz going.

"Our customers are so great," she said. "We know many of them and they know us. We wouldn't be here without them."

The New Chicken on the Block

Mr. Chicken fights for Amherst poultry supremacy

By Kate Olesin

Even the Mr. Chicken logo is giving a thumbs-up, showing customers just how delicious it is — and yes, it does taste like chicken.

Mr. Chicken, which opened in October in downtown Amherst, has some big competition in the chicken arena of Amherst, with the Hangar (also known as "Wings") on the opposite side of campus.

Yet the aptly named restaurant is pulling its weight, with a wide variety of menu items, sauces, family and party meals, and of course — the legendary boneless wings.

To many at the University of Massachusetts, chicken wings are not just a weekend meal, but a staple of everyday dining and snacking. Alumni reminisce about them and students crave them every time they feel hunger pangs. Thus, UMass students, including myself, have high standards.

When my dining companions and I walked into Mr. Chicken, we didn't know what to expect. Wings was still haunting us, but we sat down at the dine-in section of the mostly empty restaurant and ordered our meals.

Not only does the menu boast chicken wings, but fried chicken, barbequed grinders, ribs and burgers are also on the menu. It is safe to say that this is not a restaurant for the light-hearted vegetarian.

I ordered the two-piece fried chicken meal, which comes with your choice of fries, mashed potatoes, coleslaw, corn or dirty rice, and a roll for $6.49. The meal was crispy, tasty and an all-around good deal. Although it was a rather large meal for a ravenously hungry college student, it was manageable. And the fried skin part of the chicken was not the dominating entity in the meal — all I could taste was the delicious, tender breast and thigh.

One of my dining companions ordered the hot sausage grinder (small $6.79, large $7.89), which was spicy, full of pure Italian sausage taste. He was particularly impressed by the freshness and crunch of the vegetables, which many times are soggy and tasteless in such sandwiches.

My last comrade ordered the boneless wings with chipotle sauce ($8.99) — the obvious choice.

"You taste the chicken instead of the grease," he said.

Wings covers their tender white meat in batter, which, although delicious, sometimes overpowers the taste of chicken. At Mr. Chicken, though, we tasted about a pound of chicken — not greasy batter that made our arteries want to explode.

The chipotle sauce was a hot mix of spicy pepper, which gave the chicken a blast of Mexican flavor. In addition, if you breathed in the smell of the sauce before eating the wing, you could feel the spice in your nasal passage — a good sign for spice lovers.

The serving sizes that were detailed next to the menu items were certainly accurate and helpful to have. There's also a "snack attack" portion for $5.75, for those just looking to get a fix of wings.

Price-wise, Mr. Chicken is a great deal for the amount of food you get. If you want to take your suitemates out for a meal, it's $17.99 for 2-4 people. And depending on how hungry your college stomachs are, there's always a higher level — up to six pounds of chicken.

Mr. Chicken still has the remnants of being a new restaurant. A salad bar is under construction and the walls still have some new boards amid ones painted red. Yet it looks and tastes like the owners, who also own Crazy Noodles, just around the corner, have truly invested time into their seeming pet project.

TAKING A FRESH APPROACH TO CHINESE CUISINE

ZHANG'S KITCHEN
CHINESE RESTAURANT

By Barbara Booras

Amherst residents and UMass students are fortunate enough to have a wide variety of restaurants to cater to a diverse population. Until now, it seemed as though the options for good American Chinese food were lacking. More often than not, you will find Chinese food places serving up greasy, heavy meals with overcooked vegetables, and inevitably end up with a brutal stomachache.

There is a newcomer to the Amherst area who is doing it right. With a healthy and MSG-free menu, Zhang's kitchen stands out among its competitors.

Zhang's is a short drive from the University of Massachusetts campus on route 116, near the Moan and Dove. The cozy 14-table restaurant is quiet on weekdays, but picks up when the weekend hits. Although the restaurant is not traditionally decorated, its open dining area, bright lighting, high ceilings and attractive blue trim make Zhang's a more comfortable and casual place for friends to grab a bite to eat.

A standout of Zhang's drink selection is their classic hot Chinese tea that accompanies a variety of entrees quite nicely. Each meal starts off with a bowl of crispy, fried noodle strips with a tasty, sweet dipping sauce.

For starters, Zhang's Kitchen offers a variety of traditional and vegetarian soups alongside other takeout classics such as scallion pancakes, egg and spring rolls. Two great options are the wonton and vegetable soups. Reasonably priced at $3.75, the light and flavorful vegetable soups packed with fresh, tender veggies is a good appetizer pick. For the dirt-cheap price of $1.95, the wonton soup packed with meaty dumplings and garnished artistically with scallions is certainly a bargain.

If you stop in, don't forget to try the General Tso's chicken dinner special. The dinner specials are served with pork fried rice (which can be substituted for white or brown) and one egg roll. The attentive wait staff is efficient and happy to cater to any special requests, like chopsticks or chili sauce.

The massive portions of high quality offerings make Zhang's Kitchen an ideal spot for the college student on a budget. The generous dinner specials round out at about $7.50, and with what is included, you will definitely have leftovers for breakfast — who doesn't love a good scallion pancake in the a.m.?

For any vegetarian Chinese food lovers, the sauteed mixed vegetables dinner special includes a nice variety of veggies ranging from broccoli and carrots to bamboo shoots and Chinese mushrooms. Sauteed in a sweet and salty Asian sauce with a mountain of rice, this dish will leave any health nut satisfied and stuffed.

Zhang's take on General Tso's chicken is more or less traditional. For those that love spicy food, this dish is for you. The chili-spiced chicken has the perfect balance of sweetness with just the right amount of heat.

Zhang's Kitchen's owner, Benny Zhang, worked in another Chinese restaurant in Hartford, Conn. for eight years before branching out with his own new business venture. He and his wife, Hua, have been running Zhang's Kitchen for the past four months now. Benny works in the kitchen as head chef, while Hua mans the front of the house answering phones, waiting on diners and keeping the place organized.

It is obvious that take-out and delivery is Zhang's bread and butter as the phones are constantly ringing in the dining room. When Benny was asked what they sell the most of, he immediately replied with both "the garlic chicken and General Tso's." Some other popular items he mentioned were the scallion pancakes and wontons from the appetizer section on the menu. According to the couple, the restaurant is most busy at lunch and take-out is swamped around dinnertime.

The delivery drivers at Zhang's are both local college students serving mostly their fellow peers with a hankering for some late night Chinese. If you decide on delivery from Zhang's Kitchen, there is a small minimum order of $10, but they do accept Master Card, Visa and even OCMP.

Zhang's 102 delicious menu items are available to all, Monday through Thursday from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m., Friday and Saturday 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., and on Sundays from noon until 10 p.m. You can also find their menu online at Campushive.com.

The next time you and your friends are thinking of a place for Chinese here in Amherst, choose the place where you will get more bang for your buck. Give Head of Zhang's Kitchen a call and you will be in a delicious meal!

NOW OPEN at Spare Time
Northampton

City Sports Grille

The Area's Premier Sports Bar

⇒ 7' HD Projection Screen TV
⇒ Over 10 Flat Screen TV's
⇒ FREE Peanuts & Wing Specials
⇒ Home of the $10 - 80 oz Beer Tower
⇒ $1.75 PBR Specials & Give-aways
⇒ Watch all the March Madness games
⇒ Free Poker ~ Mondays & Tuesdays at 7pm
⇒ Register to win Celtic tickets

Entertainment Every Friday & Saturday

City Sports Grille
Located at Spare Time ~ Northampton
525 Pleasant St 584-4830

Arigato II dishes out unique flavors and atmosphere

By Kaitlin Morris

Students in the Amherst area are always looking for new and exciting places for entertainment. Walking into the center of town, UMass students are accustomed to the number of shops, restaurants and bars, yet are not always aware when something new has been added to the neighborhood.

It feels like such an accomplishment when you've discovered a great place that not everyone in the area has heard of. Located on the Hollywood Walk, Arigato II could easily fade into the woodwork. A true gem, this new hibachi restaurant resides right under your nose.

Finding the entrance of Arigato II is a [illegible]

[illegible]

Aside from its impressive bar and drink selection, hibachi is the main attraction. Each table is set with its own grill station where the highly qualified chefs prepare your meals right before your eyes. For a price range between $15 and $35, every customer receives high quality food and a show.

The hibachi chefs prepare the food right in front of diners, using tricks such as juggling raw eggs with a spatula and landing them on top of their chef hats. Many of the chefs have over 10 years worth of experience and have cooked for such celebrities as Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson and Gloria Estefan.

With a higher-end restaurant, most customers do not expect to be remembered by staff, let alone to have developed relationships. "A lot of our customers are regulars, so we know most of their names," said Churchwell.

UMass senior and Arigato II patron Traci Goudreau said, "We love going there. The food is great and the wait staff is friendly and nice."

Arigato II is also accustomed to [illegible]

[illegible]

The [illegible] at Arigato II may [illegible] and college students are used to paying. However, patrons do get more than your money's worth with the high grade food, entertainment and atmosphere. Also, the restaurant and bar are currently only open until 10:30 p.m., but the owners of Arigato II are hoping to have the bar open until 1 a.m. by September.

The next time your family or friends come to visit, instead of taking them to overpriced, mediocre restaurants, take them to Arigato II for some good food and entertainment.

And while you're laughing while watching your comedic chef, don't forget to try one of their specialty drinks, which will tie the entire experience together.

Rolando's

Mixes old favorites with new flavors

By Carol Lawless

If any students were to visit 28 N. Pleasant Street in Amherst, across the street from the Amherst Brewing Company and next to Antonio's, hoping for a Latso's burger, they would be in for a surprise.

Latso's, the popular burger joint familiar to UMass students and residents of the Amherst area, has been closed for a year. Do not fret, however. Students can still purchase well priced burgers here.

In Latso's place resides a new eatery called Rolando's. It offers a wide menu, including delicious roast beef sandwiches and falafel pockets filled to the brim with lettuce, tomato, tahini sauce and choices of grilled steak, grilled chicken and feta cheese.

According to Rolando's owner, Bob Lauren, Latso's closed because "the owner was an owner of the Wing's franchise and was too busy with that. I grew up in North Andover, Mass., eating at a place called Harrison's Roast Beef. I had an idea for a while of having a roast beef place."

Keeping the Latso's memory alive, visitors can choose from a wide variety of burgers. Meghan Lemay, a sophomore at UMass, was "surprised to see such a large selection of specialty burgers."

Burger choices include the Bacon Cheese Deluxe, the Down Southie Burger, the Crispy Chicken Burger and the Spinach and Blue Cheese Burger, just to name a few.

A potentially surprising menu item is the inclusion of falafels.

"I wanted to have a really strong vegetarian menu," Lauren said.

Falafel is not a typical dish served in restaurants, but is popular to many who have tasted it. Rolando's menu describes the vegetarian favorite as "crushed chick peas with fresh herbs, onion, flour and seasoning made into a ball and deep fried to a beautiful golden brown." Rolando's chefs have perfected the art of cooking falafel and even offer falafel balls in their salads.

As written on their menu, Rolando's roast beef is "from 100 percent natural, fed, free roaming, humanely handled, beef cattle raised without the use of hormones or antibiotics." Along with a hearty portion of roast beef on a bun, they offer three varieties of sizes and several toppings such as BBQ sauce, cheese, onion, mustard and horseradish.

The menu also includes Greek salad and chicken steak and veggie wraps. Sides include french fries, hand-cut sweet potato fries, onion rings and chicken fingers.

In addition to owning Rolando's, Bob Lauren has owned the popular burrito establishment Bueno Y Sano since 1995. Although business at Rolando's is not as good as it is at Bueno Y Sano, Rolando's has only been open since May 1 of last year. Lauren can often be found working at Bueno Y Sano, and occasionally at Rolando's.

There is a friendly atmosphere and plentiful seating at Rolando's, including a small bar at a window facing the sidewalk of Amherst Center, and four tables. The decor inside includes a mirrored wall and framed photographs of roast beef joints in Massachusetts, including a popular Revere eatery, Kelly's Roast Beef.

Also on the wall is an ever-present reminder of Latso's, the well-known car logo that has long resided there.

Kevin Hulse, a newly graduated UMass student, "misses Latso's" but likes Rolando's, calling it "a different kind of sandwich place" that he visited a lot over the summer and continues to visit.

Brett Widmeier, a friend of Hulse's and a current student at UMass, was a first-time visitor after his friends recommended the place!

Dining Best Bets

Hometown favorite – Antonio's

Chow and chug – Souper Bowl

Lunch break option – Loose Goose Café

First date – Pasta E Basta

Mexican fare – Bueno Y Sano

Most unique dining experience – Baku

Fast food – Pete's Drive-in

Stop in and try – Fresh Side

To spice things up – Veracruzana

Asian variety – Panda East

Drunk stop – Rt. 9 Diner

Having a craving – Sugar Jones

After the game – Bub's BBQ

Watching the game – Rafter's

Visiting parents – Judie's

Feeling classy – Union Station

Menu variety – Route 9 Diner

Casual dinner party – Fitzwilly's

Great value – Stealing from the Blue Wall

Familiar favorite – Chili's

Breakfast – Stables

Change of scenery – Cushman's Café

Drunk delivery – Wings

Drink coffee and do homework – Rao's Coffee

Best seafood – Bistro 63 at The Monkey Bar

Wining and dining – Chez Albert

Last stop – Rt. 9 Diner

Best appetizers – Amherst Brewing Company

Eats on campus – Earth Foods

Best cocktails - The Tunnel Bar

Hidden gem - Esselon Café

Worth the trip – Paper City Brewery

Atmosphere – The Tunnel Bar

Last resort – Domino's

...to the Victors go the Patrons

THE LAST MINUTE...

BY RIAN MCASKILL

As I sit here staring at the screen, attempting to write this, I am forced to consider the facts. I'm working on roughly four hours of sleep in last 72 hours, haven't left the Collegian newsroom in 38 hours, was forced to turn the space under my desk into a loft, a la George Costanza, and I'm bordering on insanity.

The funny thing is, I'm not alone. I am surrounded by a group of people who are in the same boat. This is how much me care about what we do and how much we care about The Minute. Since I'm sure you do not fully appreciate what the past four days have been like for us, I will start from the beginning.

In December of last year, former Arts and Living Editor Tim McCall and I started tossing around ideas for our spring special issue, which we didn't even know if we would be allowed to do. Recent financial trouble for the Collegian put the special issue in limbo, unless we were able to convince the Exec Board that we deserved it.

Traditionally, the spring special issue has been a simple local restaurant guide, but with that well-tapped more times than I care to remember, we decided to start fresh. Tim wrote up a proposal and pleaded his case, and a rough outline for what you now hold was born.

What ensued were two months of planning, re-planning, meetings and mass discussion involving numerous people about every small detail of what the finished product would look like. There is still debate over who came up with the name.

An unfortunate series of events led Tim to reluctantly leave this dysfunctional family that is the Collegian, leaving me in charge of our newly conceived baby. With deadlines looming and nightmares of disastrous road blocks and failed photo shoots filling my head, the help of not only dedicated co-workers, but good friends, put me at ease.

With all the content in, we began the painstaking process of designing this publication, page by page. Now, I bet you think we had a week, maybe two, to pull this together. Nope. Try one weekend.

Last Friday, a small group of editors, graphic designers and photographers came together to attempt to create something memorable. What ensued was the longest weekend of my life.

Over the course of four days — and I'm still not sure how — we created The Minute.

Stephanie McPherson, Brian Wood and Skye McIntyre, without you, not only The Minute, but the arts section itself would be in disarray. You have all brought a unique set of skills and opinions that make Arts and Living so much fun to work for. You have gone above and beyond my expectations. You truly are the brains behind the operation; all I am is a pretty figurehead.

Chris Martin, you are the graphics guru. I bow down to your knowledge. I don't even want to attempt to imagine what this would look like without you. You are my hero, when it comes to graphic design I consider you God.

Kathy Shea, Mike Sarkes and the rest of the graphics staff, you are the true creative force behind not only The Minute, but also the Collegian. You do not get nearly as much credit as you deserve.

Meghan Murphy, Kirsten Swenson, Katie Huston and S.P. Sullivan, thank you for putting in the extra hours to copy edit everything and catching all the mistakes. The Minute is that much better because of you.

Mike Phillis, Brian Tedder and the rest of the fine photographers, without you, this is nothing but a boring block of text. You all put in long hours and answered my sometimes ridiculous requests with a smile.

Alex Bender and the ad staff, thank you for all the extra work in pushing this product to potential advertisers. You got us the funding to be able to put this out.

Adam Szajgin, I am the Han to your Chewie. Thank you for your sacrifice, your music and your sense of humor.

Natasha Farrington, thank you for all wonderful food each and every night. Meatballs, lasagna, cake and other baked goods are what made this issue possible.

To all the writers who are featured, I hope you had as much fun working on your pieces as I had reading them. You met difficult deadlines and took all my comments and criticism and produced great pieces you should be proud of.

Finally, to my predecessor, Tim: without you, The Minute doesn't happen. I wish you could have been a bigger part of the final product. I am just glad that I was able to work alongside you. I raise my glass in honor, cheers.

Next year, a new version of The Minute will be on stands, this one long forgotten. The second hand continues to move and this is just a single moment, a snap shot in time.

THE MINUTE

Editor in Chief: Nicholas Belanger
Production Manager: Chris Martin
Managing Editor: Katie Huston
Business Manager: Dan Ewer
Night Supervisor: Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager: Alex Bender
Advertising Production: Kathy Shea
Arts Editor: Rian McAskill
Assistant Arts Editor: Brian Wood
Skye McIntyre
Stephanie McPherson
Copy Editor: Kirsten Swenson
Photo Editor: Michael Phillis
Assistant Photo Editor: Brian Tedder
Photo Credits: Michael Phillis
Amanda Eurel
Caitlin Coughlan
Danielle Augeri
Jenna Oelschlegel
Jeremie Whalen
Keith Lofling
Oliver Scott Smith
Brandon Cotton
Assistant Business: Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations: Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising: Marsea Whisten
Advertising Representatives: Caitlin O'Keith Mercuris
Graphic Design: Chris Martin
Kathy Shea
Michael Sarkes
Elaine Barbe
David Humphrey
Michael Phillis
Sara Ferris
Catering: Natasha Farrington

AmherstBrewingCompany

Featuring delicious, home-brewed beer since 1997.

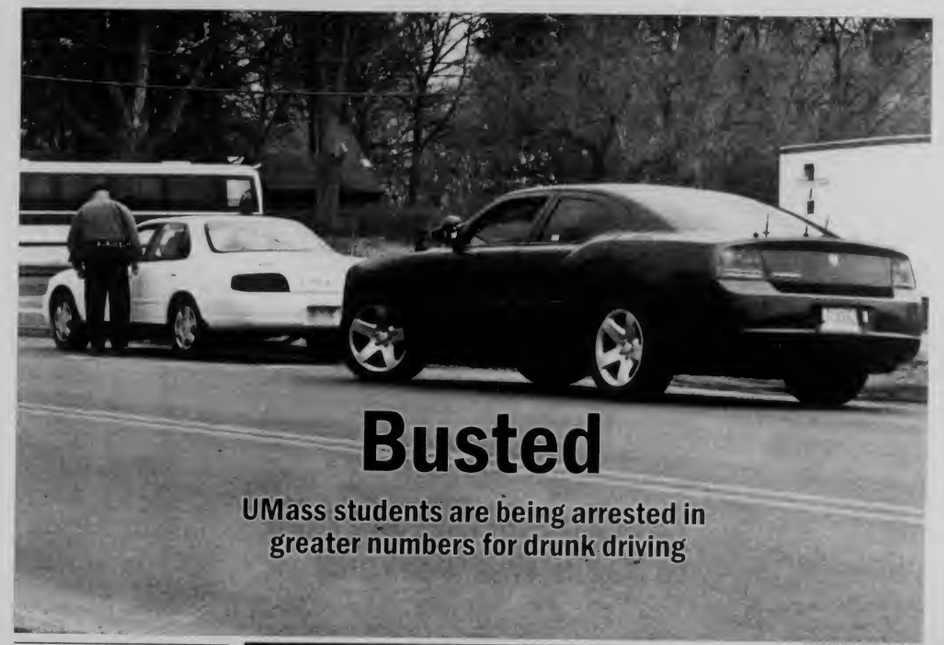
Stop by ABC for friendly staff, amazing food, and award-winning beer.



Head upstairs for pool tables, darts, foosball and new function room reservable for small parties.

LOCATED CONVENIENTLY IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST!

Patio opening April 21

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:56 | SAT H:55 | SUN H:53 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 2008

Busted

UMass students are being arrested in greater numbers for drunk driving

By Katie Huston
Collegian Staff

Editor's note – The following article is part of a series covering violence on campus.

The number of students arrested for operating under the influence (OUI) by the University of Massachusetts Police Department (UMPD) has more than tripled in the past five years, from 21 in 2004 to 68 in 2007.

However, according to Deputy Chief Pat Archbald of UMPD, it's hard to know if more students are driving after they drink.

"I can't say empirically if it's a result of us being

See DRUNK DRIVING on page 2

INSIDE:

FEATURES	ARTS & LIVING	SPORTS
Sniffing out crime	Spring Concert lineup announced	Men's lacrosse hosts Hobart
Page 4	Page 8	Page 11

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 119

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGER LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Tim McCall

War veterans voice opposition

BY ERIC SCHLICHTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Iraq Veterans Against the War (IVAW) held an event Wednesday night to voice their opposition to United States involvement in Iraq.

Since its inception in 2004, IVAW has made three demands: the immediate withdrawal of all occupying forces in Iraq, reparations for the human and structural damages Iraq has suffered and full benefits, like adequate health care (including mental health) and other supports for returning servicemen and women.

The evening started off with film clips from "Winter Soldier: Iraq and Afghanistan," an event held in Washington, D.C., last March. The footage served to set the tone as veterans discussed the ineffectiveness of U.S. forces in urban areas, racial issues, a disregard for the rules of engagement and a lack of leadership from the higher-ups in the chain of command. All of these problems would be further expounded upon by the IVAW panel from the Amherst chapter.

The IVAW panel spoke to a predictably anti-war crowd of about 80 people for more than two hours, with each veteran explaining his or her own experiences and drawing on them to show why they are now opposed to the Iraq war.

The first speaker was Adrienne Kinne, the Regional Coordinator for IVAW in New England who served actively as well as in the reserves for a decade. Kinne decried the U.S. government and military for its deceptive practices.

"It is wrong and immoral to use the tragedy of 9/11 to try to gain support in the United States to kill thousands of innocent civilians," she said. "How many Sept. 11ths is that?"

Kinne went on to discuss the cost of the war at home such as the crisis in veteran health care. She detailed how the government would not screen for certain mental illnesses in returning veterans because so many cases would be found. She claimed the government would not have the resources to treat them all.

Mike Van Valkenburg's focus was the dehumanization of the enemy seen in Iraq. He noted the prevalence of racial slurs and the overall degradation of the Iraqi people. He also recalled how he had been told by an officer, "You have to kill the women and children too, some day they may be the terrorists."

JEROMY WHALEN, COLLEGIAN

Al Sanchez, a member of Iraq Veterans Against the War who was a welder in Iraq, shared his experience overseas at an event on Wednesday.

Each veteran who had served in Iraq made it clear that improper conduct did not stem from the lower ranks and extend upward as everything "starts from the top and goes to the bottom," he said.

One testimony came from Michael LeDuc, an inactive Marine who was in the second Battle of Fallujah. LeDuc detailed how the rules of engagement were completely different in Fallujah than other areas of the country and how the Marines were instructed to fight before taking the city.

"To sum it up, if you see an individual with a weapon, kill him," said LeDuc, in reference to what a superior told the infantry before the invasion. "A pair of binoculars, kill him. A cell phone, or running from one building to another, kill him. If he has a white flag and is doing anything at all, assume it's a trick and kill him."

He added that Marines were falsely told the city was devoid of any non-combatants and that if they felt uncomfortable at all to "shoot everything that moves."

Nathan Lusignan, who served in Iraq at the beginning of the American occupation in 2003 and 2004, also spoke.

"The worst comes out in that environment," he said referring to armed conflict between U.S. forces and Iraqi citizens. "Maybe they're afraid or don't think they'll get caught."

Lusignan revisited an incident where an Iraqi vehicle failed to stop in time at a checkpoint and was subsequently shot up, destroying the driver's legs and crippling him for life. Lusignan said this was due to poor communication and that it made him realize the futility of the Iraq war, acknowledging the event as his personal turning point against the war.

The event was put on by the Amherst chapter of the IVAW in conjunction with the Western Massachusetts Campus Antiwar Network. Students can visit the IVAW website at www.IVAW.org or www.campusantiwar.net/chapters/umass for more information.

To join IVAW, one must have served active duty, reservist or National Guard since the Sept. 11 attacks.

Eric Schlichte can be reached at eschlich@student.umass.edu.

First annual 5K road race to begin this weekend

BY KATHERINE NEUBERT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The first annual 5K road race "Spring into Action" is being held tomorrow at 9 a.m.

"Many of our members are usual 5K runners and currently training to run the Boston Marathon," said Alpha Phi Omega President, Alana Einhorn. "After attending many other 5K races on campus and in the area, they saw what a great success a 5K can be and were enthusiastic in attempting to organize our own."

The route takes runners around the outer loop of the academic buildings, up N. Pleasant Street, past Lederle Graduate Research Center down Commonwealth Avenue, down Massachusetts Avenue, around Haigis Mall, back up N. Pleasant Street, taking a left at the Fine Arts Center, which will bring them up through Herter, finishing the race where it began, according to Einhorn.

UMass police have been notified of the event and the University's public safety department has also approved it. Because of the route of the race, no public roads will be closed. There will also be two UMass Emergency Medical Services (EMS) present.

The race is being presented by Alpha Phi Omega, and is scheduled to start at the south steps of the Student Union. Registration begins at 8 a.m.

Alpha Phi Omega is a co-ed community service organization at the University. This is their first year organizing the race and they hope it is a huge success, according to Einhorn.

"This weekend is Family Weekend and we're hoping that students get their family and friends involved to come out and enjoy a day of fun, exercise, great prizes and the opportunity to help support local homeless shelters," said Einhorn.

Tickets are being sold for $5 at Tix Unlimited in the Student Union. Participants can purchase tickets at the race tomorrow for $10, or bring a bag of donated clothing and still pay only $5. The race is open to everyone.

Free water bottles will be given to the first 50 people who register tomorrow.

Raffle tickets can also be purchased for $1 each at the Alpha Phi Omega table in the Campus Center until 2 p.m. today, and can also be purchased at the race. The raffle will then be drawn at the end of the race.

Participants can donate clothing, non-perishable food, household items, and sporting equipment.

All collected clothing donations will be stored and placed into our annual Fill-A-Bus event which will take place this year during the week of May 12 to the 16," said Einhorn. "For this event, Transit Services generously donates the usage of one bus and parks it at different locations on campus each day."

Items are then delivered to the Amherst Survival Center and other local homeless shelters.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu.

OUI arrests on the rise at UM

See DRUNK DRIVING from page 1

more aggressive, or if people are doing more drinking and driving," said Archibald.

In 2007, 68 people were arrested by the UMPD for operating under the influence, riding a steady three-year rise in OUI arrests. From 1998 to 2004, the department averaged about 22 OUI arrests per year. This year, 23 arrests had been made through mid-March.

For people over 21, OUI is defined as having a blood-alcohol content (BAC) of .08 or higher. Massachusetts has a "zero-tolerance" policy for underage drinkers, with a limit of .02 BAC, which can come from drinking less than one beer.

Although OUI is the official term used in Massachusetts, driving under the influence (DUI) and driving while intoxicated (DWI) – are often used as well.

The trend at UMass parallels national data, which suggests the number of college students driving while intoxicated has increased since 1998. A 2005 study by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA) estimated that 2.8 million college students drove under the influence of alcohol in 2001, up from 2.3 million in 1998.

However, Archibald attributes the increased arrests at UMass to two other factors: an increase of about eight UMPD officers since 2002, and state grants earmarked to target OUIs.

"We have more officers on the street," Archibald said. "Officers are hired on overtime with a specific orientation to stopping cars and finding drunk drivers."

State grants have allowed UMPD to run OUI patrols similar to the "click It or Ticket" program, which catches people without a seatbelt. The department has also conducted two roadblocks in cooperation with state police, and Archibald says the number of car stops where the driver has not been drinking has also increased.

April McNally, a University Health Services (UHS) health educator, agreed that increased enforcement is driving the numbers up.

"It's not that more students are drinking and driving," she said. "It's that those who are drinking and driving have a better chance of being caught. If students hear that there have been more DUI arrests in recent years, hopefully that will persuade them not to get behind the wheel if they have been drinking."

McNally believes that most UMass students behave responsibly when drinking.

"Most of our students don't drink and drive, which we're happy about," she said.

According to 2007 data from the "Social Norms" campaign survey, run by UHS, 77 percent of UMass students have not driven under the influence in the past year, and 73 percent have not gotten into a car with someone who is drunk.

If 75 percent of people aren't doing it, though, 25 percent of people are, according to survey data. McNally says students may not feel susceptible to being in an accident or being arrested.

"There's that sense of, 'well, it's just a mile down the road, or I don't feel that drunk,'" McNally said. "But the first thing to be affected when you're drinking is your reason and judgment and inhibition. With any amount of alcohol sometimes you think you're okay, but you're really not."

Archbald says UMass is probably comparable to other colleges as far as OUI arrests.

"UMass is probably typical, but it's still more of an issue than in the average community," he said. "It's a high concentration of young people who are experimenting for the first time with alcohol."

Despite the increase, UMass's police log is still significantly lower than that of the University of Connecticut, which is of comparable size.

In 2006, 174 people were arrested for driving while intoxicated, up from 158 in 2004 and 101 in 2005, according to the UConn Police Department's Web site.

Students caught driving under the influence face severe consequences. In 2005, Massachusetts introduced Melanie's Law, which created harsher penalties for OUI arrests. A first offense can result in a one-year license suspension, up to 2.5 years in a house of correction, or a fine between $500 and $5,000.

The consequences can be even more grave. In September 2004, a hit-and-run took place on Commonwealth Avenue. A student on her way home from a party hit a freshman in the crosswalk and the victim sustained severe injuries. Both students were under the influence of alcohol.

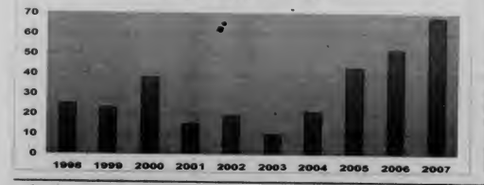
Senior Nick Canton doesn't find drunken driving to be a big problem at UMass.

"I don't run into it a lot," he said. "Most people will go out of their way to say, 'I've had a couple, I'm going to stop for the night.'"

However, junior Kelley Bailey says it's difficult to prevent students from making poor decisions.

"No matter how much you educate people about it, there's still people who don't listen," she said. "I guess the police need to be more aware of it. They need to crack down more."

Archbald feels he has seen an increase in designated driver efforts in his 20 years at UMass.



"It's a conversation that is happening before events, before people are under the influence," he said. "People see it now in a much different light – that just getting hammered and getting behind the wheel is just a socially unacceptable act."

Still, Archbald and McNally recognize that any student driving under the influence is taking a risk.

"Even one stop for DWI is reason for concern," Archbald said. "If you see the numbers go up, it just shows to us that it's still happening and we have to address it."

Katie Huston can be reached at khuston@student.umass.edu.

DUI ARRESTS BY UMPD '98 - '07

HOW TO GET HOME SAFELY

- Designated Drivers Club of Amherst
  Join the Facebook group or visit ddamherst.info to learn more.
- Celebrity Cab
  Provides low-cost shuttle service, at $1.75 for pickup and $0.35 for each additional eighth of a mile, a ride from Orchard Hill to town averages $5. 413-253-7330.
- Gottago Taxi
  Charges $7.25 from the UMass campus to downtown Amherst. 413-461-3070.
- PVTA Bus Service
  For maps and schedules, visit umass.edu/transit or call 413-545-0056.
- Campus Escort Service
  Provides a walking escort anywhere on campus, 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. 413-545-2123.

UMASS DINING WELCOMES PARENTS & GUESTS TO THE FAMILY WEEKEND 2008

Taste Of Home

Recipes submitted from home are now being served at all Dining Commons for lunch, Saturday, April 12

- Chicken Piccata (Phelan Family)
- Fettuccine Alfredo with Broccoli & Tomatoes (Lowrie Family)
- Nanny Whiting's Mac-N-Cheese (Cavicchi Family)
- Sweet and Sour Tofu (Holley Family)
- Mississippi Mud Truffle (Korniotes Family)
- Chocolate Chip Cookie Brownies (Windt Family)

Thank you for submissions! Enjoy a free UMass Taste of Home Cookbook, compliments of Dining Services.

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
ivy
umass.edu/diningservices

Beware of dogs

Taking a bite out of crime with UMPD

It may seem a somewhat uncommon resource for a typical university police department, but a K-9 unit provides the campus community with increased safety while providing officers with an invaluable crime-fighting partner.

UMPD's K-9 unit, which consists of three officers and their canine counterparts, patrols the University of Massachusetts campus 24 hours a day and has been active since 2003.

"One of the intents behind starting the K-9 unit was to give us a new tool to reach out to the community and have something ... that people would be interested meeting ... instead of just an officer driving by in a cruiser with the windows up," Officer Gerry Perkins said. "Creating a focal point for dialogue with the community was one of the big things."

Each canine in the unit has its own defining characteristics, from breed and age to skill and, possibly most noticeably, personality.

Every shift, the dogs are ready and eager to perform tasks like narcotics detection, suspect or scent tracking, aggressive active alert and officer protection in potentially hostile situations.

Photos and words by Keith Toffling

Max, the first canine officer at UMPD, can most often be seen patrolling the Mullins Center and acting as "spokes-dog" at informational events. Other than his work, the Belgian Malinois Dutch Shepherd mix and his handler, Perkins, have attained near-celebrity status by appearing in a popular YouTube video showcasing his performance in the Southwest residential area on the night of Superbowl XLII.

Kayla, an 8-year-old Chocolate Labrador who specializes in passive tracking, detecting and recovering narcotics, firearms and explosives, works side by side with officer Dameon Dewolf.

Lastly, Zeke, a 4-year-old Belgian Malinois handled by Officer Liana Varoksy, was imported from Holland and is trained to perform duties such as narcotics detection, evidence recovery, tracking, and handler protection.

According to the handlers, they were most impressed by the dogs' sense of smell and persistence when faced with a challenge.

When searching for narcotics or scent tracking the dogs enter a state of cardiovascular overdrive, forcing them into a hyperventilated state. This stimulated physiological state potentially allows their sense of smell to partially fail them. This is where the officer's role comes into play. By paying precise attention to the dog's breathing pattern and noticing if they may have not picked up on a substance due to excessive exhaling, the officer is able to help guide the dog.

And though they may sometimes miss a targeted scent, these dogs still have the ability to detect a smells 10 times more efficiently than humans.

"The dogs' ability to alert when incredibly small quantities [of narcotics] are present with their nose which can seem almost mind-blowing at times," Perkins said.

Every day, the dogs and their handlers, in both training and active duty, put their best paw forward to help maintain a safe environment for the entire campus community.

Keith Toffling can be reached at KToffin@student.umass.edu

EDITORIAL OPINION

Get yourself into a clinic

Katherine Marr

Pretend for a minute that you — yes, you — have been selected by the Center for Information and Study on Clinical Research Participation to take part in a survey.

The question is, who of the following makes a greater contribution to mankind: a person who raises money for charity by running in a race; a person who donates an organ; a person who volunteers to participate in a clinical trial; or a person who gives blood?

If I'd been posed that question, I would have probably chosen the organ donor, followed by the blood donor, then the runner, and lastly, the clinical research participant. My answer must be representative of the general population, because similar thinking has more or less been the pattern — and problem — over the years.

Participating in clinical trials or running races for charity are rarely raised onto any sort of pedestal, despite their potential of proving very important to vast numbers of people.

It's understandable why most everyone ranks organ donor above the other do-gooders. But CISCRP's February 2008 survey data revealed a more surprising statistic. One thousand people were told to rate how much they admired organ donors, blood donors, and clinical study participants.

When asked whom they admired a great deal, 82 percent chose organ donors and 72 percent selected blood donors, whereas only 29 percent opted for clinical trial participants.

When asked whom they did not admire at all, 11 percent indicated people who volunteered for clinical trials, compared to only three percent for organ donors and two percent for blood donors. Even in this case, with the potential for all three to be admired equally, people didn't harbor especially praiseworthy views of clinical trial participants.

Participating in clinical trials is significantly easier for people to do than, say, donate an organ, regard to clinical studies. It never occurs to people to partake in a study until they are afflicted with some disorder or disease, and it's only then that they suddenly become desperate to get involved in research.

Unfortunately, it's because of this failure to participate sans a personal crisis that explains why researchers struggle to complete studies and develop conclusions quickly. Yet, for the majority of studies, there is no good reason not to participate.

The studies that I have completed at UMass yet gets dismissed for supposedly not measuring up to larger displays of altruism.

Helping isn't defined only as making grand gestures. Although they may not sound as sacrificial as donating a kidney, other deeds are equally important to mankind.

I can imagine what typically happens, merely based on my own experiences with research studies at UMass. As a psychology minor, I've long known the deal with extra credit for psychology classes. For approximately every half-hour of participation in the department's research studies, you earn one credit that can boost your class average.

But it wasn't until this semester, when I stepped out of a psychology exam with a sinking feeling, that I rushed to my computer and in a state of near-panic, began registering for research studies galore.

This behavior mirrors what often happens in revolved largely around my understanding of homophones, preferred characteristics for a psychotherapist or my relationship with my parents.

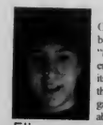
Those are all pretty simple, right? But I think that many of the more vital health-related studies are even easier. I mean, sitting in front of a computer screen after a long day of classes, trying to decode riddles like: "Some elephants are not animals. All animals are plants. Are some elephants plants?" can start to drive you crazy after a while.

It's probably much less painful to have your blood pressure read after riding a stationary bicycle for half an hour, have your REM sleep monitored in a laboratory or have a swab of saliva taken from your cheek to measure stress hormone levels.

And while we're on the topic of dismal participation in deeds that don't scream "magnanimous," running races for charity also seems to hold a perpetual spot at the bottom of the list.

There seems to be just as many opportunities to run marathons for charity as to perform in clinical studies. Judging by the amount of joggers around campus who don't look like they're going to keel over after a quarter-mile (unlike me), many could easily do a 5K.

Helping isn't defined only as making grand gestures. Although they may not sound as sacrificial as donating a kidney, other deeds are equally important to mankind. If you're going to jog five miles anyway, you might as well do it for a good cause.



If you're going to spend all day watching television and sleeping anyway, you might as well do it in a laboratory where experimenters can monitor the link between television and sleep disorders.

Besides, participating in research studies can be interesting, enlightening and perhaps fun. And even if they aren't what you consider a source of "fun," the types of studies for which college students qualify are rarely a negative experience.

They leave you with a sense of having helped someone, whether its a UMass graduate student who needs subjects for her study or the people who benefit from the research findings. In fact, from now on, I'm going to sign up for research studies even when I don't think that I've just bombed an exam.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

Confronting destiny

Eli Gottlieb

I hear that the Olympic torch has been snuffed by "Free Tibet" protesters several times on its way to China for the Beijing 2008 games. I also saw about a couple hundred Chinese students rallying outside the Student Union to claim that Tibet has always been a part of China.

So of course I went over to where the Improv Comedy group was singing and dancing and asked them to put Rick Astley's "Never Gonna Give You Up" on their stereo. UMass, you've been RickRolled.

In other words, I absolutely refuse to write about politics this week. Instead, let me touch on an issue that eventually confronts all of us. I found it in January when standing at the grave of David Ben-Gurion, the man who basically created the modern state of Israel, but it comes to everyone eventually.

At some point everyone hears the accusatory little voice at three in the morning, demanding to know what they're actually accomplishing with their life. Normally you can roll over, tell that voice to shut up, and go back to sleep. Or at the very least you can distract yourself by watching TV or YouTube.

At some point everyone hears the accusatory little voice at three in the morning, demanding to know what they're actually accomplishing with their life.

Sometimes, though, you actually feel the question sting. I mean, what am I accomplishing with my life? Ben-Gurion founded a country. Me, if I work really, really hard and happen to make a clever innovation I might get credit for the next big computer program everyone wants to use.

So why do I stay in the computer science major? Everyone from my family to my Hebrew professor has told me I'd make a great lawyer or politician. I certainly find words easy to build into an ironclad argument for anything I believe is true.

You've probably confronted something similar in your life. How did you get through it? Did you distract yourself, or did you actually let the nasty three-in-the-morning voice get to you and change your path in life?

I feel compelled to wonder, did the big, important people we read about in history always know what they would do in life? Supposedly Ben-Gurion knew at age 20 how important he would become and took pains to preserve his diary. What about Washington or Dr. King? Did Julius Caesar know he would grow up to become dictator of Rome?

And if you have the talent to become someone important like that, don't you owe it to the world to do so? As immortalized in the advertising motto of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute (well known for their Rensselaer Ratio), "Why not change the world?"

The only proper excuse I've ever been able to invent to make the accuser go away and let me get my four remaining hours of sleep is: In life, we have to do what we love. Nothing else will ever make us really happy, and I don't think we can ever really become quite as good at anything we don't love.

I honestly and truly love what I do, even when I get the worst teacher in my department for an important class. I've written programs solely to see them work, to witness the magic of bringing something to life that didn't even exist before.

I write this column because I love hearing others' responses and because, like most of us Jews, I love telling everyone else what I think. If I were to become a lawyer I could probably make good money and win important cases, but I don't think I would love my work.

Also, I don't feel at all sure I could live with myself at the end of the day. Trying to do something I don't wholeheartedly want to would probably drain all the talent and capability I have into sheer bloody-mindedness and discipline anyway.

You, dear reader, probably love something completely else. Many of us are unfortunate enough to love something from which we don't think we can make money. Maybe you love to draw or write short stories. Many of you probably enjoy playing in your band more than anything.

Hopefully you're even lucky enough to love something at which you're really good. Well by God, it's about time you tried to make something of that. That way, the next time Mr. or Ms. What-Are-You-Accomplishing comes around, you can tell him/her, "What I love," and go right back to bed.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

The roommate game

Hannah Nelson

The topic of co-ed dorm rooms has been talked to death in the past 10 or so years. But hey, who doesn't like to beat a dead horse? The debate is pretty typical, it's either too liberal or a freedom of lifestyle choice.

Most students are perceived as being all for it, most parents are perceived as being all against it. Then the argument threw in the term "gender neutral."

That reasoning stated it was a more comfortable living option for the students and friends of students who wanted to live in a "gender-free" environment due to gender identity.

You've most likely heard the argument before, after all there are such options at UMass. But the stereotypes of the gay guy and straight girl living together in a "Will and Grace" type of home aren't the only form of roommate pairings going on — hence the re-emergence of the debate.

Why is it that so many people have an immediately negative reaction to the idea of a guy and girl sharing a dorm room?

Why is it that so many people have an immediately negative reaction to the idea of a guy and girl sharing a dorm room? Correction, why is it that so many people have an immediately negative reaction to the idea of a straight guy and a straight girl sharing a dorm room?

Better yet is if that reaction is to a straight guy and a straight girl who don't share any sort of sexual attraction whilst waving the "just friends" flag. It's not just a question of the reason beyond the phrasing of 'gender-neutral' housing anymore, which usually gets stamped as the non-heterosexual identity option.

Regardless of identity, is the reason that the idea of co-ed roommates invokes that knee-jerk effect in parents because it only aids in the fear that college dorms are a haven for sex, drugs and alcohol?

More likely than not, that is the case if you throw safety into the mix. The idea that in some cases the co-ed bathrooms came first is an awkward evolution in my mind. If you're going to push the limit of your parents' anxiety button, I would have thought that a co-ed bathroom would just about do it.

Marked as a "sign of the times," mixed-gender housing may be the norm on some campuses, while others are still learning to move beyond mandatory single-sex floors, if not single sex residences.

It is a generally well-accepted fact that college campuses are a haven for every sort of rally imaginable, but many administrators on less liberal campuses are surprised by the lack of dissent among students.

I guess that students are just more concerned about genocide these days. Who knew? It's either that or the concept of "live and let live" is finally starting to settle in.

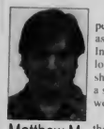
While some dating couples are in fact taking the opportunity to test out how well they can share a small space, housing offices predictably are not encouraging the practice.

It's not an abstinence lesson on their part, but a stance taken in order to avoid adopting the role as the new breakup middleman. The assumption that so many couples would want to pair up for the roommate challenge in the first place can feel like an insult to the intelligence of the college student.

It suggests that students have nothing but sex on the brain. Sure there are exceptions here, but the roommate pool for mixed-gender housing isn't going to be full to the brim with students looking for their own private love shack. In fact, at the colleges allowing the practice, students are displaying better judgment when picking roommates of the opposite sex than originally thought.

One reason proposed for the willingness of colleges to turn to mixed gender and gender-neutral housing, is the possibility of housing at some colleges using it as a ploy to keep upper-class students in the system rather than following the first apartment dream.

At schools like UMass, with infamous housing shortages, this hardly seems to be the case, but schools like to throw around statistics that students living on campus usually boast a higher GPA.



If colleges are that desperate to have students stay on campus, it really doesn't seem all that extreme that they would be willing to cede to mixed rooms, especially if there is mixed roommate pairings occurring off campus anyway.

On one online forum for college students to discuss housing situations, several expressed that it's not mixed-gender housing they really want, but wider availability of single rooms for those who want to avoid the roommate issue altogether.

That option hardly comes without its own set of complications. No matter where you stand on the issue, you have to admit it is nice to have choices, even at the risk of sounding spoiled in the process. With the costs of education going up, why shouldn't we get what we ask for?

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Get off Wal-Mart's back, people

Matthew M. Robare

Get off Wal-Mart's back, people. Wal-Mart is as evil as Iran — that is, not at all. In fact, Wal-Mart, with its low prices and well-stocked shelves, has probably been a source for good around the world.

Wal-Mart has done what the War on Poverty and Nixonian price and wage controls could not do: raise the standard of living for the poorest Americans. The lower the price a poor person has to pay for a good from Wal-Mart, the less impoverished they actually are.

The money they save can be stretched to feed more children, provide basic medical care, and even higher education. If the leftists who consistently demonize Wal-Mart actually gave one whit about social justice that was not for votes they would sing hymns of praise to Sam Walton and his heirs.

Then why do they hate Wal-Mart? I've already answered that. Wal-Mart is hated because they do a better job at ensuring general welfare than all the state engorging programs of FDR, LBJ and their successors.

Wal–Mart is empirical proof that the theories of Marx and Lenin were nothing more than the murderous ravings of maniacal mad men.

Wal-Mart exposes the inability of the state to fulfill its promises even with coercion and demonstrates the success of the voluntary cooperation of the free market. In other words, Wal-Mart is empirical proof that the theories of Marx and Lenin were nothing more than the murderous ravings of maniacal mad men.

The number of people ordered killed by Wal-Mart's Board of Directors: zero. The number of people ordered killed by practitioners of one form of Marxism or another: over 100 million (an estimate by R.J. Rummel).

Under Marxists I include both Communists and Nazis (take Marx and replace proletarian with Aryan and bourgeoisie with Jews or Slavs and you will have "Mein Kampf").

I think I'm safer in Wal-Mart than any Communist state. If I were to include the number of people killed by governments professing other ideologies, for instance the United States or Great Britain, the numbers would be even higher.

States — all states — employ coercion, forced labor, killing, imprisonment, forced migration, extortion as a primary aggressor to enforce their will. Wal-Mart only engages in coercion when it is the victim of coercion (for instance when a store is broken into and property stolen). And only then through a state organ (the police) that itself is based on coercion (taxation). Wal-Mart's looking pretty good.

Criticism of Wal-Mart often focuses on the mistaken belief that it owes its employees some kind of noblesse oblige "fair wage" and that not doing this means it's exploitive. Firstly, fairness in economics is the voluntary agreement between two parties on a price.

A good (in our case, labor) has no intrinsic value of its own; value is subjective on the part of the participants in the exchange. So when 17,000 people apply for 300 positions at a Wal-Mart store for probably minimum wage obviously 17,000 people consider minimum wage a fair exchange for their labor.

Many of the critics making the claim about the fairness of Wal-Mart's wage are labor unions. These are the same unions who invoke government coercion to force raises in their wages and non-union workers to join. This prevents the business from hiring non-union workers who would work for less. This forces the business' costs to rise and they have to pass the rises onto the consumer or take a loss.

But Wal-Mart has courageously remained free from the taint of unions and its tendency to hire unskilled, part-time workers not only contributes to alleviating poverty through lower prices for everyone but enables the employment of otherwise almost unemployable people, such as unskilled teenagers and retired people trying to supplement Social Security checks.

A unionized Wal-Mart would likely contribute to not only mass unemployment among teenagers and a subsequent rise in juvenile crime rates, but the older people put out of work would be forced into extreme poverty and become a huge burden on their families and the health care system.

But at least when America's poor teens are rioting and shoplifting they will not be exploited and when their grandparents die of starvation they'll at least die happy knowing that the unions treated them fairly.

The leftist smear campaign against Wal-Mart has got to stop before they do irrevocable damage to everyone. They are offended by the very things Wal-Mart does that accomplish the aims of all their power grabs and they are homicidally envious of its success. They won't rest until they've looted Wal-Mart like vikings attacking a monastery and then we'll see just how much we lose without it.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

"A Constitution should be short and obscure." - Napoleon Bonaparte

Spring Concert lineup revealed at Battle

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ever dreamed of competing for the chance to play a concert at the Mullins Center, opening up for some of today's biggest names and hottest acts? This was precisely the grand prize for the UMass Battle of Bands on Wednesday night, sponsored by the University Programming Council. The event pitted local bands against each other. The grand prize? Opening up for the annual Spring Concert.

This year the concert boasts an eclectic array of headliners from both the hip-hop and rock 'n' roll worlds. Slated to headline the event are Fat Joe, Paramore and pop-punk veterans Jimmy Eat World.

The battle began at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom and offered not only free admission and refreshments, but also a chance to check out UMass' own homegrown musical talent.

The Battle of the Band's culminated in a showdown between two very different musical acts. Static & Messiah are a Boston-based hip-hop act made up of juniors from the campus. The band got the crowd on its feet early with their blend of old-school and new hip-hop, and kept up their intensity through several rounds of competition.

The two emcees took turns rhyming, often finishing each others' musical sentences demonstrating the intense chemistry of friends that have performed together since high school.

Exit Reason, on the other hand, is a local metal band that blends old school Iron Maiden-inspired riffs with a vocal styling more akin to modern prog-rockers, Coheed & Cambria. The band tore through original songs that demonstrated their advanced musical ability with the guitarist often ripping into intense metal solos. Though they did their best to win the crowd over, the cards were stacked against them. Ultimately, Static & Messiah edged out the aspiring metal heads and won the coveted opening spot.

Exit Reason almost didn't make it to the final round however, as there was a hotly-contested tie at the end of the second round. Experimental rock group DFY had equal support from the crowd early on. The trio's songs often dabbled into intense keyboard breakdowns far from anything being heard on pop or rock radio. Despite the band's obvious respect from the crowd, they ultimately lost the audience voting, which was arbitrary at best.

The hosts asked the crowd to yell for their favorite artists, envoking a back-and-forth shouting match between the bands' faithful supporters. The hosts opted for the young metal group Exit Reason as winners, though the actual result was debatable.

The final decision didn't come to an audience vote, as a panel of UPC-appointed judges presided over the events. The table of four judges held up a score ranging from 1-10 on score cards that sat in front of them. Ties were then decided by the audience which was often called into play as the pivotal fourth judge.

KEITH HOUGH / COLLEGIAN

Held in the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night, the UMass Battle of the Bands included music from a range of local artists. The annual event was held to both highlight area talent and announce the acts slated to play the Spring Concert at the Mullins in May.

The event also featured the selling of raffle tickets for prizes that ranged from gift certificates to big-ticket items such as the new Sony PlayStation 3. All in all, the event brought out a fairly largesized crowd, most of the audience members filing out before the final band took the stage. However, there remained a decently sized crowd of people standing in front of the stage, often breaking into dance and high-fiving the aspiring artists between songs.

The concert also had a diverse group of hip-hop acts with four musical groups from this genre on the bill. Constantino, a three-piece rap group, faired the best. The act beat out competitors M.A.V. and the self-styled "Caribbean T-pain," Abdi.

The competition began when Picked on Sally took the stage to offer a slab of the vanilla variety pop/emo that is being churned out by acts like Boys Like Girls and other MTV favorites. The lead singer strummed rhythm guitar while trying his best to imitate Billie Joe Armstrong's trademark punk warble.

The next act, Leaving London, was the first band to get some momentum going with the crowd, offering a mix of rock and funk with an overall pop vibe. The band, featuring all UMass students, had recently returned from a string of dates in New York, but despite their pop sheen and strong set, neither Leaving London nor the other pop punk bands were able to make it past the first round.

The event finished off with Boston emo rockers, Lannen Fall. The group played a 30-minute set, after which the Spring Concert lineup was announced. The band played some of their trademark pop/emo tunes, sporting the requisite skinny jeans and converse shoes.

Pete Rizzo can be reached at Prizzo@student.umass.edu.

SVP showcases comedy for a cause

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If you have seen the human statues in the Campus Center concourse at the University of Massachusetts in formal wear, holding fliers, offing prom style photos with a shark, I bet you're wondering what they are doing.

They are members of Student Valley Productions (SVP) promoting the upcoming comedy jam this weekend.

Held in Bartlett 65, this is the 12th annual SVP Comedy Jam. Featuring improv and stand-up comedians from Amherst to Chicago and Los Angeles, the Comedy Jam is a free two-night, six-hour comedy event is one of the largest comedy festivals in New England.

Every year the Jam has a theme for promotion. This year the theme is Promedy, a play on the prom.

"We don't actually do any comedy about the theme," said Evan Boshi, a member of the UMass-based improv group Mission: IMPROVable and Improv with Attitude. "It's used solely for promotion. We try to find a way to reach people without pissing them off. We were finding that the amount of fliering we were doing was obnoxious. People got sick of it. Last year we started with a philosophy of 'if they don't want it, don't force it on them.' So we just stand there with our arms out and we find that more people take them know because they are curious as to why we are standing there in formal wear."

The "Promedy" theme has been a major part of promotion aside from just the formal wear.

"We did a dance party on Wednesday on the Student Union steps," Boshi said. "We got dressed up and got the sound system out and had a good time for an hour. We have had the opportunity to get your prom picture taken with a shark. It's fun for us instead of just saying, 'Free comedy.'"

The group is doing more then just promoting with a prom theme. They have also partnered with the Fairy Godmother Project out of Boston. The project accepts donated prom dresses for girls in the Boston area.

Past themes have included Free Comedy, a play on Free Willy, Comedy for President and Fear Bears impress comedy.

As always, the theme was not easy to come by.

"The first advertising meeting is basically an hour of bad puns until we come up with something we like," Boshi said. "There are always people who throw around welcome to Amsterjam. But you have to stay P[olitically] C[orrect]."

The schedule of acts is impressive. Last year's stand-out acts, Team Submarine and Dirty Water, will both be returning and former mission IMPROVable members M.I Inc., 2 Dudes. Submarine is fresh off an honor from a win at the Chicago Sketchfest, one of the most competitive improv competitions in the country.

Friday night features eight acts including The Late Night Players, 3 Hole Punch and MC Mr. Napkins from Boston, Be Frank from Chicago, M.I Inc., 2 Dudes from LA and a trio of Amherst talent including Los Dos Dudes, B&B and stand-up Adam Szagin.

Saturday features Dirty Water and Team Submarine from Chicago, Jordan Jesse Go! Live!, and all three SVP acts, Mission IMPROVable, Improve with Attitude and Sketch-22.

There are no major changes to overall format from last year's show.

"We have better lighting," Boshi said. "We start at eight each night and go for about three hours. People can come and go as they please."

This year, SVP is looking to build on the success of last year's festival. Last year, the Comedy Jam was sold out both nights, setting an attendance record.

"We were able to sell out last year and are looking to do it again," said Boshi. "There is nothing like having 400 people laughing at something you said."

UVC-TV 19 is also taping the entire festival, to air on a later date.

The SVP Comedy Jam is free and takes place tonight and tomorrow, in 65 Bartlett, starting at 8 p.m. Additional information and blog entries can be seen at blogs.umass.edu/svp.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@dailycollegian.com

SVP PROMEDY JAM
APRIL 11, 12
8 P.M.
BARTLETT 65
FREE

Festival of the Arts at UMass

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the Battle of the Bands still a recent memory and the Spring Concert gearing up, there seems to be a lot of focus on local music. The Festival of the Arts at the University of Massachusetts, however, is looking to change that.

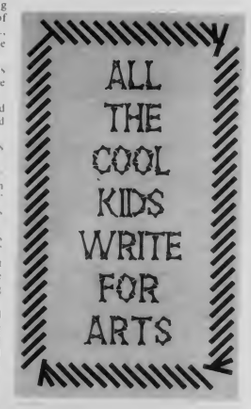
On May 9, the University Programming Council (UPC) is putting on a Festival of the Arts at the Haigis Mall from 1-4 p.m., but they are looking for acts to fill the card.

Kasey Beckerman, the performing arts coordinator for UPC, is heading up the festival and is in charge of booking.

"We are open to every kind of act," said Beckerman. "I hope to have 15-25 solid acts total."

Beckerman is looking for all varieties of talent and artists.

"Slam poetry, comedy, singer/songwriters, dancers, a capella groups," Beckerman said. "We are looking for everything." The only thing he has been weary about is booking too many bands.



"We just had a Battle of the Bands and are trying to focus on other acts," Beckerman said. "It's not that we don't want bands, it's just that it takes a while for set-up in between, but we are willing to have a couple."

The festival has a few of the slots filled and is in talks with additional acts. The UMass Dance team will perform as well as teaching salsa dancing on the side and local stand-up comedian and UMass student Adam Szagin has been chosen as the festival MC.

Sweets N' More has also been tapped for catering duties.

Interested performers can e-mail Beckerman at kbeckerm@student.umass.edu or call 916-715-7952. All those interested must contact by April 15.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@student.umass.edu

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

What:
Business Manager
Where:
The Daily Collegian
When:
Next Year

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, April 11

Smith College's second Friday Artist Talk continues with a presentation by Gary Nawonger, a professor of art at Smith College. His group of watercolor and oil landscapes is currently on display at the Smith College Museum of Art. The talk will take place at the museum at 6 p.m. and is free and open to the public. Admission to the museum will also be free of charge during the talk.

•

Food For Thought Books will host a reading and open mic night by the Body Politics 2008 ensemble. The event is free and open to the public. It will take place from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the bookstore, which is located in downtown Amherst.

•

Jam-band Umphrey's McGee will be playing at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. They will be supported by New York progressive-rock band U-Melt. Tickets are $22.50.

•

UPC's weekly movie continues with a screening of the family-friendly animated feature "The Fox and the Hound." Screenings will take place at 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. Popcorn and refreshments will be served during this free event. The movie will show for a third time on Sunday at 8 p.m. in the same location.

•

Saturday, April 12

Singer-songwriters Dar Williams and Shawn Mullins will perform at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. The show will open with Nerissa and Katryna Nields, two sisters who play acoustic folk together as The Nields. Ticket prices are $35, $27.50 and $22.50.

•

Canada's The Weakerthans will be playing in the Pearl Street Clubroom. The band, whose musical sounds range from politically-aware rock to alternative-country, will be supported by A.A. Bondy and Christine Fellows. The show begins at 8:30. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

•

Sunday, April 13

There will be a sale of second-hand clothing in the Carroll Room in the Smith College campus center from 12 p.m. to 3 p.m. All proceeds from the sale will go to benefit local organizations and charities that aid women and children in need.

•

Amherst College's Gallery of Readers Sunday series continues with a reading by Barbara Lucy and Joan Cenedella at 4 p.m. in the Nielson Library Browsing Room. The event is free and open to the public.

•

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

the $4 $4 $4 DEAL

New! Wow!

3 Small 1 topping Pizzas

ONLY $4 each + delivery

Bonino's Pizza

AMHERST/HADLEY
413 - 256 - 8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop

Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Weakerthans at Pearl Street

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

When Winnipeg native John K. Samson arrives in Northampton this Saturday night for The Weakerthans' performance at The Pearl Street Night Club, he'll be accompanied by more than just a library of music and his trusty metaphors. Samson carries with him the essence of nearly two decades of artistic evolution.

As a member of Propaghandi in the mid-1990s, Samson was a man full of untamed angst and idealism, using the stage as a forum for the band's collectively brash demands for radical social and political change. Vociferating on tracks with such unambiguous titles as "The Only Good Fascist Is a Very Dead Fascist" and "Middle Finger Response," musical subtleties became inconsequential afterthoughts, replaced in favor by a barrage of F-bombs and hostility.

Following their 1996 release "Less Talk, More Rock," Samson left his role in the band to pursue new artistic directions. Shortly after this he resurfaced with a new band, The Weakerthans, in 1997 with their debut release "Fallow," an album that is staggeringly removed from his established musical roots.

Somewhere along the transition between bands, Samson dropped his impetuous and edgy persona, transforming himself into a polished and introspective songwriter. The abrasive sounds and raucous lyrics that were once so synonymous with his presence were replaced by a decidedly more melodic and nuanced sound. Delicately played guitars and supplemental keyboards replaced the more hectic, thrash delivery of instrumentation listeners had grown accustomed to. Most significantly of all, Samson's lyrics unveiled themselves as categorically sensitive in their poeticism. The political-punk had discovered his softer side.

Following the initial success of "Fallow," the band has been unrelenting in their progression. The group has released three subsequent full-lengths over the course of their 10-year existence, with each garnering an increasing amount of fanfare and publicity while further detaching Samson from his days as a loud-mouthed anarchist, and fortifying his place as a one of indie rock's most gifted lyricist.

With his newfound approach to writing, Samson litters his songs with peculiar details of everyday life that seem so miniscule on the surface, but are unmistakably identifiable. Infusing this quality with his seemingly limitless poetic sensibilities, Samson successfully delivers multi-layered themes from a wide variety of narrative perspectives that span full albums.

The Weakerthans latest release, 2007's "Reunion Tour," has been met with a mixed critical reaction and can be best described as the bands most experimental album to date. There is more prominent use of keyboards throughout the album, the composition favors a softer sounding tone, and lyrically, the album shifts in perspective between every one of its 11 tracks.

On "Civil Twilight," Samson lyricizes from the perspective of a frustrated Winnipeg Transit bus driver professing his innermost thoughts. On "Relative Surplus Value," Samson returns to his revolutionary sentiments of old by providing a voice to victims of the ever-growing economic inequalities and failures of modern life, with a subtly and craft unseen during his younger years.

The album's most abstract selection comes in the form of "Elegy for Gump Worsley," a minimally structured song that serves as a spoken word tribute to former cult Canadian hockey legend who recently passed away.

The band does, however, manage to offset some of the bleaker topics covered on the album with some jovial material. You'd be hard pressed to find a song about women's curling that is more infectiously captivating than "Tournament of Hearts." "Sun in an Empty Room's" layered choruses provide a decidedly uplifting quality that contributed an essential balance to the complete work.

Despite the album's considerably fragmented themes, the notion of continuity is not entirely scraped on the far-stretching album. With "Virtue the Cat Explains Her Departure," Samson returns to deliver a heartbreaking conclusion to one of the band's most beloved character's story arch. On "Reconstruction Site," the band's 2003 effort, Samson introduced Virtue, a dejected and oft-ignored feline protagonist, in one of the album's most popular cuts "Plea from a Cat Named Virtue." While "Plea" is an upbeat crowd favorite full of unbridled energy, "Departure" is a somber and elegiac retelling of love once-cherished fading into a distant memory.

In their current form, The Weakerthans are the culmination of Samson's journey from a brash youth into a mature wordsmith. While The Weakerthans may never posses the raw energy of Propaghandi, they more than balance this with the tactful subtleties that define their sound and Samson's continued progression as a storyteller.

The Weakerthans play Saturday, April 12 with opening acts AA Bondy and Christine Fellows at The Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton, part of WMUA's Left of the Dial Concert Series. Doors open for the event at 8:30 p.m. and tickets are $15 in advance, $18 at the door.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich_daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

Minutemen turning the corner at right time

Hobart up next for streaking UMass

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Two weeks ago, Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella wasn't pleased with the direction of his 2008 Minutemen.

An ultimatum, 14 days and 20 goals later, the Minutemen are back in the race for an ECAC Championship.

Following the 15-1 loss to No. 19 Loyola on March 22, Cannella stood in front of his players at practice and questioned their desire. The Minutemen responded, winning games over Penn State, 7-5, and Saint John's, 13-8.

"It's funny because we want to encourage them to continue to do the same thing, but we can do that at the end of the year," Cannella said. "We didn't sign up for nine games, we signed up for 14. That's when we'll evaluate our season.

"I'm proud of them, but we want to push forward."

Now at 2-1 in the ECAC, 4-5 overall, the Minutemen take on Hobart (5-4, 2-2 ECAC) Saturday on Garber Field; opening faceoff is scheduled for 1 p.m.

A win for the Minutemen would set up a matchup with No. 4 Georgetown a week from Saturday in Washington, D.C., with first place in the ECAC on the line if the Hoyas defeat Loyola on Saturday. Cannella isn't looking ahead, at all, but positioning within the conference enters the discussion at this point in the season.

Getting past Hobart, however, is no easy task. The Statesmen boast one of the best goal scorers in the nation, Daryl Veltman, along with a host of gifted playmakers and finishers around him. Despite missing three games this season, Veltman leads Hobart with 18 goals, but its biggest offensive strength is its depth. Eight Statesmen have at least five goals on the season, and five have contributed 10 or more points.

"Veltman is a great, great finisher," Cannella said. "So you have to plan for him, but you have to worry about the other guys that they have. They have some strong midfielders, and contributions from a lot of guys.

"So you have to concentrate on everyone, but you really have to worry about Veltman in transition," he continued. "He's very, very good in transition; he's a sniper."

UMass's depth isn't to the extent of the Statesmen, but the emergence of freshmen Peter McNichols and Zach Rodgers augmented a once weak UMass offense. In the last two games, the pair has combined for 10 points.

"They were sort of thrust into their roles, and we hoped they would be more consistent than inconsistent throughout the year," Cannella said. "Typically when you have young guys out there, there are some inconsistencies. They're not used to playing at the intensity level. In high school, there are games they'll score four or five goals in without even showing up.

"They've done a good job, but we need them to do a better job."

The two bring such different skills sets to the field that they don't get in each other's way. Rogers is one of the best passers on the Minutemen, and works very well in the tight space around the goal – he leads the team with 12 assists. Cannella mentioned earlier in the season that he hoped Rogers would find his scoring touch as the season progressed. It seems to have happened for the rookie, he has three goals in the last two games.

McNichols projected as a potential first-line attack even before the suspension of 2007 leading scorer Jim Connolly. His 11 goals are second on the Minutemen behind Tim Balise's 21.

Freshman attacker Peter McNichols has lived up to high expectations this season, ranking second on the Minutemen with 11 goals. UMass takes on Hobart Saturday at Garber Field.

Games notes

UMass leads the all-time series, 6-2, but did not play the Statesmen from 1985-2005. Hobart is 0-3 in Amherst since 1972, and hasn't defeated UMass since 1985. Balise was named the ECAC Offensive Player of the Week for his six-goal performance against St. John's on Saturday.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

IN DECIDING WHICH LAW SCHOOL TO ATTEND,
CONSIDER THIS:

Quinnipiac University School of Law ranks among the top 100 law schools in such categories as full-time student LSAT scores (median – 158); admission acceptance rates; student/faculty ratio (13:1); and employment rates after graduation. Not to mention, we offer merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. Before you decide which school to attend, make sure you review the facts. To learn more, visit law.quinnipiac.edu, email ladm@quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.

Quinnipiac University School of Law
law.quinnipiac.edu | Hamden, Connecticut

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, April 11

Smith College's second Friday Artist Talk continues with a presentation by Gary Nawonger, a professor of art at Smith College. His group of watercolor and oil landscapes is currently on display at the Smith College Museum of Art. The talk will take place at the museum at 6 p.m. and is free and open to the public. Admission to the museum will also be free of charge during the talk.

•

Food For Thought Books will host a reading and open mic night by the Body Politics 2008 ensemble. The event is free and open to the public. It will take place from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the bookstore, which is located in downtown Amherst.

•

Jam-band Umphrey's McGee will be playing at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. They will be supported by New York progressive-rock band U-Melt. Tickets are $22.50.

•

UPC's weekly movie continues with a screening of the family-friendly animated feature "The Fox and the Hound." Screenings will take place at 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. Popcorn and refreshments will be served during this free event. The movie will show for a third time on Sunday at 8 p.m. in the same location.

•

Saturday, April 12

Singer-songwriters Dar Williams and Shawn Mullins will perform at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. The show will open with Nerissa and Katryna Nields, two sisters who play acoustic folk together as The Nields. Ticket prices are $35, $27.50 and $22.50.

•

Canada's The Weakerthans will be playing in the Pearl Street Clubroom. The band, whose musical sounds range from politically-aware rock to alternative-country, will be supported by A.A. Bondy and Christine Fellows. The show begins at 8:30. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

•

Sunday, April 13

There will be a sale of second-hand clothing in the Carroll Room in the Smith College campus center from 12 p.m. to 3 p.m. All proceeds from the sale will go to benefit local organizations and charities that aid women and children in need.

•

Amherst College's Gallery of Readers Sunday series continues with a reading by Barbara Lucy and Joan Cenedella at 4 p.m. in the Nielson Library Browsing Room. The event is free and open to the public.

•

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

the $4 $4 $4 DEAL

New! Wow!

3 Small 1 topping Pizzas

ONLY $4 each + delivery

Domino's Pizza

AMHERST/HADLEY
413 - 256 - 8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop

Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Weakerthans at Pearl Street

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

When Winnipeg native John K. Samson arrives in Northampton this Saturday night for The Weakerthans' performance at The Pearl Street Night Club, he'll be accompanied by more than just a library of music and his trusty metaphors. Samson carries with him the essence of nearly two decades of artistic evolution.

As a member of Propaghandi in the mid-1990s, Samson was a man full of untamed angst and idealism, using the stage as a forum for the band's collectively brash demands for radical social and political change. Vociferating on tracks with such unambiguous titles as "The Only Good Fascist Is a Very Dead Fascist" and "Middle Finger Response," musical subtleties became inconsequential afterthoughts, replaced in favor by a barrage of F-bombs and hostility.

Following their 1996 release "Less Talk, More Rock," Samson left his role in the band to pursue new artistic directions. Shortly after this he resurfaced with a new band, The Weakerthans, in 1997 with their debut release "Fallow," an album that is staggeringly removed from his established musical roots.

Somewhere along the transition between bands, Samson dropped his impetuous and edgy persona, transforming himself into a polished and introspective songwriter. The abrasive sounds and raucous lyrics that were once so synonymous with his presence were replaced by a decidedly more melodic and nuanced sound. Delicately played guitars and supplemental keyboards replaced the more hectic, thrash delivery of instrumentation listeners had grown accustomed to. Most significantly of all, Samson's lyrics unveiled themselves as categorically sensitive in their poeticism. The political-punk had discovered his softer side.

Following the initial success of "Fallow," the band has been unrelenting in their progression. The group has released three subsequent full-lengths over the course of their 10-year existence, with each garnering an increasing amount of fanfare and publicity while further detaching Samson from his days as a loud-mouthed anarchist, and fortifying his place as a one of indie rock's most gifted lyricist.

With his newfound approach to writing, Samson litters his songs with peculiar details of everyday life that seem so miniscule on the surface, but are unmistakably identifiable. Infusing this quality with his seemingly limitless poetic sensibilities, Samson successfully delivers multi-layered themes from a wide variety of narrative perspectives that span full albums.

The Weakerthans latest release, 2007's "Reunion Tour," has been met with a mixed critical reaction and can be best described as the bands most experimental album to date. There is more prominent use of keyboards throughout the album, the composition favors a softer sounding tone, and lyrically, the album shifts in perspective between every one of its 11 tracks.

On "Civil Twilight," Samson lyricizes from the perspective of a frustrated Winnipeg Transit bus driver professing his innermost thoughts. On "Relative Surplus Value," Samson returns to his revolutionary sentiments of old by providing a voice to victims of the ever-growing economic inequalities and failures of modern life, with a subtly and craft unseen during his younger years.

The album's most abstract selection comes in the form of "Elegy for Gump Worsley," a minimally structured song that serves as a spoken word tribute to former cult Canadian hockey legend who recently passed away.

The band does, however, manage to offset some of the bleaker topics covered on the album with some jovial material. You'd be hard pressed to find a song about women's curling that is more infectiously captivating than "Tournament of Hearts." "Sun in an Empty Room's" layered choruses provide a decidedly uplifting quality that contributed an essential balance to the complete work.

Despite the album's considerably fragmented themes, the notion of continuity is not entirely scraped on the far-stretching album. With "Virtue the Cat Explains Her Departure," Samson returns to deliver a heartbreaking concussion to one of the band's most beloved character's story arch. On "Reconstruction Site," the band's 2003 effort, Samson introduced Virtue, a dejected and oft-ignored feline protagonist, in one of the album's most popular cuts "Plea from a Cat Named Virtue." While "Plea" is an upbeat crowd favorite full of unbridled energy, "Departure" is a somber and elegiac retelling of love once-cherished fading into a distant memory.

In their current form, The Weakerthans are the culmination of Samson's journey from a brash youth into a mature wordsmith. While The Weakerthans may never posses the raw energy of Propaghandi, they more than balance this with the tactful subtleties that define their sound and Samson's continued progression as a storyteller.

The Weakerthans play Saturday, April 12 with opening acts AA Bondy and Christine Fellows at The Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton, part of WMUA's Left of the Dial Concert Series. Doors open for the event at 8:30 p.m. and tickets are $15 in advance, $18 at the door.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich/daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

Minutemen turning the corner at right time

Hobart up next for streaking UMass

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Two weeks ago, Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella wasn't pleased with the direction of his 2008 Minutemen.

An ultimatum, 14 days and 20 goals later, the Minutemen are back in the race for an ECAC Championship.

Following the 15-1 loss to No. 19 Loyola on March 22, Cannella stood in front of his players at practice and questioned their desire. The Minutemen responded, winning games over Penn State, 7-5, and Saint John's, 13-8.

"It's funny because we want to encourage them to continue to do the same thing, but we can do that at the end of the year," Cannella said. "We didn't sign up for nine games, we signed up for 14. That's when we'll evaluate our season.

"I'm proud of them, but we want to push forward."

Now at 2-1 in the ECAC, 4-5 overall, the Minutemen take on Hobart (5-4, 2-2 ECAC) Saturday on Garber Field; opening faceoff is scheduled for 1 p.m.

A win for the Minutemen would set up a matchup with No. 4 Georgetown a week from Saturday in Washington, D.C., with first place in the ECAC on the line if the Hoyas defeat Loyola on Saturday. Cannella isn't looking ahead, at all, but positioning within the conference enters the discussion at this point in the season.

Getting past Hobart, however, is no easy task. The Statesmen boast one of the best goal scorers in the nation, Daryl Veltman, along with a host of gifted playmakers and finishers around him. Despite missing three games this season, Veltman leads Hobart with 18 goals, but its biggest offensive strength is its depth. Eight Statesmen have at least five goals on the season, and five have contributed 10 or more points.

"Veltman is a great, great finisher," Cannella said. "So you have to plan for him, but you have to worry about the other guys that they have. They have some strong midfielders, and contributions from a lot of guys.

"So you have to concentrate on everyone, but you really have to worry about Veltman in transition," he continued. "He's very, very good in transition, he's a sniper."

UMass's depth isn't to the extent of the Statesmen, but the emergence of freshmen Peter McNichols and Zach Rodgers augmented a once weak UMass offense. In the last two games, the pair has combined for 10 points.

"They were sort of thrust into their roles, and we hoped they would be more consistent than inconsistent throughout the year," Cannella said. "Typically when you have young guys out there, there are some inconsistencies. They're not used to playing at the intensity level. In high school, there are games they'll score four or five goals in without even showing up.

"They've done a good job, but we need them to do a better job."

The two bring such different skills sets to the field that they don't get in each other's way. Rogers is one of the best passers on the Minutemen, and works very well in the tight space around the goal – he leads the team with 12 assists. Cannella mentioned earlier in the season that he hoped Rogers would find his scoring touch as the season progressed. It seems to have happened for the rookie; he has three goals in the last two games.

McNichols projected as a potential first-line attack even before the suspension of 2007 leading scorer Jim Connolly. His 11 goals are second on the Minutemen behind Tim Balise's 21.

Freshman attacker Peter McNichols has lived up to high expectations this season, ranking second on the Minutemen with 11 goals. UMass takes on Hobart Saturday at Garber Field.

Games notes

UMass leads the all-time series, 6-2, but did not play the Statesmen from 1985-2005. Hobart is 0-3 in Amherst since 1972, and hasn't defeated UMass since 1985. Balise was named the ECAC Offensive Player of the Week for his six-goal performance against St. John's on Saturday.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

IN DECIDING WHICH LAW SCHOOL TO ATTEND,
CONSIDER THIS:

Quinnipiac University School of Law ranks among the top 100 law schools in such categories as full-time student LSAT scores (median – 158); admission acceptance rates; student/faculty ratio (13:1); and employment rates after graduation. Not to mention, we offer merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. Before you decide which school to attend, make sure you review the facts. To learn more, visit law.quinnipiac.edu, email ladm@quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.

Quinnipiac University School of Law
LAW.QUINNIPIAC.EDU | HAMDEN, CONNECTICUT

Ford announces he's staying in Amherst

UMass coach turns down Providence

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Weeks of speculation involving where Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford will coach next season are over.

He isn't going anywhere.

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon made the announcement Thursday night at 7 p.m., saying that Ford will be back in Amherst next season.

"I want to give every one of you an opportunity to have a nice, deep cleansing breath. Relax a little bit, with the knowledge that Travis Ford, our head men's basketball coach, is going to be with us for many years to come," McCutcheon said to applause at the team's end-of-the-season banquet.

McCutcheon told the media that Ford's contract has been re-worked, but an announcement further detailing that would come later.

This all came just one day after Ford interviewed for the Providence coaching position and two days after saying he did not want to be considered for the job at Louisiana State.

He turned down the Providence job offer to remain at UMass.

"It's been a long two days," Ford told the media, struggling to find the right words. "It was a tough decision. Any time you have options to look at great places [it's tough], but it was easy to make the decision with all the reasons that I wanted to be here."

Both McCutcheon and returning Minutemen were excited with the news, which ended days of stress regarding the decision.

"You've seen me at games, right? I'm nervous, I'm always nervous. So I'll leave it at that," McCutcheon said, referring to his concerns at the time he could lose his coach.

"We were all worried and I was really nervous, but when we found out he was staying it was a big relief," junior guard Chris Lowe said.

"Now that he's back, you can really watch out for us in the next couple of years."

Ford is excited about next season and is confident he made the right decision.

"This is the right place for me," he said. "I'm 100 percent committed to this. I like this basketball team coming back and our future."

"We committed to him and he committed to us," McCutcheon added.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/11/2008 thru Thurs. 4/17/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

Prom Night (PG-13)* 1:40 4:50 7:45 10:10
Smart People - CinéArts (R)* 1:35 4:45 7:25 9:45
Street Kings (R)* 1:30 4:10 7:10 9:55
Leatherheads (PG-13)* 1:15 4:25 7:05 10:00
Nim's Island (PG)* 1:25 4:35 7:00 9:30
The Ruins (R)* 1:45 4:55 7:50 10:10
21 (PG-13) 1:05 4:05 7:20 10:15
Stop Loss (R) 1:10 4:15 7:15 10:05
Superhero Movie (PG-13) 1:20 4:20 7:35 9:50
Drillbit Taylor (PG-13) 1:55 4:30 7:30 10:25
Horton Hears A Who (G) 1:00 4:00 6:45 9:00
The Bank Job (R) 1:50 4:40 7:40 10:20

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Tennis team travels to URI

Pozar, Boney hope success continues

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team will try to keep its impressive five-match winning streak going when it plays Rhode Island in its fourth and final conference match of the year tomorrow.

The match will be played in Kingston, R.I., at 2:00 p.m.

Massachusetts sports a 3-0 conference record and an overall record of 10-9. The Rams boast a 14-5 overall record with an identical 3-0 record against A-10 opponents. The Rams are currently on a four-match win streak.

The Minutewomen come to Rhode Island with hope's to leave with a win which would put them in good position for next weekend's A-10 Tournament. The last time the Minutewomen were the No. 1 seed in the tournament was in 2005 when the most successful player in UMass tennis history, Michele Speiss, led them.

Masha Pozar continues to add to her UMass doubles win record with 72. Last year in the match against Rhode Island, Pozar faced off against Valerie Chacon, whom she beat in straight sets, 6-1, 6-2.

In Thursday's match, Pozar came from behind to beat her Quinnipiac opponent, Adrienne Markison, in a super tiebreaker.

Freshman Candynce Boney, has displayed flashes of brilliance lately; she is currently on a six-match winning streak and was named both the A-10 Rookie of the Week and A-10 Player of the Week. She has been awarded both awards numerous times this season.

Maude Lecluyse and Laura Danai continue to play well for the Minutewomen, giving winning efforts each time out. In their previous match, against Quinnipiac both players were victorious, beating their opponent's in straight sets. They displayed strong serves and returns that proved too hard to handle.

The Maroon and White hold a 32-6-1 all-time record over Rhode Island. The last time the two teams previously met was last year where Massachusetts came out on top 5-2.

If the Minutewomen want to come out on top in tomorrow's match, they have to play at the top of their game throughout. Rhode Island is supplied with quality opponents that have game-changing potential.

Rhode Island's usual No. 1, Nyssa Peele, holds a 16-9 overall record at that position. At the No. 3 spot, Lecluyse will have a challenging opponent in either Amanda Barletta or Christen Cadigan; they hold a 19-8 and 22-7 record respectively.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Seven-game home stand up next for Minutewomen

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

If you haven't seen the Massachusetts softball team yet in 2008, this weekend will likely be your best opportunity of the season.

The Minutewomen continue their longest home stand of the season (seven games) today against Atlantic 10 foe Saint Joseph's at 3 p.m. at the UMass softball complex.

UMass (21-11, 8-0 A-10) plays four games in the next three days starting with today's pair against the Hawks (7-14, 3-3 A-10), who will stick around for tomorrow's noon matchup. Temple (9-12, 1-5 A-10) enters Amherst Sunday for a doubleheader beginning at noon as well.

The home stand ends Tuesday with a doubleheader against Rhode Island starting at 3 p.m.

Coming off an 8-0, five-inning win over Boston College Wednesday, the Minutewomen carry their current 11-game win streak back into A-10 play.

"It's a big, important weekend," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We need to have a great practice to adjust some things and be a little bit better on Friday than we were [against BC]."

UMass has a three-game lead on Charlotte, Fordham and Saint Louis in the A-10 standings, its closest competitors, and a strong showing this weekend would put considerable distance between the Maroon and White and the rest of the pack.

The Hawks finished in ninth place last season at 6-12 in conference play. Currently in fifth place, St. Joe's has shown marked improvement under second-year coach Terri Adams.

"I think they're doing a good job," Sortino said. "They've got a new coach in her second year. They've got more players that are hers. I'm sure they're going to be a better team."

St. Joe's is led by catcher Brooke Darreff, who sits head and shoulders above the rest of the A-10 with a .483 batting average, the only player in the conference hitting above .400.

Dani Gonzales is the Hawks' best pitcher. She is just 3-5 on the season, but boasts an ERA of 1.91, good enough for third in the conference behind UMass pitcher Brandice Balschmiter and St. Bonaventure's Sherri Thompson (UMass's Bailey Sanders is fourth at 1.98).

The UMass bats came alive Wednesday, producing a seven-run third inning to gain the early eight-run lead (Whitney Williams led off the game with a homer) and force the run rule after five innings and getting Balschmiter a little extra rest in the process.

The Minutewomen have won via the run rule in their last three games, a pair of six-inning wins over George Washington and the win over BC Wednesday.

Sanders has not pitched since last Friday, a 10-1 win over GW. Her numbers have improved steadily as the season has progressed. She is now above .500 on the season at 7-5 and is one of four A-10 pitchers with an ERA under 2.00.

She has had more strikeouts than walks in both of her last two outings (against GW Friday and a 5-2 win over Charlotte on March 30), with eight strikeouts and four walks over the two games.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyri@student.umass.edu.

Readying for A-10s

Rowers to tune up with Knecht Cup

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

In preparation for the Atlantic 10 Championships, the Massachusetts rowing team will race this weekend in the Knecht Cup with over 40 other crews from across country.

The race will be the team's final preparations before it goes for its 13th straight A-10 Championship a week later. The race will take place Saturday and Sunday on the Cooper River in Camden, N.J., a river that will be a lot easier on the team than the Connecticut River has been the past two weeks in practice.

"The Camden course is, in my mind, one of the best courses on the East Coast. I think it's extremely fair," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "It will help us to be down there on some nice flat water."

The Camden course is the same one that the Minutewomen will race on the next week when they look to extend the A-10 record for consecutive championships.

The regatta this weekend is different than many of the others UMass has rowed in so far this season. With the large number of schools, the race is set up in heats and has different rounds. All of the first rounds and semifinal rounds will take place on Saturday and the finals will be on Sunday.

For the Varsity 8, UMass was given the No. 4 seed and will race in the fourth heat on Saturday with conference opponents Duquesne and La Salle, as well as Drexel, Wisconsin and Tulsa. Out of the four heats for the Varsity 8, the best four boats in each heat, in addition to the next two fastest boats, will advance to the semifinals later Saturday.

Out of the 18 boats that advance, six will go on to the finals on Sunday. The Varsity 8 finals are split up into three sections: grand final, petite final and third final. The fastest two boats in the semifinals will go on to race in the grand final, while the next two will race in the petite final and the fifth- and sixth-place boats will race in the third final.

Bocknell is the No. 1 seed of all of the Varsity 8 boats, followed by Rhode Island and then Buffalo. UMass is ranked below rival URI because of its loss to them two weeks ago in the Yankee Cup.

The Second Varsity 8 boat had more success against URI two weeks ago and earned the No. 1 seed of all Second Varsity 8 squads. URI is No. 2 followed by Buffalo at No. 3.

The first round for the Second Varsity 8 will see some familiar opponents. Colgate, who the Minutewomen's Second Varsity Eight defeated by 23 seconds last week will be in one lane adjacent to UMass, while Connecticut will be in the other. The Minutewomen beat the Huskies Second Varsity 8 boat by almost 30 seconds in the Yankee Cup.

In addition to Colgate and UConn, the heat will contain Sacred Heart, Delaware and conference opponent Fordham. The Second Varsity 8 has three heats, so the fastest three boats in each heat will advance, as well as the three next best boats.

With 12 boats advancing, half will be eliminated in the semifinals en route to the finals. The top three boats in the semifinals will race in the grand final and the next three will race in the petite final.

UMass will also race their Lightweight 4, Varsity 4 and Novice 8 boats in the Knecht Cup. The Lightweight 4 will take on Penn State, Duquesne, Buffalo and Carnegie Mellon. The top two from the two heats and the next two fastest crews will advance to the final on Sunday.

The Minutewomen's Varsity 4 will try to advance to the semifinals when it faces Rochester, Sarah Lawrence, Loyola, Hofstra, and Robert Morris. The Varsity 4s will have five heats with the top three finishes in each heat advancing to the semifinals, along with the next three fastest times.

The top six boats in the semifinals will advance to the finals, which are set up the same as the Varsity 8 finals.

The first two boats in each heat of the Novice 8 first round will advance as well as the four next best boats. The novice Minutewomen will be in the first heat against Lafayette, Rochester, Haverford, Penn State and Robert Morris. The semis and finals for the Novice 8 will follow the same structure as the Second Varsity 8.

UMass hopes to advance far in all races to get as much practice, as it makes its final adjustments for the A-10 Championships. The Varsity and Second Varsity 8 boats are still doing some tweaking to find the best combination, but are starting to find some rhythm.

"I see a definite pattern showing up with the athletes in the boat and a definite rhythm emerging," Dietz said. "You can be fast for 20 strokes, but unless you have a really definitive rhythm you won't be able to sustain that speed for any length of time."

The races will began on the Cooper River at 7 a.m. and conclude a little before 6 p.m. on Saturday. Action resumes Sunday at 7 a.m. and be done by 1:30 p.m.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

CAITLIN CUNNINGHAM/COLLEGIAN

To help prepare for the upcoming Atlantic 10 Championship, the Massachusetts rowing team will compete this weekend against 40 other teams in the Knecht Cup.

Minutemen travel to D.C., to take on Colonials for three

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

After advancing to its first Beanpot Championship in seven years, the Massachusetts baseball team returns to conference play with a three-game set against St. Bonaventure in Olean, N.Y., this weekend.

In their last Atlantic 10 road series, the Minutemen (9-12, 3-6 A-10) played well, taking two out of three against George Washington last weekend. They now have a chance to make up ground in the conference, as the Bonnies (15-10, 5-4 A-10) hold a two-game lead over UMass.

"[St. Bonaventure] hits the ball very well," UMass coach Mike Stone told UMass Athletics in an interview. "I was just looking at their stats ... 314 team batting average and they've been playing well, and they're playing at home and it's always a little different playing out there. It's a new field; it's a FieldTurf field which is good because their field had been very below average, actually."

The Bonnies will present the UMass pitching staff with one of its toughest challenges of the season. Two of their players are batting over .400 while catcher Brandon Salerno isn't too far off at .382.

One of the St. Bonaventure hitters leads the A-10 in batting. Randy Moley is hitting .559 on the season (57-of-102) with four home runs and 33 runs batted in. He also leads the conference in slugging percentage, on-base percentage and hits.

Pitchers this season haven't had much of a chance to pitch around Moley because Andy Randich bats one spot behind him in the lineup.

Randich is hitting .417 and has as many home runs and RBI numbers as Moley.

With all the offensive power the Bonnies possess (5.8 runs per game), the Minutemen may need the offense to increase their run production over the weekend (4.72 per game).

Brian Baudinet leads UMass with a .361 average and also leads in hits, walks and on-base percentage.

In the weekend series, the Minutemen are likely to face current A-10 Co-Pitcher of the Week, Cody Vincent.

The senior left-hander registered a save and also recorded a complete-game shutout last Saturday against Dayton, and also recorded another save over the week. His earned-run average stands at 2.66 on the season and he has been starting the second game of weekend series for the Bonnies.

UMass counters with a recent weekly award-winner of its own.

Nick Serino won A-10 Rookie of the Week after shutting out GW over 6 1/3 innings last Saturday.

The freshman has pitched well throughout this whole season and leads the starting pitching staff with a 2.45 ERA.

Game notes

The Bonnies held a seven-game winning streak, including a sweep of Dayton last weekend, before Canisius snapped the streak by defeating them 24-8 on Wednesday. UMass leads the all-time series, 27-19.

The teams have not faced off since 2006, with St. Bonaventure taking two of three from UMass.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnors@student.umass.edu.

UMass, Typadis can make up ground in conference

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts women's lacrosse star Kathleen Typadis scored 10 goals against Saint Joseph's and La Salle in the final two games ... both wins ... of last season.

Those teams will try to avoid the same fate this weekend as the Minutewomen travel to take on two Atlantic 10 foes.

UMass (3-9, 1-3 A-10) has struggled with in-conference matchups so far, and this weekend provides an opportunity to quickly improve its standing in the A-10.

The Minutewomen play the Hawks (7-5, 2-1) on Friday at 4 p.m., and take on the Explorers (1-11, 0-4) Sunday at noon.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos is impressed with Saint Joseph's, but is pleased with her team's recent progress.

"St. Joe's is a great team. They have a good goalie, they are a fast team and we are just looking forward for an opportunity to play," she said.

"We did some good things last week, and we are going to continue and build from that and bring it on Friday," she added.

Typadis netted five goals in each of the two games last season, including a school record-breaking 52nd goal of the year in the season finale against La Salle.

"Kathleen has been finding her niche on attack, knowing what shots work for her and opening things up for other people as well," Venechanos said. "She continues to be a great dominant player. I've been really impressed with her ability to perform at a high level for so long."

UMass defeated the Hawks, 12-9, last year on April 27 and the Explorers, 19-8, two days later.

Venechanos expects a similar close game with the Hawks this season.

"We are an aggressive team, they're an aggressive team, and for the most part, it's going to be a battle," she said. "We've been in a lot of close games this season, so I think those situations will help us for sure."

Venechanos mentioned how difficult it can be playing twice in the same weekend, but that it's something other teams also have to deal with.

"La Salle is in the same boat, and they are playing two games this weekend as well, so that's what our conference is about now," she said.

This weekend is crucial for the Minutewomen, who don't want to fall too far behind in the conference standings.

"Every game is really important," Venechanos said. "Going into this game, we are focused and determined, and I really liked the energy in practice these last two days."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

RAFT GUIDES

Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

CAMP TAKAJO. Naples, Maine. Noted for picturesque lakefront location, exceptional facilities. Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, golf, flag football, roller hockey, field hockey, swimming, sailing, water skiing, gymnastics, dance, horseback riding, archery, weight training, newspaper, photography, video, woodworking, ceramics/pottery, crafts, fine arts, silver jewelry, copper enamel, nature study, radio/electronics, theater, costumer, piano accompanist, music instrumentalist, backpacking, rock climbing, canoeing/kayaking, ropes course, secretarial, nanny. Call Takajo at (866) 356-2267. Submit application online at takajo.com Will be in the Campus Center Job Fair tomorrow

EMPLOYMENT

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr. English must be your first language. Email. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

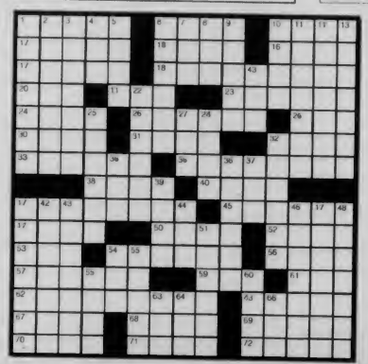
SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthnght.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES



Spring Break from $199. Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away. 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACROSS
1 Steals by sleight of hand
6 Out of (discordant)
10 Tickled pink
14 On the wrong side (of)
15 Betting group
16 Make less difficult
17 Boorish
18 Kind of pistol or pilot
20 Baby belly
21 Fizzler
23 Sister of Venus
24 Top pilots
26 Confidential matter
29 Divest (of)
30 Deep wound
31 Gobi's location
32 Compos mentis
33 Put in a pyramid
35 Items
38 Low-lying location
40 Apiece
41 Predict
45 Folk
49 Almond-shaped
50 Arctic Circle dweller
52 Spoken
53 Garnet's color
54 Snoopy, for one
56 Solitary
57 Drops a line
59 Ballyhoo
61 May honoree
62 Rapid climb
65 Well-coordinated
67 Authentic
68 Besides that
69 Violin bow application
70 Farmer's locale, in song
71 Arboreal abode
72 Exhausted

DOWN
1 Parcel
2 Type of violet
3 Most vociferous
4 Pretend pie ingredient
5 Downhill racer
6 Black suit
7 Part of us?
8 Untrue!
9 Nearby
10 Stick-shift selection
11 Sideways pass
12 Sans sense
13 Roaring Twenties, e.g.
19 Encountered
22 In working order
25 Snow remover
27 Tom Clancy sub
28 Uncommon
32 Educate
34 Gymnasts' pad
36 Knocked softly
37 Bar cubes
39 Singer Fitzgerald
41 Ahead
42 Supervise
43 Avant-garde
44 Be a straggler
46 Word of honor
47 Bath oil ingredient
48 Copper or nickel, e.g.
51 Salum or Mercury
54 Golfer Hogan
55 City on the Ruhr
58 Swiss marksman
60 Rowboat equipment
63 ___-de France
64 WW2 spy grp.
66 Republicans

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

STUDENT VALLEY PRODUCTIONS' 12th Annual

COMEDY JAM

Two nights of comedy featuring troupes from LA, Boston, Chicago, and Umass' own Sketch 22, IWA, and Mission Improvable!

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
APRIL 11TH & 12TH
8PM, BARTLETT 65
FREE FREE FREE FREE

Graciously Sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, the UMass Alumni Association, the Student Affairs and Cultural Enrichment Fund, and the Student Government Association.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

KICK off your Summer right!!!

Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

This is the poodle box.

Draw stupid little "punt-me" dogs.

Also, pick up an application for Comics Editor in the Collegian office.

PETA says Sudoku hurts innocent ducklings.

9								1
			7	2	6
6		5				2		8
		3	1	4	5	8
		1	3	6	7	9
1		8				5		9
			6	1	8
7								6

Quote of the Weekend

"You can only be young once. But you can always be immature."

— Dave Barry

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Dan Jeannotte

Next week's contest will start on Monday
See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Hey I'm in the paper, next to the Sudoku. I'm famous!

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You will be endowed with the literary aptitude and greasy mustache of Edgar Allen Poe.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Mark Twain once said, "My butt hurts." Funny, nobody bothered to write that one down.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The awkward turtle is so passé and will earn you zero life points in social settings. Try the awkward ring-tailed lemur.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Cut Stegasaurus plates out of carboard and strap them to your back. Yet another practical application of paleontology.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It's better to start moving and never look back. But if you think you're being followed, by all means...

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Beware: There are countless doctors around the globe looking to rid the world of your troublesome astrological ilk.

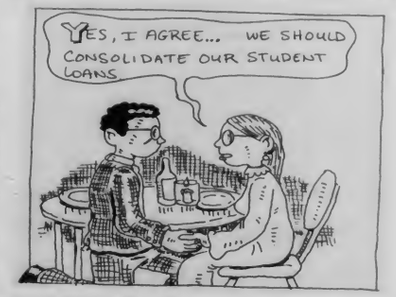
leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Filter the muddled ideas in your hyper-active mind by generating a giant list of your goals and magical powers.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Just because it's warm, doesn't mean it's appropriate to wear skorts. Clothing should not be an optical illusion.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It is time for you to start purging superfulous Facebook friends. Start with the weak ones unless they are hot.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
This will be a very warm weekend. Shave your absurdly hairy back for added ventilation.

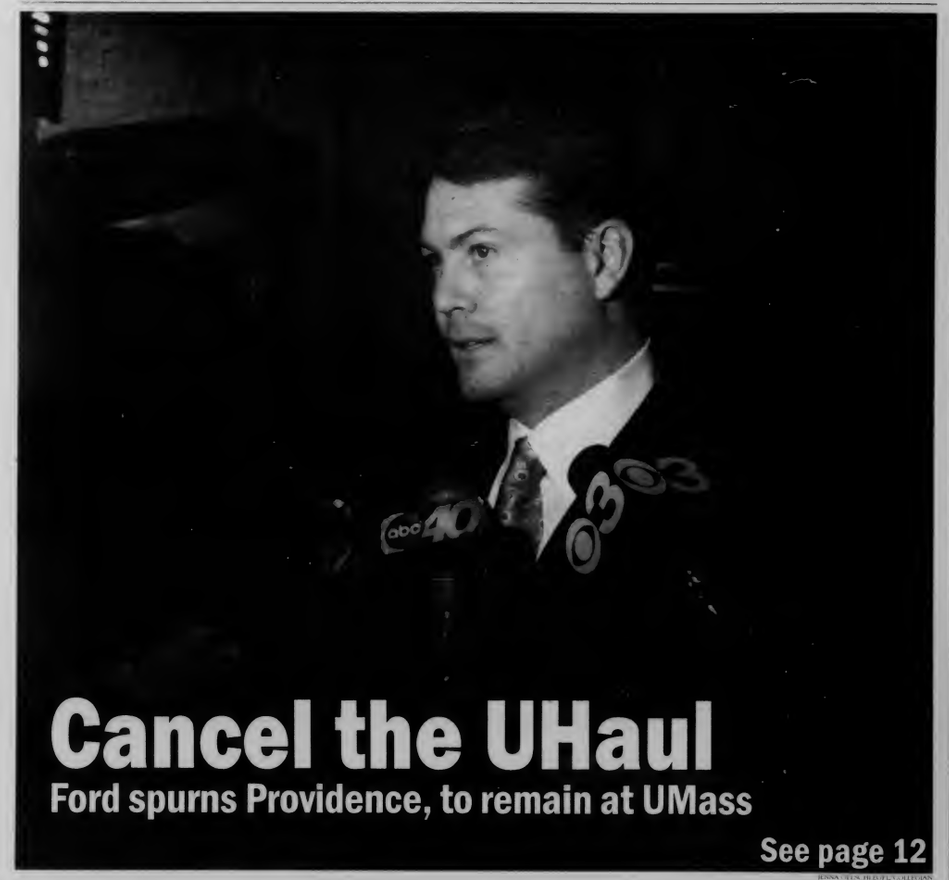
sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you see someone crying, don't ask why. Kick them in the shins and steal their backpack – social Darwinism, baby!



capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Give a skort-wearing virgo an atomic wedgie. They deserve it for looking like an M.C. Escher painting.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!



50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cancel the UHaul

Ford spurns Providence, to remain at UMass

See page 12

JENNA STOCKFISH/COLLEGIAN

INSIDE: SAUL WILLIAMS ON RACE, REVOLUTION | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 53 LO: 27 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2008

Investigation launched for Alpine assault

Amherst police are investigating a fight in the Alpine Commons apartment complex that left two men hospitalized with stab wounds early Friday morning.

According to police reports, the two victims were part of a larger group returning to an apartment in the complex. Following an argument, a fight involving between eight and 10 people broke out in the parking lot of the complex.

After one of the assailants allegedly took out a knife, the group fled and attempted to lock themselves inside their apartment. The alleged participants pursued and forced entry into the apartment, damaging the door in the process, police said.

The assailants fled the scene after police responded to the incident at approximately 1:56 a.m.

The victims – both 21-years-old – were treated for a number of non-life threatening injuries at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton that included abrasions and cuts. One man was treated for a puncture wound on his hand.

Both victims are students at the University of Massachusetts.

Police are asking anyone with information about the incident to contact the Amherst Police Department Detective Bureau at 413-259-3015.

Derrick Perkins

Profs. debate God and morality

Opinions conflict during science and religion discussion

Talbot School philosophy professor William Craig participated in a debate featuring the question, "Is God Necessary for Morality?" last week in the Student Union.

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Members of the University of Massachusetts community packed the Student Union ballroom Thursday night as Drs. Louise Antony and William Craig debated the question, "Is God Necessary for Morality?"

Moderator Steven Goodwin introduced the event by clarifying that the debate was not about the existence of God, only whether the existence of God is necessary for morality.

"Science is only one way of thinking, and it's only one way of knowing," he said.

Antony and Craig each received 18 minutes to present their arguments, followed by two rebuttal attempts and a closing argument. The debaters also took questions from the audience.

Dr. Craig, a research professor of philosophy at the Talbot School of Theology, argued that without God, there is no absolute right and wrong because there is no "moral lawgiver."

Craig said that God is the moral lawgiver, because He is the "absolute standard" of morality. He argued that what God does and orders is inherently moral.

"If God does not exist, why think that we have any moral obligations?" Craig asked, arguing that without God, there are no eternal consequences for our actions, and therefore there are no reasons to resist temptations. Craig said that without God, all that is left of humanity is "an ape-like creature on a speck of dust."

Dr. Louise Antony is a professor of philosophy at UMass. She argued that there are moral standards that are separate from God and "independent of human will."

See DEBATE on page 2

UMass grapples with drunken reputation

Peer colleges dodge similar representation

BY SRUTHI VALLURI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note – The following article is the last in a series covering alcohol and violence on campus.

By midnight, the party at Amherst College begins to look familiar. Students are drunk out of their minds – or getting there with dedicated efficiency – and there is someone passed out on the couch. A week later, a party at Mount Holyoke offers the same experience. It doesn't take long to match these scenes with something familiar: a party at the University of Massachusetts.

But while partying cultures at all three colleges are almost identical, UMass receives more media attention for the drinking habits of its students. A simple internet search of "UMass" and "drinking" yields nearly 200,000 results. The same search for any of the other Five College schools or other schools in the UMass system offers no relevant sites.

To add to the double standard, only UMass deals with the stereotype of being a university with a large, violent student body that can lose control under the influence of alcohol and drugs.

One of the first hits on Google is an Urbandictionary.com definition of the University. UMass has "insane amounts of partying," according to the post, mostly because "there is nothing better to do." A Wikipedia article agrees, as do countless other student blogs and informal college ranking Web sites.

This image of UMass inspired the nickname ZooMass and won the University the No. 8 spot on Princeton Review's ranking of the biggest party schools of 2005. UMass avoided the list for the past two years, but the stereotype lingers. A recent string of violent events has only heightened the media attention on UMass.

Edward F. Blaguszewski, a spokesman for UMass, said that this problem stems partly from the University's size. With 19,299 undergraduate students, the Amherst campus is one of the largest institutions in Massachusetts.

"For lack of a better term, we're the 900-pound gorilla in the higher education world in Massachusetts," said Blaguszewski.

In comparison, Hampshire College has 1,434 students, and UMass-Lowell has 7,419 students. UMass is nearly eight times the size of Smith College, the second largest school in the Five College consortium.

Consequently, the size translates to more parties, larger crowds at riots and more attention from the media. The riot in 2006 – precipitated by the school's participation in the Football Championship Subdivision's final – involved nearly 2,000 students, a crowd about as large as Amherst College's entire undergraduate population.

"People pay more attention to you," said Blaguszewski. "In Massachusetts, everyone knows somebody who went to UMass."

Nearly 80 percent of UMass students are from Massachusetts. A majority of these students decide to remain in the Commonwealth, which means that UMass has many more connections to Massachusetts residents than other institutions.

Events on the campus in the past few weeks have given the media a lot of material to work with. The Boston Globe ran several articles with headlines such as "Violence rattles UMass-Amherst," and "UMass-Amherst urges calm after violent events."

Senior Andy Stone sees this as only natural.

"This is a tax-payer funded school," he said. "We're under more scrutiny because more people pay for it, even if they don't go here."

Captain Mike Kent of the Amherst Police Department said that regardless of the amount of media coverage a campus receives, alcohol has always been a problem for universities across the nation.

"Every college has its issues," he said, pointing out that Michigan State University had to deal with an incident of its own earlier this month.

The UMass community deals with the stigma of being a party school, unlike many of its peer institutions. However, many students perpetuate that image through constant partying and violent behavior.

See PARTY SCHOOL on page 2

UM program announces new faculty adviser

BY AMARA ANUNIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts communications professor Dr. Mari Castañeda will become faculty adviser for the Student Bridges Program. The initiative is a new student-run outreach program that works to increase higher education opportunities for Holyoke residents – a majority Latino community.

"We would like to see UMass become more affordable and accessible for underrepresented students of color, for working class students and for first generation college graduates in the surrounding area," UMass student and program director Vanessa Snow said.

After the administration's reorganization of funding, the Student Government Association used part of its budget to fund the program. It matches UMass students as tutors and mentors with participating schools and organizations.

Castañeda has extensive experience with community-building ventures in partnership with the University through program initiatives that resemble the Student Bridges Program.

"My work focuses on new digital media and information technologies, especially as it relates to Latino communities," Castañeda said. "I'm also very interested in community-university partnerships and am using my research to examine how community service learning can enhance those partnerships."

Snow has expressed great faith in Castañeda's enlistment.

"Every year, the program has grown in size and capacity, and Mari can help us find ways to continue that," she said. "Also because we are a student-run organization, having a tenured faculty member on board will give us more credibility."

Student Bridges was among the programs referenced in the University's recent Presidential Award. The award remains the highest federal recognition a school can achieve for its commitment to service learning and civil engagement.

Students can get involved with service learning by enrolling in a four-credit, full-year service learning course. The Student Bridges Program also welcomes volunteers on various scales and offers different credit arrangements regarding the course.

Amara Anunike can be reached at aganunik@student.umass.edu.

1,000th career win

Sortino reaches milestone as Minutewomen sweep Temple

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino had insisted through this season that earning her 1,000th-career victory was not a big deal. She had a team to lead and an Atlantic 10 Championship to chase.

Yet Sunday's doubleheader sweep of Temple proved her players might have known better. The Minutewomen (25-11, 12-0 A-10) pummeled the Owls (13-14, 3-7 A-10), scoring 19 runs in two games, winning 9-0 and 10-0 with both games ending after five innings.

"It was more important that we got the win," Sortino said when asked if she was relieved to finally reach the milestone. "This was a big weekend for us; but yeah, I'm glad it's done."

UMass defeated Saint Joseph's, 1-0 and 4-1, on Friday and Saturday, setting up the historic doubleheader. The Minutewomen overpowered Temple's pitching and took advantage of huge single innings in each game.

Brandice Balschmiter struck out a season-high 14 batters in Game 1, including the first 11 of the game. Temple did not get its first hit until Owls starting pitcher Katie Burdeaux hit a leadoff double in the fifth inning shortly before the game ended due to run rule.

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Senior left fielder Lauren Proctor rounds third base after sophomore Sarah Reeves's grand slam in the Minutewomen's 10-0 win over Temple yesterday afternoon. UMass coach Elaine Sortino won her 1,000th career game, when the Maroon and White swept a Sunday double-header.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 120

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staiglin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Hollis Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ART WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SUMMER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCOOP IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

UMass deals with party school image

PARTY SCHOOL from 1

Like UMass, MSU is a large university with a history of student violence. On April 6, a large crowd of nearly 4,000 students – many of them intoxicated – had an encounter with the campus police. The incident received a lot of local attention and revived discussions about the stigma associated with state schools.

"We need to shift away from looking at each individual incident, and toward looking at this as a cultural problem," Marianne Winters, director of the campus women's center, told Boston Globe.

As a higher education behemoth in Massachusetts, UMass commands a lot of media attention and must deal with the 'state school' image as a violent party school. In 2005, an ABC "Primetime" report included UMass as a campus with one of the highest rates for violent crime.

This stereotype feeds back into the campus culture. Senior Steve Jeter believes that students feel the need to live up to the myth of ZooMass.

"Kids are just rioting and partying because the school has a reputation, and they want to live up to the standards," he said.

The administration does not agree with this portrayal, and said the media ignores progress that UMass has made like the recent decrease in campus binge drinking, according to Sally Linowski, co-chairwoman of the Campus and Community Coalition to Reduce High-Risk Drinking.

The media bases its analysis on empirical data provided by UMass under the Clery Act, which requires institutions to release annual reports disclosing crime statistics. According to these statistics, UMass is classified as a very violent campus. This coverage, however, is not an accurate interpretation, according to John Kohl, Director of Residence Life at UMass-Lowell.

"Alcohol use in a college-going population is a problem that every institution struggles with in varying degrees," said Kohl. "But it's hard to compare apples and oranges. A Smith is different from a UMass-Lowell and a UMass-Amherst."

Jeter acknowledged that the public ignores these differences and notices only the volume of incidents.

"It doesn't matter the population or the school. If there're six incidents a year in UMass, and only one incident in Amherst, people will pay more attention to UMass," he said.

The attention that UMass receives is not entirely bad, according to Blaguszewski. It brings attention to the University's achievements.

"We are the flagship university and the original UMass," he said, "It is a position of great influence and great scrutiny."

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at valluri@student.umass.edu.

JESSICA WEISBERG/COLLEGIAN

UMass maintains a stronger image as a party school than any of the institutions in the Five College or UMass systems, in part due to its large student body and the inherent spotlight associated with being a public university.

Theories of religion debated

DEBATE from 1

She said Craig follows divine command theory, which says that if God loves something, it becomes morally good.

"If God were to command you to eat your children, it would be right to eat your children," she described the divine command theory. She pointed out that God has ordered genocide and murder.

Craig argued that many atheists agree with his position, quoting atheist philosophers and scholars in his arguments.

He closed by saying "moral values, moral duties become like shuffling deck chairs on the Titanic" because the end is the same.

Antony described her own stance as "divine independence theory." She said that in order for humanity to follow God, He must be good, and goodness must exist separate from God. Antony said that the objective-moral facts guide what is good and what is not. She argued that one of these moral facts is that it is wrong to cause suffering to a living creature.

Antony also described her own religious history, saying that she was a devout Catholic until she attended college, where she said she realized "atheists have the opportunity for perfect piety," because an atheist does good because it is good and not because they face any consequence from God.

"All we have is this world, this life and each other," Dr. Antony said in her closing remarks.

The debate's intensity increased during the question and answer session, when Craig and Antony had exchanges with guests and with each other.

At one point, in response to Craig's claims that without God there is no purpose. Antony said that friends and family were her purpose, and quipped, "I wonder if Dr. Craig has any friends."

People were still in line to ask questions when moderator Goodwin ended the event 30 minutes past the scheduled end of the event. Many guests had left by that point, but at least a quarter of the room was still seated.

"Is God Necessary for Morality?" was a part of the Veritas Forum, which, according to the Veritas Web site, "seeks to explore the possibility of truth, beauty and goodness in every aspect of our academic and personal lives."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

UMass philosophy professor Louise Antony argued about the relationship between God and morality Thursday evening in the Student Union.

URI considers cutting teams

BY BRIDGETTE BLIGHT
THE GOOD FIVE CENT CIGAR

(U-WIRE) KINGSTON, R.I. — The University of Rhode Island Athletic Department could announce as early as today which varsity sports will be eliminated next year after an $840,000 budget cut.

Athletic Director Thorr Bjorn remained tight-lipped about which team or teams face the chopping block, saying yesterday no decisions had been made.

"We want to minimize the sports affected," Bjorn said. "It's very difficult."

Bjorn said he met with the Student Athlete Advisory Committee last Tuesday to discuss potential cuts, which have not been made public. With a substantial budget cut, there was no way that sports teams would not be affected, Bjorn said.

"We can't cut horizontally anymore," Bjorn said, referring to cutting money from each sports team. "Our programs run efficiently, and we have to do the best we can to keep the current level of funding."

Bjorn declined to speculate which teams would be cut. He said his department created three plans for eliminating the $840,000. A consultant is looking at the plans to ensure that sports team cuts are in line with Title IX legislation, he said. Title IX, federal legislation that prohibits gender discrimination in educational activities that receive federal funding, greatly impacts athletic departments. Bjorn said that he believes his plan will adhere to Title IX, but must hear back from a consultant before publicly announcing the plan.

"I wouldn't comment on any scenarios," Bjorn said. "We've had student-athletes, alumni and parents ask about it, and I've said that we will let them know as soon as I know ... We can't [announce the cuts] until we get the ok," Bjorn said.

If the consultant finds that the Athletic Department's plans are not Title IX compliant, Bjorn and his colleagues will have to create a new plan to deal with the budget reduction.

"We want to move quickly," he said. "It is unfair to the student-athletes and the coaches."

Sports teams will not be the only aspect of the Athletic Department affected by budget cuts. Bjorn said that Athletics has looked at early retirement of staff members and not filling vacant positions. But with such a large budget cut, staff cuts are also a possibility.

Bjorn would not say which staff positions his department has considered, but said that some administrative positions would be consolidated.

"This puts me in a position to restructure our department," Bjorn said. As the new athletic director, he was planning on restructuring athletics, but the budget crisis forced him to decide what could be cut while still maintaining a quality department.

Need Experience?
What: Business Manager
Where: The Daily Collegian
When: Next Year
Located in the Campus Center Basement.
All majors accepted!
If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.
Now Accepting Applications!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself"
- Sir Salman Rushdie

The other holy land

Ted Rogers

I'm not going to touch the issue of "Free Tibet." At first glance, a person like me should be slathering himself in little pins and stickers while decrying China's hostile takeover and occupation of the East Asian nation. I'm a liberal college student with somewhat "hippyish" tendencies. Tibet is a nation of thoroughly religious, humble people with serenity and peace coming out the figurative Yin Yang.

There's something keeping me from having an opinion about it, though. The thing is, I could talk about how terrible it is that a foreign country invaded Tibet, took its land and destroyed most of its enduring customs. But then again, when I go home to the Cape, I live on land that once belonged to the Mashpee Wampanoag. I'm not really sure which tribe Amherst belonged to; but judging from the condition of the Orchard Hill elevators, it was probably an Indian burial ground.

Between feelings of guilt and hypocrisy, I feel it would be a little silly of me to give everyone a sermon on the situation. I do think, however, that everyone could use a bit more information on the subject. We've all seen the "Free Tibet" bumper stickers. Speaking for myself, I don't have a clue what it's about. You probably don't have one either. Something about China being bad – that's pretty much it. So, without further ado, here is an abridged version of why the bumper sticker business will never die.

In a nutshell, the story goes like this: Tibet's "freedom" has been contested since about 1200 A.D. Mongols, Indians, Chinese, Russians and Brits have all, at one time or another, succeeded at making Tibetan lives miserable. The longest and most recent stretch of an independent Tibet was from 1914 to 1950.

This brief period of autonomous rule was due to an ironic twist. China was being picked apart by foreign powers and civil war. After China got its act together and went communist in 1949, one of its first goals was to lay claim to Tibet. This has been common practice for China since, oh, 1630. The People's Liberation Army marched into Tibet and hasn't left.

Today, Tibet is a mix of Tibetans and Chinese settlers who sell cheap goods to the poor natives. The Tibetans say the Chinese are destroying their culture. The Chinese say that the culture was corrupt, often citing Tibet's use of slavery into the '50s.

It seems like the Tibetans deserve their land back just as much as American Indians deserve your comfy, two-story suburban ranch.

Do some quick addition for this chapter in history. Mysterious, faithful people plus brutal invasion plus occupation equals what? The answer seems too close to the Thanksgiving story for me to get fired up about it. It seems like the Tibetans deserve their land back just as much as American Indians deserve your comfy, two-story suburban ranch.

What people need to understand is that China won't free Tibet. Telling China to "free Tibet" is like asking us to "free Texas." We might as well be having "free Rhode Island" movements.

There is an element that I can't compare with the land grab in America. This element is human rights. While American Indians have the right to vote, to practice free speech and get money back from greedy white folks, there is no such thing as a Monk-owned gambling casino in Tibet. In fact, it would appear that the life of the average Tibetan is pretty awful.

Reporters are not allowed to freely see what happens in Tibet. There is good reason to believe, however, that day-to-day life is terrible there. There are riots and rumors of starvation and police beatings. The Dalai Lama himself admitted that he would consider letting China keep Tibet in exchange for more decision-making processes.

That isn't a bad idea. I think the issue of freedom for Tibet should have nothing to do with land. Land grabs by countries have occured for millennia. You might as well protest the sun. There shouldn't be protesting for a free Tibet; there should be protests for free speech and for a free way of life.

I don't think this could happen. "Give Tibetans more power to make autonomous decisions" doesn't make a good bumper sticker. No, most people will aim for the downright silly and impossible chance of Tibet becoming a "free" nation rather than having free people.

But, there is something that can be done. You can educate yourself. Learn about the situation. Make smart, principled choices on how you support China through consumerism. If it would make you feel better, boycott the upcoming Olympics.

There's only one bottom line: "Free Tibet" doesn't do the subject justice. There are a bunch of complicated issues that are flying around Tibetan self-rule, and they can't be summed up in two words.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tworogers@student.umass.edu.

The shift to sustainability

Matt Morin

If we lose the fight for a sustainable society, we will lose the very society for which we have been fighting. Yet, for almost the last four decades, the environmental movement has utterly failed to win the hearts and minds of this country. Even as it predicts doom upon our world, its prophecies have failed to translate into real political power.

Why is this? Perhaps it is the way in which corporate greenwashing, superficial beautification programs or yuppie 'green consumerism' all fall under the category of environmentalism. Such aspects of the movement readily receive demeaning smirks from the average person on the street.

However, there is another, more hopeful undercurrent also labeled environmentalist, one that more often goes under the title of sustainability.

Since the energy crises of the 1970's, we have seen a movement that doesn't just fight for legislation and recycling programs but one that focuses on the individual lifestyle. It isn't about morality, but economic reality. Wood stoves, solar panels, home gardens, vegetarianism, bikes and do-it-yourself everything all have significant economic benefits; and for some reason, these benefits have not been brought into a broader movement.

Naturally, corporate public relations offensives have long retarded the growth of this movement (calling for green consumerism instead of reductions in consumption), and our own cultural inertia and complacency share some blame as well. But this sustainability movement is radical indeed, for it alone addresses two central economic realities that will shape our future.

The first is obvious: the rising cost of oil. In an industrial economy, there is not a single thing that does not rely on vast quantities of cheap oil. Even our most basic needs – heat, food and transportation – are petroleum based. If your house is electrically heated, a significant portion of grid electricity is from oil. Even if we choose to eat local and organic food in the summer, winter months bring food from California and the global South, which, if you have ever seen the gas mileage on refrigerator trucks, makes our food supply precarious indeed. And of course, bicycles would only allow for a fraction of the transportation on which we all rely.

The second trend is food. Oil can run out; our economy can crash and we can all become unemployed, but it's when we don't have any food that starvation happens. Over the past few years, the prices of all basic grains, like wheat, rice and corn, have doubled or tripled. The reason for this, besides significantly problematic weather patterns in food producing nations, is the growing competition for basic grains from economic heavyweights like China and India. More and more people in these countries are moving to urban centers to make enough money to finally afford a meat-based diet, consumer products and cars. This means greater competition exists for grains.

It is clear that there is no alternative to a sustainable world.

The ethanol solution, which relies on the conversion of existing farmland into farmland for ethanol production, further exacerbates our situation.

Where will all of this lead? Food riots and the limiting of food exports from food producing nations have been the chief reactions in the global South. We see other nations increasingly unable to deal with these changes. Can we ask for a clearer warning?

It is clear that there is no alternative to a sustainable world. In this way, sustainability is revolutionary. In order for sustainability to be successful, there must be a fundamental restructuring of our economy. While some of our most pressing social issues, like the exploitation of the worker and the destruction of communities through resource extraction are at the center of the social struggle, these movements have not been able to affect the successes of which they dreamed.

With sustainability we find new possibilities. As the very industries responsible for creating these problems are all dependent on oil, we find that their existence comes into question. We see the basic infrastructure of capitalism come into crisis. On the one hand, we see an impending economic crisis and on the other, a refusal from the state to help people deal with disasters like Hurricane Katrina. In effect, we see that the state ceases to be relevant to the survival of the people.

As oil prices rise, our most basic needs, like heat, food and transportation will need to shift from industrialized, centralized and corporate production to communal and regional production. Some of the largest social struggles of the past two centuries have been organized around an industrial economy. This shift will beg the question of how the left is going to deal with a different type of movement. One thing is for sure, the revolution is close at hand, as the means of production become locally-owned.

Matt Morin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mmorin@student.umass.edu

21st century mental health

In a society where there seems to be so much violence, it is difficult to understand what is going on around you. Most notably, the increase in high school and college shootings, as well as violence at large, beg a closer look at what needs to change

Sada Farah

The common excuse used for these types of events seems to be the same: there are crazy people in the world who do horrible things. This type of explanation is not even a bandage let alone a way to prevent such horrible acts from happening. I'm not arguing that people are not different or that they do not have different limits and capabilities. However, now more than ever it seems to be that the expected profile for violent crimes is expanding. At the same time poor access to mental health services for those who need it seems to be a growing problem in the United States. This was seen most notably in Ohio's 2004 sniper case.

Charles McCoy, 28, the suspected highway sniper responsible for 24 shootings, one of them fatal, around the Columbus, Ohio, area suffered from paranoid schizophrenia. The horrible acts he committed have no excuse; however, all of the factors that drove this shooting spree should be critically examined. Authorities confirmed that McCoy has a mental illness and had stopped taking his medication. Generally, individuals suffering from mental illness may stop taking medication after symptoms subside. That's when symptoms resurface, and they resist taking medication again because they believe that they are better and those telling them to take medication are part of a conspiracy that is designed to endanger them. It is critical that people with mental illness receive treatment as early as possible and be monitored so they keep with their treatment.

This case highlighted the need to increase access to adequate mental health services for all people who are in need of it. It's very conceivable that these highway shootings would have ever taken place if Ohio had a stronger mental health system or if insurance firms in Ohio provided "parity," the same level of coverage for mental illness as for other ailments. According to the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, parity would raise insurance premiums by only one percent and would help reduce the estimated $80 billion annual cost to the nation's economy from untreated mental illness.

Increasingly and tragically after violent shootings, there is a pattern of a suspect with a history of mental illness. Most of the time, there are warning signs, and addressing issues of mental health are critical to high schools as well as colleges and universities as a critical part of preventing violent crime from occurring along with implementing more safety measures and violence prevention community programs. A balanced approach implies well-integrated programs that make sense and are effective. Although it is understandable that in response to these incidents there is gravitation towards extreme physical security measures such as lockdowns and video surveillance to increase a sense of control, research does not show that these measures are the most effective long-term strategy. Just given the layouts of many campuses and limits on resources, there are limits as to what schools and communities can do when they rely on physical security measures.

There are limits as to what schools and communities can do when they rely on physical security measures.

According to the National Consortium of School Violence Prevention Researchers and Practitioners, the most effective approach to preventing violence and protecting students is a balanced one that includes a variety of efforts addressing physical safety, educational practices and programs that support the social, emotional and behavioral needs of students. Comprehensive analyses by the U.S. Secret Service, the FBI and numerous researchers have concluded that the most effective way to prevent targeted acts of violence at schools is by maintaining close communication and trust with students and others in the community so threats will be reported and can be investigated by responsible authorities.

In the absence of threats or behaviors in preparation for a violent act, it is difficult if not impossible to predict when and where specific act of serious violence will occur. Attempts to detect imminently violent students based on profiles or checklists of characteristics are not effective and are most likely to result in false identification of innocent students as dangerous. Instead, school authorities should concentrate their efforts on improving communication channels and training a team of staff members to use principles of threat assessment to gauge the safety of the school.

Findings such as these are critical when addressing issues of school violence on college campuses nation-wide and on our campus here. Campus violence has been a central concern this year; and although there is a difference between a school shooting and smaller acts of violence against, it seems that the underlying similarity is the need for increased communication between departments on campus. Mental health is a stigma nowadays, but it should not be treated as such. It should be regarded in the same way as any other health ailment. It is true that regardless of what is done, there will always be some level of violence. I feel as though a central starting point should be addressing issues of mental health on campus. There are usually warning signs. If there was more cooperation and communication between mental health services, residence life and other applicable departments on campus, many lives could be saved in the process, and further violence could be stopped before it occurs.

Sada Farah is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at sfarah@dailycollegian.com

"DAILY COLLEGIAN pullquote podcast"

Collegian 'pod-columns' now online at dailycollegian.com!

Dealing with disability

Matthew Kush

Anyone who has taken an American history class knows that the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution are the two most important documents in our country's history. The most profound line that comes from the Declaration of Independence is: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal ..."

While this line is the backbone on which the United States were formed, do we always follow it? Sadly, the answer is no. One only has to go so far as our newspapers to know that there is still prejudice and discrimination in this country. I am going to go into depth on one of our shortcomings: prejudice against those with disabilities. I hope to strengthen support in that area and in all of the other cases of discrimination in this country. While the context may be different among these cases, the message is the same for all of them.

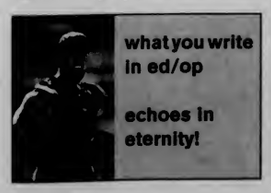
How many times have you seen someone in a wheelchair or with artificial limbs or with a disease like Parkinson's? Or one who has Cerebral Palsy or Autism? Perhaps you know someone who has depression or is on crutches from tearing his ACL. All of these are examples of a disability, which the American Heritage Dictionary dictionary defines as "a disadvantage or deficiency, especially a physical or mental impairment that interferes with or prevents normal achievement in a particular area." One must remember that disabilities occur on all levels.

What we need to do as a society is to accept and welcome people with disabilities.

Do these people deserve to be looked down on by society? The answer is no. No matter the circumstances, they are human beings. What we need to do as a society is to accept and welcome people with disabilities with love and compassion. We are all brothers and sisters bound together by life in this world.

So how can we help this cause? What one has to do is treat everyone with love and warmth. If you see someone in a wheelchair, do not be afraid of him. Be welcoming if you wish. If you know somebody who has depression or a mental disability, hold out your hand, and let the person know that you are there. If you know someone who is on crutches, help him up those stairs in the Dining Common. If you know someone with any type of disability, lend him a hand, and help.

Most of all, make them feel like a human being. If you really want to get involved in the cause, join an organization in the area. Something as simple as joining a Facebook group supporting those with disabilities will help the cause. If you want to become more familiar with the subject, look at the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, by large, the most important document in the young history of the Disabilities Movement.



Even something as simple as refraining from using the derogatory slang "retard" to describe a person can help support the cause. How often has one heard the line "so and so is such a retard?" Pretty often, I'll bet. The line implies that a person is lowering himself to a person with mental retardation. The line is wrong. Even though the phrase may be uttered without thinking, it is still wrong.

While the word "retard" does have its meaning in life, it is not in the manner of degrading a fellow human being. The true meaning of the word "retard" is to slow the progress of something. It is not used to describe the person but rather the action of the person. A proper example of the word would be to say that watering a plant too much will retard its growth. So next time you feel inclined to use the word to describe somebody's behavior, please think again.

You may be wondering: "who is this guy to tell us how to treat others?" To answer your question, I am a college student just like all of you. What compels me to fight for this cause is that I have a loved one whose life is affected by disabilities. I have seen many of the wonderful things people have done for him. However, I have also seen some of the prejudices that he has had to battle through to live his life. That is what drives me, and others, to fight for equality.

Again, I encourage you to lead with your heart and mind, rather than the ways of our culture. Our culture, and many all over the world, has led some people to believe that just because somebody is different, they are not human. Do what is right and help the United States and the world become a better place. Don't do what is popular; do what is right. For the people who already have taken these steps, keep on doing the right thing.

Matthew Kushi can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Revolutionary poet fights social contructs

Saul Williams' tour hits Northampton's Iron Horse

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A momentary sense of unrest filled a packed Iron Horse Music Hall at the hands of revolutionary poet Saul Williams' "Tar Spangled Banner" tour Saturday night – an attempt to destroy preconceived societal ideals and mindsets.

"You cannot curse the part without damning the whole," Williams preached between songs, pleading with each member of the audience to "question everything we are born into" namely society's constructs of race and division.

He denounced the concept of race as an "unscientific divide," eventually concluding with the far-reaching sentiment: "We are one, period."

Before Williams took the stage, however, opening band Dragons of Zynth treated the audience to a set of heavy guitar-fuzz-filled jams, which bounced around from genre to genre in a compelling use of dynamics. Their songs stretched from relaxed dub-inflected drones to high-energy noisy squalls. Dragons of Zynth created a swirling sea of guitar and synthesizer tones over the rhythm section composed of a meandering bass guitar and very tight, heavy-hitting drum sounds.

The two suit-coat-clad front men possessed a knack for entertaining, building up a sweat while valiantly working the crowd. At times they harmonized, though they truly succeeded in winning over the capacity crowd when the keyboard player chose to let emotion take over, bellowing into the microphone and eventually jumping into the audience.

A large white banner picturing an all-black eagle surrounded by faux-patriotic black stars was hung as the backdrop for Williams' set while equipment was being positioned. After a short time, the three other band members took the stage, including "Niggy Tardust" co-producer/programmer/backing vocalist CX KiDTRONiK (sporting pink and purple illuminated sunglasses) behind a board of samplers, drum machines and other various electronics. They prepped Williams' arrival with a little introduction of sound and rhythm.

Williams was a sight, to say the least, in a green blazer, mustard yellow t-shirt (which read "Liberation Beats" on the front, "True Beauty is Within" on the back,) and multi-colored feathers sticking out of his tuft of hair. His face was painted blue around the eyes and his body was covered in a glistening of sweat and sparsely applied glitter. He started out his set with a recital of some lines of poetry completely a cappella, followed by a buzzing rendition of "Convict Colony" from his new record "The Inevitable Rise and Liberation of Niggy Tardust!"

Williams took on the full-on glam antics of David Bowie, whose "Ziggy Stardust" is the reference point for the title of his new record. In addition to the face-paint and glitter, Williams was decked out in countless bracelets and necklaces as well as huge furry boots, jetting from one side of the stage to the other and elevating over the frenzied crowd by propping himself up on a nearby railing. Williams belted out his militant poetry during this whole act, convulsing and jerking in the vein of Mick Jagger to the pulverizing, bass-heavy beats.

Williams spliced in his spoken word musings between the heavy rhythms of many of his songs, including the stream of consciousness poetry of "Untimely Meditations." He blasted through many key tracks including the Public Enemy-sampling "Tr(n)igger" as well as highlights from his self-titled record "List of Demands (Reparations)" and "Black Stacey." Williams took the end of one number to immerse himself in the crowd, inducing a chanting chorus and in-unison jumping.

Williams ended the night just shy of 1:00 a.m. with his cover of U2's hit "Sunday Bloody Sunday." This sing-along was the perfect ending to an exciting night, during which a member of Williams' crew stepped up on a chair and began painting the "Tar Spangled Banner" a bright red-orange with wide brushstrokes, a striking disregard for the mock-patriotic symbol.

Williams' militant, yet positive principles surely turned heads and made the audience reconsider their roles in society as a members of the species, not of a race. He pointed out early on how "race is a social construct," and that it's not only minorities who are affected by oppression but the majority as well. He summarized this perception and declared "we are all victims in this racial divide," implying that there is no safe haven for anyone when it comes to race issues.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

"The Inevitable Rise and Liberation of Niggy Tardust" is Williams' latest release.

Saul Williams delivered his unique blend of theatrics while preaching a message of solidarity and understanding to listeners.

Dance showcased at MHC

BY ELYSE WOOD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Mount Holyoke College's Department of Dance presented its annual student spring concert, "Blind and Running," this past weekend.

The modest theater was outfitted with old folding chairs, and blue gym mats served as makeshift pillow seats upfront. Although these theater seats only sat about 50 people on opening night, the turnout didn't reflect the show's quality. There were 11 performances with choreography by Mount Holyoke students, each running between five and 10 minutes in length. Some performances stood out more than others, but overall, the show had a wide variety of dance styles that ranged from hip-hop to ballroom.

The first routine set the show off to a shaky start. It was a formal ballet set to the Skater's Waltz by Waldteufel. The arrangement by Crystal Menninga appeared thoughtfully constructed although poorly executed. She later said it was her first choreographed dance in which she didn't perform.

"Trial and Error" by Brittany Maldonado was a fusion of different styles including ballet, modern ballet and hip-hop. "Trial and Error" is based on the idea of finding an answer to something that may not have a solution. Maldonado said this was her first choreography that has ever been performed.

Noelle Sauceda's dance, "Spring Fling," was a light-hearted and fun number featuring popular music by Feist and OK Go. Flower appliques and colorful balloons scattered the surface of the stage floor adding a small yet effective touch. It was a piece reminiscent of childhood – incorporating recess pastimes like patty cake and hopscotch into the dance moves.

"Stop. Forget." choreographed by AnaLisa Potisnak took a classical song, "Coco Rose," and added heart beating, clock ticking and buzzing sound effects. The dance moves were both rhythmic and repetitive. Although not stated in the program, the piece is reminiscent of war and battle.

The most memorable choreography of the night could be seen just before intermission in "Ascending Actuality" by Alexis Zaccarello-Grimes and "Which the Shock May Freeze" by Anna Grosslein. Zaccarello-Grimes created a stunning Latin ballroom piece set to an original score by friend, M. Christian Rosa. Some 11 dancers swept the floor in pairs. Visually there was a lot going on, but everything appeared to have rhyme and reason that other performances of the night did not capture.

This dance also included five University of Massachusetts students: Dana Alhaffar, Jon Bruno, Sean Changlai, Clayton Jennings and Kai Wu. Zaccarello-Grimes said she has been putting the piece together since the fall, which was apparent through the performance.

Grosslein's piece appeared just before intermission. It portrayed the chilling tale of the abusive relationships of three women and why some women stay in them. This was well portrayed by the dancers' use of body distortion and facial expressions. Most of the performances had a story to portray through their dance, but this piece conveyed its theme the best. It was well rehearsed and executed perfectly.

Just after intermission, Elizabeth A. Budd performed solo to Mason Taylor's "Black Bird's Song." Taylor sang live accompanying himself with the piano. The live music by Taylor seemed to overshadow Budd's choreography.

Bergin E. Smith made an interesting music choice in Green Day's "Brainstew." More interesting, perhaps, was the dance style of ballet. At times, the music and dance did not fit well together, but this may have been a deliberate point of his choreography. It was meant to convey sleepless nights of an aching heart.

"Gorgeous Day Here in Washington County," choreographed by Marit Wilson, was by far the most unusual and abstract of the bunch. Incorporated into the music were Gertrude Stein and Cat Steven quotes and weather forecasts of Washington County. It ended on the quirky quote, "What's that I smell cooking? ... Well Charles, that's a sausage." This humorous line was anticipated because the dancers cracked a smile right before its delivery.

Kate Abernethy's "A Dance for You and Me" translated her six-month experience into a five-minute piece. It was a heartfelt dance that had the two performers smiling from ear to ear throughout. The emotion emulated from the dance and their faces.

"Because We Disconnect" was choreographed by Kim Allen, also the show's artistic director. It's a modern dance on how people often disconnect from one another over time. It was also performed at the American College Dance Festival in early February, and Allen said the chorography has developed a great deal over time. She said she is happy with the result that wrapped up the evening nicely.

The student-run event was met with a positive reception and was full of strong performances. From their mannerisms during and following the performance, it was apparent the choreographers and students enjoyed putting the event together and successfully delivered a variety of styles.

Elyse Wood can be reached at erwood@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MT. HOLYOKE COLLEGE DEPARTMENT OF DANCE

The Mount Holyoke College Department of Dance held "Blind and Running" this past weekend in an effort to showcase student talent. The show featured works choreographed by students with a variety of styles.

Teenage spending habits big business

COURTESY MCT INFORMATION SERVICES

While total spending on fashion has dropped since last year, retailers are still trying hard to tap into the youth market.

BY JACKIE CROSBY
STAR TRIBUNE (MINNEAPOLIS)

If parents can hardly predict how their teenagers will behave on a given day, what chance do stuffy stock brokers have? The odds apparently are pretty good, assuming you ask the right questions at the right time.

For the past seven years, retail analysts at Piper Jaffray in Minneapolis have been aiming to do just that.

Twice a year, the investment banking firm taps into spending preferences of teenagers across the country through a series of surveys and field trips to malls. The idea is to try to identify the companies best poised to grab the hearts and wallets of the coveted youth market, with its hunger for right-now fashions and big chunk of discretionary income.

"I don't really need the clothes. I want them," allows Stephanie Johnson, a junior at Apple Valley High School and one of about 5,000 teens who took part in Piper Jaffray's most recent survey, which was released Tuesday. "If I'm going somewhere special and I need something, I'll pay full price. But if I'm shopping with friends, I'll go through the sales racks first."

The latest "Taking Stock with Teens" survey found that teens, like adults, are feeling squeezed as prices at the pump and their favorite restaurants rise.

Total spending on fashion has dropped 20 percent since last year, according to the 15th semi-annual survey.

But Piper Jaffray researchers describe it as a "discretionary recession" because while teens might be cutting back, survey director Jeff Klinefelter said they're still finding money for MP3 players, cell phones and other electronic gadgets that have become important "lifestyle accessories."

"We're in a fashion recession," said Klinefelter, a Piper Jaffray analyst and senior consumer researcher who covers Target, Kohl's, J.C. Penney and a score of teen specialty retailers.

"I don't think we're quite to the point of inflection – a change in the trend – but we're swirling around the bottom. I suspect we're six to 12 months from seeing improvements" in spending.

CAREER DAY AT THE MALL

On a recent Tuesday morning, about 50 students from Apple Valley High School and another 30 from Eagan High School fanned out across the Mall of America in Bloomington, Minn., as part Piper Jaffray's field reporting.

They hit a dozen places they'd likely go anyway, including Aeropostale, the Gap, Abercrombie & Fitch, Hot Topic,

See TEEN SPENDING on page 5

Eco-fashion more than a fad

BY JEAN PATTESON
THE ORLANDO SENTINEL

What shall we wear today? Our seaweed T-shirt and bamboo jeans? Or our organic-cotton skirt, fair-trade silk blouse and sweater of merino wool from free-range sheep raised in the Southern Alps of New Zealand?

For eco-fashionistas, the green choices are becoming more numerous – and stylish – by the week.

"Green" fashion is more than a passing fad. It's a lifestyle choice, says Cynthia Spencer, a trend-spotter from New York.

"Concerns about personal health and a healthy planet have prompted a green revolution. Fashion is a part of that," she says.

Essentially, green clothing and accessories are made from organic raw materials produced without pesticides or from recycled materials, says Spencer. No harmful chemicals and bleaches are used to process or dye the goods. And laborers earn fair wages and enjoy healthy working conditions.

"Eco-fashion doesn't mean a burlap sack anymore," says Aimee Hitchner, co-owner of Ginger, a Winter Park, Fla., boutique that includes such eco-friendly labels as Loomstate Denim, Amy Tangerine and Linda Loudermilk, who has been dubbed the "queen of green."

But eco does not mean inexpensive. Certainly, discount stores offer organic-cotton T-shirts for less than $20. But Loudermilk's bamboo jeans sell for $230, for example, and some of her organic silk blouses cost more than $500.

Eco-fashion is big in the clothing market, says Paige Blackwelder, co-owner of Tuni in Winter Park, Fla.

Increasingly, designers are offering clothing made from organic cotton or sustainable materials such as bamboo, soy and hemp, she says. "And some of the fabrics are just beautiful. You'd never guess they were made from bamboo or whatever."

Although customers are not "clamoring" for eco-fashions, they are intrigued by green products and are willing to try them, says Blackweldgr.

The boutique's offering of bamboo knits by Autumn Cashmere is selling well, she says. In the fall, she plans to introduce a line of Matt & Nat handbags made from Japanese paper and recycled water bottles.

Underwear is also becoming eco-friendly. Figleaves.com, the online intimates retailer, has launched Greenleaves, a department dedicated to green underwear, sleepwear and loungewear. And footwear makers are jumping on the green bandwagon, making shoes with bamboo heels, organic-linen uppers and recycled-rubber soles.

Cosmetics products have been touting organic ingredients for several years. Now there's a new wrinkle. Increasingly, the products are being packaged in biodegradable containers.

The new Organic Wear line from Physicians Formula, for example, has compacts made from recycled paper. All packaging in the Green Room collection from Smashbox is recyclable or biodegradable. And PlantLove lipsticks from Cargo now come in biodegradable tubes made from a polymer derived from corn, which is a renewable, compostable resource.

And the lipstick's recycled-paper packaging is embedded with seeds. Plant it, and wildflowers grow.

Now that's really green.

COURTESY HOLLYWOOD&VINE.NET

Eco-fashion is gaining in popularity within the fashion world.

MTV examines student papers

'The Paper' follows real-life student paper

BY TOM JICHA
SOUTH FLORIDA SUN-SENTINEL

There still are people with an affection for newspapers. Some are actually young people. Perhaps "The Paper," a new reality series on youth-oriented MTV, will expand this base.

Set at Cypress Bay High School in Weston, Fla., "The Paper" follows the staff of the student newspaper, The Circuit, from the spirited competition for the position of editor in chief last spring to the mundane but challenging efforts to get out the paper each month.

The eight-part series is a reality show but in no way a game. There is drama, but none of it is scripted or contrived. These teens are ambitious, passionate about journalism and as serious as Woodward and Bernstein, so tensions occasionally explode into emotional outbursts. There are no rewards beyond personal satisfaction and priceless training for adult life, whether it be in the media or some other occupation.

The characters are vivid and distinct, but not hoping to be discovered by TV or film. Imagine "The Hills" but with the young people acting responsibly and doing something worthwhile.

Amanda Lorber and her successful campaign to become editor in chief are the focal points of tonight's premiere. Lorber, bless her, says on camera, "Journalists are the most important part of the world." In a later interview, she says working in journalism "is my life's goal. This is what I want to do with my future."

All of the students on "The Paper" are driven. Lorber, who took Journalism 101 as a Cypress Bay freshman and worked on the school paper during her sophomore and junior years, is presented as almost obsessive. As the deadline for making her case for editor in chief approaches, she sacrifices her social life to prepare her resume, staying up until 2 a.m. to polish her talking points. Included are the reasons she regards some of her strongest competitors as less worthy, which breeds resentment.

As luck would have it, the day the application is due, she develops strep throat. Her mother steps in and delivers her application to Rhonda Weiss, the Journalism 101 teacher who oversees The Circuit and makes the decision on who gets the position.

Now that she has the top job, Lorber's intensity occasionally grates on colleagues. Adam Brock, the paper's advertising manager, said he and Lorber used to be best friends but are something less than that now. "We tolerate each other. I'm not going to lie. It has been a rocky road."

Brock acknowledges that blame for the tensions is shared. "I am by far the most dramatic person you will ever meet." This trait often manifests itself in screaming bouts. (In fairness to the young people, loud differences of opinion occasionally erupt at the most respected mainstream newspapers.)

However, Brock allows that Lorber has been an effective manager. "We produce an amazing paper. I didn't think Amanda would be a great leader, but she has done it."

The Circuit covers the customary topics for a scholastic publication: student council elections, campus issues, social events and sports. However, under Lorber and managing editor Alex Angert, it expands into topics not usually associated with high school journalism.

Angert has produced pieces on the parallels between Vietnam and Iraq, using faculty members who served in one or the other as a resource. He tapped his father's memory bank for a feature on the '60s hippie movement.

"We push boundaries because the school allows us to," said entertainment editor Cassia Laham, who has assigned projects such as sending reporters to learn and write about religions other than their own.

"We've always been interested in in-depth features," Lorber said. "We like to dig, find funny and interesting things."

Conflict makes for compelling TV, so the rivalries and disagreements are a big part of the first episode, the only one made available for screening. In addition to business manager Brock, managing editor Angert also admits to a newfound antagonism toward former close pal Lorber now that he reports to her.

"We've had a lot of ups and downs and some falling outs. There was a time we didn't like each other. Now we're civil," he said.

"We definitely have disagreements," Lorber said. "Competition can do things like break up friendships."

Retailers tap into youth market

TEEN SPENDING from page 4

Cache, New York & Co., PacSun, and Zumiez.

Armed with surveys and pens, the students wrote down how much things cost, what was on sale (winter garb or spring's newest plaid shorts), and whether old and tired items were stacking up. They a store's ambiance, and whether sales people greeted them with a smile and an offer to help.

"At the Gap, they didn't give any greetings," said Kellan Srur, a senior at Apple Valley. "It was kind of a shock. At Abercrombie and Hollister they have a tag line where they mention their new products, like cologne and stuff."

Senior Ali Larson, who shops "at least twice a week" and is considering a career in retail merchandising, led her cohorts through the megamall with the proficiency of one who has traveled many miles there.

"Some of the shorts are too short," she said after completing the hour-and-a-half tour of stores. "But I like the bright pastel colors and plaids. There are a lot of cute dresses out there, too."

Piper Jaffray sold the idea to high schools in 2001 by turning it into a half-day career day and research field trip for student.

In 2001, the Gap was rated No. 1 amongst teen shoppers. Presently, the retailer fails to break the top 10.

Piper Jaffray researchers typically visit about 20 schools from New York to southern California based on their demographics and socio-economic profile. The recent survey includes about 670 of these kids, whose average household income is about $75,000. A national online survey through the student marketing group, DECA, or Delta Epsilon Chi, added results from another 4,500 teens whose household income is about $56,700.

"Trends are fairly consistent around the country," Klinefelter said. "It used to be the two coasts were influences and a year later the Midwest would catch on. Now, teens see the same thing on TV and online, and there aren't those geographical differences anymore."

Retail analysts routinely spend time visiting shops, walking the malls, and talking to shoppers and sales clerks. But Piper's survey is unusual in that it taps into teens every six months, collecting input from thousands of young people nationwide.

"It's not an accurate predictor of near-term sales results," Klinefelter said. "But it can help identify major changes in spending trends, and whether a company is likely to gain market share in the next one or two seasons."

To wit: When the survey first launched in 2001, the Gap was the teens' No. 1 retail brand. Now, it's not even among the top 10 brands teenagers are thinking about, a decline reflected in the company's dwindling market share and flat stock price in recent years.

Macy's troubles also turned up in the latest survey. Parents of teens, who also are surveyed, no longer see the department store as their favorite spot to shop. The new winner: Kohl's.

Klinefelter said teens mirror the broader economy. In 2001, the last time Americans faced a recession, young people also started curbing their spending. By 2003, surveys in the spring and fall started showing "diminishing declines," just as the country was pulling out of its slump.

"We sensed that the economy was poised in the next six to 12 months to turn the economy around and grow," Klinefelter said of the 2003 results. "It was a very accurate assessment, and the start of a great recovery in the group."

Retailers trip over themselves trying to find ways to tap into the market of 20 million potential customers who are 15 to 19 years old. A little more than 40 percent of teens' spending goes into fashion-related items, according to Piper. What lures them in?

For senior Natalie Sindt, it's a simple formula: "If there's music playing and friendly people, you want to shop there."

Embark on an Adventure? Teach English in Korea.

Aclipse seeks adventurous college graduates to work as English Language Instructors (ELI) in South Korea's public school system. ELIs team with Korean teachers to teach English to elementary and secondary students. No teaching experience or Korean language abililty is necessary. The program begins with a comprehensive orientation and training program.

Benefits include:

- Free airfare to and from Korea
- Great Salary
- Rent-free, furnished accommodation within easy commute of your school
- 14 days paid vacation plus all national holidays off
- National health insurance enrollment and contribution (50% of premium paid by school)
- Contract completion bonus

Join thousands of recent college graduates from around the world teaching English in Korea. Apply today – boston@aclipse.net.

Aclipse recruiters match recent college graduates with great jobs teaching English overseas.

Begin the journey of a lifetime with a single step...

Aclipse

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

No. 1,000 for Sortino

SOFTBALL from page 1

In Game 2, Bailey Sanders pitched a complete-game shutout, giving up one hit and walking two. She struck out just one batter, but her control was on from the start of the game, forcing eight groundball outs.

"I thought they both did a good job," Sortino said. "Brandice had a game great going. Unfortunately she threw a ball down the middle of the plate and lost the no-hitter. Bailey just keeps coming at you. She has a lot of patience on the mound."

Sortino pulled Sanders out of a bases-loaded jam Saturday in the fifth inning, and Balschmiter struck out five batters in two innings to secure the win. On Sunday, Sortino was glad to see Bailey close out her own win.

"Absolutely," she said. "And I know Bailey was glad too. It really broke my heart to have to pull her [Saturday], but I had to change the environment."

Sanders said being pulled on Saturday did not affect her performance on Sunday, but it did give the opportunity for Sortino to earn her 1,000th win.

"It means a ton," Sanders said. "Everyone's going to remember this win. Coach Sortino is such an amazing coach, and just to be a player on her team [is a privilege.] Whether it's during the season when she got that win or just to be a part of coach Sortino and UMass softball. Then pitching in the game was just icing on the cake."

UMass jumped ahead, 1-0, in the second when Sarah Reeves redeemed a terrible Game 1. After striking out three times, Reeves blasted a solo home run over the scoreboard in left field, which turned out to be all the Minutewomen would need, though they were not nearly done for the day.

The Maroon and White exploded for nine runs in the third inning, including another homer by Reeves, this time with the bases loaded. Two walks and a single by Samantha Salato loaded the bases with one out when Reeves returned to the batter's box just an inning removed from her fourth homer of the season.

This one sailed over the bleachers in left-center field to put UMass up, 5-0.

Between games, Reeves went into the bullpen and hit off a tee, trying to find the adjustment she needed to make.

"I struggled in the first game and a couple games now I've been struggling. So I was just trying to make contact and get a hit. But I'll take a home run any day," Reeves said.

Lauren Proctor hit a two-run single later in the inning, and Whitney Mollica hit a three-run homer in the next at-bat to pull the game completely out of reach. However, it was Reeves's production that earned Sortino her milestone win.

"She really struggled in Game 1, so to come back and hit those two home runs in Game 2 [was rewarding]," Sortino said. "She went out to the bullpen. She did what she needed to do and stayed inside the ball, and it really paid off for her. I was really proud of her."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

BRIAN TEVLIN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders earned the win in the second game of UMass's doubleheader with Temple yesterday. The victory was No. 1,000 for UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

BRIAN TEVLIN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Peter McNichols scored three goals in UMass's 8-7 win over ECAC rival Hobart on Saturday.

Balise score ties game late

LACROSSE from page 8

"They had 18 seconds, so they needed to take their time and be patient," Cannella said. "I thought [senior Fred Federico] did rush a little bit. Fortunately, Tim was right there to pick the loose ball up and score it. I try to tell them not to change the way you play depending on the situation."

Federico started the play behind the net and circled the cage as his teammates broke from their alignment. An HC defender knocked the ball from Federico's cradle. The two players attempted to scoop up the groundball before it kicked into the cluster of players fighting for position.

The 1,722 in attendance fell silent instantly. But Balise fixed that, snatching the loose ball as it floated toward the cluster of players fighting for positioning. Once in possession, he turned and quickly fired the shot past Silberlicht.

The score was the second of the day for Balise. His first, which gave UMass a 2-1 lead late in the second quarter, looked equally unlikely moments before it happened. Senior defenseman Sean Krygier and Bryan Danvers fought for a groundball with three Statesman defensive players. Danvers fell, but tapped the ball over to freshman Zach Rodgers.

Rodgers quickly found a wide-open Balise, who stumbled but managed to get a shot on net – his no-look, over-the-shoulder attempt beat Silberlicht.

The UMass defense focused on shutting down HC leading scorer Daryl Veltman. Krygier drew the task of covering Veltman and succeeded, holding the senior scoreless.

"I think we did a great job against their attack; I don't think they had a single point," Cannella said. "[Veltman, Jeff Colburn and Jamie Kirk] are three very good players, so I have to credit our defense. And, of course, [junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider] made some big saves.

"Everybody that played on defense today was really superb. [Assistant coach Jake Coon] put together a great game plan. The credit for this win goes to [the defenders]."

There were six lead changes in the game as neither team could maintain its momentum for long. Hobart's Nick Currie (three goals) gave the Statesmen a lead with 2:37 left in the third quarter, and the advantage held until Balise's goal with seven seconds left in regulation.

GAMES NOTES

UMass's win ties it with Georgetown, who lost to Loyola, 11-9, on Saturday, for second place in the ECAC … The Minutemen are now 7-2 all time against the Statesmen and 4-1 in Amherst … Senior defenseman David Von Voigt had a game-high six groundballs against HC … Rogers added to his team-high assist total with two more against the Statesman, giving him 14 on the season … Zorkers' goal was the first of his career … Sophomore defensive midfielder Will Jeffrey, a transfer from the now-defunct Butler program, nearly scored the first goal of his career, but his shot kicked off the right post after bouncing past Silberlicht.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe meloni a gmail com.

Clegg struggles against Bonnies

BASEBALL from page 8

but encountered trouble in the eighth and ninth innings.

Jim Macdonald and Mike Donato had RBI singles in the eighth, and UMass added three more in the ninth, including a Ryan Franczek two-run homer to put the game out of reach.

Despite being one of the Minutemen's top starters this season, Mitchell Clegg struggled in the first game of the series. The junior allowed seven earned runs in four innings in the 7-2 loss.

The third inning proved to be problematic for Clegg. After two runs had already scored, Randy Moley hit an inside-the-park, three-run home run to give the Bonnies a 5-1 lead.

Mitchell Eilenberg and Charlie Benson each pitched two scoreless innings of relief for the Minutemen. Although Eilenberg allowed both of the runners he inherited from Clegg to score in the fifth inning.

GAME NOTES

The final two games of the series were played as a doubleheader on Saturday due to projected snow in Olean, N.Y. on Sunday … Brian Baudinet went 7-of-12 over the three games an increased his team-leading average to .393. He also has a .495 on-base percentage … Moley, who leads the conference in hitting, went 3-of-10 over the weekend … Eilenberg leads UMass with 10 appearances this season and holds a 3.91 earned run average.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

UM reset play dooms Hobart

OFFENSE from page 8

in the slot. He found McNichols who buried the shot the second time around after Silberlicht robbed him earlier in the match.

"Coach Cannella put the play in earlier in the year. It's something that we feel really comfortable with. It worked to perfection [in overtime], so we're very happy with it," McNichols said after the game.

"We change it on the fly sometimes, but that time it was the original way that we run the play," he added.

It works because it provides several options. After streaking into the wing, Hayes could have shot like he did early in the game or passed to one of the four players in the slot.

In his second season in Amherst, Hayes displayed remarkable poise each time he ran the play. Rather than forcing a bad pass or shot, he allowed the decisions of the defense to dictate his action. When the defender stayed with him, he passed; and when the defender slid to the slot, he took a shot.

Federico started the play at the end of regulation when the Minutemen needed a goal to extend the game. He forced the play too quickly and lost the ball after a vicious check from his defender. If not for Balise's presence of mind to collect the loose ball and shoot quickly without forcing it, the Statesmen would returned to Geneva, N.Y., with a win on Saturday evening.

"I've have [been in the right place a few times], but our offense as a whole is getting more comfortable," Balise said. "We're starting to execute our offense much better and just playing lacrosse."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

BRIAN TEVLIN/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Greg Cannella credited assistant coach Jake Coon with instituting the play that led to three goals on Saturday.

UMass succeeding after controversy them. So, support them, encourage them, at this point in the season, after everything, they're showing a ton of fight. It's great to see."

MELONI from page 8

Junior attack Tim Balise embodies exactly what Cannella preaches. Not only is Balise the team's leading scorer at the moment, he is a 4.0 student. Maintaining a perfect grade-point average is difficult enough when you involve yourself in nothing off the field, imagine how much your studies would suffer if you suddenly had to commit yourself to daily conditioning, early-morning practices and week-long game preparation.

I'm not suggesting forgiveness for the eight departed for their actions; I only ask that you give those left a chance. After losing to Loyola, 15-1, on March 29, the Minutemen fought their way into a second-place tie in the ECAC standings with next weekend's opponent Georgetown. In the win Saturday, the Minutemen displayed an unwavering tenacity as they rallied to defeat the Statesmen in what seemed like a loss.

I understand your skepticism, I had it too when the season began. But the more I've learned about Greg Cannella and his current players, the more I began to appreciate everything they're trying to accomplish.

BRIAN TEVLIN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Bobby Hayes fires a shot that resulted in his second-quarter goal on Saturday. The goal came with six seconds remaining in the first half and tied the game at 3-3.

When Balise slipped his shot past the Hobart goalkeeper after the loss seemed certain, and again when McNichols won it in overtime, it was truly difficult for me to compose myself. Sportswriters and fans alike spend their lives hoping to witness truly great moments in sports. I'm not saying the 2008 Minutemen should be considered a great team just yet, but what they did on Saturday and have been doing for two months now is something truly special.

However difficult and unlikely it may appear, if the Minutemen defeat Georgetown this Saturday, they'll be alone in second place and a few Loyola letdowns away from a birth in the NCAA Tournament. It's not particularly feasible, but there's no doubt that Cannella, his staff and his players deserve it as much as anyone.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
Faculty & Staff drawing for free gift!
Students, Enter drawing for fun-filled Fan Bag!
FREE
Networking Breakfast for Students, Faculty, Staff, Alumni
Wednesday, April 16
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Memorial Hall
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and Brueggers Bagels of Amherst
(Limited to first 250 people)
BRUEGGER'S BAKED FRESH

Arigato II あかしと Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage
Amherst Brewing Co.
Arigato
Arigato II
Main St
Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

Sudoku is so glamorous.

4			7		8			1
	7					6
	2	8				9	4
		7		8		4
	5						3
		2		5		7
	9	6				1	7
	4						5
2			5		4			6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

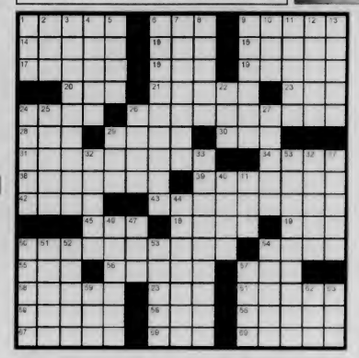
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"She looked at me penetratingly. So I suppose you can figure out what happened next."

— Iggy Pop

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

FOOL'S GOLD BY ALEX EZORSKY-LIE



STUDENT LIFE BY BEN LEONBERG AND DAN MORIATY

ACROSS
1 Donations
6 Plead
9 Common maladies
14 Arabic word for God
15 Had a pizza
16 Stand by
17 Skier's run
18 ___ Angeles
19 Zellweger of "Jerry Maguire"
20 Eliminate
21 Metric unit
23 Grow older
24 Radio enthusiast
26 Most of MTV?
28 Ernie of golf
29 Extra amount
30 Moray
31 Digital recording
34 On the briny
38 Ralph Waldo or Roy
39 Runniest snd squishies!
42 Actor Bridges
43 Keen perception
45 Whelp
48 Ron's early role
49 Aberdeen's river
50 Some linemen
54 "Drowning ___"
55 Be indisposed
56 Writer Gide
57 Mirror image?
58 Rule the roost
60 Ignited
61 Grilled
64 Gave credit to
65 Actress Lupino
66 Chamber instrument
67 Old Testament book
68 Night flyer
69 Designer Calvin

DOWN
1 Freon or neon
2 Out of sorts
3 Waters off Bali
4 Animal with a fleshy proboscis
5 Small building
6 "Swan Lake" performer
7 French stars
8 "Beau ___"
9 Dreiser novel, "Sister ___"
10 Have a lab
11 Florida room
12 Painter Rivera
13 Painter Jan
22 "All About ___"
24 Show biz personality
25 Point a finger at 26 Botheration!
27 Done in
29 "___ Miniver"
32 Become violent
33 Government overthrow
35 View twins?
36 City on the Ruhr
37 All confused
40 Singer Redding
41 Last letter
44 Bullring
46 Amin's land
47 Tricky puzzle clue
50 Deciduous conifer
51 Refrain in a children's song
52 Darts
53 Impromptu
54 Mushroom pick
57 Expression of disgust
59 ___-whiz!
62 Will Smith title role
63 ___ sequitur

Do you desire fame, fortune and a great sex life?
Comics Guy is graduating and needs a replacement for next year.
Pick up an application in The Collegian office located in the basement of the campus center, or email inquiries to comics@dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your financial well is drying up faster than the world's oil reserves. Go dumpster diving. Go green.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Quit being such a Fruit Loop and strive for a Total behavioral upgrade. Cheerio Good Friends!

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
He who works with the dolphins will get the girls. Girls heart porpoises.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Summer is creeping closer; but in her arms she carries a term paper deadline. Do the paper, and receive a warm embrace.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
There's a direct correlation between the number of freckles on this campus and the amount of exposed flesh. Yay nudity!

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Overly romantic evenings inherently bear a resemblance to the exposition of teen horror movies.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You rock harder than the Agro-crag.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It is very nice that you conserve agua, but recycling bathwater is a filthy form of overkill.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't be self-conscious about your life. You may not agree, but it's cute as a kitten when you snort.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
As a rule, avoid anyone who describes themselves as fabulous. It is code for unoriginal.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Listen to the soundtrack from Phantom of the Opera. Just do it, jackass.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The wind will whisper words of guidance into your left ear. Your right ear is far too dirty to hear anything.

Comics and television remotes: the saviors of the working class.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Say Cheese! UHS needs students for a photo shoot this month. Have fun, get a gift and maybe win a prize! Get info and sign up at the UHS website, www.umass.edu/uhs, by April 17.

APT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen, floor to be worked on. 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1600 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

APTS FOR RENT

For 9/1/08. Northampton.
2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1000+
4 Bedrooms $1500+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates
APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications,
253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT
REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available;

EMPLOYMENT

June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan frank39@yahoo.com)

EMPLOYMENT

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley close to UMass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment. GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 14, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM wins third straight game

Freshmen Peter McNichols and Zach Rodgers celebrate McNichols' game-winning goal Saturday against Hobart. The Minutemen scored two goals in the final 1:19 of regulation to send the game into overtime before McNichols beat Hobart goalkeeper Max Silberlicht to end the game.

McNichols' goal in OT completes comeback

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If it were easy, it wouldn't be the 2008 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team. The Minutemen, who trailed for most of the second half, tied the game, 7-7, with seven seconds left in regulation before Peter McNichols scored his third goal of the game at 2:41 of the overtime lifting UMass past Hobart, 8-7, at Garber Field on Saturday.

UMass coach Greg Cannella called a timeout when the Minutemen (5-5, 3-1 ECAC) gained possession of the ball following a Hobart turnover. With his young team still frenzied following Tim Balise's game-tying goal, Cannella turned to the same play that made overtime a possibility.

At the reset, sophomore midfielder Bobby Hayes made his way to the back of the net as his teammates aligned themselves in front with the Hobart defensemen.

Hayes broke to his left, and a Statesman defender slid to take Hayes leaving McNichols unmarked to the right of the Hobart (5-5, 2-3 ECAC) net. Hayes quickly fired to McNichols who faked a shot low, drawing Hobart goalkeeper Max Silberlicht down before tucking it over his shoulder.

UMass	8
Hobart	7

"[The defenseman] freed me up, and Bobby found me. Bobby always looks inside; he's a great passer," McNichols said. "He looked right inside, and I caught and finished."

The goal was McNichols' third of the game and 14th of the season while the assist was Hayes' third of the game and 10th of the year.

Cannella also made use of a timeout with 18 seconds left in regulation. The Minutemen trailed, 7-6, after freshman Steve Zorkers brought them to within one with 1:29 left in regulation.

See LACROSSE on page 6

Attacks, midfielders shine on reset play

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Not much has worked on a consistent basis for the offense of the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

There are a few Minutemen with high scoring outputs, but it has proved a great struggle for UMass coach Greg Cannella to find combinations and plays that work regularly.

On Saturday, however, the Minutemen found something that not only worked, it won them a game. With his team trailing 8-7 with 18 seconds remaining in regulation and again in the first overtime, Cannella utilized a reset play that led to high-percentage looks for his best finishers positioned directly in front of the goalkeeper.

The formation was simple. One player behind the net with the other five lined up in front of the goalkeeper with defensemen positioned between each UMass player. Once the referees whistle the start of play, the player behind the net rotates out, and those aligned in the restraining box start moving.

"It's something that we've been working on for a couple weeks," Cannella said. "[Assistant coach Jake Coon] thought we should put in an end-line play based on what we're doing behind the goal. It was great advice, and I took it."

UMass used this play on four separate occasions Saturday afternoon, and it turned into a goal for three of them. The time it didn't, freshman Peter McNichols was wide open, but Hobart goalkeeper Max Silberlicht made a spectacular save to keep the ball out of the net.

"The play helped us catch the defense off-guard a little," McNichols said. "But that goalie played a spectacular game. It was nice to beat him later, though."

Sophomore midfielder Bobby Hayes and senior attack Fred Federico played the role behind the net on different situations. The first time Hayes started the play, he wheeled from his post behind the cage and worked himself free before firing a shot over Silberlicht's shoulder.

When the Minutemen ran the play in overtime, Hayes's defender stayed on him vacating more space

See OFFENSE on page 6

Cannella, Minutemen earn redemption

Joe Meloni

When Peter McNichols tucked his shot in the goal at 2 minutes, 19 seconds of overtime on Saturday afternoon, it extended the current winning streak of the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team to three games.

The Minutemen began the season with a win over a nationally-ranked Hofstra team days after the announcement of the disenrollment of the eight suspended players from the University. After that, the Minutemen struggled to create an offensive rhythm and lost five of their next six games. The streak began on March 29 after most declared the Minutemen dead in the water.

It takes a special group to recover after everything these student-athletes experienced in February and March, a series of events not typical to most programs.

The leadership of this team was never questioned in the wake of the controversy and on-the-field struggles, but its depth was essentially destroyed by the players' dismissal.

The image of the team suffered a similar fate, especially in the eyes of the UMass student body. Rather than the group of blue-collar lacrosse players who made the program matter, they were viewed by many as a bunch of affluent white kids who thought the rules didn't apply to them. In the wake of the Duke lacrosse scandal of 2006, this reaction is understandable if not condoned. But this really isn't the same thing – at all.

I don't know any of the eight former Minutemen who left school once the story broke. I don't know exactly what happened that night; and at this point, it doesn't really matter.

I do, however, know UMass coach Greg Cannella and the feelings he has toward the 29 remaining players. And believe me, if you took the opportunity to speak with any of them, you'd understand the caliber of those remaining on that the team. And, more importantly, you'd know the reason that Cannella is one of the most respected people involved with men's collegiate lacrosse.

An alumnus of UMass, he took over the program in 1995 after Ted Garber – the son of legendary Dick Garber – left the program. In that time, he has maintained the level of excellence on the field, and did all he could to do so off of it.

"I can honestly tell you that the guys out there on the field are quality people," Cannella said fresh from Saturday's win. "They are a group of young men that the student body would be proud to have representing

See MELONI on page 6

Senior midfielder Paul Manesis is one of UMass coach Greg Cannella's four captains. Manesis and the Minutemen are on a three-game winning streak after defeating Hobart, 8-7, on Saturday.

UMass wins pair in Philly

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past weekend was the first time this season that the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team won two consecutive games. The wins moved the Minutewomen into third place in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen beat La Salle on Sunday afternoon, 20-11, and Saint Joseph's on Friday 9-8.

"We came into this weekend wanting to come out with two wins," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We took it one game at a time. I think it was important for us to stay focused."

With the two wins, UMass is 5-9 overall, 3-2 in the A-10 as the final weekend approaches. The top four teams in the conference will move on to the A-10 Tournament on April 25-27 at UMass.

Freshman Kelsey Schriener led the team with a career-high four goals, four draw controls, one groundball and one caused turnover. Three of her four goals were scored in the second half, including the last goal of the game.

UMass	20
La Salle	11
UMass	9
St. Joe's	8

"I'm really happy with Schriener. She had a career game," Venechanos said. "She did great with draw controls and getting shots."

UMass scored three straight goals to start the game against La Salle; and 12 minutes into the game, UMass was up 6-1. With five minutes, 25 seconds left in the first half freshmanf Jackie Lyons and junior Kaytlin McCormick scored a goal each six seconds apart.

In the second half with 21:59 left to play, the score was 10-7, but the Minutewomen scored five straight goals and secured their win.

"We had a lot of goals and transitions. That's from us having confidence with each other. We are really trusting each other," Venechanos said. "I'm happy with how we're competing in between the [30-yard lines]. After we got the ball out of our end defensively, we were able to push it. That will help us move forward [for the rest of the season]."

The Minutewomen dominated the game. UMass had 36 shots to La Salle's 21 and had 19 draw controls. They also had 11 athletes score goals.

On Friday in the 9-8 win against SJU, McCormick and senior Kathleen Typadis both scored hat tricks. Typadis' three goals marked the third time in her career when she has scored a hat trick in four consecutive games.

"On Friday, it was a back-and-forth game. We kept our composure. We were able to keep the lead and keep attacking," Venechanos said. "It was a combination of defense keeping us in the game and the offense shooting well."

The game was tied, 3-3, with 13:35 left in the first half after McCormick scored a goal on a free-position shot. SJU scored the next two goals to take a 5-3 lead over UMass before McCormick answered back with her second goal of the game.

At the start of the second half, the Minutewomen scored three consecutive goals by McCormick, Typadis and sophomore Stephanie Hopkins, which gave them their first lead of the game with 19:07 left to play. SJU scored to tie the game, 8-8, and then Typadis scored her third goal of the game with 9:26 left.

With 5:35 left in the game, SJU scored, but the referee called the goal back because the pocket of senior Lindsey - Kate McCool's stick was illegal. UMass took control of the ball running time off the clock when SJU caused a turnover and carried the ball down the field. With 39 seconds left in the game, senior Jeannette Villapiano forced a turnover to secure the Minutewomen's win.

"We shot extremely well. We didn't take too many; but with the shots we took, we were able to put some goals away," Venechanos said. "In the past, 20 shots didn't give us a win. I'm impressed with our shooting percentage."

SJU outshot UMass, 31-20; but with redshirt junior Krissy Anderson in goal, she kept the Minutewomen in the game with a season-high 12 saves. Anderson's start was her first in nine games.

"Anderson has been playing well in practice and has been consistent. I'm very confident in both goalies this season. In the first half of the St. Joe's game, she kept us in the game," Venechanos said. "She was making athletic saves and allowed the defense to take more chances."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

SBU takes 2 from Maroon and White

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team recorded 10 hits in each of its three games this weekend but dropped two out of three to Saint Bonaventure on the road.

UMass (10-14, 4-8 Atlantic 10) travels to Boston to play in the championship game of the Beanpot on Tuesday.

Saint Bonaventure's Michael Proctor limited the Minutemen to four hits over five innings in the final game of the series, an 8-3 Bonnie victory.

The Minutemen's three runs came in the seventh inning and cut the deficit to two, but the Bonnies (17-11, 7-5 A-10) rallied for three runs in the bottom of the inning to extend the lead back to five.

Jared Freni retired the first two batters in the seventh; but after allowing consecutive hits and a run, SBU's Anthony Randich hit a two-run home run.

SBU	8
UMass	3
UMass	6
SBU	1
SBU	7
UMass	2

Nick Serino received the loss for UMass and allowed two earned runs in 4 1/3 innings and didn't receive help from the bullpen.

While Freni struggled, reliever Aaron Smith also did, allowing three earned runs in a 1/3 of an inning pitched.

Behind a complete game from Bryan Leigh, UMass took the middle game of the three-game set.

Leigh didn't allow a hit past the fifth inning; and more importantly, the three hits he allowed were all singles.

The Bonnies lone run came in the fifth inning when Leigh walked two batters. One was driven in on a sacrifice fly.

Although Leigh was pitching well, the game was tied through the seventh inning.

Cody Vincent, who was coming off winning Atlantic 10 Pitcher of the Week, matched Leigh's complete game

See BASEBALL on page 6

INSIDE: MINUTEWOMEN NAMED A-10'S NO. 1 SEED | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 59 LO: 27 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2008

IRS tax-filing fear eliminated

Students prepare returns for disadvantaged area residents

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As members of the University of Massachusetts community scramble to file their taxes before tonight's deadline, many of the area's lower-income residents can sleep soundly knowing that their taxes were prepared through the generosity of UMass students.

Sitting idly in the hallways and classrooms of the Isenberg School of Management, scores of patient individuals and families waited for their turn with one of the program's student tax preparers as a part of the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program at UMass over the past two months.

For many, the prospect of filing one's own taxes inspires feelings of fear and intimidation. Throughout the income tax season, VITA helped 1,500 low income, elderly and disabled individuals, as well as international students, file their federal and state income tax returns.

The domestic division of the program targets those who are either unable to complete their own returns or can't afford a professional service. Meanwhile, the international group prepares returns for students studying in the area from abroad.

UMass VITA is part of a nationwide program run by the Internal Revenue Service. It is the largest in the area, with a clientele that ranges from Amherst to Northampton. Many University students and employees also take advantage of the program, which began at UMass in the 1980s. It aided needy clients this year from Feb. 12 to April 10 on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

Accounting professor Cathy West has overseen the domestic program since 2005. Her primary role is to ensure the accuracy of the returns, but she spends most of her time floating between the program's multiple rooms answering unique tax questions.

She has approximately 80 UMass student volunteers, who partake in the program for a variety of reasons. Most are accounting majors, since successful completion of Accounting 371 (Federal Taxes) is required for participation.

West credits VITA's sizeable group of volunteers to the work of accounting professor Michael Whiteman.

The program's chief recruiter, Whiteman is the primary instructor for the Accounting 371 course and is renowned for passionately encouraging his students to join the program pending their successful completion of the course. He also ran the UMass VITA program from 1997 until 2005.

UMass students work in pairs to file federal and state tax returns for each client. Though each volunteer receives an academic credit for their effort, many cite the ability to help needy individuals for their participation in the program.

The students also value the hands-on experience, as many plan to pursue careers in public accounting and professional tax preparation.

"I joined to get the experience and help people at the same time," said Donna Smith, a junior accounting major and one of VITA's student preparers. "You get to take what you've learned in class and apply it to real-world situations."

UMass student Mav Kaplan (right) helps area resident Beth Altimari file her federal and state income taxes last week as a part of the University's Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program.

Approximately 80 UMass students, including Lukasz Kowalski (center), helped over 1,500 people file their returns through the VITA program.

Whiteman emphasizes the inherent social values of the program and the positive impact it can have on VITA's participants.

"The biggest benefit for the students I would hope is a greater appreciation and awareness of how a significant part of our population is struggling economically," he said.

For most clients, the program offers the peace of mind of knowing that their taxes were prepared correctly. Without the aid of the UMass students, many of the clients would have been forced to turn to professional organizations. These businesses charge up to several hundred dollars in some cases – a price that many can ill afford.

But West also alluded to a more serious reaction from those fearful of the IRS.

"Many people just won't file," she said. "They think that they don't know what they're doing, so they are too afraid that they will mess it up."

Though those circumstances typically won't result in reprisal from the IRS, failure to file can result in a loss of significant government subsidy. Many of the VITA clients rely on tax benefits such as the earned income credit for survival.

"This program provides a meaningful service for a significant element of our population, the so-called 'working poor,'" Whiteman said.

See VITA on page 2

Summer classes open for local community

BY KAITLYN SILVA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Continuing and Professional Education program at the University of Massachusetts is now offering the chance to audit classes at half price during the summer.

This new program, called Community Seats, would allow UMass alumni, Massachusetts residents and senior citizens the option of attending one of 10 classes ranging in price between $320 and $502.50, plus a $45 registration fee.

"Last year at the University of Vermont, they introduced the idea of offering half priced seats in classes that had low enrollments," said Victoria Matthew, the director of the Continuing and Professional Education program, who heard about the UVM program from colleague Ellen Morris.

"We took this fabulous concept and decided that rather than wait to see what classes didn't have great enrollments, we'd select several classes that historically garnered sufficient enrollments to run in the summer, but were never over-enrolled, and would be of interest to community members."

While those involved in the programs will not receive credits or a formal grade, Matthew hopes that the worry-free learning experience will draw eligible persons to the program.

"The main goal is to share with community members some of the great classes and programs we offer at UMass Amherst over the summer," she said.

Six of the 10 classes will be offered during the first summer session and four during the second session. Half

See COMMUNITY on page 2

Exploring cancer-marriage relationship

Researchers receive grants to study families and ailments

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Researchers at the University of Massachusetts received more than $2.5 million in grants to further their studies on families.

UMass psychology professors Paula Pietromonaco and Sally Powers were awarded a five-year grant of $2.29 million for their study "Biopsychosocial Factors in Depression and marriage: Implications for Cancer." The National Cancer Institute in the National Institutes of Health awarded the grant to the researchers, who intend to study healthy couples over the first three to four years of marriage.

The researchers hope to look at spouses' expectations and beliefs about relationships and how they deal with disagreements, which may predict later risks for depression and anxiety.

"We hope to identify specific physiological and behavioral mechanisms that will help to account for and explain the previously observed association between personality characteristics and depression, to learn whether these mechanism are different for husbands and wives, and to determine whether the quality of one spouse's responses lead to changes in the other partner's responses over time, which in turn may increase or reduce that partner's vulnerability to depression," said Pietromonaco. "Our results will help us to build and test new intervention strategies to enhance adjustment in these couples."

The National Science Foundation awarded a one-year grant of $70,000 to associate professors of sociology Michelle Budig and Joya Misra, for their study "Estimating the Cross-National Effects of Family Policies on the Wage Penalty for Motherhood Using Multilevel Models."

The NSF also awarded assistant professor of sociology Jennifer Hickes Lundquist a two-year grant of $170,000 for her study "Do Race Disparities in Infant Health Persist in a setting of Reduced Racial Inequality? Infant Outcomes in the Military."

Finally, former faculty member of the Nursing Department Jennifer Loster, now at Emory University, received an $8,000 grant from the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development for her project "Community Based Participatory Research with Community Workers and Health Providers in the Dominican Republic Investigating Maternal-Newborn Delays in Care."

All six award receivers are associated with Center for Research on Families at UMass and are part of the Family Research Scholars Program, which supports the researchers' efforts at acquiring major grants to study family research. In the past five years, 26 faculty members have participated in the program and as a result, have received 21 research awards with a combined total of over $4 million.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com

Senior first baseman Andy Tuetken and the Minutemen face Boston College in the Beanpot Championship today at Fenway Park. UMass defeated Harvard last week to advance to the final. The Minutemen will play the Eagles again tomorrow in Chestnut Hill in non-conference play before hosting Charlotte this weekend.

Minutemen face BC at Fenway Park

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the majority of the Northeast thinks of the Beanpot, they think of Boston College and Boston University facing off on the ice for the coveted championship.

However, there's also a lesser known Beanpot in baseball, and UMass will be in the championship game for the first time since 2001.

The championship game is annually held at Fenway Park in Boston and will begin at 4 p.m this afternoon.

The Minutemen's opponent is BC; the Eagles (18-17, 5-13 Atlantic Coast Conference) are is appearing in their seventh Beanpot final in the last eight years, having won four in the past seven years.

Last year, the Eagles were shut out by Northeastern, 2-0, in the championship game.

If the Minutemen (10-14, 4-8 Atlantic 10) defeat the Eagles and take home the championship, it will be the first time they hoist the trophy since 2000.

Mike Dicato will take the mound for the Minutemen. The junior also pitched the first round of the Beanpot, throwing 6 2/3 shutout innings in the 3-0 victory over the Crimson.

"If [Dicato] pitches as well as he did last week against Harvard we're going to be in great shape – just give us quality innings," UMass coach Mike Stone said.

See BASEBALL on page 6

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
issue 121
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Szajgin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphrey
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Stys-czak
Assistant Advertising Marisa Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts collegiate semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegiate Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the The Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Amber Villancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

UM students protest in NYC

By Rachel Morandi
Collegian Correspondent

Students from the University of Massachusetts made the pilgrimage Friday to New York City for an annual human rights event called "Get On The Bus" (GOTB) to protest human rights issues.

Sarah Hossein, a freshman biology major at UMass and media coordinator for the campus' Amnesty International group, discussed the importance of students becoming involved in issues affecting the world beyond Amherst.

"It's important to show everyone that students care, too," she said. "So many people have preconceived notions of students being young and ignorant, and this gave us the opportunity to show that we care about pressing issues such as human rights."

The event consisted of speakers in several different areas of the city, beginning at St. Bartholomew's Church. Protestors listened to multiple activists discuss human rights abuses taking place in locations such as Myanmar, Darfur, India, Sri Lanka and Libya.

The protest – in its 13th year – was created to bring together human rights activists and educate others on many international issues. Activists gathered with posters in hand to protest through the streets of New York, hoping to gain media coverage and be recognized.

"We ran into the streets. Police had to barricade the streets off in order for us to protest and rally," she said.

GOTB is the largest volunteer-organized Amnesty International event in the country. The UMass chapter is just one of 1,500 Amnesty International groups in the country.

This event brings together students from all over to not only speak but be educated by people who have been impacted firsthand.

Hossein acknowledged the importance for the current generation to get involved with these issues.

"This generation can show by protests and events like these that we're not only into our computers and televisions. We actually do care," she said.

Rachel Morandi can be reached at rmorandi@student.umass.edu.

UMass offers free tax help to residents

VITA from page 1

The ability to receive a free tax preparation service can make a tangible financial difference in the lives of many of VITA's clients.

"I think it's a great program since many people can't afford to have their taxes done [professionally]," VITA client and Amherst resident Debbie McCluster said. "I don't think they would be doing it every year if they didn't know what they were doing."

"Most people are very grateful since they tend to be overwhelmed by the tax process," Smith added. "Most people are very understanding of the fact that we are not tax professionals."

Professor West stressed the program's low error rate and she acknowledged that the IRS assumes all of the liability associated with preparing the returns.

Even though Smith evidently enjoyed her VITA experience, she couldn't cite any remarkable stories or memorable clients off the top of her head.

"After all, it's still doing taxes – so it's not that interesting," she quipped.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Pan Am celebration

Fraternity hosts forum with Latin American community

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

Kicking off the Pan American week, Phi Iota Alpha hosted a forum Thursday focusing on the history and development of the Pan American ideal amongst Hispanics.

The event was co-sponsored by Boricuas Unidos and the Latin American Cultural Center.

Peter Rojas, senior and a member of the Phi Iota Alpha chapter at UMass, began the night with the question, "Does anyone know the definition of what Pan Americanism is?" eliciting the emphatic response of "no" from a student sitting near the front.

Raul Gonzales, a sophomore member of Phi Iota Alpha, bridged the gap in knowledge by giving students a definition of Pan Americanism and some historical context of the movement.

"Pan Americanism is the idea of unifying all Latin American countries as one," Gonzales said. "For example Simón Bolívar, liberator of South America, brought it to some existence with Gran Colombia, which is present-day Ecuador, Colombia, Venezuela, Panamá; that only existed for a short time."

Jeff Munoz asked the students to weigh in the pros and cons of unifying Latin America.

"It will be easier for Latinos in general to gain benefits if we are united as one power. Than we are all together asking for something," said sophomore Jasmin Torrejon Quiles.

Sophomore Derik Oslan connected the United States with Pan Americanism in ways in which the governance should be improved.

"More solid government – because it seems like every time government is established it is overthrown by someone else who has more power. I guess having a model like the U.S. but not exactly, because as Latin Americans we need to find our path," said Oslan.

Similarities such a union would have with the European Union were also discussed. The Latin American countries would share a common currency, a common constitution and open international borders.

Concerns were raised about how the distinct cultures would be jeopardized if Latin American unified. Freshman Amanda Coats explained how different cultures do exist within a single nation.

"You don't have to lose your identity if everyone comes together in the sense like the United States, the South has a different culture than the Northeast, but we are all one united government," she said.

The three focus points said to be most important in unifying Latin America – political cooperation, solidarity, and economic and social development – were highlighted.

"As far as social development, the telecommunications could get better. In terms of economics, you have monetary unions of single currency. In terms of political coorporation, if you have freedom of movement, goods, services. You could implement a common passport and central legislative," Gonzales said.

T-shirts displaying a picture of a united Latin America were handed out to attendees. Organizers advised students to wear them to commemorate the start of Pan American week.

"The reason we had this discussion is because Phiota's philanthropy is Pan Americanism, our idea is to try to bring Latino community together. We got to start small as far as UMass to come together to try to build this idea of Pan Americanism," Rojas said.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

Gisel Saillant/Collegian

Members of Phi Iota Alpha hosted a forum last week about the development of the Pan American image among Hispanic peoples. The fraternity distributed T-shirts displaying a united Latin America to attendees.

Classes offered for community members of the classes will be offered online. All 10 classes offered are in the anthropology, art, education, English and journalism departments.

COMMUNITY from page 1

"The department chairs did, of course, give their blessings, and like me, they seemed really excited at the prospect of having community members in their classes," Matthew said.

While there are similar programs offered through other colleges and universities, the Community Seats program is in its testing stages and no long-term commitment has been made.

"We plan on evaluating the success of the program after summer session is over and then will decide whether or not to continue it next summer as well as in other semesters," said Matthew. "Community member feedback will be key to this decision."

Registration for the Community Seats program has just begun. All classes are available on a first come, first serve basis. According to Matthew, no registrations have taken place as of yet. However, there have been several inquiries.

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at kmsilva@student.umass.edu.

• FED UP WITH THE RISING COST TO ATTEND UMASS?!
• WANT BETTER NEED-BASED FINANCIAL AID?
• WANT BETTER CLASSROOMS AND LABORATORIES FOR UMASS?

FREE BUSES! FREE FOOD!

Join students, faculty and staff from around the state this Wednesday, April 16th at the Massachusetts State House in Boston to rally and demand more for public higher education!

TOMORROW-- GET ON THE BUS! LET'S TAKE IT TO THE STATE HOUSE!

Buses will leave 9:15AM from the Haigis Mall and return at 5:30.
To reserve your seat, email massphenom@gmail.com
Check out www.phenomonline.org for more information.

JOBS TO WIN BACK THE WHITE HOUSE!

Grassroots Campaigns is hiring graduating seniors for salaried leadership positions to run a state-of-the-art grassroots voter mobilization effort to put a Democrat in the White House and expand our majorities in congress. Current clients include ACLU, MoveOn.org Political Action, and the National Democratic Party.

For more information attend the info session on 4/15 @ 5:00pm in Campus Center Room 905, call (617) 423-0407 and ask for Andrew, or visit www.grassrootscampaigns.com

Grassroots Campaigns
★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

What: Business Manager
Where: The Daily Collegian
When: Next Year

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Editorial Opinion
Tuesday, April 15, 2008
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." – Sir Salman Rushdie
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Student Bridges to nowhere

Derek Khanna

Having been a commuter senator in the Student Government Association (SGA) for two years now, I believe that my fellow constituents should have an idea of why their fees are going up every year, and decide for themselves if the allocated programs are worth their fees.

First of all, I would like to point out that diversity is an important issue on this campus, but questioning the efficacy of a diversity program is not questioning the non-disputable importance of diversity.

I question Student Bridges not because it is a diversity program, but because it is not doing its job. Last year, Student Bridges was the second highest line item in the budget, receiving $122,096 when the average student organization in the budget receives between $2,000 and $15,000. Next year the original proposal, approved by Ways and Means, is for $218, 000 – nearly a 75 percent increase in a single year.

I believe that such a decision deserves close scrutiny.

Most people on this campus have little idea of what Student Bridges does. In a quick summary, the goals of Student Bridges are to bring more diversity to this campus by having more students from Springfield, Holyoke and other disadvantaged areas be tutored by UMass students with the end goal of them enrolling at college. One can debate if our student money, nearly 10 percent of our fees, should be used to tutor kids in poor neighborhoods (when I would argue that student fees should be kept for activities on campus), but the goal of these students enrolling at any college seems more disconcerting.

I personally do not believe taking some kid from Springfield to a party or giving him a T-shirt will make him enroll at UMass.

Many of these students are more likely to enroll at Holyoke Community College. Should student fees be used to get Holyoke kids to enroll in Holyoke Community College?

If the end goal of this group is to get more minorities to enroll at UMass, why does the group not work with admissions to advertise towards those groups? Furthermore, there are simply no provable statistics to show that since Student Bridges was implemented more minority students have enrolled at UMass – there are no statistics to show that Student Bridges has worked, period. I believe that the success of a program should be derived from statistics on the subject, not how much money you throw at it.

This program is expensive for many reasons. Besides providing interns with laptops, highly overpaying certain employees and lacking a faculty director to make sure they are wisely using their money – when they spend the money legitimately, if they do, it is usually a waste.

Much of the Student Bridges money goes towards T-shirts and paying cover at parties. I personally do not believe taking some kid from Springfield to a party or giving him a T-shirt will make him enroll at UMass, and I do not approve of subsidizing such activity.

Perhaps the UMass student body has no problem with an increasing proportion of their student fees, currently nearly 10 percent, going towards this purpose. I believe that minority outreach and minority programs are absolutely necessary.

However, I believe that this program is not working, and I believe there is a reason why it is referred to as the slush fund of the student budget (for the past two years Student Bridges has refused all attempts to open their budget to members outside of the ALANA Caucus).

In the next month, the SGA will be approving the budget. I strongly urge each and every one of you to speak to your senator, president, or trustee and voice your own opinion.

Derek Khanna is a UMass student and SGA commuter senator

Campus activism lacking

America's activist groups have been hurting lately. Between the rise of the conservative movement in the latter-half of the century, the newfound political apathy of the public and the hard-and-fast philosophy of judicial restraint in the court system, the results have shown a long series of barriers and problems for activist organizations.

A few days ago I attended a lecture presented by the National Asian Pacific Women's Forum, "My Body, Our Rights: How the Personal Got Political for a Young Reproductive Health Advocate." The lecture was presented by the group's programs director, Priscilla Huang. The high point of the lecture presented itself with Huang's abbreviated account of her decision to have an abortion when she became pregnant in her early 20s.

The problem with her lecture dawned on me a few minutes after I departed. Huang took a very personal subject and turned it into a watered-down, fact-by-fact account of events that made me indifferent about what could have been an incredibly interesting subject. This is not to say that her group does not work on issues that are important – stopping human trafficking and domestic violence are good examples of their goals. Once I left the room, I found myself forgetting most of the lecture. The sales pitch just wasn't there.

This lack of passion and excitement demonstrated a mistake that activist groups repeatedly make. Activist groups take on issues and instead of bringing a sense of urgency to their cause, they leave a possible sympathizer indifferent to their goals.

As much as activists may hate to hear it, they need to take a page out of the Republican playbook.

The Republicans, whether or not they are right or wrong, bring emotion and a strong marketing strategy to their stance. The Terry Schiavo case that plagued the 24-hour news networks a few years back with non-stop coverage exciting the conservative movement made the entire country feel their presence. Whether or not people agree with the Republican cause, they at least could see that they were playing all of their cards, using their base and bringing passion to their side of the debate.

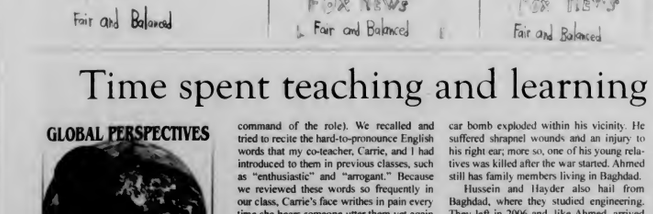
I wondered why Huang did not do this. She did not make the abortion issue as personal and as compelling as it could have been but instead told her story in what could almost be described as a long list of mundane facts.

Huang provided some details to her story, such as her partner actually placing the idea that she could be pregnant in her head, but more engaging details such as why she decided to abort were largely left out. The element of interest in her story that could have engaged her audience was absent. Huang had a chance to show a group of college students the pains of an American culture that often frowns on the decision to have an abortion, but instead the decision was made to make the lecture feel more like another class and less like a call to action.

Activist organizations have the cards stacked against them, and they need to evoke the emotion that worked to their advantage in the 1960s and '70s.

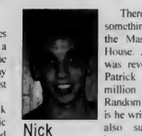
I left shaking my head in disappointment.

Activist organizations have the cards stacked against them, and they need to evoke the emotion that worked to their advantage in the 1960s and '70s. That era did not simply contain a number of half-hearted anti-war protests, but instead students got angry, filling the streets and not taking no for an answer. The media actively took up their responsibilities and provided realistic news from Vietnam and people forced change.



Those times are now gone; people have become fed up with today's system of policies that they feel do not apply to them. There is a disconnect continuing to develop between the ruling-class of the privileged and the everyday American. This year's presidential elections just might bring an end to the country's apathy.

If nothing else can be said for Barack Obama's candidacy, at the very least the public must be impressed by the anticipation and interest that has surrounded this election. This election is the first glimmer of urgency and passion that I have seen from activists that have been truly effective in a number of years. The anti-war movement has not yet worked; the moral issues the democrats have fought either for or against have largely been lost; but if the interest heightens and Obama becomes the next president, maybe there will be the return of the kind of political involvement the country saw during the Civil Rights and Vietnam era.



Whether or not Obama may hold your ideas or policies, the energy that his candidacy has brought to the American political landscape is undeniable. Maybe, at least in the next couple of years and after the faults from the last administration can be somewhat forgotten the public may begin informing themselves again. Mass involvement of the regular American is that all-important first step to real improvement.

I find it difficult to believe in politicians, as their goals and promises often become disappointments. Maybe, with enough Americans believing in Obama's candidacy and his role as the orator of a movement, the simple change of an involved electorate just might by itself create the necessary step toward passionate debate that has been absent for far too long in this country.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist He can be reached at mphillis@student.umass.edu.

A soon-to-be absentee

Nick Milano

There has got to be something in the water at the Massachusetts State House. Just last week it was revealed that Deval Patrick inked a $1.35 million book deal with Random House. Not only is he writing a book while also supposedly serving as chief executive of Massachusetts, but also plans "a nationwide book-signing tour and multiple speaking engagements" in 2010 that will surely draw his attention to affairs not pertinent to his leading Massachusetts.

This is the latest sign that Patrick is not cut out for the governor's chair, has little interest in his job or merely views it as a stepping stone to something bigger and better.

He is obviously not the first governor of Massachusetts to view his job as a pass-time more than a duty. Since Michael Dukakis ran for president as the Democratic nominee in 1998, no single governor has spent a full term solely serving their role in the State House. While Dukakis did complete his term, he had spent a large portion of it campaigning for the Democratic nomination and then for the White House. William Weld ran for senator against John Kerry in 1996 and then resigned when nominated to serve as ambassador to Mexico.

The questions Patrick should be concerning himself with have gone unanswered.

Paul Celluci then ascended to the job, but quit after two years to serve as ambassador to Canada. His successor, Jane Swift, was hugely unpopular and did not last more than two years.

Mitt Romney returned to his part-time home of Massachusetts from saving the 2002 Winter Olympics. His term as governor for all intents and purposes came to an end before his third year was even up. He spent an inordinate amount of time visiting other states and his run for the Republican presidential nomination was filled with ridicules of the bluest of the blue states: Massachusetts.

Now we arrive to Deval Patrick, who is a common appearance in my weekly tirades. My attacks are not personal, but his shortcomings and failures are so upsetting because of his inspirational campaign rhetoric of hope and togetherness.

He is a man with a great personal story, who went from very little to working in former president Bill Clinton's administration to climbing the corporate ladder and accumulating great personal wealth. His grassroots gubernatorial campaign enabled him to defeat political insiders like Tom O'Reilly in the Democratic primary and then helped him steamroll over Kerry Healey.

Since then, Patrick has struggled to find political gold. While he succeeded in preserving same-sex marriage rights, he also managed to hand deep-pocketed Hollywood producers millions in tax credits to film in Massachusetts. But that is about it. His major proposals and campaign promises are unlikely to come to fruition. With the economy slowing down, the state is in the hole monetarily. There will be no new spending, only new cuts. In his inaugural address, he railed against quick fixes, but tried to convince the House and the people of Massachusetts that the licensing of three resort casinos would provide a long-term economic boon.

The legislature refused to buy it, and Patrick failed to stand up and take the defeat; instead, he secretly traveled to New York City to secure $1.35 million for his personal bank account. He abandoned his allies in the House to further his own personal cause. At the beginning of his term, Patrick ran into trouble because he had expensive inaugural balls. He wanted a fancy Cadillac as his official vehicle. He wanted new drapes in the State House. One might have thought that he learned from his previous mistakes.

But Governor Slots skipped town when defeat was imminent. His book proposal details a heavy marketing campaign in 2010, which is coincidentally the same year he should be focusing on reelection. Does he plan to retire from public life? Does he plan on joining Barack Obama's staff or cabinet if Obama wins the presidential election?

These are now the questions dominating public discussion. But they should not be. Because of his missteps and his fascination with what he wants to do after being our governor, the questions Patrick should be concerning himself with have gone unanswered: How can I best serve the 1.28 million people who voted for me, the 6.44 million people whose state I run, the 600,000+ plus Massachusetts residents who live every day in poverty or the nearly 900,000 children under 18 whose educational systems are struggling to pass the test?

Then again, maybe the question that we should all be answering is why we are even surprised. Politicians excel in putting personal interest above their constituents. There can no longer be any doubt that Patrick is just another egomaniacal member of the political community.

The recent governors of Massachusetts have left their jobs with work undone, plans never executed and dreams unfulfilled. Deval Patrick is about to join them. Good riddance. If the next three years are going to be anything like the first three, let him be somebody else's letdown.

The sooner, the better.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Time spent teaching and learning from refugees abroad

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

To experience directly the effects of the realities of war and peace will shape one's mind more deeply than reading any intellectual's account of military conflict.

Last Thursday evening I had dinner with three Iraqi refugees named Hussein and Hayder, both brothers, and Ahmed, all of whom I teach English to every Sunday. On Oct. 6, eight American University in Cairo friends and I met up with them at an Iraqi restaurant in Giza, a city lying between Cairo.

The entire night was filled with laughter and joviality. We recounted stories from our English class, such as Hayder's memorable role-playing of an English woman named Bev in our workbooks (I gave him a single blue flower at the time as a reward for his command of the role). We recalled and tried to recite the hard-to-pronounce English words that my co-teacher, Carrie, and I had introduced to them in previous classes, such as "enthusiastic" and "arrogant." Because we reviewed these words so frequently in our class, Carrie's face writhes in pain every time she hears someone utter them yet again (I am the biggest culprit of these exhausted attempts).

During our dinner Ahmed, Hussein and Hayder showed us the American music they have compiled in their cell phones, including Celine Dion, Shakira and the song "Barbie Girl." In addition, they taught us Arabic phrases unique to their spoken Iraqi dialect.

Yet the most illuminating aspect of the night was hearing about their personal backgrounds, a topic they did not hesitate to share when it was clear we were interested in learning about refugees' lives. Ahmed left Baghdad in 2006, where he had studied geology and obtained a master's degree. He first arrived in Amman, Jordan, and then traveled to Egypt, where he lives.

In Iraq, Ahmed almost got killed after a car bomb exploded within his vicinity. He suffered shrapnel wounds and an injury to his right ear; more so, one of his young relatives was killed after the war started. Ahmed still has family members living in Baghdad.

Hussein and Hayder also hail from Baghdad, where they studied engineering. They left in 2006 and, like Ahmed, arrived in Egypt as refugees. The transition has not been entirely smooth, because unfortunately, Iraqis face discrimination here in a systematic fashion. For instance, Hussein has tried previously to get a job at Radio Shack, but was denied after an Egyptian was given preferential treatment for the position.

Even though these people have been victims of tragic global events, they continue to hold an optimistic view on life.

Regardless of the hardships they had experienced, never once would I have guessed the first time I met them that they, as well as my other students, were war-torn individuals. Throughout our first three-hour class, they were smiling and laughing the entire time. What was even more satisfying from an English teacher's point of view, as Carrie and I quickly discovered, was that virtually all of our refugees are deeply committed to improving their English skills, and are very quick to absorb grammatical and vocabulary concepts. They complete their homework more thoroughly than most American students (although at dinner we ragged on Hayder for not doing his homework for last class).

The school we teach in has an aesthetic appearance which, from an American's perspective, would resemble a poverty-stricken ghetto. We do not even teach in a classroom; rather, there is a main room at a local run-down recreation hall which is divided up by barriers into makeshift classrooms. The only materials we were given for teaching were a whiteboard and student booklets, whose British-driven cultural content is regularly inapplicable to our lesson plans.

Regardless, we have made tremendous progress since the beginning of the course. Our students have learned the past simple, past continuous, past perfect, future simple and conditional statements within the past couple of months (mind you, we meet just once a week, unfortunately).

Despite inadequate classroom supplies and the surrounding dilapidated environment, I have learned that students are quite capable of learning material efficiently if both students and teachers are unequivocally devoted to improving their education.

In general, the image of the war-torn, emaciated refugee hinging on subsistence level food to survive belies the reality of the status of refugees I have met here. Whether they are Iraqi, Somali or Sudanese men or women, everyone is educated, smart and quite capable of enduring and overcoming the difficulties of being a refugee during geopolitical tumult.

Even though these people have been victims of tragic global events, they continue to hold an optimistic view on life. I have never once heard them make an excuse for the situation they are in.

There are few more noble endeavors than maintaining this positive outlook while refusing to complain about the desolate socioeconomic circumstances and uncertain futures you face.

Most important, even though we will eventually have to part ways, the deep bonds forged through experiences like our dinner last Thursday will remain eternal.

Greg Collins writes on Tuesdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

More than petty teen dramas

Graduate student looks beyond clichés at social issues

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Analyzing a teen dramedy is not exactly your run-of-the-mill candidate for a master's thesis.

Beyond the surface of cliché teenage angst and self-absorbedness, how much deeper can one delve into the lives of TV teenyboppers?

Through the eyes of University of Massachusetts doctoral student Lori Bindig, the miscellaneous rendezvous of the cast of "Dawson's Creek" could not have been a more perfect fit.

While going for her masters in communication at the University of Hartford, Bindig was struggling to come up with an idea for her master's thesis. She approached Jack Banks, assistant professor of communication at the University of Hartford, for a helping hand.

"I was always interested in femininity," said Bindig. She was debating between basing her thesis on either eating disorders or fashion model Twiggy.

Professor Banks scoffed at the notion of Bindig mounting her thesis on the '60s mod icon. Despite being shot down, Bindig welcomed Banks' forthcoming proposal with open arms.

Banks was well aware of Bindig's love for "Dawson's Creek" and suggested it become her master's thesis. Needless to say, Bindig was beyond thrilled.

"It was kind of surreal," she said, her piercing blue eyes lighting up with excitement. "A lot of people thought I was crazy. Like, is she really going to school for this? They thought I looked more like a character than a researcher."

It doesn't really come as a surprise. With her wholesome charm, straight dirty blonde hair and bubbly personality, Bindig herself could come straight out of an episode.

For her second analytical work, Bindig will focus on the themes that drove the popular dramedy "The O.C."

The stereotypes only gave her more incentive to slam her cheeky disparagers.

"People said to me, 'Who cares?' but I think the issues that go on within the show are deeply important and I really wanted to convey that," she said.

So, Bindig set to work, putting in endless hours of episode-watching and note-taking, filling up a respectable six notebooks for each of the seasons.

Her note-taking led to a master's thesis centered around four primary themes: gender, race, sex and consumerism.

Gender representation is clearly Bindig's preferred topic and, as she pointed out, is likewise distorted throughout the show.

"The title of the show leads viewers to believe the show is about the journey of a boy named Dawson Leery, when in fact the only character in every episode is [Dawson's best friend/off-and-on love interest], Joey Potter," she said.

The series shines the spotlight on Joey's path of finding true love, be it with Dawson, the boy across the creek, or Pacey, the alluringly witty troublemaker from the wrong side of the tracks.

Why, then, is the show entitled "Dawson's Creek?"

Bindig's take on it relates back to a common stereotype of women – the inability to function without their fair share of testosterone.

"Joey is a tomboy, and the tomboy is not supposed to be recognizable," she said. "Once Dawson saw her in makeup at a beauty pageant, he knew he loved her."

What worried Bindig was how Dawson realized he loved Joey. It took makeup and a fancy dress to wake him up from his oblivion – not brains and beauty.

Bindig believed this stereotype acted in accordance with Joey's academic stature. She was portrayed as an exceeding intelligent young woman yet was so dependent on Dawson. She relied on him for college tuition and, when offered the opportunity to go to Paris, declined because Dawson asked her not to go.

The racier topic of sex plays a vital role in gender throughout the show. The women were put under severe constraints while the men basically had the liberty to be concubines without repercussions.

"The first homosexual kiss on primetime television took place on Dawson's Creek, involving the openly gay character Jack McPhee," said Bindig.

"The boys in the show had sex without consequences," she said. "The girls suffered more. Jen [Lindley] was labeled as a slut. In the end, they kill her off. It shows that the pure good girl [Joey] gets the man but still has to follow certain rules to get there."

Now, the question on everybody's mind – how on earth did this culminate in a book?

"I was talking to a friend about my master's thesis and they said, 'Hey that's a great book idea,'" she said. "At that point, it became one of my goals."

While at a conference in May 2005, Bindig used an example from her "Dawson's Creek" thesis. A publisher overheard Bindig's example and was considerably intrigued by the prospect of a teen dramedy serving as the main course for a master's thesis.

Bindig forwarded all 302 pages to her publisher and shortly thereafter received feedback.

"I put it off until I attended another conference," she said. "The same woman I'd met at the last one introduced me to a man who forwarded my thesis to Lexington Books."

On Oct. 28, 2006, Bindig was engaging in a routine e-mail check when she came across one from Lexington Books, offering her a book contract. A year later, her book was published.

"I thought it would never happen," she said. "If someone would have come up to me and told me I was going to publish a book on 'Dawson's Creek,' I would have called them crazy."

Despite being on cloud nine, Bindig knows that not everyone will be wild about her work.

Surf the Web via Amazon.com and scroll through the comments on Bindig's book, "Dawson's Creek: A Critical Understanding."

One boldly reads, "I do not recommend reading this book unless you are a hard core feminist and not a fan of Dawson's Creek."

This came as a blow to Bindig, being the devout fan she is.

"I am a huge fan – I love the show," she said. "I still, in my heart, want Dawson and Joey to be together. I have the promo poster of season five hanging on my wall. Reading the review upset me. I wasn't being mean to the show. Just because you love something doesn't mean you can't critique it and look at it closely.

"What upset me the most is that person said I messed up my research, which is crazy because I saw all of the episodes a million times plus two," she said.

So, what is next on this vivacious grad student's agenda?

Rumor has it there is another critical novel in the works – this time focusing on the recently deceased teen phenomenon "The O.C."

This time around, she has a partner in crime – friend and grad student Andrea Bergstrom.

"It will be the same sort of analysis, only adding an audience component," she said. "When 'The O.C.' took off, the Internet and fan sites became more established, so I definitely think it's important to add an audience component."

More than anything, Bindig urges people to understand that such "guilty pleasures" as "Dawson's Creek" and "The O.C." are more than culminations of petty relationships and sexual urges.

The only thing such shows are "guilty" of are being landmarks in television history.

Heather Wiceman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

For her graduate thesis, Lori Bindig focused on the underlying themes of "Dawson's Creek" – issues like gender and sex.

UMass Rotary club hosts poetry reading

BY SOPHIA PASTORE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Last Thursday, Rotary, an emerging club on campus, hosted an undergraduate poetry reading at the Black Sheep in Amherst.

Rotary is an international organization that prides itself on its community service efforts, global awareness, and cultivation of leadership skills. The Amherst chapter of Rotary has been, according to its Web site, "a force in progress in the local areas since its inception" in 1926.

The University of Massachusetts chapter of Rotary is not yet an official RSO, but hopes to gain this status by next semester, at which point the members will begin the planning of larger, more focused events to aid the local and international community.

The event was held to raise awareness of the new club and to give UMass undergraduate poets a chance to read their work in Amherst, a right that is usually reserved for graduate students.

The women who read were revealing in their work, exposing raw emotion to an audience that at one point numbered over 50. The men's clever prose captivated the audience, causing the room to fill with laughter and Black Sheep customers to poke their heads into the crowded side room to catch a glimpse.

One poetess, Amanda Baldi, exposed herself in two of the most courageous ways possible. She rapped a performance that was peppered by giggles and moments of insecurity and self-doubt. Several minutes later, she read a poem so passionately that she was brought to tears by the end.

Gabriel Chicoine amused the crowd with a poem about a dysfunctional God, depressed by the monotony of creation and seeking comfort from a more stable Lucifer, who lives in the suburbs and has a family.

Danny Hough spoke of the challenges of the male stereotype, doubting the size of his penis and then assuring the listeners that he enjoyed manly activities such as, but not limited to, the consumption of strong liquor and the toils of manual labor.

The reading was a small taste of the awareness that Rotary hopes to spread throughout campus. In addition to the poets, Rotary members invited a speaker on fair trade and the coffee industry.

He told of his experience as a traveler in Peru, where he spoke to coffee farmers and became acquainted with their difficulties. These farmers are benefited greatly by fair trade agreements, within which they are assured a certain base price that will never be lowered, only occasionally raised.

The Black Sheep is a guaranteed provider of fair trade coffee due to its participation with a small, local fair trade organization Dean's Beans. Other businesses which provide similar products can be identified by the official fair trade seal.

Melissa Urban, the president of UMass Rotary, says that she is involved in Rotary currently as "a way to give back to an organization that has let me do some amazing things." Urban traveled to Milan, Italy with the group while still in high school.

Her experience is one typical of dedicated Rotary members. The organization has a great reputation for helping its members go abroad and expand their global and service education in this way.

Meetings generally consist of the planning of various events and increasing members' knowledge of current world news. The last meeting began with Secretary Hilary Sullivan presenting a short blurb about protests against the Olympics and the government of China by students on campus last week.

A debate between nearly all members was sparked that represented both sides of the issue and allowed all participants to walk away with a broader understanding of the problem and its implications. More impressively, the members put any disagreements aside for the remainder of the meeting to finalize plans for the next event, a used book drive.

The club is currently seeking to expand its membership and create a strong foundation for further projects in the coming semester.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu.

Preaching plot pales against performance

Guild shows gospel-based Broadway play

BY KAITLIN MORRIS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Seats were packed in the crowded Bowker Auditorium while the University of Massachusetts Theatre Guild performed the retro Broadway hit "Godspell" this past Thursday through Saturday. With a talented cast and well-costumed characters, the auditorium was filled with many fans awaiting this spring musical.

Children, parents and students alike were moving along to the beat of the music that was based on the messages and the story of the New Testament. Some audience members were even clapping and dancing in their seats.

For many people who are not familiar with the story of "Godspell," it is a modern-day musical that retells the parables of the Book of Matthew. To get the message of Jesus Christ across, the play uses song and dance, as well as witty, religious and some semi-sacrilegious banter to keep the audience entertained.

The "Guildbill" gave some extremely important information to the background of the play. It was originally written during the Cold War, when people were constantly being reminded of nuclear attacks. The writing and producing of this play was a backlash to the constant fear of this era. By taking the lessons preached by Christ, the play reminds the characters and the viewers to love everyone, be kind, and to live peacefully.

The UMass Theater Guild set their version of "Godspell" in a New York City Catholic school. The songs and company numbers kept the people entertained.

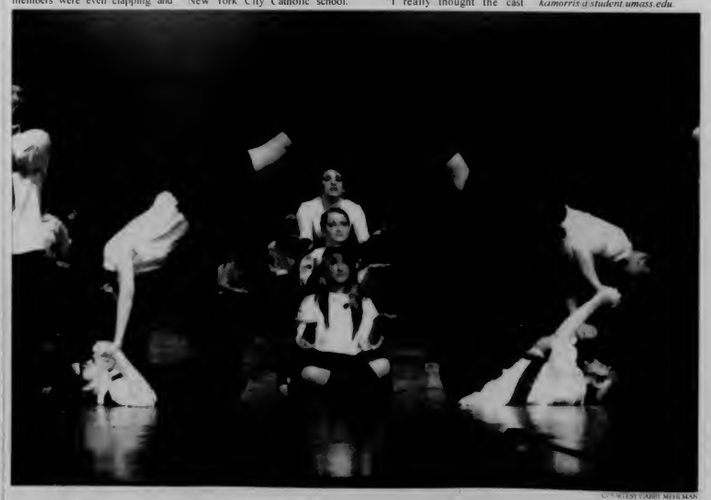
"My favorite part was the tap dance and song with Judas and Jesus," said former UMass student Erica Rivenburgh after Saturday's performance.

Having not understood the premise of the play, some audience members were not as pleased with the end result. Expecting more of a plot and less of a Sunday school lesson, some were disappointed.

"I think that 'Godspell's' simplistic take on Jesus and a few parables from the Bible could not take away from the great performance of the cast overall. The ... Guild proved themselves to be amazing singers, actors and performers I would love to see them in anything but 'Godspell,'" said Rivenburgh.

"I didn't like that they made it as private Catholic school kids. It would have been cooler if they kept it more hippie," she continued.

"I really thought the cast was talented," said senior Sean Grimes. I didn't like the play, it didn't have much of a plot and was a little boring."



In past performances of "Godspell," many Christians felt it to be controversial. With no Resurrection, some Christians believe it to represent the Book of Matthew in a blasphemous way.

"I feel like it does represent the Bible incorrectly – I think it's too simple. The characters spit out the parables almost word for word and just dress them up with a stage and some color," said Rivenburgh.

The confused reactions during intermission also seemed to echo Grimes and Rivenburgh; the cast was talented but the play itself was lacking.

While the musical did preach life lessons such as love thy neighbor, the plot did not compare to the song and dance routines.

Kaitlin Morris can be reached at kamorris@student.umass.edu.

The UMass Theater Guild's presentation of "Godspell" this past weekend showcased the incredible singing, dancing and acting talent of the Guild members. The plot of the hit Broadway musical, based on the New Testament, however, left much to be desired.

Shifting dynamics please Pearl Street

The Weakerthans, who performed on Saturday night at the Pearl Street Night Club, provided their audience with slow melodies to faster jams. The crowd sang and danced along to the diverse blend of old and new songs. AA Bondy, reminiscent of Bob Dylan, opened the show.

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Emerging from behind the shadows of speakers and other sight-obstructing objects, The Weakerthans received a hero's welcome Saturday night from a capacity crowd at the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton. Following an hour-plus set filled with uproars of applause and on-stage theatrics, such a reception proved decidedly warranted.

Building anticipation for the band was opener AA Bondy, a singer-songwriter with a distinctly travel-infused, folk inspired sound. From his half-buttoned collared shirt and tarnished denim to the cigarette suggestively placed behind his ear to his raspy voice and wailing harmonica solos, it was almost impossible not to draw a very obvious (and tiresome) comparison to a young Bob Dylan.

Bondy, however, delivered a fresh approach to a style that often is inundated with imitation rather than innovation, implementing elements of blues throughout his set while using simplistic means such as stomping his foot to accentuate and bring life to his lyrical narratives.

In the wake of Bondy's set came what the singer himself jokingly described as "a Canadian Onslaught." Over 15 minutes of setup and microphone checks teased with the crowd's patience, but when five figures finally emerged into focus from the dimly lit corners of the stage, the crowd uncorked in unison with raucous applause complete with a stray "Yeah Winnipeg" proclamation flying in from the bar. The sporadic side conversations and murmurs that could be heard during Bondy's set all but disappeared, and the crowd hushed in delight for the band's first selection.

The rather mellifluous-sounding "Bigfoot" served as a precursor for an evening in which the band chose to run the spectrum of their catalog. Diversity is not always a recipe for success in a live setting, but their deftly arranged set never allowed for too much of the jovial or upbeat without a necessary counterbalance of the introspective and delicate.

The band transitioned into "Our Retired Explorer" to the delight of the crowd; they clapped along with the breaks and chorus and let out loud chants of approval during vocal breaks throughout the first lively selection of the evening.

Following this, the focus shifted back to more melodic selections from the band's newest release "Reunion Tour." The album's opener, "Civil Twilight" was met with head bobs and gentle swaying and was immediately followed by "Sun in an Empty Room," which turned out to be perhaps the band's weakest offering of the night. Recorded, the layered backing vocals featured in the chorus are a welcomed addition, supplementing vocalist John K. Samson's otherwise dominant presence on the album, but on this night, with the vocal levels being perhaps a bit off, they were flat and unflattering.

Finishing up the portion of their newest material was "Night Windows," another slower-tempo track that was met with more audience participation in the form of unison clapping during the song's conclusion.

After bringing the crowd into somewhat of a stationary lull with some slower material, the band jerked the audience back to life with "The Reason" and "Tournament of Hearts," with the crowd screaming, "I know you might roll your eyes at this, but I'm so glad that you exist" along with the Canadian quintet on the former and moving all around the cramped confines on the latter.

Guitarist Stephen Carroll and bassist Greg Smith proved to be quite the showmen on the tracks, playing up to the crowd with some flamboyant stage movements and guitar caressing that had almost arena rock sensibilities to them.

From this point, the show really hit its stride. Launching into two of their most popular tracks, "Reconstruction Site" and "Aside," the crowd responded positively, becoming as audible as Samson in delivering the words of the respective songs, a quality that would be present for the remainder of the evening.

The first few notes of "Left and Leaving" received one of the loudest ovations of the night. Its subtlety delivered, yet heavily poetic verses were met with an adoring echo of fans, eyes closed, heads swaying, singing in unison. Ultimately this was short lived, as the crowd lost their collective composure for "Plea for a Cat Named Virtue," which saw Carroll leap into the crowd, guitar and all, during the buildup to the song's finale of hectic noise and the band's eventual departure from the stage.

Following a steady minute of building applause, Samson returned to play two songs solo, first "One Great City" followed by "My Favorite Chords" after at least a half dozen requests for it from the crowd. The full band returned for the conclusion of the "My Favorite Chords" and they closed the night with "Virtue The Cat Explains Her Departure" and "(Manifest)," clumsily singing in unison the trumpet notes that herald the song's, and in this case the concert's end.

On more than one occasion following a song's conclusion, The Weakerthans received a call unheard by most concert-goers or bands alike: "Play that one again." While it's often advisable to leave your audience yearning for more, The Weakerthans have managed to transcend that old adage. The applause, the enthusiasm, and the participation they generated from the crowd are proof that not only the desire for more is present, but also that fans are ecstatic with what is delivered.

Brian Wood can be reached at bpwood@student.umass.edu.

Fashion going green, clothes more organic

BY JEAN PATTESON
THE ORLANDO SENTINEL

What shall we wear today? Our seaweed T-shirt and bamboo jeans? Or our organic-cotton skirt, fair-trade silk blouse and sweater of merino wool from free-range sheep raised in the Southern Alps of New Zealand?

For eco-fashionistas, the green choices are becoming more numerous – and stylish – by the week.

"Green" fashion is more than a passing fad. It's a lifestyle choice, says Cynthia Spencer, a trend-spotter from New York.

"Concerns about personal health and a healthy planet have prompted a green revolution. Fashion is a part of that," she says.

Essentially, green clothing and accessories are made from organic raw materials produced without pesticides or from recycled materials, says Spencer. No harmful chemicals and bleaches are used to process or dye the goods. And laborers earn fair wages and enjoy healthy working conditions.

"Eco-fashion doesn't mean a burlap sack anymore," says Aimee Hitchner, co-owner of Ginger, a Winter Park, Fla., boutique that includes such eco-friendly labels as Loomstate Denim, Amy Tangerine and Linda Loudermilk, who has been dubbed the "queen of green."

But eco does not mean inexpensive. Certainly, discount stores offer organic-cotton T-shirts for less than $20. But Loudermilk's bamboo jeans sell for $230, for example, and some of her organic silk blouses cost more than $500.

Eco-fashion is big in the clothing market, says Paige Blackwelder, co-owner of Tuni in Winter Park, Fla.

Increasingly, designers are offering clothing made from organic cotton or sustainable materials such as bamboo, soy and hemp, she says. "And some of the fabrics are just beautiful. You'd never guess they were made from bamboo or whatever."

Although customers are not "clamoring" for eco-fashions, they are intrigued by green products and are willing to try them, says Blackwelder.

The boutique's offering of bamboo knits by Autumn Cashmere is selling well, she says. In the fall, she plans to introduce a line of Matt & Nat handbags made from Japanese paper and recycled water bottles.

Underwear is also becoming eco-friendly. Figleaves.com, the online intimates retailer, has launched Greenleaves, a department dedicated to green underwear, sleepwear and loungewear. And footwear makers are jumping on the green bandwagon, making shoes with bamboo heels, organic-linen uppers and recycled-rubber soles.

Cosmetics products have been touting organic ingredients for several years. Now there's a new wrinkle. Increasingly, the products are being packaged in biodegradable containers.

The new Organic Wear line from Physicians Formula, for example, has compacts made from recycled paper. All packaging in the Green Room collection from Smashbox is recyclable or biodegradable. And Plantlove lipsticks from Cargo now come in biodegradable tubes made from a polymer derived from corn, which is a renewable, compostable resource.

And the lipstick's recycled-paper packaging is embedded with seeds. Plant it, and wildflowers grow.

Now that's really green

DO YOURSELF A FAVOR!
GO TO
www.dailycollegian.com
A.S.A.P.

CALL NOW TO SECURE YOUR POSITION (888) 277-9787
www.collegepro.com

PAINTING SUMMER MONEY FUN

ATTENTION STUDENTS: It's not too late to score a great summer job! We are College Pro Painters and we are currently hiring for the summer.

You could earn $3000 to $7000 Plus!
NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

- We are currently hiring for Painter and Job Site Manager positions. Many positions are available throughout your state.
- We offer an awesome bonus structure for those who want to earn even more money.
- You can work outside with other students and make new friends.
- You can learn useful skills such as planning, organization, and customer relations.

NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich/daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Welcome
Chef Martin Breslin
Director of Culinary Operations · Harvard University

CRIMSON FAVORITES:
- Cockle & Mussel Soup
- Beet, Walnut & Stilton Salad
- Irish Scallop Pie
- Roast Leg of Lamb
- Red Spiced Chicken
- Fuscilli with Peas & Mushrooms
- Colcannon
- Roasted Carrots & Parsnips
- Irish Brown Bread
- Bailey's & Cranberry Bread Pudding

Wednesday, April 16, 2008
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm

2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Eagle goaltender John Muse stopped 20 of 21 Notre Dame shots en route to BC's 4-1 victory in the championship game.

BC takes home Frozen Four

Gerbe records two goals and assists in championship game

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Cinderella run for Boston College's freshman net minder, John Muse, is complete, and it couldn't have ended any better.

Muse, who played in every minute of every game in net for the Eagles (only goaltender in the country to play every game), only made one mistake in Saturday's Frozen Four Championship game against Notre Dame, in which his team came out on top 4-1.

Twenty-four hours before Saturday's game, BC winger Nathan Gerbe missed out on the hockey equivalent of the Heisman Trophy, the Hobey Baker award, to Michigan superstar Kevin Porter, but he didn't let it get to him. Gerbe scored twice and tallied two assists in his third NCAA Championship game. In the previous two years, BC reached the title game only to be ousted by Wisconsin and Michigan State.

Hockey East

The Fighting Irish had never reached the championship game before Saturday.

It was BC's first win against the Irish in five tries since 2001. Three of those times the Eagles were ranked No. 1.

Unfortunately for the Irish, the Eagles had too much experience and too much Gerbe and Muse, which prevented them from pulling off the upset.

About five minutes into the final period, ND thought it had pulled within one at 3-2, but the goal was erased. The officials saw Kyle Lawson move his skates to form a "V," where the puck bounced off both skates and into the BC goal before he could get a stick on it.

Notre Dame's misfortune was much more costly minutes later when Gerbe fed a pass to a wide-open Ben Smith, who beat ND goaltender Jordan Pearce to make it 4-1.

BC won easily despite committing eight penalties and losing defenseman Carl Sneep to an injury in the first period.

Gerbe was named the Most Outstanding Player of the Frozen Four. He tallied five goals and three assists. He led the nation in points with 68, 35 of which came on goals. Gerbe was also the first player since Dave Silk of Boston University in 1977 to score five goals in a Frozen Four.

Boston College will be honored tonight at the Boston Bruins Stanley Cup Quarterfinals game. A banner has been lifted in the TD Banknorth Garden to honor the championship team.

The Eagles have won championships in 2001 and 1949.

ALL-AMERICAN TEAMS

On Friday night the Hockey East Association elected eight student-athletes to the 2008 Reebok All-American First Team and Second Teams.

New Hampshire's Kevin Regan, who recently signed an amateur tryout contract with the Providence Bruins, was named to the first team and posted a 2.21 goals-against average and a .930 save percentage. Regan, a Hobey Baker finalist, was awarded the Walter Brown award, which is given to the top American-born hockey player in New England.

Matt Gilroy, a junior blueliner from Boston University tallied an impressive plus-17 rating and 21 points (six goals, 15 assists) this season.

Gerbe's 68 points and performance in the Frozen Four also earned him the first-team honor.

Another UNH Wildcat, Mike Rajda, was a New England All-Star and led his team with 19 goals, which included six game-winning goals.

Bryan Ewing, Brad Flaishans, Matt Fornataro and Pete MacArthur were named to the Second All-American team.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Dicato to take mound

BASEBALL from page 1

Dicato has enjoyed success so far this season. After struggling last season with an 0-7 record and a 6.17 earned run average, he's rebounded this season with a 2.84 ERA in five appearances, including two starts.

Despite struggling in the ACC this season, the Eagles hold a winning record and possess multiple dangerous hitters that Dicato will face.

Tony Sanchez leads the team with seven home runs, 10 doubles and 31 RBIs. His .561 slugging percentage also leads the team (minimum 50 at-bats), but he isn't the only hitter with power numbers.

The senior has three other hitters with at least 20 RBIs and all but one of them is batting below .300.

The ACC has three teams of the top five teams in the USA Today-ESPN coaches' poll – BC's already dropped three games each to No. 1 and No. 2 Miami and Florida State, respectively, and has three games against No. 4 North Carolina ahead this weekend.

"We saw [BC] you know last week in the game before us play and beat Northeastern pretty good," Stone said.

Stone was referring to the 13-6 Eagle victory over the Huskies. The game was tied at four going into the seventh inning but BC exploded for nine runs in the final three innings to put the game out of reach.

BC's offense does have the ability to explode, as is evidenced by the 5.55 runs they average per game, but their pitching staff has been shaky this season.

Opponents are averaging over six runs per game against the Eagles staff, and Florida State put 17 on the scoreboard in BC's most recent game.

While the Eagles certainly won't be facing the same quality of opponent as FSU, the UMass offense has shown an ability to put runs on the scoreboard this season.

Though inconsistent, the offense put up 15 runs against Sacred Heart and 16 against Holy Cross.

Brian Baudinet and Adam Tempesta share the team lead with 19 RBIs, while the former leads the team with a .393 average and a .495 on-base percentage.

GAME NOTES

UMass holds a 30-20 advantage in the all-time series against BC. ... The Minutemen defeated the Eagles for the first time since 2000 last season, 9-4. ... The teams will also play tomorrow at 3 p.m. in Chestnut Hill.

Mike Connors can be reached at mpconnor@student.umass.edu.

Co-captain Adam Tempesta and the Minutemen will try to win their first Beanpot Championship game since 2000 when they play Boston College at Fenway Park this afternoon.

UMass going for 13th straight A-10 win

ROWING from page 8

ing in 7:05.3.

The finals saw improvement in the Minutewomen's time, but not as much improvement as URI. URI raced its best when it mattered, finishing first with a time of 6:51.6. UMass followed in second at 6:56.3.

Another UMass boat that did not make adjustments and improve as much as its competition was the Novice 8 boat. In the semifinals, the Minutewomen's Novice 8 boat had the fastest overall time and followed that performance up with the second fastest time in the semifinals. But on Sunday in the finals, they slid to third place.

The Knecht Cup was UMass's final warm-ups before it tries to win its 13th consecutive A-10 Championship on Saturday. It gave the Minutewomen an opportunity to see how they would stand up against URI, who lost to UMass by one point in last year's A-10 Championship.

UMass's performance this weekend can be seen in two ways. One is that when it mattered most, in the finals, URI outperformed the Minutewomen. In the four events that both schools participated in, URI finished better overall in all four. In three of those four events, UMass had better times then the Rams in the first two rounds but not in the finals.

The other way to look at it is that the Minutewomen are not made for a regatta of this type. Many regattas, including the A-10 Championship, consist of one race for each event instead of a number of rounds such as in the Knecht Cup. The Minutewomen are not used to racing three times in two days and may have not had enough stamina when it came to the finals on Sunday.

The A-10 Championships, which will be raced on the same course as the Knecht Cup, the Cooper River in Camden, N.J., may come down to one of those factors. UMass knows that they still have work to do to prepare for next weekends race if they want to continue their A-10 record for consecutive championships.

"We're still a little perplexed here trying to figure things out for the A-10s," Dietz said.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

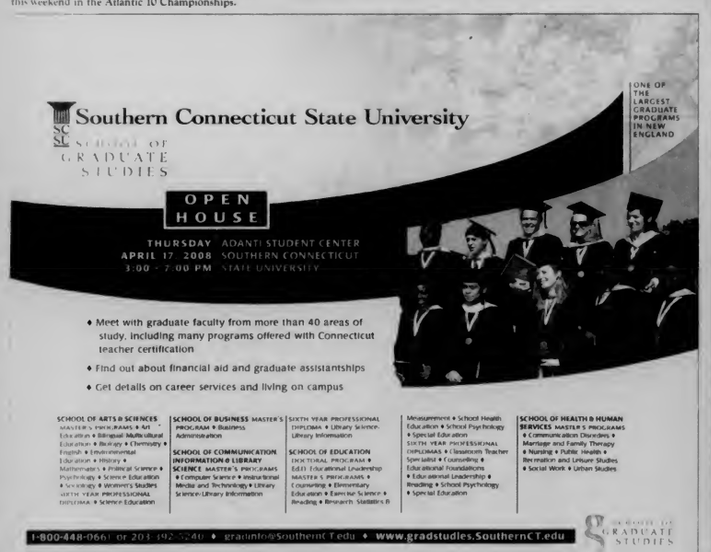
Minutewomen host URI this afternoon

SOFTBALL from page 8

five hits and did not allow a single run while striking out 33. She has been named the A-10 Pitcher of the Week 19 times in her career, including six this season. She improved her record 17-6 on the season and holds a 0.67 ERA.

Mollica went 6-for-13 last week with one home run and nine RBIs. Her best game came against Temple in Game 1 on Sunday. She went 2-for-3 and brought four runs across in a 9-0 victory. She's now batting .314 with three homers and 20 RBIs.

The Minutewomen (25-11, 12-0 A-10) get right back to work today with a doubleheader against Rhode Island (13-25, 3-9 A-10) at the Complex starting at 3 p.m. The Rams are currently in last place in the conference. The Minutewomen lead the all-time series 76-13. The last time the URI defeated UMass was May 10, 2002, a 1-0 loss at home.



Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

UMass struggled to replicate its regular success at the Knecht Cup this weekend in Camden, N.J. The Minutewomen will race on the same river this weekend in the Atlantic 10 Championships.

Bailey Sanders pitched a complete-game shutout in Elaine Sortino's 1,000th victory as UMass coach.

DID HE JUST SAY "FUNKY BUTT LOVING?"
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Funky butt loving!

8				9		5	6
			8				9
	1	2				4
			2	6			4
	8	7				6	2
	5			8	9
		1				3	7
	2				5
	7	8		3				2

ACROSS
1 Concurred
7 Singer Orbison
10 Flaky precipitation
14 Religious leaders
15 Compass dir
16 Heavy volume
17 Strand
18 Located
20 Pencils
21 Naming to a position
23 D.C. bigwig
24 With full force
25 Feel
26 Teapot part
27 Actor Beatty
28 Much inclined
31 Calyx segment
33 6-pointers
36 Something opposite
38 In advance
40 School grp
41 Ledger examination
43 Tiny amounts
44 Allen or Curry
45 Involuntary muscular contraction
47 Desert springs
50 Subdue
51 Aswan, e.g.
54 Fall guys
56 Poet Teasdale
57 Large black-and-tan terrier
58 Football team
60 Jerk or cap precede
61 D.C. wheeler-dealer
62 Scattering seed
63 Grows older
64 Lanka
65 Hot-fudge creation

DOWN
1 Summits
2 Fixed angry stare
3 Aired anew
4 God of love
5 Pride in oneself
6 Energetic one
7 Brief rest
8 Bermuda, e.g.
9 Abominable Snowman
10 Declared specifically
11 Out
12 Prophetic signs
13 Trivial Pursuit acquisition
19 Altruistic
22 Stopped briefly
24 Determined the worth of 26 Get it?
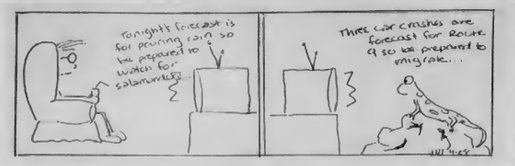
27 Doze
28 Drink in small mouthfuls
29 Explosive letters
30 Actress Le Gallienne
32 Small gasoline engine
33 Small child
34 Geriatric into career
35 Are crossers
37 Totality
39 CD
42 Kibbutz resident
44 Conical homes
46 Impose a fine
47 Japanese port
48 Earning a top grade
49 Hindu garment var.
50 Use crayons
51 Goliath's slayer
52 Action site
53 Canine malady
55 Unfilled spaces
56 Stitched
59 Comic Costello

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Get off your sweet butt and apply to be Comics Editor.

Pick up an application in The Collegian office located in the basement of the Campus Center, or email inquiries to comics@dailycollegian.com



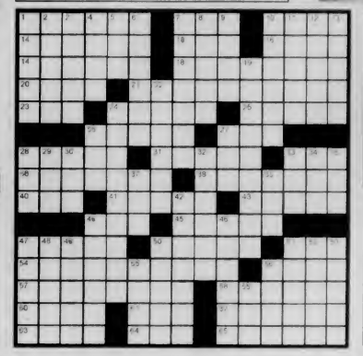
The job is easy, but it's hard to handle all the fame.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I never believed that U2 wanted to save the whales. I don't believe that The Beastie Boys are ready to lay it down for Tibet."

— Iggy Pop

ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL



WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't think that your old friend Mr. Teddy Bear doesn't see you eating Teddy Grahams. He F#@%in' knows what's up.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Only by seeking challenging endeavors will you be like Maverick and soar above the rest.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You are a class act, but it's just that — an act.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Consider the timeless query posed by the dreamy Jim Halpert. What kind of bear is best?

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
No one thinks the pithy comment on your faux vintage t-shirt is witty.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Fun Dip is nothing more than a confectionary manifestation of a very common biological act.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are developing a surprising yet definite crush on Tina Fey. Her glasses...SOOOO SEXY!

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Loiter outside the house where they have Rock of Love and pick up psychotic fans as they are kicked off the show.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Who would have thought that Katie Holmes could actually go downhill after Dawson's Creek?

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Using the metric system is basically like saying "I think I am the bee's knees."

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Cherish the yam and earn your iron

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
True to the etymology of the word Tuesday, this day will be like a war for you.

Every rose has its thorn, but the comics page is a pink carnation. No thorns here!

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Say Cheese! UHS needs students for a photo shoot this month. Have fun, get a gift and maybe win a prize! Get info and sign up at the UHS website, www.umass.edu/uhs, by April 17.

APT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1600 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+ 4 Bedrooms $1500+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE

EMPLOYMENT

CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO expenence necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley close to UMass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, E.C., pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 15, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen No. 1 seed in A-10

Team goes undefeated in conference after beating Rhode Island on road

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The temperature was freezing, the wind was swirling and the meet was cut short, but the Massachusetts women's tennis team couldn't be happier with the result.

The Minutewomen defeated Rhode Island, 4-0, last Sunday in UMass's final conference matchup. It was a highly anticipated clash, as both teams were undefeated in conference play heading into Sunday. The meet had to be cut short due to unexpectedly cold temperatures.

"The conditions were some of the worst conditions we've ever played in, and we've played in a lot of bad conditions, but this was just awful," UMass coach Judy Dixon said.

With temperature hovering between 40 and 50 degrees, both teams' coaches agreed that they would call the meet as soon as one team scored four points. The Minutewomen (11-9, 4-0 Atlantic 10) did not appreciate the cold – according to Dixon it was so cold that the player's hands were getting numb. But they persevered and earned a crucial conference victory.

The meet started off well for the Maroon and White as it dominated the doubles portion of the meet. The doubles matches are critical for the Minutewomen; in 90 percent of matches UMass has competed in, the team that won the doubles point wound up winning the match.

Team captain Masha Pozar and freshman star Candynce Boney earned an 8-3 victory over Nyssa Peele and Christen Cadigan to set the tone of the meet. Kristin Dipiero and Tanisha Hodgson won their match, 8-2, and Laura Danai and Maude Lecluyse won 8-5. Danai and Lecluyse have won nine of their last 10 matches.

Pozar quickly took control of the match winning 6-2, 6-4. This was her 65th singles win as a Minutewoman, just two shy of the record set by Michele Spiess last year.

Boney is another player who is hitting her stride at the right time. She dominated her opponent 6-1, 6-2 for her eighth straight victory over the last two weeks. Boney was named A-10 Player of the Week last week, and is proving she is worthy of the accolades.

"Her whole year has been about overachieving. I thought she was going to be a great college player her junior and senior year," Dixon said. "The fact that she's had so much success so quickly is amazing."

Danai capped off the event with a 6-0, 6-3 victory, giving the team the four points it needed to secure the meet victory. Lecluyse, Hodgson, and Stephanie Gimenez did not get to finish their matches.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman a student umass edu

The Minutewomen earned the top seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament after defeating previously unbeaten Rhode Island this weekend. UMass will play the winner of Saint Louis and Fordham on Friday.

UMass 2nd, 3rd in weekend

DeRosa, Tatham both shine at local invitational meet

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's track and field team had its best performance Saturday as runner-ups in the UMass Invitational. The Minutewomen finished with several first-place finishes in their events.

Senior Christina DeRosa (17 minutes, 10.35 seconds) took first place in the 5,000-meter run in her first outdoor meet of the season. Redshirt freshman Shiyi Zan (18.14.22) finished right behind her in second. Zan replaced DeRosa last weekend at the Connecticut Invitational.

Senior Alisha Tatham showed her speed off the court in her first race with the team, winning the 100-(12.19 seconds) and 200-meter dashes (24.97). Tatham joined the team after concluding her career with the UMass basketball team.

Sophomore Lisa Wilson won both the shot put (13.04 meters) and the hammer throw (45.94). Wilson finished behind Albany junior Ritshell Verdier by less than a half meter (42.03).

Redshirt junior Kristen Bakanowski (3.85 meters) continued the momentum in the field events by winning the pole vault. Bakanowski set the school record for the outdoor season in the pole vault. Brandy Green set the previous record in 2003.

The Minutemen finished third this weekend. Seven of their runners ranked in the top 10 for the 1,500-meter run. Senior Josh Boone (3:56.62) took first while sophomore Andrew McCann (3:58.18) took second.

UMass had twice the amount of runners it usually has in the 1,500 because it pulled the 3,000-meter steeplechase runners to work on making the team faster in shorter distances.

"They could've scored first, second or third in the steeplechase," UMass coach Ken O'Brien said.

The Minutemen still received as many points for finishing in the top 3 of the steeplechase, despite a lower finish from some of the runners in the 1,500.

UMass had solid representation from its underclassmen in the 400-meter dash. Freshman Michael Perrotta (49.26) took second and sophomore Sam Laorenza (49.46) placed fourth.

"It's a mark of our program," O'Brien said. "We have a very well-balanced team. We may not have the No. 1 man, but we have a number of [athletes] that are versatile."

Perrotta ran his first meet after an ilio-tibial band (ITB) injury sidelined him in December. The ligament problem in his leg came from overworking the muscle.

However, UMass suffered another injury just as Perrotta came back. Sophomore Andrew O'Donnell is out indefinitely after he injured his hamstring this week in practice.

Last season, O'Donnell's 4x400 relay team came in third place at the New England Championships.

O'Brien was still pleased with the progress the team is making, despite the latest injury. Junior Jesse Regnier (15:07.95) finished third in the 5K while senior Matt Klypka (15:21.11) rounded out the top 5. In the 110-meter hurdles, sophomore Tyler Cotto (14.95) came in fourth in a close race to the finish.

Both teams travel to Princeton, N.J., next weekend for the Larry Ellis Invitational.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajm00 @student.umass.edu.

Brittany Bakanowski takes off from the starting blocks in the 400-meter hurdles. The sophomore finished in third place in the event at the UMass Invitational.

Sortino joins elite company after victories

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When Massachusetts softball coach Elaine Sortino earned her 1,000th win as a head coach Sunday in a 10-0 victory of Temple, she became part of an elite class in the collegiate softball world. Only seven other active coaches have won more than 1,000 games, and the list includes some rather prestigious programs.

Fresno State's Margie Wright is the current leader in career victories with 1,253. Following her are Florida State's JoAnne Graf, Iowa's Gayle Blevins, Arizona's Mike Candrea, LSU's Yvette Girouard, South Carolina's Joyce Compton and Coral Hutchins of Michigan. Entering the 2008 season, Sortino was also 14th in winning percentage among active coaches at .699 (975-419-5).

Her eight Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year awards are the most by any coach in any sport in the conference, and with due cause. She has never had a losing season and has reached 40 wins in a season six times and also has one 50-win season under her belt.

Sortino took over as coach of the Minutewomen in 1980, in the program's sixth year of existence and her team claimed the Atlantic 10 Championship 19 out of 22 years starting in 1986. She has reached the Women's College World Series three times, the Super Regionals once and has 13 other NCAA Tournament appearances.

The 2004 NFCA Hall of Fame inductee has also been particularly dominant at home. Her Minutewomen are 447-89-2 at home and 145-11-1 at the UMass Softball Complex.

Her coaching has produced 19 All-Americans, 10 A-10 Players of the Year, 13 A-10 Pitchers of the Year, seven A-10 Rookies of the Year and 91 All-Conference picks.

REEVES RESURGES

It has to be difficult going back out to the plate in the second game of a doubleheader after going 0-for-3 with three strikeouts in Game 1. First baseman Sarah Reeves didn't seem shaken though.

She came back out for Game 2 and went 2-for-3 and accounted for seven of the Minutewomen's 10 runs, batting in five and scoring two more. Both of her hits left the Complex, including a solo shot that cleared the scoreboard in left field.

Her second homer sparked a rally that effectively secured Sortino's 1,000th win. With the bases loaded, Reeves hit her first career grand slam to put the Minutewomen ahead, 5-0. They scored four more runs in the inning and cruised to five-inning victory.

The homers moved Reeves up to second on the team with five this season (Samantha Salato, six). She's batting .260 with 22 RBIs, which is also second on the team.

SANDERS STAYING POSITIVE

UMass pitcher Bailey Sanders understands she's not going to finish every game herself. She knew that when Sortino pulled her from Saturday's eventual 4-1 win over Saint Joseph's. That's why it didn't bother her that Brandice Balschmiter replaced her in the circle in the sixth inning, despite giving up just one run.

After a walk and single put two runners on with no outs, Sortino made the switch to prevent further harm in the inning. The first batter Balschmiter faced reached on an error, loading the bases. Balschmiter then struck out the side to end the inning. UMass scored four runs in the bottom half of the sixth and held on for the win.

Even though that decision worked out, Sortino said she was still glad to see Sanders finish her own game Sunday against the Owls. She said it was difficult to pull Sanders on Saturday, but the sophomore was clearly unmoved by it.

She pitched a complete game shutout against the Owls, allowing just one hit and a pair of walks.

TWO MORE A-10 AWARDS

The Minutewomen took two more A-10 weekly awards this week, with Balschmiter earning the conference's Pitcher of the Week honor and third baseman Whitney Mollica winning Player of the Week.

UMass played five games last week, including a 9-0 win over Boston College and a pair of doubleheader sweeps against A-10 rivals Saint Joe's and Temple. The Minutewomen outscored their opponents 32-1 during the stretch.

Balschmiter shared the honor this week with St. Bonaventure's Sherri Thompson after going 4-0 in three starts and one relief appearance. She allowed

UMass Softball

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Knecht Cup final race prior to A-10s

Minutewomen struggle to replicate success in finals

BY JEFF R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite a strong effort on Saturday in the Knecht Cup, the Massachusetts rowing team struggled when it mattered.

With the finals taking place on Sunday, the Minutewomen hoped to continue their success from the preliminaries and semifinals but came up short with a second-, third-, and two sixth-place finishes.

"They kind of rowed like novices," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "They just did not perform well at all."

The Minutewomen Second Varsity 8 boat was the most successful over the weekend, finishing second in the grand final. Their final time of 6 minutes, 56.3 seconds was second to Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island, who finished with a time of 6:51.6.

The Novice 8 boat finished their grand final with a time of 7:13.5, giving them a third-place finish in the event. North Carolina went on to win the Novice 8 race with a time of 7:05.5.

Both the Lightweight 4 and Varsity 8 crews struggled and finished in sixth-place in their grand finals. The Lightweight 4 finished with a time of 8:35.1, almost an entire minute behind the winner, Pittshurgh, who finished the course in 7:41.7.

The Varsity 8 finished their final in a time of 6:56.6, more than 20 seconds after first-place Bucknell, which finished in 6:35.2. In addition, the Minutewomen were just under 10 seconds slower than conference rival URI, which finished third.

The only crew not to race on Sunday for UMass was the Varsity 4 crew. The Varsity 4 boat was eliminated in the semifinals on Saturday when their time of 8:26.6 placed them 15th out of 18 boats in the semifinals.

After Saturday's performances, the Minutewomen looked to be one of the top teams in almost every race that they advanced in.

The Varsity 8 boat had the second best overall time in the preliminaries and the third best overall time in the semifinals but only managed a sixth-place finish in the finals. With each race, the boat's time slipped, with 6:46.3 in the preliminaries, 6:51.0 in the semifinals and 6:56.6 in the finals.

The top three finishers in the Varsity 8 race, Bucknell, Buffalo and URI, respectively, all improved on their semifinal times.

The Second Varsity 8 was the best boat in their category through the first two rounds but could not continue the success during its finals either. After finishing in an even seven minutes in the preliminaries, beating URI by 3.9 seconds, the Minutewomen Second Varsity 8 beat URI again in the semifinals. The semifinal race was a lot closer, decided by a half second, with UMass finish-

See ROWING on page 6

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN PLAY IN BEANPOT | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 67 LO: 45 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2008

VTech shootings: one year later

Campus, nation respond to tragedy after first year passes

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today marks the one-year anniversary of the deadliest school shooting in the country's history.

On April 16, 2007, 23-year-old Virginia Tech student Seung-Hui Cho senselessly opened fire on his fellow classmates, killing 32 people, not including himself, and wounding many more. The initial shootings broke out in the early morning hours in West Ambler Johnston Hall, an on-campus residence hall, and continued two hours later when Cho opened fire again in Norris Hall, an academic building.

Cho, a South Korean who moved to the United States when he was eight, planned the two separate attacks on the Virginia Tech campus before committing suicide in Norris Hall.

Cho was diagnosed with depression in the eighth grade, and selective mutism, a social anxiety disorder that reserved him from speaking. Cho also had previously been declared mentally ill in 2005 by a Virginia special justice and was treated for a severe anxiety disorder, as well as being accused of stalking two female students at the college.

"It was a horrible tragedy that you hope never happens, but you can't live your life in fear," said University of Massachusetts sophomore Kelly Kozlowzki.

Following the heartbreak at Virginia Tech, officials on the

See ANNIVERSARY on page 3

Students at the University of Massachusetts gathered at a vigil held for the victims of the Virginia Tech shootings a year ago.

UMass community to honor victims with day of reflection

BY LISA DIBENEDICTIS AND SHRUTI SEHGAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In light of the first anniversary of the Virginia Tech shootings, University of Massachusetts graduate student and Virginia Tech alumna Mara Seidel has expressed the need for the UMass community to unite and pay respects to the victims and affected families today.

"We have to bring awareness and remembrance for the event," said Seidel. "I have been in contact with the Center for Student Development to hold a campus-wide moment of silence."

According to Phec Paradise, the assistant director for leadership and training in the Center for Student Development, a memorial will be held in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Campus Center today, from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m.

"The space will be open to students for gentle reflection and for moments of silence," said Paradise. "It is an informal gathering to welcome and provide support for students."

Seidel will bring remembrance for the shootings by handing out ribbons and providing support to students in the UMass Campus Center on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

"I'm trying to reach out," Seidel said. "In addition to a remembrance, [Virginia Tech] is a cry out for all those suffering from mental health [issues] on

See MEMORIAL on page 3

Amherst to host Extravaganja party

BY TERESA A. FRANCO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Neon-colored flyers announcing "Extravaganja" paraded the walls among various artistic pot leaf depictions in the Cannabis Reform Coalition's office.

The event, which usually attracts about 1,500 attendees in Amherst Commons, is a day of protesting the prohibition of marijuana. During the festival, rock rhythms and reggae beats blare through the crowd and echo in the streets, speeches are given and vendors are propped within the area. Among the crowd last year was the town manager of Amherst, Larry Shaffer.

"I spent about 45 minutes there, and what I saw was a lot of young people having a good time," Shaffer said. "It was good to see a lot of people out. It afforded energy and excitement to our downtown and we're happy to see that."

Travel 100 miles east of Amherst, and a town official attending an event like Extravaganja is highly unlikely. Unlike other marijuana festivals in Massachusetts, Extravaganja has received little police interference over the last 18 years.

"We have this sacred vow of respect with the police every year," said Alex Arsenault, treasurer of the CRC. "They come up to us and are like, 'We're going to be here and we're not going to embarrass you if you don't embarrass us.' It's a really miraculous thing to me that it happens like that. I know at Hempfest in Boston cops are just running around arresting people."

A few months ago, the town of Amherst did stir some controversy when they tried to impose a fee for holding the event on the town commons. The news reports implied the fee was specifically for Extravaganja, but Shaffer said the fee applies to all events taking place in Amherst commons.

"When we have a large gathering, whether it's the boy scouts or Extravaganja, we have issues like who pays for public safety and who pays for police," Shaffer said. "Our issue is to make sure people's safety is protected and to keep traffic flowing properly."

After the CRC protested and debated with the town, the fee was quickly dropped. The town agreed that is wasn't worth the effort to demand payment from event organizers.

Other marijuana festivals in Massachusetts do not receive as much acceptance as Extravaganja, like the Freedom Rally in Boston held every September by the Massachusetts Cannabis Reform Coalition (Mass Cann).

See EXTRAVAGANJA on page 4

UMass ROTC Cadet honored with award

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts ROTC Cadet Kevin Cremin has been named the George C. Marshall Award winner for the Amherst campus.

The award is given annually to the most outstanding cadet in each Army ROTC program in the nation.

"Its very flattering; I'm glad I was chosen," said Cremin. "People in the program are outstanding. Every one of my peers could have received it as well so it's a pretty big deal for me."

The award recipients are selected based on "professional excellence, leadership, personal integrity and selfless service to the nation," according to the ROTC's press release.

Cadets are evaluated through their performance in various aspects of the program.

"It is a combination of class standing, physical fitness and leadership," said Lieutenant Colonel David Vacchi. "Most of it comes down to class standing, and actually he is the top cadet in the country."

All UMass cadets attend a leadership camp at Fort Lewis, outside of Seattle, Wash., during their undergraduate career. Cremin's leadership skills were observed when he attended the camp last summer after his junior year. According to Vacchi, that evaluation along with his performance in the campus ROTC program showed that "he rose to the top in that area."

Cadet Kevin Cremin of Somerville, Mass., received the George C. Marshall Award, given annually to the most outstanding cadet in each Army ROTC program in the country.

"We're training college students to become Lieutenants in the Army," said Vacchi. The program is one that Cremin feels "produces excellence." It also gets a lot of support from UMass faculty, which he says comes as a surprise to some people, given the reputation of the area.

"I absolutely love it; it's the best thing I've ever been a part of," he said. "The people I work with are my best friends and I'll probably be friends with them for the rest of my life. It's also fun as hell. We repel from the rafters of the Mullins Center at basketball games."

See CADET on page 4

Dairy team milks challenge for silver

BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A team of four University of Massachusetts students won the silver in the seventh annual North American Intercollegiate Dairy Challenge.

The challenge took place at the University of Wisconsin-Madison on April 4 and 5, with 31 competing teams from the United States and one team from Canada.

For the competition, teams of four students were given a farm's financial and production records and were allowed a two-hour on-site visit. Based on this information, the team was permitted four hours to evaluate the management of the farm and to put together a presentation outlining how they thought the farm could be made more profitable.

Each competing team was evaluated by a panel of professional judges on their recommendations for improving things, such as nutrition,

See DAIRY on page 4

The North American Intercollegiate Dairy Challenge took place in Madison, Wisc., where the UMass team, made up of Allison Cornel, Christina Chubb, Jane Di Nicola and Katherine Thibedeau, won the silver.

UM professor turns trees, grass into gas

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With today's focus on oil and increasing fuel prices, innovation is focused on green fuels, like those being produced today at the University of Massachusetts.

George Huber, Armstrong Professor of Chemical Engineering, is part of a team trying to produce green gasoline – fuel made of recyclable products like grass and trees – and he's succeeding.

"There are a lot of people doing this in the past using wood and other biomass who take [those resources] and convert it directly into liquid, which is called fast pyrolysis, which involves heating up the wood rapidly and then cooling and it decomposes into a liquid," said Torren Carlson, a PhD candidate in chemical engineering. "However, not many people have looked at doing it with a catalyst. The liquid you get out you can use directly as a fuel; it's a very high quality. However, in the past the liquid people have gotten out is acidic and is high viscosity and you can't actually use it [as a fuel]."

Huber's research, in contrast, converts trees and grass directly into gasoline components.

"What we're making is a product called aromatics, which is a mix of things already found in gasoline," he said. "They can actually be in gasoline up to 25 percent, which is an actual EPA regulation. You could use them directly as a fuel, but we're making things already found in gasoline right now," said Carlson.

See GAS on page 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 121

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stymeiak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwasike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADAM, LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Across the Nation Around the World

Majors made to order at William and Mary

BY SARAH OWERMOHLE
THE FLAT HAT (COLLEGE OF WILLIAM & MARY)

(U-WIRE) WILLIAMSBURG, Va.—Many students come to the College of William and Mary to study business, government, art, mathematics or kinesiology, but for some, none of the usual majors are right.

Phillip Walker '10 knew coming into his sophomore year that he wanted to major in either philosophy or psychology, but he couldn't decide which. It was not until he took a psychology course in cognitive science this semester that an area of study began to emerge as a possibility.

"I realized that there was a whole field of study at the intersection of these two fields, along with computer science and neuroscience," Walker said. "Since I've always wanted to learn more about computers and programming, I felt the only right thing to do in this situation was to combine classes from these fields to create a major in cognitive science."

Walker began the process of designing a major, which he said was "surprisingly easy."

"I had a meeting with my cognitive science professor to help formulate a curriculum for the major," he said.

Dean of Honors and Interdisciplinary Studies Joel Schwartz guides students like Walker who are interested in interdisciplinary majors. There are currently 26 students at the College who are pursuing self-defined majors.

"For every three students that come looking to create their own major, there is one that ends up doing it," Schwartz said. Schwartz cited a medieval studies student as an example. The student blended religion, history, art history and literature, designing the major "the way the medieval world really thinks of it."

Students have to find a focused interdisciplinary study for it to be approved. Schwartz lists a number of problems students run into. "Often they don't have a focus, and are too broad – their major would look like the elective part of a student's 120 credits. Then, sometimes they are too narrow to be an undergraduate liberal arts major," Schwartz said. "In all these cases, the students either drop it, or turn around and re-frame it."

When Patricia Daly '07 decided she wanted to design her own major in medicine and health, Dean Schwartz gave her past plans students had created in that field.

"[In] the end some of the classes I chose were similar to the other students' plans," Daly said. "It was also useful to look at their plans to get new ideas on what classes can be related, like health classes in anthropology or sociology."

Daly created a major in health and cultural studies combining a number of science courses with Hispanic Studies courses. Since graduating, Daly has entered dental school and hopes to complete a combined masters in health program.

"In interviews, when people ask you about your major, they are very interested in hearing why you created your own," Daly said. "It makes you seem that you have real aspiration. And it makes your different."

Schwartz notes that Daly's major follows a trend of public health majors at the College.

"Each student spins it differently, but public health is a theme," he said. "If this theme is continuous, we might get faculty together that are logical for that major, and create a department at William and Mary."

International relations and global studies were two such majors that began as interdisciplinary studies.

For now, students like Walker are following their own plan.

"Creating my own major makes me feel unique, like I am making my own path, by doing something rarely done," Walker said.

U.S. Muslim group declines to meet with Pope Benedict

BY RACHEL ZOLI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Unease with Pope Benedict XVI's approach to Islam has led a U.S. Muslim group to decline joining in an interfaith event with him later this week.

Several other U.S. Muslim leaders expressed similar concerns about the pope, but pledged to participate in the Washington gathering, saying the two faiths should do everything possible to improve relations.

"Our going there is more out of respect for the Catholic Church itself," said Muzammil H. Siddiqi, chairman of the Fiqh Council of North America, which interprets Islamic law. "Popes come and go, but the church is there."

Siddiqi, co-chairman of the West Coast Muslim-Catholic Dialogue, is among the Muslim, Jewish, Buddhist, Jain and Hindu leaders scheduled to meet Benedict on Thursday at the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center. Muslims and Roman Catholics each have more than 1 billion followers worldwide. U.S. Catholic and Muslim leaders started holding interfaith talks in the early 1990s, and many of the Muslim leaders invited to the event Thursday are veterans of those discussions.

But Salam al-Marayati, executive director of the Muslim Public Affairs Council, an advocacy group based in Los Angeles, said the event seemed "more ceremonial than substantive" and his organization would not participate. He said he was disappointed that no time was made in the pope's six-day trip for even a brief private meeting with U.S. Muslim leaders.

This is the first trip to the U.S. that Benedict has made since he was elected in 2005 to succeed John Paul. He turns 81 on Wednesday.

"It would have been a good opportunity for him to have a dialogue," al-Marayati said.

The pope has been praised by supporters for his frankness in approaching Islam and interfaith dialogue in general, but critics have called him insensitive.

Muslims in many nations reacted angrily when the pope quoted a 14th-century Byzantine emperor connecting Islam with violence in a 2006 speech at Germany's Regensburg University. Tensions eased after Benedict traveled to Turkey that same year, visiting Istanbul's famous Blue Mosque.

The pope was applauded for organizing a Nov. 4-6 meeting in Rome with Muslim religious leaders and scholars, as part of a push for more dialogue between Catholics and Muslims.

But many Muslims said the pontiff insulted them on Easter Sunday in St. Peter's Basilica, when he baptized Magdi Allam, an Egyptian-born commentator who has criticized what he called the "inherent" violence in Islam. Islamic leaders said the prominence of the ceremony, not the conversion itself, was troubling.

"It's true that some of the gestures, some of the statements make us uncomfortable and we feel badly about it," said Sayyid Syeed, national interfaith director of the Islamic Society of North America, the largest communal group for American Muslims. "But our challenge is to not let those challenges hamper progress." Syeed will attend the meeting Thursday.

Imam Yahya Hendi, a leading advocate of interfaith dialogue and chaplain at the Jesuit-founded Georgetown University, had met John Paul and said he would participate in the interfaith gathering, because "I believe in the power of love and the power of dialogue." Hendi will also be among the thousands of people at a ceremony for the pope Wednesday at the White House.

But Hendi said that he and other Muslims were concerned that the pope wasn't visiting a mosque or meeting with leaders who represent the millions of Muslims living in the U.S.

"Since he came to office, things have happened that have been used on both sides to build up walls," Hendi said. "I think this could be a good opportunity for Pope Benedict to help people to build bridges."

American Muslims are unlike any Islamic migrant community Benedict has encountered in Europe. Many Muslims in the U.S. came for higher education and are now professionals – academics, business people, physicians and engineers – who are settled in the wealthier suburbs.

They've battled discrimination and intensive government scrutiny following the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Yet they have also benefited from American constitutional protection for religious freedom. The U.S. Justice Department, along with civil rights groups that usually represent Jews and Christians, often help Muslims secure their religious rights in the workplace, public schools and elsewhere.

Eboo Patel, founder of Interfaith Youth Core based in Chicago, said that he was inspired as a boy by the interreligious outreach of the late Chicago Cardinal Joseph Bernardin.

Patel, a Muslim born in India, said he had no concerns at all about participating in the Washington gathering, even though he wished the Easter conversion hadn't been so public.

"I think that we have to find ways to cooperate on important matters concerning the earth, including climate change, reducing disease, reducing poverty, increasing respect," he said. "That's where our focus should be."

SUMMER POSITIONS AVAILABLE!

UNIVERSITY HELPLINE OPERATORS

The University Helpline is looking for responsible, highly motivated undergraduate students to staff a telephone line designed to provide help to current and prospective undergraduate students and their families. We are seeking students who are positive, energetic, have excellent communication skills, and enjoy working in a team environment. Staff will be trained in all aspects of Bursar, Financial Aid, and Housing Assignment policies and procedures. There are both Full Time and Part Time, and Work Study and Non-Work Study positions are available. You must be presently enrolled and in good standing as an undergraduate student.

June 16 – August 29, 2008
Starting Salary $8.25/hr

Applications are available in the Students Affairs Office, 319 Whitmore Building. Applications are due to the Student Affairs Office by 5:00pm, Tuesday, April 22, 2008. If you have any questions, please contact Sylvia Langford, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs at 545-2300.

BAND OR FAN?

BRING THE BEST UNTAPPED MUSIC TO THE TOP!

JOIN RALLYFORMUSIC
THE LATEST COMMUNITY FOR CUTTING EDGE BANDS.

FANS! BE THE FIRST TO DISCOVER THE BEST NEW MUSIC. BANDS! GET YOUR MUSIC HEARD AND COMPETE FOR $15,000.

Enter to win huge cash prizes, LG phones, and flat screen TVs at WWW.RALLYFORMUSIC.COM

LG RALLY FOR MUSIC

Day of silence and reflection to be held on campus today

MEMORIAL from page 1

campus. You never really know what people are going through. We need to be more aware of other people."

Given the recent bomb threats on campus over the last several months and the University's reputation for violence, Seidel suggested that commemorating the Virginia Tech tragedy provides an opportunity for UMass to enhance its sense of community.

"It has been really scary with all the threats present on our campus," she said. "Hopefully, this day will be a reminder to people to check in with their friends and others. I don't know if the threats here are jokes or attempts to get out of class, but they are very serious. Something as devastating as the shootings could happen here tomorrow, and we have to realize how scary that is. We need to learn from it, and realize how precious life is."

UMass freshman and communications major Kevin DiMuzio expressed similar concerns.

"I think it would be very respectful for us to hold a moment of silence, considering the threats on the UMass campus recently," he said. "We, like many of the victims, are college students. We need to stay together to show awareness and prevention. After all, the shootings could have happened at any school."

"I would be absolutely devastated if anything like that happened at our school, and in turn, I would be honored if other schools would hold a memorial for us," agreed UMass junior French major Brittany Jones.

When asked if UMass provides a safe and caring environment for its students, students presented different views.

"I think that UMass does a good job of having a very diverse group of clubs and communities, like opportunities for freshman and RAPS. There are an enormous amount of activities on campus. However, it is up to students to take the initiative and get involved," said DiMuzio.

UMass senior Antoinette Wiel, a legal studies and communications major, disagreed.

"I feel like UMass is cold and uncaring," she said. "I didn't even have an advisor to help me pick my classes, never mind someone to talk to about my concerns."

"I think the community on this campus is very separated and we are not united at all," said Seidel. "We do have a lot of organizations, but sometimes we just need to step back and realize that we are a community. If we take time and remember that we are part of something bigger instead of being caught up in the everyday routine, we can remember what is truly important: friends and family."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu and Shruti Sehgal can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu

UM creates emergency service, country passes bill after tragedy

ANNIVERSARY from page 1

UMass campus have taken precautions to ensure students' safety by taking advantage of new technology. The campus has established a text messaging service that serves to notify students and faculty of emergency situations that might arise on campus. The emergency service is free and is available to anyone on the UMass campus who decides to register.

The new text messaging alert service has received positive feedback from UMass students, who have expressed their appreciation for an efficient alert system on campus.

"I think the text messaging system, in terms of getting the word out that there is a serious problem, is a quick and effective method," said UMass sophomore Kimberly Whitaker. "Even though some people don't have text messaging, the service reaches enough people to make an effect."

"I think the best way to prevent this kind of violent incident is to foster an open and supportive community, as most of the people who commit these violent acts have been ostracized from their community, like with the Columbine shooting," said Whitaker.

In response to the tragedy, the federal government passed the most significant gun control law in over a decade with the H.R. 2640 bill, which authorizes improvements in state reporting to the National Instant Criminal Background Check System in order to stop the selling of guns to those declared mentally ill and to those who are prohibited from possessing firearms.

The following is the list of those students and faculty of Virginia Tech who lost their lives in the tragedy one year ago: Ryan Clark, 22; Emily Hilscher, 19; Liviu Librescu, 76; Minal Panchal, 26; G.V. Loganathan, 53; Jarett Lane, 22; Brian Bluhm, 25; Matthew Gwaltney, 24; Jeremy Herbstritt, 27; Partahi Lumbantoruan, 34; Daniel O'Neil, 22; Juan Ortiz, 26; Julia Pryde, 23; Waleed Shaalan, 32; Christopher James Bishop, 35; Lauren McCain, 20; Michael Pohle Jr., 23; Maxine Turner, 22; Nicole White, 20; Jocelyne Couture-Nowak, 49; Russ Alameddine, 20; Austin Cloyd, 18; Daniel Perez Cueva, 21; Caitlin Hammaren, 19; Rachael Hill, 18; Matthew La Porte, 20; Henry Lee, 20; Erin Peterson, 18; Mary Reed, 19; Reema Samaha, 18; Leslie Sherman, 20; and Kevin Granata, 45.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu

OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest

Dear Students,
On April 24, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.

To register send an e-mail to: mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services at 413-545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, class and telephone number

Best of luck,
Dining Services

UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students

To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.

umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst · Ivy · Taste of UMass 2008

*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

Welcome
Chef Martin Breslin
Director of Culinary Operations · Harvard University

CRIMSON FAVORITES:
- Cockle & Mussel Soup
- Beet, Walnut & Stilton Salad
- Irish Scallop Pie
- Roast Leg of Lamb
- Red Spiced Chicken
- Fuscilli with Peas & Mushrooms
- Colcannon
- Roasted Carrots & Parsnips
- Irish Brown Bread
- Bailey's & Cranberry Bread Pudding

Wednesday, April 16, 2008
Berkshire DC from 5–9 pm

2007 Grand Prize

DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst · FoodManagement's Best Concepts Awards Competition · Ivy

umass.edu/diningservices

UMass Idol

Mark your calendar!

Sign Up and Enter Today!

Want to be a UMass Idol?

This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!

Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center

Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.

Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.

All entries must be received by April 23, 2008

There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.

Presented by:
UMass Dining Services
& LAZER 99.5

Sponsored by:

DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst · Taste of UMass 2008
umass.edu/diningservices

Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Top award given to local Army Cadet

CADET from page 1

The namesake of the award is Army General George C. Marshall, who served as the Chief of Staff of the Army, Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense. He was the only career soldier to be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, and penned the restorative Marshall Plan.

Cremin will be officially honored at a conference this month at Virginia Military Institute alongside Army ROTC's other top cadets. He will be commissioned as an officer in the Army on May 23, 2008.

Cremin will go into officer training and then will serve as a second Lieutenant in the 10th mountain Division at Fort Drum, New York.

"At this phase it [UMass ROTC] has prepared me more than any school I could have gone to," he said.

Vacchi feels that Cremin's performance in ROTC sends a message about some of the members of his generation.

"That generation is very influenced by the Greatest Generation," Vacchi said. "The college generation is for the most part, I think, willing to serve the country in some way."

Cremin, of Somerville, Mass., is a graduate of W.T. Woodson High School and the son of Colonel Mark and Loretta Cremin.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

Team participates in annual dairy challenge reproduction, milking procedures, animal health, housing and financial management. Evaluators then placed the teams accordingly.

DAIRY from page 1

Members of the UMass team – Allison Cornel, Christina Chubb, Jane Di Nicola and Katherine Thibedeau – were led by Mark T. Huyler, Ph.D., of the Department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences. It was the University's third time competing in the NAIDC.

"I am in the animal science major and I hope to work with dairy cows when I graduate in May," said team member Chubb. "So it was just a great experience to get out there, look at and analyze farms and get to know other people in the industry. There were a lot of companies there interested in hiring people as well. That never hurts."

The NAIDC seeks to facilitate cooperation between agribusiness and universities to increase students' knowledge and comprehension of dairy business management and, in turn, promote a strong future for the dairy industry.

Universities that ranked in first place, or platinum, were subsequently awarded $200 scholarships for each student, included the University of Illinois, the University of Minnesota, Michigan State University and Purdue University.

"Of course, we all would have liked to bring back a gold or platinum award instead, but we were all happy with the work we had done and were pleased with the outcome," said Cornel, also an animal science major.

Satisfied with her team's leadership, Cornel said, "Without Dr. Huyler, we would not have been able to go, and even if we could have, we would have been ill-prepared. Dr. Huyler has a passion for dairy and does his best to instill it in each one of us."

Huyler said the experience was valuable for students. "They worked very well as a team, met many students and faculty from other universities, and interacted with numerous recruiters from national and global agribusinesses," he said.

Excluding minor travel expenses, the cost for the entire competition was provided by agribusinesses and dairy producers via subsidy. The next NAIDC will be held in 2009 in Syracuse, N.Y.

Amara Anosike can be reached at amara4prez@aim.com

Festival protests marijuana prohibition

EXTRAVAGANJA from page 1

The festival resembles Extravaganja, but has a bigger draw and more police enforcement. Mass Cann said the meaning behind their cause is not portrayed fairly through the media.

"When the media comes, the first thing they do is find some 15-year-old sparking up," said Fred Hapgood, a member of Mass Cann. "It's obviously bad publicity and makes people who are against the Freedom Rally point."

Hapgood said there's more to the festival that gets overshadowed by the pro-drug aspect.

"The rally represents the hippie culture. There are a lot of people walking around interacting with one another," said Hapgood. "The true sixties culture is associated with decriminalization. It's good for the culture as a whole to revisit that point of view and the point of view from those days."

The Freedom Rally was also threatened with a hefty fee to hold the event, in the late nineties. Public officials loosened their grip after Mass Cann sued the city of Boston twice, saying the fee was unconstitutional.

President of Mass Cann Bill Downing claims the only purpose of the fee was because "they didn't like marijuana and they didn't like our event."

Mass Cann won the suit, but police still swarm the festival, keeping a cautious eye for clouds of smoke. Downing estimated that there were 50 arrests last year. He also said there can only be a certain amount of arrests due to the limited amount of holding cells in the city.

"I tell people if they want to smoke do it anywhere but the rally," said Downing. "Walk a block from the rally to smoke and be 10 times safer."

Downing says the Freedom Rally is falsely slapped with the label of "Hempfest," which is a festival that takes place in Seattle, and sees it as a subtle attack on the event.

"The truth is the name Hempfest belongs to an event in Seattle," he said. "Not calling [the Freedom Rally] by the right name is another form of disrespect."

Larry Shaffer does think Amherst is more accepting of an event celebrating an illegal substance than other towns would be.

"Amherst does have an independent streak," he said. "We really don't want to be in anyone else's business. I see it as a matter of personal preference."

Shaffer also mentioned that marijuana is nothing new to him, and it wouldn't surprise – or bother – him to see someone enjoying the herb at an event like Extravaganja.

"Young people may find it hard to believe, but there was marijuana a long time ago," he said.

Arsenault, who has lived in Amherst his whole life, attended Extravaganja as a child, long before he became a member of the CRC his freshmen year at the University of Massachusetts. He spent his childhood believing the event happened everywhere.

"There's definitely a really, really strong liberal community here in Amherst," he said. "I actually grew up thinking all towns had Extravaganja. It was a regular thing to me. I thought it was a normal national event, but sadly that's not the case."

Green gasoline 'future of motor vehicle fuel,' says chemical engineering prof.

GAS from page 1

In summary, green gasoline could potentially be the future of motor vehicle fuel.

"Probably what would happen is you can add into gasoline up to that 25 percent you can use directly right now," said Carlson. "The aromatics have a lot of other uses; you could further process them and turn them into other chemicals, which could be used to make gasoline and turn them into the other 75 percent [of gasoline]. A lot of other things are made of those products like polymers. There are a lot of potential uses for these aromatics as a potential feed stock."

"Huber's method is for making biofuels from cellulose, the non-edible portion of plant biomass and a major component of grasses and wood," said a statement on the University Web site.

"At $10 to $30 per barrel of oil energy equivalent, cellulosic biomass is significantly cheaper than crude oil. The United States could potentially produce 1.3 billion dry tons of cellulosic biomass per year, which has the energy content of four billion barrels of crude oil. That's more than half of the seven billion barrels of crude oil consumed in our country each year. What's more, biomass as an energy crop could increase the national farm income by $3 billion to $6 billion per year," the site says.

"The key challenge is making this economical and improving the overall yields. In other words, how much gasoline output do you get per biomass input," said Huber.

As opposed to ethanol, which currently requires a lot of energy to produce, green gasoline could be the future of alternative fuel.

"I can definitely see in the future that green gasoline is more of a solution than ethanol is right now," said Carlson. "It's a lot easier to switch over to something that doesn't require any switching over. There are still a lot of issues with the economics in the process, but we're still in the lab phase right now. In the U.S., we have enough biomass to be able to replace about 60 percent of the gasoline used in the U.S. We use about 320 million gallons of gasoline a day, and enough biofuel so it couldn't replace all of the gas, mostly because of all the gas we use, but there's a lot of biomass that isn't converted right now."

Carlson noted that, while ethanol production today mostly uses only one part of the corn plant, "corn is a very small part of the plant, but in this approach you'd be able to use all of the plant, not just one small part."

Carlson and Huber have won a National Science Foundation grant for $400,000 and will be using that money to make their product commercially feasible, which they hope to accomplish in 5-10 years.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@umass.edu

France attempts to pass bill that would outlaw promotion of 'extreme thinness'

BY DEVORAH LAUTER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — The French parliament's lower house adopted a groundbreaking bill Tuesday that would make it illegal for anyone – including fashion magazines, advertisers and Web sites – to publicly incite extreme thinness.

The National Assembly approved the bill in a series of votes Tuesday, after the legislation won unanimous support from the ruling conservative UMP party. It goes to the Senate in the coming weeks.

Fashion industry experts said that, if passed, the law would be the strongest of its kind anywhere. Leaders in French couture are opposed to the idea of legal boundaries on beauty standards.

The bill was the latest and strongest of measures proposed after the 2006 anorexia-linked death of a Brazilian model prompted efforts throughout the international fashion industry to address the repercussions of using ultra-thin models.

Conservative lawmaker Valery Boyer, author of the law, argued that encouraging anorexia or severe weight loss should be punishable in court.

Doctors and psychologists treating patients with anorexia nervosa – a disorder characterized by an abnormal fear of becoming overweight – welcomed the government's efforts to fight self-inflicted starvation, but warned that its link with media images remains hazy.

French lawmakers and fashion industry members signed a nonbinding charter last week on promoting healthier body images. Spain in 2007 banned ultra-thin models from catwalks.

But Boyer said such measures did not go far enough.

Her bill has mainly brought focus to pro-anorexic Web sites that give advice on how to eat an apple a day – and nothing else.

But Boyer insisted in her speech to lawmakers Tuesday that the legislation was much broader and could, in theory, be used against many facets of the fashion industry.

It would give judges the power to imprison and fine offenders up to $47,000 if found guilty of "inciting others to deprive themselves of food" to an "excessive" degree, Boyer said in a telephone interview before the parliamentary session.

Judges could also sanction those responsible for a magazine photo of a model whose "excessive thinness ... altered her health," she said.

Boyer said she was focusing on women's health, though the bill applies to models of both sexes. The French Health Ministry says most of the 30,000 to 40,000 people with anorexia in France are women.

Didier Grumbach, president of the influential French Federation of Couture, said he was not aware how broad the proposed legislation was, and made no secret of his strong disapproval of such a sweeping measure.

"Never will we accept in our profession that a judge decides if a young girl is skinny or not skinny," he said. "That doesn't exist in the world, and it will certainly not exist in France."

Marleen S. Williams, a psychology professor at Brigham Young University in Utah who researches the media's effect on anorexic women, said it was nearly impossible to prove that the media causes eating disorders.

Williams said studies show fewer eating disorders in "cultures that value full-bodied women." Yet with the new French legal initiative, she fears, "you're putting your finger in one hole in the dike, but there are other holes, and it's much more complex than that."

APRIL
IS ALCOHOL AWARENESS MONTH

If you're over 21 and choose to drink alcohol, follow these tips for safer drinking:

SIP SLOWLY. If you're a quick sipper, use less alcohol in your mixed drink.

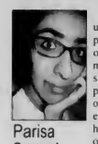
ALTERNATE ALCOHOLIC DRINKS with non-alcoholic ones, like water or juice. Help your body and save money at the same time!

AVOID MIXING ENERGY DRINKS with alcohol. They can make you drink more and both are dehydrating.

EAT SOMETHING before going out, to slow the absorption of alcohol.

SKIP THE SALTY SNACKS – they increase your thirst.

9 OUT OF 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol. ARE YOU ONE OF THEM?



UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
Campus and Community Coalition
To Reduce High-Risk Drinking www.umass.edu/ccc

Listen to podcasts @
www.dailycollegian.com

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
THE VERDICT IS UNANIMOUS
In a competitive job market, a BU credential sets you apart.
Earn your CERTIFICATE IN PARALEGAL STUDIES
Classes start June 2
INFORMATION SESSION
Thursday, May 1, 6 p.m.
635 Commonwealth Avenue, Room 300
Charles River Campus, Boston
Register Today:
www.bu.edu/professional/2228
1-866-633-9370 x402
Refer to Priority Code CPE2228
Boston University Center for Professional Education

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2008
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself" – Sir Salman Rushdie
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

With spring, thoughts of a migrant world

Parisa Saranj

Last Saturday, the sun shined on us and on UMass with a compelling power reminding us of a change of the season. As I walked out of my room, I saw boys and girls sun-bathing in their swimsuits or playing in groups of two and more on any open space available. The energy all around the campus was high and refreshing. Almost everyone was enjoying the day.

All of a sudden, a nostalgic feeling slapped me across the face like I had done something wrong. Then, I remembered my land – we never celebrate the sun by lying down on our backs outside. Well, I thought, it is because Islamic dress codes are different from here. Also, it is that the sun always shines on us and we barely notice its existence. At last, I am from the land of sun, where winters are mild and often snowless and summers are blessed by the constant dry-heat. Isn't it a part of human nature to not notice things which surround them all the time?

Feeling invisible, nostalgic, overloaded by the pressures of my busy semester, and influenced by a recent reading for a class, a whole mixture of thoughts, questions and even discussions about the issue of "immigration" started in my head. I went on and on fighting with myself, trying to make sense of my emotions toward this place I am living. Have I done the right thing by leaving my family and home to come to the U.S.?

I like where I am living, and I long for the place I left behind. There are some bitter experiences about where I lived which I do not want to face again and there are some unpleasant things about here which I wish not to have sensed.

So, I take the walk down the hill thinking.

Almost every single person that we interact with every day has some sort of link with "immigration."

Sometimes I frown at the questions I am asked. Do you have to wear the "thing" when you go home? I want to say "it is not a thing." It is as comfortable as not wearing a "scarf." Last week someone asked me to tell her about Egypt since it was "close and alike to Iran." Many times I even feel disturbed when people pronounce my name the way that is easy for them.

Now, one will definitely say if you were so fond of your life, why did you ever immigrate in the first place? Aren't I a human? Don't I have rights to choose the boundaries within which I want to live? Don't I – as a woman – have the right to progressive higher education? And can't I have the desire to be understood by my fellow human beings?

Perhaps I shouldn't be so sensitive. And after all, I am complaining about some small lack of knowledge and misunderstanding of cultures and of languages. Eventually, I will graduate and move on with my life, probably holding my nose high, bragging about my American degree. What about those Asian, Hispanic or Jamaican laborers? Didn't they immigrate too?

Some of them must have undergone so many more hardships than me to get themselves to the land of opportunities. Some of them are laughed at for their broken English or stereotypes held against them. Some work two jobs to provide for their families back home. What the hell am I complaining for?

Even though this education is costing me so much, I will eventually benefit from it. Even though I miss home from time to time, I am getting to see the world at last. Maybe I am just homesick. Maybe I am much more disturbed than I think I am about family crises. Maybe it is the end-of-semester fever that is hitting me a little bit too early. Anyhow, I believe it doesn't hurt us to look around. We live in the United States of America, where people of all races and colors have come together to build this country. Almost every single person that we interact with every day has some sort of link with "immigration." Someone in their family must have emigrated from a country at one point or another.

I guess all I am trying to say is that it was joyful that we celebrated the rare visit of the sun. It is because we hadn't had it around for a long time.

Jamaica Kincaid once put in words in her book "A Small Place" that "Every native everywhere lives a life of overwhelming and crushing banality and boredom and desperation ... Every native would like to find a way out; every native would like a rest, and every native would like a tour ... They are too poor to escape the reality of their lives; and they are too poor to live properly in the place where they live."

As we rejoice, let's remember those who have become too small to see among us.

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at pmw300@yahoo.com.

The blind spot in the fight for human rights

Bruce Lerner

Tibet, the Olympics, Tibet, Darfur, the Olympics, China, Chinese, human rights violations ... this is all I seem to hear around UMass. "Save Darfur," "Free Tibet." What about Iraq, Afghanistan?

It's quite interesting that many talented and able people choose to divert their resources to focus on the human rights violations of countries that happen to be economic rivals of the U.S. It used to be Russia during the good ol' Cold War days, but now it is our friendly red neighbor, China. Tibet and Darfur are the main targets of well-meaning, socially conscious college students and the names of these places frequently grace the T-shirts of the masses. Unfortunately, there are several moral dilemmas that come up when one engages in "freeing" Tibet or in "saving" Darfur.

The main problem is the sheer hypocrisy that passes by unnoticed when someone asks if a person is aware of how many people died in Sudan on a certain day. I am not excusing the crimes against humanity that are taking place in other parts of the world. Rather, I am berating people who ignore what their country is doing, and ignore their own role in the violence, in order to criticize the actions of another country.

As my mother used to tell me at meals whenever I would criticize my brother, let's look at our own plate for once.

Iraq can boast of over one million people dead as a direct result of our government's unchecked actions. Afghanistan is not as big of a catastrophe, but an honorable mention nevertheless with tens of thousands, if not more, dead for the crime of being born too dark-skinned in an oil-rich region of the world. It looks like Uncle Sam has some 'splainin to do before he goes pointing his fingers at anyone else.

It looks like Uncle Sam has some 'splainin to do before he goes pointing his fingers at anyone else.

How can the greatest purveyor of violence in the world – the [illegible] Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. proclaim to have human rights at heart when it formulates foreign policy? How can the citizens of this lawless and violent nation ignore their own crimes? That is exactly what citizens do when they talk about Tibet or Darfur. They take resources away from where they count most and help the elite continue its aggression against innocent people.

What are we to do about human rights abuses in other places? We have several options regarding several conflicts. We could petition the government to pass a resolution condemning the acts of violence in Tibet and Darfur, and we could do something like boycott the Olympics. Surely, our good intentions would be well received by the rest of the world's countries, right? Not exactly, given that people in other countries have a thing called memory which allows them to recall the fruits of the United States' past good intentions, such as Vietnam. The U.S. has the credibility of a tobacco man selling the cure for asthma.

Another option is to stop the atrocities going on in the world in places like Iraq, which are surely equal in magnitude to those in other regions. Simply stop supporting the government policies and letting the criminals in our own country do whatever they want. At that point, some credibility might be restored to the United States. I hope I am being clear: we must stop being criminals before we can criticize others for their transgressions. That's also in the Bible somewhere, for you religious folks.

Bottom line: good intentions do not count in world politics, because they are too easy to proclaim. As a history professor of mine said, although he was off the mark on many important issues, "This is international politics – it's not a game of beanbag." We have to take off the Darfur T-shirts and start making Iraq, Afghanistan and "don't attack Iran" ones. Until we realize what kind of place we live in and what our flag means for people in other countries, the world will continue to be a morally and physically uninhabitable place. Let's change these facts.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor,

On Feb. 22, University administrators entered the RSU office and removed a poster from our window which displayed information on safer sex as well as an explicit cartoon depiction of these practices. The poster was placed in the window with the purpose of promoting sexual education and openness. Prior to the removal, the administration sent members of the RSU several notices, claiming that we were disobeying administrators' directions and misusing University property. The Radical Student Union refused to comply with the requests for several reasons. While explicit, the images depicted on this poster promoted an educational message. One cannot consider these images obscene, as they are covered under free speech.

We feel that we have a duty to educate the University community about safer sex practices, regardless of the sexual orientation of the targeted audience. In the past academic year several hate crimes have been perpetrated against the queer community on our campus. The reaction to our poster's display presented another manifestation of the homophobic climate here at UMass.

We believe that the freedom of expression should be self-evident, and that any attempt to restrict this freedom should be immediately remedied by a concerned and righteous public. We see in our nation's Constitution that "we hold these truths to be self-evident," but we also see this in the very core of our beliefs as students and as Americans; this is why we were surprised to be charged under the UMass Student Code of Conduct with disobeying an administrator and unauthorized use of University property, all in response to a poster that had content with which some people disagreed.

In our conversations with administrators and peers we were even more surprised to learn that, in this public institution and "marketplace of ideas" and learning, there is no official articulation of a freedom to express. Instead, we see this freedom whittled away so that academic departments can regulate postings. Under the document concerning Time, Place and Manner, all expression on campus can be controlled at the discretion of the chancellor. We believe that this supreme decision-making power is a direct violation of the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. This infringement on our freedom is symptomatic of the administration's plan to further limit student control over student spaces.

In this "marketplace of ideas" and learning, there is no official articulation of a freedom to express.

We see this infringement on freedom of expression and free speech as a warning sign for students and RSOs. The UMass community must know that their own freedoms are not secure. They are given and taken away at the discretion of the Chancellor. We ask that the University codify the freedom of expression in its own Student Code of Conduct and other administrative documents.

The Radical Student Union

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

The Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) is lobbying the State House today to support a fully-funded, accessible public higher education system. What do you think?

- ☐ I think it's 'phenomenal.'
- ☐ I think it's a bad idea.
- ☐ I think I have a paper due.

Vote and discuss at
www.dailycollegian.com

ED/OP IS PROUD TO SUPPORT THE 1924 UNITED KINGDOM OLYMPIC TRACK AND FIELD TEAM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Riding 'the lightning' with Grand Buffet

Hip-hop duo delivers with outlandish rhymes, enthusiasm

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This Thursday, to use Grand Buffet's own words, the city of Northampton will ideally resemble "Tel Aviv, but with more iced cinnamon bun franchises."

Whatever the band thinks of the city upon their arrival, the atmosphere within the Iron Horse Music Hall will be entirely under their collective control, echoing the raw energy and humor of the exuberant showmen.

Armed with backing beats and a pair of microphones, Grand Buffet are known for their energetic stage performances.

To claim that Grand Buffet have a flair for the dramatic would be a gross understatement. The lively Pittsburgh hip-hop duo possesses enough enthusiasm and stage monikers to span an orchestra worth of musicians. Lord Grunge (also known as Jarrod Weeks and at times Viceroy) and Jackson O'Connell-Barlow (also known as Grape-A-Don and Plaps) combine their talents to create an impressive array of beats, energy and outlandish lyrics. With a musical career now spanning a decade, the duo have found themselves of late touring with critically-acclaimed bands such as the similarly theatrical Of Montreal, inspiring listeners along their travels with their two-pronged free-flowing attack. Now, in the midst of a headlining tour, the spotlight is directly placed on the duo.

"We don't have any instruments to hide behind or channel through," O'Connell-Barlow told the Daily Collegian via an online interview earlier in the week prior to their upcoming performance. "We got to pour ourselves out into that empty space."

"It's a rush," added Weeks. "It's like being in a cage fight naked."

While on tour, the band has been unveiling songs from their newest album "King Vision," a release the band admits is a sure sign of their musical progression. When asked about this shift, Weeks said, "I think the evolution of our sound is essential. I've got enough reasons to want to kill myself. Making a record that sounded just like one we made eight years ago isn't a reason I want to add to that list."

Described by O'Connell-Barlow as a concept album with a more prog-pop sound, the album features rhymes that delve into more prominent social and political issues than some of the duo's past works. "[The album] is over the top in its sincerity and sound in defiance of all the safe, 'subversive' hipster-magazine soundtrack bands out there snorting coke at art gallery parties whilst America is dying," said O'Connell-Barlow. "We put our balls on the chopping block with this 'heart on our sleeve' type of record. The sound of this album tends to soar more than sneak, so it runs the risk of getting shot down."

Still present throughout the length of the disc, however, is the band's unmistakable lyrical flow and ability to craft rhymes that are as identifiable with as they are, at times, outrageous. When asked about the inspiration behind their music and the creative process that fuels it, O'Connell-Barlow stated plainly, "I like using words that feel good in my mouth," while Weeks attributed, "dog sh*t-cheap wine," to being his muse in crafting the band's backing beats.

"I sit and listen to the beat for hours waiting for the wisdom of the collective unconscious gods to add substance to whatever rhythmic pattern I've worked out," said O'Connell-Barlow, further elaborating on the creative process. With lyrics that revolve around such topics as brown bears with masonry skills on "Bears and Bricks" and meteorites crashing into fish tanks on the newly released "Cheesecake Money," O'Connell-Barlow's subconscious is truly something to behold.

Jarrod Weeks (left) and Jackson O'Connell-Barlow (right) combine forces in the hip-hop duo Grand Buffet. The two will be performing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton this Thursday.

On one of the band's most popular and established songs, "Benjamin Franklin Music," the duo urge their listeners to "feel the lightning inside," a sentiment that has not been lost over the past decade of creating music. "The power and resolve of the self-loving, self-respecting, self-aware individual is the closest thing to magic I've yet to witness," said Weeks.

With their performance Thursday, both members hope the audience can, as they put it, "shake off the frozen bumblebees and generate the lightning," and transform the Iron Horse into a venue of limitless possibilities.

Grand Buffet plays Thursday, April 17 with opening acts B. Dolan and Party Wolf at The Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Doors open for the event at 10 p.m. and tickets are $8 in advance, $10 at the door.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

GRAND BUFFET
THE IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
THURSDAY, APRIL 17
10 P.M.
$8/$10

'Limbofest' entertains

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On May 1, 2004, Jim Bothwell, the proud owner of Tinker Hill Farm, a multi-acre property near the Holyoke Range, hosted a huge party. Blessed by great weather, and featuring performances by musicians and family friends including Cellohop, Slightly Cheaper and Stickman Boomerang, Limbofest was born. The party raged from 3 p.m. until it was ultimately "broken up by the cops at 11:15 p.m."

Since then, "Limbo" Jim Bothwell has gotten more ambitious with his spring party. This Saturday, April 12, marked his third Limbofest. Despite the promise of rain in the forecast, people began arriving at the event's new location at Look Park in Northampton even before the scheduled start time of 12 p.m.

This year's Limbofest featured a diverse ensemble of artists, with past headliners and reggae hip-hop band the Alchemystics topping the bill. Also on the list were funk jam bands Shokazoba, Otherwise and Cellobop and a solo cellist named Gideon Freudmann, who was the lineup's most unique artist, playing the cello with a Jimmy Page-like fury.

Moods ran high on the unexpectedly beautiful day, with organizer Bothwell walking around greeting the festivalgoers and stopping to play hacky sack, give out complimentary sunscreen or just talk and make sure that everyone was having a good time.

Bothwell and partner Jay Metcalf, despite the rigors that come with handling an event of this size, were able to take time out of the event to sit down and reflect on the outcome of the festival. When asked about the change of venue from years passed, Bothwell remarked that he'd love to have the festival at his house; however, he has since sold the property and now "doesn't have a backyard to put it in."

Metcalf, who also doubles as the keyboardist for headlining act Alchemystics, said they "tried all last year to find a place to put on the festival," but their attempts at relocating were thwarted.

"[This year's move to Look Park] was easier than expected," said Metcalf. "The park owners were very accommodating and really we couldn't have asked for a nicer spot."

What is remarkable is the fact that, despite the size of the event, Bothwell, the heart and soul of Limbofest, didn't need to hire much outside labor. Everything was done by family and friends.

When asked, Bothwell explained that the festival isn't about the money. Though the event technically costs $10 per person or $50 per car, he stresses that these are just "suggested contributions."

Everything from the artwork of the posters to the large number of volunteers seems to have been done out of the desire by others to merely help Bothwell put on the event. When asked about the surprisingly large number of volunteers, Metcalf explained that, "they are all Northfire [Records] interns, volunteering on behalf of the local record company."

Volunteers, sporting bright yellow "Limbofest" T-shirts, were well taken care of by Pizza Shark, which provided them with free slices.

Scott Freedman, an Amherst resident and Hampshire College student who volunteered for the event, said that he was a first-time volunteer and that he gave up his afternoon because he wanted "the experience of helping to put on shows." Freedman hopes to one day make a living doing events like these and says that he volunteered for the prospect of future job experience – as well as the free food, which he lamented, "hasn't arrived."

As soon as the Pizza Shark

See LIMBOFEST on page 7

Solo cellist Gideon Freudmann was one of several live performers to entertain at the third installment of "Limbofest."

London to play Bezanson

New York City-based trumpeter Frank London will bring his talents and vast experience to Bezanson Recital Hall Thursday night.

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today, art of the daring variety manages to garner the most praise in our present landscape. When an artist is unafraid of implementing fusion and embraces genre-jumping or melding, positive attention follows closely behind. It is near impossible to be considered a creative force, especially when it comes to music, without fusing sounds and cultures into one unique expression.

Even with this in mind, one cannot help but perform a double take when examining New York City-based trumpeter Frank London's résumé: trumpet solo on LL Cool J's 1989 platinum hit "Going Back to Cali," film score to the 1992 animated version of "Pinocchio" and current prominent figure in the Jewish tradition of klezmer music.

London will perform with Hazonos at the Fine Arts Center's Bezanson Recital Hall Thursday night as part of the FAC and WMUA's Magic Triangle Jazz Series. This is the third installment of the three-part series, which also included Adam Rudolph's Moving Pictures in February and the Omar Sosa Afreecanos Quartet earlier this month.

Frank London received his BA in Afro-American music from the New England Conservatory of Music in 1980, propelling him into a slew of collaborations and compositions over the course of his career. He is best known for his trumpet-blowing prowess, though he also composes and conducts.

London has performed with an array of artists and bands, including current projects with the Klezmatics, an East Village-based neo-klezmer band formed in 1986 and devoted to a mix of contemporary English styles and older Yiddish tradition; and Hasidic New Wave, a Manhattan quintet fusing improvisational jazz and funk with Hasidic Jewish styles.

Previously, London served as conductor and musical director for Talking Heads front man David Byrne's "The Knee Plays," which was composed for Robert Wilson's 1985 theatrical piece "the CIVIL warS." The music has recently been re-released in CD/DVD format for the first time. London has also composed scores for other theatrical works, as well as strictly vocal scores for theater and dance compositions.

London has composed music for a number of documentaries and feature- and short-length films, including his 1992 score to "Pinocchio." He scored this film with Les Miserables Brass Band, which he co-founded. London also co-founded the Klezmer Conservatory Band, a traditional Boston-based klezmer band.

In addition to all of his traditional work, London has contributed trumpet pieces for various popular musicians, including the aforementioned LL Cool J, the Velvet Underground's John Cale, 10,000 Maniacs' Natalie Merchant, free jazz genius John Zorn, They Might Be Giants and Ben Folds Five. He has also worked with the late poet/activist Allen Ginsberg.

Frank London & Hazonos will perform at Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. on Thursday. Admission is $12 for the general public and $7 for students. Tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., or through the Fine Arts Center's Web site, umass.edu/fac. Tickets are also available at the door beginning at 7 p.m.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

FRANK LONDON & HAZONOS
BEZANSON RECITAL HALL
THURSDAY, APRIL 17
8 P.M.
$7/$12

Off-kilter duo score with debut release

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Bret McKenzie and Jermaine Clement were just students in Wellington, New Zealand when their career as Flight of the Conchords first took off in 1998. Since then, the idiosyncratic duo have managed to gain recognition for their off-kilter HBO original series and comical music.

Flight of the Conchords is continuing its musical journey with an American full-length debut that is scheduled to land on store shelves April 22. The two lads teamed up with Sub Pop Records to make the album happen. With the Grammy nods received this past year from "The Distant Future E.P," it comes as no surprise Flight of the Conchords went back into the studio to buff up the music heard on its HBO series.

"Flight of the Conchords" is the new album that followed that last E.P. The jokesters compiled fifteen tracks for their newest offering, including a few established favorites – "Robots" and "Business Time."

Using spoken word, diverse instrumentals and peculiar melodies, Flight of the Conchords conquers the art behind the musical comedy genre. For parody performers, Clement and McKenzie are both vivaciously musical. With the help of producer Mickey Petralia (Beck, "Midnight Vultures"), the duo covers the musical spectrum from cosmic rock to Brazilian-Asian fusion. McKenzie and Clement also integrate futuristic sounds with their use of synthesizers on "Inner City Pressure."

Aside from the occasional bizarre instrumentals, Flight of the Conchords keeps its folksy roots in tact with prominent use of acoustic guitars. Almost always with guitars around their necks, the boys expand the tunes from the show into polished arrangements.

"Business Time" is a hilarious Barry White-esque track that gives a comical take on Clement's lackluster sex life. The verses are heavily breathy and spoken word. Female backup vocals emphasize the song's overly suggestive, sexy tone.

Pretending to break barriers with New Zealand hip-hop, Flight of the Concords splits sides with the "mutha' flippin'" humorous track, "Hiphopopotamus Vs. Rhymenocerous." On the latter track, and "Boom," Mckenzie and Clement sing salaciously about sexism. "Flight of the Conchords" is filled with parados and irony through the dissonance between their comical lyrics and musical styles.

Bret McKenzie and Jermaine Clement have teamed up with Sub Pop Records to deliver their first American full-length album.

"FLIGHT OF THE CONCHORDS" SUB POP RECORDS
3.5/5

At some times, Flight of the Conchords is smart in its satirism, with songs like "Bowie" and "Robots." At others, the duo gets senseless with childish lyrics, like "I like pie" on the track "Leggy Blonde."

Through it all, the boys accurately depicted the show's overall humor on this soundtrack. These songs can stand alone just fine, without watching McKenzie and Clement singing them on the small screen. If you are a fan of the show, the album will satisfy your expectations. With flair and an interesting dynamic, Flight of the Conchords will take you on a musical escapade of laughs by delving headfirst into several genres.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

Morgan Spurlock back to his old tricks

'Supersize-Me' director sets out in search of Osama Bin Laden in latest doc film

BY ROGER MOORE
THE ORLANDO SENTINEL

With his disarming "reuneck" grin and his even-tempered even-handedness, we could do a lot worse than have somebody like Morgan Spurlock lead the hunt for Osama Bin Laden.

But the director of "Super Size Me" shows something else – guts – in his sober-minded but comical, skeptical but never cynical documentary, "Where in the World is Osama Bin Laden?"

He asks that funny question in some parts of the world where most Americans would be afraid of visiting, much less asking that question. His answers surprised him and almost certainly will surprise you, too.

Spurlock's film begins with a pregnancy. His partner, Alex, the one so worried about all those Big Macs he ate, is having his child. "What kind of world will this baby be born in?" he frets. What can he do about that world, something that would maybe get him out of the East Village during all those tedious pre-natal birth-coaching lessons, maybe something that would also make a cool movie?

Why, hunt down Terror Suspect Number One!

"If the C.I.A. and the F.B.I. can't find him, I'm going to have to," he declares, just to make the world safe for his unborn child.

Spurlock starts out flippant, pasting Bin Laden's face on a dancer in a music video of "Can't Touch This," depicting Middle East history and conflict in animated video-game graphics. He visits his doctor for inoculations for a long overseas trip into the developing world and consults with a self-defense specialist who does everything from training him on how to choose a safe place to sit in a restaurant to how to act after being kidnapped.

"Are you gonna convert to Muslim 'n not?" one rube dolled up as a terrorist demands.

And then Spurlock and his crew set out, meeting college students and street vendors in Egypt, rug merchants in Casablanca, "activists" and journalists in Jordan and Israel.

He goes to the last place Bin Laden was seen, Tora Bora, in Afghanistan, and even ventures into Pakistan, where experts believe the al-Qaida leader is hiding out.

His most hostile audience? Orthodox Jews in Israel curse him, bump him and have to be restrained by the Israeli Army, just because he asks about the root causes of the region's conflicts. The scariest interview subject is in Saudi Arabia. An imam who has just led a prayer calling for the destruction of America gives Spurlock the crazy eyes. Spurlock isn't the first to note that Islamic terrorism has its recruiting, ideological, financial roots firmly in the Kingdom.

He does a ride-along with U.S. troops in Afghanistan, dines with a family in Morocco, sips coffee in a few Starbucks (and one Palestinian "Star & Bucks"), hears an awful lot of Muslims curse Bin Laden and a few curse America.

"It's hard to see how damaged the reputation of the country I know and love has become," Spurlock says.

His movie has a good humor that sometimes crosses into cutesy, but his message comes through thanks to his sincerity. Simply put, he's not Michael Moore. There's nothing snide or sarcastic in his approach. Yes, he's critical of the Bush administration, but he's willing to ask an Army officer what was lost when we didn't swarm over Afghanistan until we caught Bin Laden in 2011, and he's willing to accept that answer. He can whoop it up in the grand redneck tradition after the rush of shooting a machine gun and a rocket launcher.

And he can discuss the evils of Israeli "settlement" activity (seizing Palestinian land) from the freshly bombed classroom of an Israeli school.

The ending is a bit of a cop-out, and the film has far fewer answers than questions. But Spurlock's sassy, smart and cutting little movie frames the conflict in a way that's both perfectly sane and perfectly silly.

It's not his fault he had no more luck than the best and the brightest in government and the military in finding Bin Laden. But at least he knows that if you can make a "Hammer-time" music video about your boogeyman, the terrorists won't win.

Filmmaker Morgan Spurlock continues his comical brand of investigative journalism in his latest effort, "Where in the World is Osama Bin Laden?"

'Limbofest' succeeds, thanks to volunteers

LIMBOFEST from page 6

truck pulled up, he departed with the assertion that it's always a good thing to put on shows.

Another local volunteer, Mike Sterns, volunteered for completely different reasons.

"I came for the show a few years back and wasn't told to go home," he said.

Freedman and Stern's dedication to the music and the spirit of the event is something that the festival couldn't run without.

The artwork for the event's posters and passes was also done by volunteers. David Drew Longey, a multiple media artist and founder of handofdave.com, even took the time to explain the design for the posters which were hung every several feet around the park. Longey, whose company is based in Greenfield, Mass., says that the poster design was taken from a "Chubby Checker album" and even sports Chubby Checker himself on the design.

By 3:30 p.m., the band Otherwise had finished setting up in the adjacent tent and was ready to start their scheduled 3:15 p.m. set. The lineup, which allowed for one hour for each band, proved to be more of a loose guideline as the bands repeatedly played over their allotted time for the gathered fans.

Otherwise ended their set with a blistering 10-minute jam, complete with an epic bass-shredding solo. Before leaving, they thanked the crowd for showing up on what they called "the most beautiful day we've had in 10 months." After the set, bassist Matt Beckett was eager to take time from helping to pack up the van and answer a few questions about his band's involvement in the event.

Beckett said that his band's influences include "electronica and house sounds," but maintains that the band's first love is dub reggae. According to Beckett, the band's newest member, who joined in October, was selected to join the festival because he, like so many other of the people that form the life blood of the event, has known Bothwell and fellow act the Alchemystics for quite a while.

By 7:30 p.m., local funk act Shokazoha was in the middle of their set in the tent on what was then developing into a crisp evening. The band was able to get the tent jumping, inspiring dancing and cheering in the crowd. Clad in all red, the band's lead singer hopped around the stage, letting the multicolored lights dance off the smoke around him, with all the energy and enthusiasm of a 12-year-old boy on Christmas.

Shortly after the band departed and the smoke machine and lights were given a rest, the Alchemystics took the stage. Getting up to their gear in record time, they were eager to give the crowd a taste of their blend of hip-hop and reggae. The Alychemystics proved to be the most polished act on the bill and wasted no time dipping into both new and old material.

The band's age and ethnicity differed greatly with each member, while some members, such as fedora-clad keyboardist and festival organizer Metcalf, were clearly in their late 30's or 40's, the band also featured a backup singer who sports the kind of gray beard that can only flower with age.

When asked if the day went according to plan, Metcalf answered quickly and confidently, "Perfect. Exactly."

"With everything running so smooth, I certainly hope it will [continue into the future]," said Metcalf.

Pete Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

"Limbofest" was created by Jim Bothwell in 2004, and has grown in size and popularity ever since.

CALL NOW TO SECURE YOUR POSITION (888) 277-9787
www.collegepro.com

PAINTING SUMMER MONEY FUN

ATTENTION STUDENTS: It's not too late to score a great summer job! We are College Pro Painters and we are currently hiring for the summer.

You could earn $3000 to $7000 Plus!
NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

- We are currently hiring for Painter and Job Site Manager positions. Many positions are available throughout your state
- We offer an awesome bonus structure for those who want to earn even more money.
- You can work outside with other students and make new friends.
- You can learn useful skills such as planning, organization, and customer relations.

CENTRAL
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
FREE ADMISSION – RAIN OR SHINE
AT VAN METER COURTS
4:20:08 RUN FOR THE HILL
- STRONGHOLD IN SIAM 6:15 -
- LEAVING LONDON 5:00 -
- STATE YOUR MIND 3:45 -
- ANDERSON COUNCIL 3:00 -
- ON THE ROCKS 2:00 -
- FINE AND DANDY TRIO 1:00 -
- RIVERBEND 12:00 -
This Program Made Possible in Part by a Grant from the UMass Arts Council.
Sponsored by Central Area Government, an alcohol-free event, all bags are subject to search.

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.®

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.®

Celtics, Pistons saving East

NEW YORK — For all the attention focused on the Western Conference playoff race, it's the Boston Celtics who have the NBA's best record.

The Detroit Pistons aren't far behind, which means the Eastern Conference has at least two teams capable of beating whoever survives the playoffs out West.

That should make for a much better NBA finals than last year, when the East had little hope of competing in the title round.

The San Antonio Spurs swept finals newcomer the Cleveland Cavaliers in four games, but it would have been hard to imagine any East team doing much better. That shouldn't be the case this June, especially if the East sends Boston, which proved it can stand up to the West by going 25-5 against the conference this season.

"Now you know the Celtics can," NBA commissioner David Stern said.

The Pistons went into the weekend with 55 wins, tied with West leader New Orleans. Detroit had the league's second-best record for most of the season, but has slipped a bit toward the finish while resting some of its starters.

Detroit is 21-8 against the West, with a game remaining against Minnesota.

The Pistons' 53-29 record last year won the East, but would have been good for only fourth out West. Cleveland was the East's only other 50-win team, but its 50-32 mark would have placed the Cavaliers sixth in the West — where their matchup with the Spurs would have come in the first round.

Though the West has been better for years, East teams have won two of the last four championships. Boston or Detroit would give them a chance to finish on top again this year.

"The West always gets a great reputation for being best in the league, but Miami won the championship," said TV analyst Kenny Smith, adding that Detroit won two years earlier. "The Western Conference I think is always the best from 1 to 8, but when you take the best two teams in terms of each conference, they're particularly not that much better."

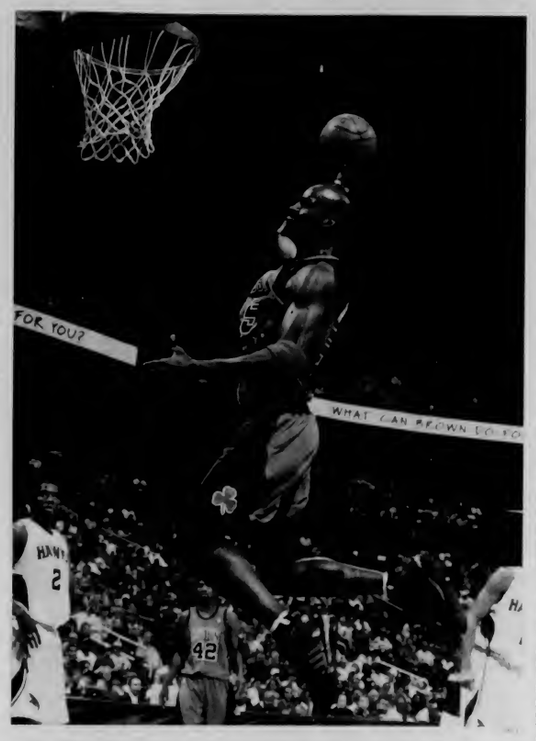
REBOUNDING ISN'T MAGIC

To reach the NBA finals, the Orlando Magic would likely have to survive matchups with Kevin Garnett and Rasheed Wallace, two All-Star power forwards.

Coach Stan Van Gundy isn't looking that far ahead, because he knows any matchup at that position could be tough for his team.

With the Magic going without a natural power forward, he worries that rebounding could be a concern long before a potential series against Boston or Detroit. The third-seeded Magic still don't know if they'll get Washington, Philadelphia or Toronto, but all could present a problem.

"We've got to get by a first-round matchup first," Van Gundy said. "Antawn Jamison's a great rebounder, you've got to keep (Chris) Bosh off the boards if you get Toronto, and Philadelphia's just a real athletic and aggressive team, so we're going to face that problem in the first round. But again, we've shown several times this year that we're very capable of rebounding the ball."



The stats confirm that. The Magic are in the league's top five in defensive rebounding, though in the middle of the pack in total rebounding and rebound margin. Much of their success comes from All-Star center Dwight Howard, the NBA's leading rebounder.

But with Orlando using Rashard Lewis as an undersized power forward, it remains vulnerable against teams with natural 4-men. And the Magic have ruled out a return by the injured Tony Battie, who could have helped in that area.

The Magic overcame any matchup problem well enough to win the Southeast Division, and Van Gundy hopes they continue to do it starting next weekend.

"We have not been a bad defensive rebounding team, but there are nights where we just, I think, No. 1 totally rely on Dwight and No. 2 don't bring a great rebounding focus, and that really hurts us," Van Gundy said. "Rebounding's not easy for us, it requires a great, great focus on it on all of our guys' part."

— Associated Press

The addition of Kevin Garnett to the Boston Celtics has helped legitimize the Eastern Conference in the NBA. The Celtics and Pistons are both considered strong enough to compete with the top-heavy West.

Bruins fall at home to Habs, face 3-1 deficit in first round

BOSTON — Patrice Brisebois snapped a scoreless tie late in the second period, rookie Carey Price posted his first playoff shutout and the Montreal Canadiens moved within one game of advancing with a 1-0 win over the Boston Bruins on Tuesday night.

Montreal	1
Boston	0

The Canadiens, the No. 1 seed in the Eastern Conference, lead the best-of-seven, first-round series 3-1 and can wrap it up at home Thursday night.

The teams played evenly for much of the hard-hitting, fast-paced game until Brisebois scored on a power play with 42 seconds left in the second period.

Then Carey continued doing what he had done throughout the series: shut down Boston's mediocre offense.

Carey, the fifth overall pick in the 2005 draft, stopped 27 shots as he tries to become the third rookie goalie to lead the Canadiens to a Stanley Cup, following Ken Dryden and Patrick Roy.

He stopped two solid bids in the second period even before Brisebois scored. At 10:55 he got in front of Glen Murray's point-blank shot. And 6 minutes later, he stopped a shot by Glen Metropolit from the top of the crease as the Bruins swarmed around the net.

The Canadiens, who have trailed just once in winning 10 of 11 games against the Bruins this season, went ahead midway through a power play after Andrew Ference was sent off for tripping.

Andre Kostitsyn skated behind the Boston net and fed the puck just in front of the crease. It was deflected out to Brisebois, who beat goalie Tim Thomas.

The previous two games had gone into overtime — a 3-2 win by the Canadiens and a 4-3 win by the Bruins. But Boston couldn't make it three in a row.

Price has allowed just [illegible] goals in the four games in which the Canadiens have scored [illegible] to continue the season-long domination of Boston. The team trailed in wins at eight of the Garden season matchups and the first two playoff games, starting with a 4-1 loss in Montreal in which the Bruins were held to just 13 shots.

After losing the first two games, the Bruins regained their first home playoff game since 2004, when they were eliminated by the Canadiens and current Boston coach Claude [illegible].

The Bruins took their lead against Montreal on [illegible] son on a goal by Mike [illegible] 1:2 minutes into Game [illegible] lasted until 4:26 of the [illegible] when Tom Kostopoulos beat [illegible] Marc Savard's goal [illegible] in overtime.

Now the Bruins, [illegible] offs for just the fourth [illegible] 1999, are one loss away from being eliminated in the first round for the third straight [illegible]

GAME NOTES

Phil Kessel, Boston's [illegible] leading goal scorer in the [illegible] season, was a healthy scratch for the third straight game. Right wing Michael Ryder did not play for the first time in the series as Montreal [illegible] after defensemen and [illegible] defenseman, Mark Stuart, [illegible] ward. Player from Boston College's NCAA championship team, wearing their jerseys, [illegible] the ice to be introduced [illegible] a timeout 13 minutes into the game.

— Associated Press

$500 student bonus cash
EXCLUSIVE OFFER
Additional savings just for college and trade school students, recent grads and grad students

Ford 11 DRIVES COLLEGE STUDENT PURCHASE PROGRAM

$500 student bonus cash
www.FordDrivesU.com/College

2008 Ford Focus SES

HOLLYWOOD

Ford Drives U To the "REEL" WORLD Sweepstakes

Go to www.FordDrivesU.com/College for your chance to win a "Reel" Hollywood experience and a New 2009 Ford Focus!

Ford LINCOLN MERCURY

See Web site for $500 Student Bonus Cash Official Program Rules. www.FordDrivesU.com/College
NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO ENTER THE FORD DRIVES U TO THE "REEL" WORLD SWEEPSTAKES. Sweepstakes is open to legal residents of the 48 contiguous United States and District of Columbia who are at least 18 years of age and currently enrolled as a part-time or full-time student at a nationally accredited U.S. college or university and possess a valid U.S. driver's license. Sweepstakes commences at 12:00:01 PM on March 15, 2008 and ends at 11:59:59 PM on December 31, 2008. Sweepstakes is subject to Official Rules. For complete prize descriptions and approximate retail values or to obtain Official Rules, log onto www.FordDrivesU.com/College VOID IN ALASKA AND HAWAII AND WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW.

STUDENT DISCOUNT!

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org 413-256-4071

Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE

Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Minutewomen fall to Terriers

Pozar retires after suffering back spasms

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

Yesterday the Massachusetts women's tennis team took on Boston University in what amounted to an extended warm-up session for the upcoming Atlantic 10 tournament this weekend.

The Minutewomen did not win a match, losing to the Terriers, 7-0. It was their first loss in six meets, but UMass (11-10, 4-0 A-10) has already locked up the No. 1 seed in the conference tournament with a victory over Rhode Island last weekend.

BU	7
UMass	0

"I feel like whether we won or whether we lost, either way we are in good shape," UMass coach Judy Dixon said.

The Minutewomen did not exactly hand over the win, but Dixon knows her Minutewomen had bigger goals coming up than the Terriers (9-7).

"I mostly wanted to use this as a stepping stone to the A-10 Tournament," Dixon said. "I wanted the team to play hard and compete well and make sure no one got injured. In terms of the outcome, I can't say I was really focused on the outcome one way or another."

Unfortunately, Dixon's goals were not fully accomplished. Senior captain Masha Pozar was forced to forfeit her singles match when she suffered an injury. Pozar was facing Terriers' sophomore Francine Whu and fell behind 3-0 in the first set before back spasms hit and she had to retire. Dixon noted that Pozar had a cold coming into this match, and the combination of having to play outdoors in cold weather and the constant traveling may have triggered the spasms. Dixon did not feel the injury was too serious and expects Pozar to be ready for Friday's A-10 Tournament.

Masha Pozar was forced to retire from her match with the Terriers' Francine Whu after suffering back spasms. She is not expected to miss the Atlantic 10 Championships.

It became apparent that the Minutewomen would not be heading into the postseason on a winning streak once they lost the doubles point. In 19 out of the last 21 meets UMass has played in, the team to win the doubles portion of the meet went on to win the event.

That held true yesterday, as all three doubles pairings for the Minutewomen lost, though all of the matches were competitive and could have gone either way. Pozar and Candyence Bones lost 8-5, Kristin DiPiero and Tanisha Hodgson lost 8-6 and Maude Ecluyse and Laura Danai lost 8-4.

Boney had her four-match win streak come to an end at the hands of URI junior Yana Sadovskaya, 7-5, 6-4. Boney had won the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week for the fifth time this season entering the match, but the freshman standout was unable to pull out the victory.

Usually Kaitlyn Carpenter competes at the third slot, but she is currently sidelined with an ankle injury, so Dixon was forced to juggle her roster in slots three through six. Hodgson was moved up from her usual fifth slot to play the three. She lost to Vanessa Steiner 6-4, 6-1. Dixon expects Carpenter to be back for the tournament.

Laura Danai, who played in the fifth position, had the most competitive singles match against the Terriers. Her match went into the tiebreaker after the first two sets, but she fell to Elizabeth Corrao 6-3, 3-6 10-5.

It would have been nice for the Maroon and White to head into the A-10 Tournament on a winning note. Nonetheless, Dixon is fairly pleased with where the Minutewomen stand after their last tune-up before the big tournament.

"I feel like we are in the best place we could be right now. I don't think there's anything that I would do differently in terms of our preparation," Dixon said. "I am a little concerned that we're a little tired because of all the traveling the team has done, but we should be fine once we get to the tournament and the adrenaline kicks in."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

UMass claims Beanpot title at Fenway Park

BASEBALL from page 12

against the Crimson, striking out six in the 3-0 win.

Dicato was aided last night by three quick runs in the first inning off of BC starter Kevin Moran. UMass had three hits in the inning, drew a walk and benefited from a throwing error by the third baseman on a bunt attempt.

"We just tried to put as much pressure on them as possible," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "They started a freshman and he was a bit nervous. He didn't throw too many strikes and we were able to capitalize on that."

After Moran exited in the second inning, reliever Ted Ratliff shut the Minutemen down over the next 5 2/3 innings. UMass added an insurance run in the ninth inning – which proved to be the winning run – when Kyle Multner lined a single to right, scoring Andrew Black, who led off the inning with an infield single and was moved to second on a sacrifice bunt by Andy Tuetken.

Perhaps feeling a bit fatigued, Dicato walked both Barry Butera and Michael Bellfiore to lead off the bottom of the ninth. Sanchez appeared to be struck by the first pitch on the arm, but the umpire called him back, saying the ball hit the bat for a foul ball.

Dicato's next offering was sent into shallow right-center field, but neither Adam Tempesta at second base or outfielders Brian Baudinet or Mike Donato could come up with it.

Following the single, Eric Campbell hit a run-scoring fielder's choice, making the game 4-1. Mickey Wiswall then lined a single, bringing the Eagles one run closer at 4-2.

Dicato was lifted in favor of Eilenberg, as Dicato walked off to a huge ovation. Eilenberg hit Garret Smith on the very first pitch, loading the bases with one out. Eilenberg then ran the count 3-0 to John Spatola, but battled back and got the out on a sacrifice fly to center, which brought the score to 4-3.

Eilenberg ended the game when Shaughnessy looked at the third strike on the outside corner.

"Mitchell [entered] in a very tough spot with the championship on the line and he got his outs," Garrity said. "That's what you need from a guy coming out of the pen – to battle and compete, and that's exactly what he did."

Scott Barnsby is still the last Minuteman to throw a no-hitter. That came on April 22, 1997 against Northeastern – at Fenway Park.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

The Minutemen celebrate while holding the Beanpot Trophy. A 3-0 win over Harvard propelled them into the championship game.

Minutewomen sweep Rams

SOFTBALL from page 12

Whitney Williams came alive in Game 2 against the Rams, going 3-for-3 with two RBIs and three runs scored while batting seventh. She went 0-for-2 in the leadoff spot in Game 1.

inning, as Rhode Island took the lead, 2-0. Sanders had trouble with centerfielder Stefani Poedubicky, who went 3-for-3 with a home run, triple and a single.

"She was just missing her pitches and falling behind," Sortino said about Sanders' early struggles. "The leadoff hitter was a good hitter, she went 3-for-3 against [Sanders]. I think she's coming on strong."

In the second inning URI freshman pitcher Stacey Stanovich looked to be cruising along as she got her first two batters to pop out. With two outs, the bottom of the lineup got things going for UMass.

Williams singled to start the rally for the Minutewomen. Junior second baseman Carly Morin, who dove for a ground ball and flipped it to first from her knees on defense the inning before, hit an RBI double. Sophomore Carly Normandin knocked an RBI triple down the line to tie the game, 2-2. Maroney then knocked Normandin in with a single. The Minutewomen scored two more runs to combine for six straight hits, scoring five runs.

Poedubicky's home run in the next inning cut the lead down to two runs. That was as close as URI would come. With the run support, Sanders was able to handle the URI hitters. She struck out eight batters and only walked one.

"That's a great game for Bailey, that's fabulous," Sortino said after learning that Sanders had eight strikeouts.

UMass would add six more runs in the fourth inning with back-to-back home runs from the bottom of the lineup. Williams knocked a two-run homer to deep center and Morin came up next with a shot over the right field fence.

In Game 1, junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter held URI to one hit over seven innings, striking out nine batters. Maroney had two hits and an RBI as UMass totaled four runs in the shutout victory.

"I thought her stuff got better, her moving pitches got better as the game moved on," Sortino said.

The Minutewomen play again on Thursday at Boston University. Game time is set for 3:30 p.m.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Dicato picks up game at right time

DICATO from page 12

(son of Dan Shaughnessy from The Boston Globe) being the only base runner to reach (walk).

In the next inning, Dicato allowed Mickey Wiswall to reach first base on a walk but quickly responded by inducing a double play on the next at bat before striking out the final batter of the inning.

Even when he surrendered the first Eagle hit of the game in the ninth inning, it was a bloop single by Tony Sanchez that fell in between the right fielder, center fielder and second baseman.

Mike Donato, Brian Baudinet and Adam Tempesta all came within a couple of yards of reaching the pop up, but it was placed perfectly by the BC catcher and ended Dicato's bid to keep the opposition hitless.

After a fielder's choice and another single, Eilenberg relieved Dicato and prevented the Eagles from tying the game, but it was certainly a memorable day for Dicato.

While no Minuteman could get to Sanchez's ball, Dicato received plenty of defensive help throughout the game, something that cannot be said of every UMass game this season.

The defensive effort was highlighted by Donato's over-the-shoulder catch in the sixth inning that would have resulted in extra bases for Shaughnessy, possibly a triple.

Had Shaughnessy reached, the Eagles would have had a man on second or third with no outs and a chance to get on the scoreboard.

Dicato, one of four Malden Catholic High School graduates on the team, struggled last season for the Minutemen. He posted an 0-7 record with a 6.17 earned run average and also allowed a team-high seven home runs.

However, he's shared more success this season and currently has a 2-1 record with a 2.96 ERA in 2008, including 6 1/3 shutout innings against Harvard in the first round of the Beanpot. He also is yet to allow a home run.

"I think it's more of a mental state with him," catcher Bryan Garrity said of Dicato's improvement from last season to this season. "You know a guy gets on and he relaxes now and I think in the past … it seemed like he'd go a couple innings, he'd pitch great and then maybe a runner would get on and he'd get a little flustered. I think he's relaxed a lot more mentally and he knows that he can get the next guy out."

When looking at the box score, it appears that Dicato struggled with walks in yesterday's victory but that statistic can be deceiving.

He walked six in the game but only three of these came in the first seven innings. Dicato walked one in the eighth and two more in the ninth when fatigue began to set in.

If Dicato can pitch the remainder of the season with anywhere near the success of yesterday, no one's going to be complaining about his walks.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
LIVE BANDS
FRIDAY, 4/18/08
ONE THEORY
SATURDAY, 4/19/08
MARK SNOW
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Hump this!

	7	1				4
3				6				8
				7		3	1
		8	5				7	4
		2				8
4	6				8	5
	1	7		5
6				8				7
		3				6	5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Cocoyams
6 Org.
10 Mosque prayer leader
14 Popeye's girl
15 Key pie ingredient
16 Allied org.
17 Hollow tubes
18 Chills and fever
19 Shortest distance (her)
20 Shocking
22 Threesome
23 Long time
24 Like neighbor's lawn?
26 Card game
30 Swerved
31 Alleviates
32 Guitarist Atkins
33 Distinctive doctrines
37 Part of B.A.
38 Burns slightly
39 Sad
40 Land chart
41 Collides intentionally
42 List of candidates
43 Does Virginia's dance
45 Wobble
46 Contract and wrinkle
49 ___ Diego
50 Dove's desire
51 Ways
57 Declaim violently
58 Patella's place
59 Small crown
60 Transition point
61 Borden's prince
62 Miami Vice" co-star
63 Gazed at
64 Ark. neighbor
65 Actress Witherspoon

DOWN
1 Outcroppings
2 Touched the tarmac
3 Philbin's co-host
4 Concluded
5 Six-line stanzas of poems
6 French actor Delon
7 Portent
8 Contraband carriers
9 Born as 10 Amazing
11 Cheech of "Nash Bridges"
12 Make amends
13 Lawn tool
21 ___ Angeles
22 Golfer's peg
25 Furrows
26 Big pile
27 Nobleman
28 Dog star?
29 Limited
30 Counterfeits
32 Dare
34 Venetian blind strip
35 Like a mime
36 Fortuneteller
38 Native Canadian
42 Figure in the Forum
44 Actress Arden
45 Black goo
46 Binge
47 Intoxicating
48 Extent
49 Severe
52 Bright sign
53 Cairo's river
54 Showed up
55 Son of Aphrodite
56 Enclosure with a rink
58 Hobbyist's buy

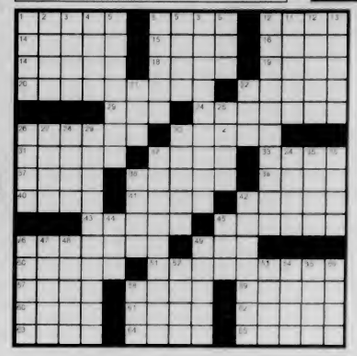
Founders Day is Tuesday, April 29, marking our 145th birthday. Come to a free morning performance of music and dance in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Enjoy birthday lunch in the tents outside the Fine Arts Center. BBQ, entertainers, free cake, swipes accepted
UMASS AMHERST Since 1863
And You Thought Your Work Study Job was Tough...
Play the UMass Amherst trivia game and try to win a free lunch at Founders Day. www.CampusLive.com
Founders Day
Tuesday, April 29
Info at www.umass.edu/foundersday

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Well, I don't use the toilet much to pee in. I almost always pee in the yard or the garden, because I like to pee on my estate."

— Iggy Pop

BROTHERS WATT By William Wilson



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

JUST AN OBSERVATION By Ben Leonberg

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Tell the graduate students to stop whining.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
No matter how many Facebook bumper stickers you get, it will never make up for not having a car.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Watching lectures online is especially cool because you can watch them naked.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will become the heir to the fortune made from Paris Hilton's sex tape, but it still won't get you laid.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Read Reuben Hurricane Carter's autobiography and then you'll see why you have no reason to complain.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Stop pretending like you have something better to do than watch 14 episodes of 30 Rock in a row.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Where the hell is Ross Perot when you need him?

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stop studying philosophy and get yourself outside. If that's really even possible

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Even a blind person can see what's so great about you.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Shia LaBoeuf has a small reproductive organ but alien robot friends. Good trade off.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You aren't behind in writing your senior thesis. Your senior thesis is behind you, and you're bent over.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You are far too young to be balding on the inside. Get some Rogaine for the soul – Soulgaine.

CENTRAL UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
FREE ADMISSION - RAIN OR SHINE
AT VAN METER COURTS
4:20:08 RUN FOR THE HILL
- Stretching & Start 6:15
- Leave Lobby 5:00
- Start Your Mile 3:45
- Admission Closes 3:00
- Off the Bench 2:00
- Fun Run Begins 1:00
- Registration 12:00
Sponsored by Central Area Government, an alcohol-free event, all bags are subject to search.
This Program Made Possible in Part by a Grant from the UMass Arts Council.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038 resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

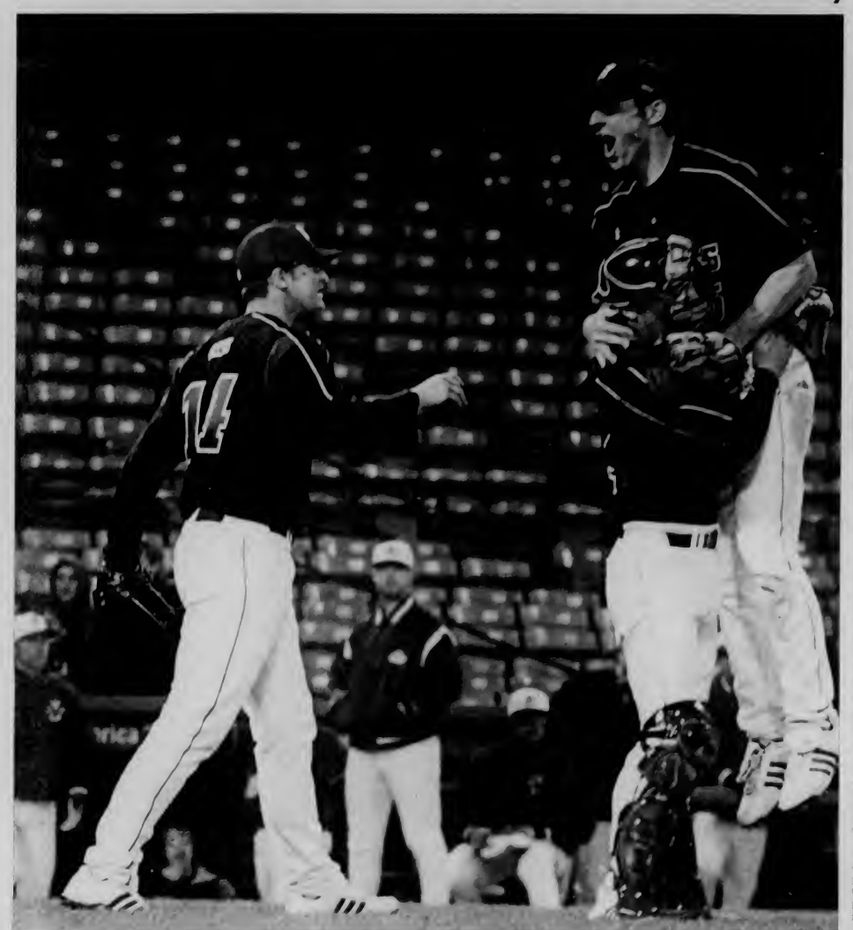
TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing.

SERVICES

STD screening & treatment. GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199. Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1



Spring Break 08 Hot Deals, Hot Destinations, Hot Parties. Ask about Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 16, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

To win one at Fenway

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

Thanks to stellar pitching by Mike Dicato and Mitchell Eilenberg (left), the Massachusetts baseball team defeated Boston College, 4-3, last night in Fenway Park to claim the 2008 Beanpot Championship. The Minutemen had not made the championship game since 2001 and had not won the tourney since 2000.

UM holds off BC rally, claim first Beanpot title since 2000

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON — Fenway Park has quite a history.

Massachusetts pitcher Mike Dicato came just three outs away from adding to it last night in the Beanpot Championship game against rival Boston College.

Entering the bottom of the ninth inning with a 4-0 lead, Dicato walked to the mound trying to capture UMass's first Beanpot Championship since 2000. Further adding to the pressure, he was three outs away from the first UMass no-hitter in 11 years.

Following two walks to start the ninth, Dicato lost the no-hit bid when Tony Sanchez's bloop single escaped the reach of three fielders converging in right-center field. But more importantly for UMass, it escaped Fenway with the victory, 4-3, as reliever Mitchell Eilenberg shut down BC's late rally to prevent the comeback.

UMass	4
BC	3

"I owe him dinner tonight," Dicato said of Eilenberg after the game. "He did a great job finishing the game."

Eilenberg preserved the win when Sam Shaughnessy was caught looking at strike three with the tying run at second base and the potential winning run at first. But it was Dicato's stellar performance that everyone wanted to talk about.

"He had command of all of his pitches, he was mixing it up on certain counts and he was throwing all of his pitches for strikes," catcher Bryan Garrity said. "He was battling out there and getting the job done for us."

"I had control of all of my pitches; I was confident, just in the zone," Dicato said. "It means everything to me; I grew up just a few miles from here. It's just awesome to enjoy this championship with my teammates."

Not only was Dicato a big reason UMass (11-14, 4-8 Atlantic 10) captured the title, but his stellar performance in the first round of the tournament against Harvard helped propel UMass to the championship game for the first time since 2001. Dicato pitched 6 2/3 shutout innings

See BASEBALL on page 10

Minutewomen take two more

Maroney, Williams power Maroon and White offense

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was a matchup of the best and the worst of the Atlantic 10. The Massachusetts softball team took care of business and swept Rhode Island yesterday at the Softball Complex, 4-1 and 12-3. UMass (27-11, 15-0 A-10) finished out its seven-game home stand and has now won fifteen straight games. URI is at the bottom of the A-10, dropping to 13-27 and 3-11 in the A-10. The Minutewomen are currently riding a 30-game win streak in A-10 play.

Despite the victories, UMass coach Elaine Sortino was not satisfied with her team's performance.

"Maintain is not a word in our vocabulary," Sortino said. "We really need to get better, and I'm not kidding."

JEAN-LUC LEON/COLLEGIAN

Carly Morin (11) went 3-for-3 in a 12-3 win over Rhode Island in Game 2 of yesterday's doubleheader. She knocked in two RBIs, scored two runs and hit her first home run of the season.

Neither were the Minutewomen, who exploded for 12 runs on 15 hits in Game 2. Sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams was moved to the No. 7 spot in the batting order.

Normally Williams is the leadoff hitter, but Sortino switched her with freshman designated hitter Lindsay Maroney. Williams flourished in her new spot, going 3-for-3 with a single, double and a two-run home run.

"She sure did a great job down there," Sortino said. "We moved Lindsay to the top because she's so hot right now and she's in a good spot."

Maroney is hitting .320 and has the speed of a leadoff hitter. She has five steals this season. Maroney went 3-for-7 in the double-header with two RBI's and a run scored.

UMass	4
URI	1
UMass	12
URI	3

"I always felt when we recruited her she'd be a great leadoff hitter," Sortino said. "We can open it up and steal. She's faster than Williams and she's got a lot of power too — don't let her fool you."

Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders started slow in the first

See SOFTBALL on page 10

Dicato takes no-hitter into ninth

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON — After yesterday's Beanpot Championship game against Boston College, UMass coach Mike Stone said he was disappointed that he didn't receive more offensive production after his team scored three runs in the first inning.

It didn't matter — Mike Dicato was pitching.

The right-hander took a no-hitter into the ninth inning before being relieved by Mitchell Eilenberg after 8 1/3 innings.

Although Dicato couldn't complete the no-hitter, he was nothing short of brilliant through the first eight innings and picked up his second win of 2008.

"I realized in the middle of the ballgame that I wasn't sure if I hadn't let up any hits, but I tried to just block it out and just not think about it at all," Dicato said.

The strategy seemed to work as the junior routinely kept BC's batters off balance throughout the game.

Dicato retired 12 of the first 13 batters, with Sam Shaughnessy

See DICATO on page 10

MICHAEL PHILLIS/COLLEGIAN

Mike Dicato pitched 8 1/3 innings and did not give up a hit until the ninth, leading the Minutemen to their first Beanpot crown in eight years.

MINUTEMEN FALL TO BC | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 75 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2008

Ford leaves for Oklahoma State

Coach spurns renegotiated deal for sweeter offer in Stillwater

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford didn't have a chance to sign the reworked contract that he negotiated with UMass last week. Before the new financial terms could be put to paper, Ford bolted to Oklahoma State.

Ford vacates the UMass position he's held for the past three seasons, as OSU is expected to make an official announcement today.

Already having been a candidate at Louisiana State and Providence over the past two weeks, it appeared that Ford would be the coach of the Minutemen for the foreseeable future.

"Last week obviously was a challenge and we felt good as to where we were as of Thursday," UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon said at last night's press conference. "We had some very candid conversations with coach Ford. This situation emerged very quickly, but its part of the business we're in."

McCutcheon announced the renegotiated contract at last week's men's basketball banquet. He also told fans to relax since Ford will be coaching the team "for many years to come."

But Ford and the University had not officially committed to the financial terms of the contract.

"We had not gotten to a point where it could be finalized with any documentation," McCutcheon said.

Under Ford's current contract, Oklahoma State will be required to pay a buyout of $200,000 to UMass.

McCutcheon added that the University was not in a financial position to reopen contract negotiations in order to convince Ford to refuse the Oklahoma State offer.

"Travis understood that where we got to during our last round of conversations was a very aggressive position for us," McCutcheon said.

Ford told the players of his decision during a meeting at the Mullins Center yesterday afternoon. The former UMass coach was unavailable for comment.

Though McCutcheon admitted that the University wanted to keep Ford, he acknowledged that it is significant for UMass to be in the position of having a sought-after basketball coach.

"It does speak to our program and that success that we've had over the

See FORD on page 3

Travis Ford (left) accepted an offer yesterday to become the men's basketball coach at Oklahoma State, days after renegotiating his contract with UMass AD John McCutcheon (right).

Players surprised by sudden departure

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When teammates Tony Gaffney and Luke Bonner first heard it, they thought it was a joke.

It wasn't.

The Massachusetts men's basketball players thought the courtship of their coach, Travis Ford, was over. But less than a week after Ford turned down the job offer at Providence and agreed verbally to an extension at UMass, he is officially gone for good — off to Oklahoma State.

"I had no idea," Bonner said. "I got a text [message]; someone told me they read something on ESPN.com and I didn't quite believe it. But then it turned out to be true, obviously."

Added Gaffney, "Ricky Harris came to me and said, 'Tony, did you hear the news?' Coach Ford is leaving. I said, 'get out of here.' I thought he was messing with me."

Gaffney and Bonner were the only players made available last night by the athletic department during the press conference announcing Ford's departure. Both players mentioned numerous times that they understood college basketball was a business and that the players and program will move on without him.

But that didn't totally stop the players from feeling the sting of losing Ford, especially after he had re-committed to staying on as coach after turning down Providence.

"We thought this was put to rest," Gaffney said. "Guys

See PLAYERS on page 3

Lobby Day yields increase in funding

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

BOSTON – There were no coffee and donuts as requested in the original proposal given to University of Massachusetts administrators. Instead, students and staff participating in Lobby Day got a day off, lunch and support from a major Statehouse lawmaker.

Representative Kevin Murphy, co-chairman of the Higher Education Committee, called PHENOM founding-member Max Page and had good news. Murphy said he would offer an amendment to the House version of the state budget released Wednesday that includes a $17 million increase in the Massachusetts financial aid system, MASSGrant.

For two months, members of PHENOM asked the higher education community to sign postcards calling for state government to fix deteriorating university buildings with Gov. Deval Patrick's Capital Bond Bill. They wanted more funding for the operating budgets of the Commonwealth's colleges and universities and an improved financial aid system that helps more students.

After members sorted the postcards for much of Monday and Tuesday night, they were ready to be bused to the capital in dramatic fashion and presented to state representatives in hundreds.

See LOBBY DAY on page 2

In rememberance of a tragedy

Students honor victims of VTech shooting

BY KATE OLESEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Three minutes was all the time some University of Massachusetts students needed to make a strong statement.

Yesterday, about 32 students from UMass, Amherst and Hampshire College participated in a "lie-in" outside the Student Union to remember the Virginia Tech shooting and protest easy gun access.

"Whether you knew someone or not at Virginia Tech it is the most devastating thing to happen on a campus," said event organizer and UMass sophomore Maha Mudawar.

The demonstration consisted of students dressed in black with orange and maroon ribbons around their necks lying on the pavement for three minutes – the amount of time it took for Seung-Hui Cho to buy weapons.

While students lay like corpses on the sidewalk, Mudawar spoke to students and passers-by. She read a letter from a mother of a Virginia Tech victim and spoke about a gun show loophole that doesn't require background checks on buyers.

"It's a scary thought that guns are so accessible," said Mudawar in a statement. "It worries me to think that this could happen on our own college campus."

Among the demonstrators was one UMass student who had a close friend who was a victim of the shooting. According to Mudawar, many of her friends were present at the event, to show solidarity and support.

"When [the shooting] happened I remember it devastated our entire campus," said Mudawar. "The campus should always stand together and stand tall."

Mudawar organized the event entirely through Facebook.com and connected with Abigail Spangler, founder of ProtestEasyGuns.com, a grassroots organization created in response to Virginia Tech. Spangler provided Mudawar with ribbons, stickers, protest materials (called "protest in a box") and contacts to be able to hold yesterday's event.

Spangler began organizing similar "lie-ins" last year and Mudawar felt compelled to participate.

"It brought people together, people that I know and some that I don't, and I can say I was a part of something," she said. "I received letters from parents saying thank you for all the support. It makes what you're doing so much more important."

Approximately 32 Five College students participated in a "lie-in" event on the UMass campus yesterday afternoon in rememberance of the one-year anniversary of the Virgina Tech shooting.

The UMass protest is one of 80 "lie-in" demonstrations across the nation. Each includes 32 community members to symbolize the number of teachers and students murdered at Virginia Tech and the number of people killed by firearms every day in the United States.

"We are not against hunters, guns for private protection or collectors of guns," says the organization's Web site. "We are for background checks for gun purchases and keeping guns out of the hands of criminals, dangerous individuals, and people not capable of handling a gun responsibly."

Kate Olesen can be reached at kolesen@dailycollegian.com

Fair Trade coffee finds niche at UMass

Campus community embraces socially responsible options

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's no secret that college students like their coffee.

With late nights and early classes, some students depend on the caffeine in coffee to get them through the day. And there's no shortage of places to buy coffee; there are more than 10 spots on the University of Massachusetts campus alone. But some students aren't choosing their coffee just based on taste. Some students are looking for coffee produced under fair trade standards.

"Our goal for this semester is to get all coffee [in the dining commons] to be fair trade," said Coby Kalter, coordinator for the Fair Trade campaign of MassPIRG.

Dining commons and campus stores serve one blend of fair trade certified coffee. The People's Market and Pura Vida both sell exclusively fair trade coffee, Kalter said.

While there are multiple organizations that certify coffee as fair trade, Kalter said that TransFair is the most commonly used certifier. According to the TransFair Web site, TransFair is "the only independent, third-party certifier of Fair Trade products in the U.S."

"The first thing is to make sure the farmers … get a fair wage for their crop," Kalter said.

See FAIR TRADE on page 2

The Pura Vida coffee stand in the Campus Center exclusively sells products that were purchased at fair trade prices to students.

MHC hosts charity drive for marrow

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Adults and children who are battling deadly bone marrow diseases such as leukemia and Aplastic anemia, are searching daily for bone marrow matches that will provide them with healthy stem cells, and a better chance at a healthy life.

The National Marrow Donor Program (NMDP), an ally in the fight, held a marrow donor drive Monday on the Mount Holyoke College Campus in the Betty Shabazz Cultural House.

The drive was hosted by the Mount Holyoke Student Health Advisory Committee.

The NMDP is a nonprofit organization that operates the federally-funded registry of volunteer donors in the United States. The NMDP coordinates transplants by running a worldwide network of affiliated organizations. These organizations are associated with NMDP and they work together to organize the collection and transfer of donated bone marrow.

Mount Holyoke College was the latest institution to help in the cause. The college's Health Services office received a call that originally got the ball rolling.

"An assistant in the President's office here had a connection at Amherst College who had called him and wanted to do the drive," said Karen Jacobus, Coordinator of Health Services at Mount Holyoke College. A phone conference was then held between the college and NMDP, which cemented the drive and commenced the planning.

"The drive was relatively simple to promote because NMDP sent everything we needed, such as table cards for the DC's and payroll slips that could be inserted into faculty checks," said

See DONORS on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 122
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exner
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Marron
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian McAskill
COPY EDITOR Adam Scaglin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rase
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Svenczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marissa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST EDITORIAL James Matheos
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Clemis
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seamers
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melcon
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ASST. WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbascianno
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcott
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR BY STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING, AND ADVERTISING WITHOUT BIAS OR PREJUDICE. THE FIRST COPY IS FREE. ADDITIONAL COPIES ARE 50 CENTS EACH. SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE AVAILABLE FOR $150 PER SEMESTER AND $250 FOR THE YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS PRINTED AT THE SPRINGFIELD PRINTING CORPORATION IN SPRINGFIELD, MA. THE PAPER IS PRINTED ON RECYCLED PAPER AND IS RECYCLABLE. ALL CONTENTS ARE COPYRIGHTED AND MAY NOT BE REPRODUCED WITHOUT PERMISSION. ALL RIGHTS ARE RESERVED. THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS A REGISTERED TRADEMARK OF THE TRUSTEES OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Kristen Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mirhan Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbascianno

CHECK OUT THE NEW MEN'S BASKETBALL PODCAST AT www.dailycollegian.com

Seder brings communities together

Event celebrates multicultural differences with Passover theme

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The 10th Annual Freedom Seder was held at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center on April 13. Members of Jewish, Christian and Muslim communities came together to celebrate a decade of multicultural unity.

The Freedom Seder is a ceremony that celebrates multicultural and interfaith unity based on the themes of the Passover Seder. Like the Passover Seder, the Freedom Seder remembers the biblical story of Exodus using readings, poetry, songs and food rituals.

The Seder also remembers the past experiences of African Americans, Native Americans, Muslims and other communities that have experienced oppression in their history.

The goals of the Freedom Seder are to reconnect to one's own historical experiences of slavery, exile and redemption. Many also learn about the experiences of other people by listening to their stories and affirm one's commitment to overcoming oppression and embracing freedom for all people.

The UMass Amherst Freedom Seder was established in 1999. Larry Goldbaum, director of the Office of Jewish affairs, has been organizing this event since its first year.

The Seder was also put together by former graduate assistant in the Office of Jewish Affairs, Teeomm Williams. Williams graduated in 2008 with a Master's degree and is currently working on getting his doctorate in social justice education.

When asked why he worked so hard to create this event, Williams said that "the stories and values that are addressed by the Seder resonate with many people. It's important that we know that we are more alike than different. It is important that we understand that our collective histories and future survival are interconnected."

Cornelius Harris was also a member of the first Freedom Seder planning committee in 1999 and was on the committee in 2000. He was also the Vice President of the UMass Black Student Union in 1999. He was one of the four members of the BSU executive board that was on the Seder planning committee.

"Before I started work on the Seder, I did not know what to expect. I did not know what a Seder was," said Harris. "One of the most rewarding parts of the process was sharing our cultures and focusing on our commonalities, while appreciating our differences," he added.

A buffet dinner with a variety of different foods was chosen by the various student organizers to represent their communities. Its purpose was to teach about each others' traditions and cultures.

Also, on each table in the room there was a Seder plate. The traditional plate includes Z'roah (a roasted shank bone), Betzah (an egg), Maror (bitter herbs), Haroset (a mixture of wine nuts and fruit), Karpas (a fresh vegetable) and Hazeret (a second kind of bitter herb). The plates on the table were a little different, with a beet replacing the shank bone and an orange was added to the plate, representing a commitment to include women, gays and lesbians.

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

Drive collects bone marrow donations

DONORS from page 1

Jacobus. "What really helped us was the initial directive from the President's office, because all the departments on campus received information and it got the faculty involved."

The marrow donor drive on Monday was a relative success, according to Jacobus.

"It didn't produce the numbers we wanted, but we did get 18 people registered," she said.

Local news channels 3 and 40 were there, and the drive appeared on the 5:00 p.m. news.

As of October 2007, 6.8 million potential donors have volunteered through NMDP affiliated organizations to donate cells. The NMDP's Web site stresses the importance of donating marrow.

For many patients, a transplant may be the best-and only-hope for a cure, according to the Web site.

The nonprofit organization was founded in 1986 and since then there have been 50,000 successful transplants.

It is possible to register in person or online at Marrow.org and all that is required is that the donor be between the ages of 18 and 60, willing to help any patient in need, and meet the health requirements.

Although the Mount Holyoke drive did not register many people, Karen Jacobus believes the next drive will be more of a success.

"We did this kind of last minute, and next time we'll be able to give the Student Health Advisory Committee more time, and more people," she said.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Student awarded Goldwater

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts junior Michael Krainin of Sharon, Mass., has been awarded the prestigious Goldwater Scholarship – making him one of only 321 students in the country to receive one.

These scholarships are awarded based on academic merit and go to students planning to seek jobs in the fields of science, mathematics or engineering.

From universities and colleges around the nation, 1,305 students were nominated but about a third was chosen. The scholarship includes the cost of tuition, fees, books, and room and board up to $7,500 per year.

"The scholarship is going towards helping to pay for my school fees and expenses for my final year at UMass," Krainin said in a statement. "I've already completed the requirements for the computer science major, but I've elected to stay for a year longer than I would really have to. That way, I have some extra time for opportunities I want to pursue."

Krainin is currently studying abroad at Uppsala University in Sweden where he is taking classes in machine learning, algorithmic problem solving, Swedish, as well as others. He is part of the Commonwealth College Honors Program at UMass and is double majoring in computer science and mathematics.

Krainin first became interested in the field of computer science in high school while taking some programming courses, and recently decided to study mathematics in order to learn more about topology, one particular area of interest to him.

About his experience so far abroad, Krainin said that being in a foreign country, where the primary language is not English has helped him learn to deal with unfamiliar and unexpected situations. He feels this experience has broadened his future by enabling him to see himself working and studying in areas other than the Northeast.

According to Krainin, studying abroad may have also boosted his chances of receiving the scholarship because the selection committee was able to see that he was interested in gaining experience beyond the classroom.

"Studying abroad is something that stands out and demonstrates both multicultural interests and a certain sense of independence," said Krainin in a statement.

The Goldwater Scholarship has been given out for 20 years and is in honor of the late Senator Barry M. Goldwater. Krainin advises other students pursuing this scholarship to get into research early and be able to feel comfortable conducting research while working in a lab.

"My research largely helped me to win this scholarship, and I think it's the sort of thing the reviewers look for," said Krainin. "It's never too early to consider doing research."

Director of the UMass Office of National Scholarship Advisement Susan Whitbourne commends Krainin's area of research, particularly the detecting of tornadoes, claiming its national importance. She was very impressed with Krainin's eagerness toward the scholarship and his research while she assisted him throughout the application process.

Kristen Healy can be reached at ickhealy@student.umass.edu.

Funding added to MASSGrant

LOBBY DAY from page 1

Gov. Patrick got $100 million in new funding. Student Trustee-elect Lindsay McCluskey said there was a lot of energy in the room, and people were excited about the events of the day and accredited this year's success to a sharper, streamlined agenda.

"It's always best to have specific goals that you want to achieve," she said.

Last year, PHENOM pushed for an increase in the general operating budgets of schools statewide without deciding on a defined amount.

"It helps in the way we talk about things, it helps to highlight specific stories about how MASSGrant has helped students or hasn't helped students," she added. "Having specific goals that you can measure your progress by is a really important thing in doing this kind of work."

One such story was Tessa Simonds, a senior transfer student from Mass Bay Community College majoring in social thought and political economy.

She works for the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority, receives funds from MASSGrant, scholarships but will still graduate $14,000 in debt. Between 1999-2004, funding MASSGrant fell from around $5" million to $24 million, according to a report by the state Department of Higher Education. Individual rewards have plummeted as well. Once, funding amounted to 80 percent of total cost.

Now, it hovers at 15 percent.

"MASSGrant can be so much more," Simonds said. "As tuition and fees increase, MASSGrant covers less and less of our expenses."

She said she sees the system reaching more families and the state's neediest students. Without a line-item earmark, Simonds said MASSGrant's funding fluctuates according to other sometimes unrelated programs.

"It must receive level funding every year, and it must be increased," she said. And soon, she and PHENOM might be getting what they asked for.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Fair Trade products gain popularity

FAIR TRADE from page 1

He also said that a fair wage allows farmers not only to survive but to educate their children.

The TransFair Web site lists a number of principles that determine whether a product can be labeled fair trade under their label. Among the qualifications, a Fair Trade certified product must offer safe working conditions and living wages to farmers and workers. Products must also be environmentally sustainable, and farmers and farm workers must invest in their communities.

"I want to know that my coffee's coming from somewhere that has some integrity," said UMass student Sara Vitello.

"People need coffee," said Vitello. "You go to Dunkin Donuts and Starbucks or anywhere on campus, and there's only one option for fair trade."

Vitello said that she would like to see more options for fair trade on campus. She said that she has cut back on how much coffee she drinks because she wants to make sure she's only drinking fair trade.

Other students put less thought into their coffee purchases.

"I just know bits and pieces [about fair trade]" said sophomore Vicky Liang.

"If it's at a store I'll buy it," said Liang, who also said she wouldn't go out of her way to buy Fair Trade.

Laing said that she's become more aware of Fair Trade since coming to UMass.

Kalter said fair trade is important because "it affects all of us because this is a consumer culture and all of the things we buy have a global connection, whether it's the clothes you wear or the coffee you drink."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

Correction

The Collegian ran an editorial, "Student bridges to nowhere," on Tuesday, April 15. While the opinions contained within the article have every right to be expressed, the article contained factual inaccuracies. The Ways and Means Committee of the Student Government Association approved a Student Bridges budget for next year of $172,743, not $218,000 as was asserted in the editorial. The organization has one laptop and two desktop computers. The article also said that Student Bridges lacks a faculty director; a faculty adviser was appointed earlier this month, as covered in the April 14 edition of the Daily Collegian, and the position is funded by the Office of the Provost, not by the SGA. Finally, the Student Bridges budget is public information and available upon request.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
THE VERDICT IS UNANIMOUS
In a competitive job market, a BU credential sets you apart.
Earn your CERTIFICATE IN PARALEGAL STUDIES
Classes start June 2
• Enhance your credentials, take a step
• Gain exposure to the legal work environment
INFORMATION SESSION
Thursday, May 1, 6 p.m.
635 Commonwealth Avenue, Room 300
Charles River Campus, Boston
Register Today:
www.bu.edu/professional/2228
1-866-633-9370 x402
Refer to Priority Code CPE2228
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
Boston University Center for Professional Education

SINGLE MALT DINNER at THE LONE WOLF
MAY 3 7 PM
CALL NOW FOR RESERVATIONS!
584-8174
FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE
10% OFF
6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!!
MIX & MATCH
*REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES LIQUOR
HENNESSY COGNAC X.O. 750 ml $122.99
GRAND MARNIER 100YR CENTENAIRE 750 m $109.99
CROWN ROYAL CASK 16 WHISKEY 750 ml $94.99
GLENMORANGIE BURGUNDY WOOD FINISH 750 ml $49.99
JOSE CUERVO PLATINO TEQUILA 750 ml $49.99
GLENMORANGIE MADIERA WOOD FINISH 750 ml 49.99
ARDBEG 10YR ISLAY SINGLE MALT SCOTCH 750 ml 47.99
BAILEY'S ORIGINAL IRISH CREAM 1.75 liter $35.99
TANQUERAY GIN 1.75 liter $33.99
HENNESSY COGNAC V.S.O.P 750 ml $44.99
GRAND MARNIER CORDON ROUGE 750 ml $33.99
HENNESSY COGNAC V.S. 750 ml $28.99
BELVEDERE PURE VODKA 750 ml $27.99
10 CANE RUM 750 ml $26.99
CHOPIN POLISH VODKA 750 ml $27.99
BAILEY'S FLAVORED IRISH CREM* 750 ml $20.99
*Mint Chocolate and Caramel
JOSE CUERVO FLAVORED TEQUILA* 1.0 liter $20.99
*Cinco Tradina Orange
SMIRNOFF VODKA 80* 1.75 liter $19.99
JOSE CUERVO GOLD 750 ml $18.99
MYER'S PLATINUM RUM 1.75 liter $18.99
CAPTAIN MORGAN PARROT BAY RUM* 1.0 liter $17.99
*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM 750 ml $14.99
SMIRNOFF TWIST FLAVORED VODKA* 750 ml $11.99
*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry
Sale 4.16-4.22
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

CENTRAL
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
FREE ADMISSION — RAIN OR SHINE
AT VAN METER COURTS
4:20:08 RUN FOR THE HILL
- STRONGHOLD IN SIAM 6:15 -
- LEAVING LONDON 5:00 -
- STATE YOUR MIND 3:45 -
- ANDERSON COUNCIL 3:00 -
- ON THE ROCKS 2:00 -
- FINE AND DANDY TRIO 1:00 -
- RIVERBEND 12:00 -
This Program Made Possible in Part by a Grant from the UMass Arts Council
Sponsored by Central Area Government, an alcohol-free event, all bags are subject to search.

Ford accepts OSU position

FORD from page 1

past couple of years," he said. "When you have an individual as talented as coach Ford, that represents your institution as he did, you would be naive to think that these situations would not come up."

McCutcheon said that Oklahoma State originally contacted Ford about the position Monday afternoon. Though Ford informed McCutcheon of the talks, Oklahoma State did not inform the athletic director of its pursuit of Ford.

Through a prepared statement released by the athletic department Wednesday evening, Ford characterized his decision to accept the OSU job as "difficult."

"It was a very difficult decision to leave UMass, one which my family and I struggled with mightily. They have been and will always be family to me," he said. "I feel the team at UMass has a great nucleus in place and I wish them the best in the future."

Since the end of the Minutemen's season two weeks ago, Ford has been a candidate for the Louisiana State and Providence jobs. Ford released a statement denying interest in the LSU position last week. Two days later, Ford reportedly refused an offer from Providence, and then agreed in principle to the reworked contract on April 10.

UMass completed its season two weeks ago with a loss to Ohio State in the finals of the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Square Garden with a 25-11 record. The 2007-08 campaign was Ford's third and final year at the University, after spending five seasons at Eastern Kentucky.

Former Oklahoma State coach Sean Sutton resigned after two seasons with a 39-29 record and no NCAA Tournament appearances. He took over the program from his father, Eddie Sutton, in 2006-07.

McCutcheon said that a national search for Ford's replacement will begin Thursday morning. He alluded that the program would benefit from hiring someone that coaches a similar style of up-tempo basketball as the team currently plays.

"We're going to look for the best possible candidate," he said. "The style of play that we've exhibited over the past couple of years is very important to us."

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon announced that men's basketball coach Travis Ford accepted an offer to join Oklahoma State. McCutcheon also said in yesterday's press conference that a national search for a replacement will begin in "earnest" this morning.

Juniors Tony Gaffney (left) and Luke Bonner will finish their collegiate basketball careers without Travis Ford as their coach. The Kentucky native accepted the head coaching position at Oklahoma State yesterday afternoon.

Players surprised by decision

PLAYERS from page 1

are obviously disappointed; we all had great relationships with him."

"It might be something that could bring us more together," Bonner said. "But I'm not going to be naive and say it couldn't be a dividing factor."

Bonner mentioned that this all happened so fast, and he won't know for a while how he feels. One of the last things he wanted to do was talk to the press about it.

"We were on our way here, and our heads were spinning, like, 'what do we say to these people?'" Bonner said. "It doesn't seem real yet. I still think we have [practice] on Monday and coach Ford is going to be there."

Both players stopped short of saying they felt betrayed by Ford. Gaffney said that Ford was "offered something that was nearly impossible to turn down." Bonner addressed how tough this was on the team, but he said everyone understood that he "had to do what he had to do."

Both Gaffney and Bonner transferred to UMass and will be seniors next season. As college basketball veterans, they were more worried about how this would affect the younger guys on the team.

"A lot of the freshmen went here because of him; so for them, it's tough," Gaffney said. "As older guys, we're going to be there for them. We're going to stick together as a team and get through it, and we're going to win this year."

Gaffney said he could relate to some of the things they're going through.

"He was the reason I came here," he said, referring to his decision to transfer from Boston University. "But at the same time, I'm grateful for the opportunity he gave me. With that said, I'm looking forward to meeting the new coach and getting things going."

Bonner's outlook heading into college has helped him deal with the rather shocking turn of events.

"One thing I've learned through the years is that you commit more to a university than to a coach, because there are these constant changes every year," he said. "We really enjoy being students at UMass; and even though coach is gone, we're very happy to be on campus here."

Gaffney felt the same way and said that this team is tough enough to handle anything.

"Midway through the season we got wristbands that say 'I" strong' on them. And it stands for the 17 players that are on the roster," he said. "We stick together no matter what."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswaike@dailycollegian.com.

Nathan's FAMOUS
OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest
Dear Students,
On April 24, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.
To register send an e-mail to: mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services at 413-545-2472. Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, class and telephone number
Best of luck,
Dining Services
UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students
To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.
umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
Taste of UMass 2008
*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Want to be a UMass Idol?
This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center
Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.
All entries must be received by April 23, 2008
There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.
Presented by: UMass Dining Services & LAZER 99.9
Sponsored by:
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
Taste of UMass 2008
umass.edu/diningservices
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Courtesy now uncommon

Brad Leibowitz

Have you ever been walking into a building and you notice someone is hot on your trail? You notice their footsteps behind you. As you get to the door, you see their reflection in the window pain. You slow your step so they can catch up to your position. With the right timing, you open the door ushering the person behind you into the building before yourself.

They step into the building and you expect to hear some resemblance of the word "thanks." Call me old fashioned, but when I don't hear that small, expected token of appreciation, I wish I could rewind the past 30 seconds of my day and have the door slammed in their face.

I don't know if it's just me, but it seems evident that manners have been forgotten. "Please" and "thank you" have seemingly fallen off the radar. A respectful nod in the streets when passing a stranger, or the polite looking someone in the eyes when talking to them has vanished.

Again, call me old fashioned, but I like manners. I understand in certain situations manners don't apply. Opening the door for someone hot on your trail is expected if said person is one to seven feet behind you, yet once it gets to be more then seven feet, the deal's off. Similar to this, you don't have to say "God Bless You" to someone if said person is more than an arms distance away from you.

Manners, like all other generalities, apply generally. Yet nothing pisses me off more than when manners break down on a date or in a chivalrous situation.

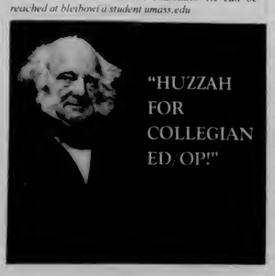
Side note: Bring back the date.

This goes for everyone. Whether you're straight or gay, bring back the date. The date, contrary to public belief, is not something your mom and dad did before you came into the picture. Regardless of what your friends might tell you, every once and a while the person you are courting wants to know that you want to be seen with them in a public setting other then at a party.

Get dressed up, make the plans, buy him/her a single rose or multiple flowers, etc. It doesn't always have be a dinner date with a movie. Surprise your romantic interest by spending the night walking the streets window shopping while eating roasted walnuts amidst December snows, or take them to the observatory to look at the stars while sharing secret laughs about how Pluto was a planet when you were young. Every single and taken woman I know constantly complains about how the date has vanished. I agree and it's not good. Something needs to be done about this. But I digress.

I was raised with manners. Growing up in my household meant saying "please" and "thank you."

Let's go back to the opening-the-door example. I understand that women want to treat having a door opened for them as their own little chance to be a model on a runway making a big entrance, but just remember to say "thanks." Nothing turns me off more then when I am on a date and because the girl thinks it is expected, she doesn't acknowledge the little things. Acknowledge the little things. Call him on the B.S. Laugh at some of his jokes, not all. Drink less than him. Ask him questions, yet ask him questions which will allow yourself to retort with something about yourself (this makes his job easier). Pick up the bill by the fourth date.



The same goes for men. Ask her questions about everything. Never drink less than her, and never have two more drinks than her. Chew with your mouth closed. Never have just a salad. Stand up for her when she joins or leaves the table. Walk on the outside of the curb. Pay for the bill for the first three or four times (side note: If she doesn't spring to pay the bill by the fourth date, date another girl). Open her car door. When taking a cab, if she has a skirt on, get in first so she doesn't have to slide over etc.

Finally, pertaining to chivalry — act like a gentleman should. Do all the things a chivalrous man should do. The rights movement was successful, yet women still want to be doted upon. Again, for women chivalry might be expected, but treat it as a minor gift with a return in the form of a "thanks."

I was raised with manners. Growing up in my household meant saying "please" and "thank you." It meant that when my mom joined or left us at the dinner table, we stood. It meant opening doors, doing the dishes and doing laundry without being asked. Raising my voice to my parents was something which never happened for the simple reason that if I did, I feared my father would kill me out of respect for himself.

Manners are just that: a form of respect. They might be something small, but sometimes the smallest actions speak louder than the most aggressive words. People, not just dates, want your respect, and manners show them just that. Manners show the people around you your class and etiquette, yet more importantly, they show that you respect yourself and that others should too.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

About our generation

Hannah Nelson

Generation X-er Jeff Gordinier, author of "X Saves the World: How Generation X Got the Shaft But Can Still Keep Everything From Sucking," claims that his generation is saving the world. But there are a few analysts who suspect that the title may just go to Generation Y, or the Millennials, the "next great generation." For children of the eighties and nineties, it won't be easy to land the tile. There are plenty of skeptics raining on the millennial parade as they enter the workplace. "Arrogant. Individualistic. Unable to commit. Short attention span." While that may sound a lot like a description of your ex, it's actually a description of Millennials by some employers.

One employer described Millennials as "know-it-alls" and "high-maintenance," which seems a tad bit harsh in comparison. The boomers complain that Millennials are easily bored with work and leave easily, making it hard to retain the new workforce that was supposed to be so promising. That leads to complaint number two, that Millennials are too flighty, too willing to do a bit of job hopping, and employers aren't taking kindly to the losses. Spreading the word on an unfavorable boss to a few scores of friends and acquaintances isn't that hard in today's world. All those hours spent on community outlets are turning out a generation that is willing to take a job, or leave one, just so they can share a workspace with a friend. Correct me if I'm wrong, but last I checked that could be considered a virtuous little thing called 'loyalty.'

Whatever happened to the old standby of knowing how to work all the latest gadgets? At least that was something.

It turns out that the Millennials do have to let go (however grudgingly) of the supposed monopoly on technology. Generation X and the Boomers are becoming just as savvy and don't need to rely on the Millennials anymore as the go-to guys and gals when that Blackberry has a glitch. Whatever happened to the old standby of knowing how to work all the latest gadgets? At least that was something. The Millennial digital know-how was supposed to be the big ticket to landing all those jobs in the first place.

"'They're so rude. Look at how they dress.' It's been going on forever," Dave Verhaagen, a child psychologist said of employer reactions. "But I don't think the data supports that for the Millennials." Verhaagen, a child psychologist, published a book about how to parent the Millennials several years ago. And his colleagues are in agreement. Every generation faces the same criticisms, the elders forgetting that they were once the greenhorns themselves.

There are some Millennial advocates though, and they turned out last week at a Society for Industrial and Organizational Psychology conference to persuade future employers to see the evidence that speaks favorably. It turns out that hard facts show that Boomers are just as likely to commit the job hopping sin as their younger co-workers.

Also to be buried at the San Francisco held conference was the idea that Millennials want, or rather, need that instant gratification in the job application process. That particular claim has actually struck so much fear into the hearts of companies in the past that they have actually been restructuring applications to take less time to fill out, just so that Millennials won't be deterred. Millennials are goal oriented with high expectations of themselves, and others. That then begs the question, are expectations too high? Are Millennials so optimistic that they just won't settle till they get the job they want? And since when has that been a bad thing? Whatever happened to chasing the dream?

In defense of my fellow Millennials, there is in fact a nice thing or two to be said for us that pushes us a few steps further than some employers may have thought. Our generation is said to be less likely to be discriminatory based on race and gender than previous generations. And apparently we've put in more hours of study time than the previous generations. We show the most dedication towards community service, so much so that an estimated half of Millennials will look for a job that provides community service opportunities. So love us or hate us, one thing that can be said is that we aren't any worse than our predecessor. Maybe we're just aiming a bit higher.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu

Postmodern vexations

C.A. Chase

Ah, Stanley Fish. Although this occasional New York Times Op-Ed contributor's Anthony Hopkins-esque grin doesn't spice up the pages of the gray lady as well as Maureen Dowd's sultry headshot does, he has a certain journalistic je ne sais quoi. Because if you're going to talk about any sort of critical or literary theory in a newspaper forum, as Fish does in last Sunday's "French Theory in America," you run the serious risk of sounding like a pretentious tool. Ah, well. Get ready for 800 words of pretense.

Fish's column, about the limits of critical theory and deconstruction, is sort of what I wanted to say about critical theory. Sort of. Critical theory, in my highly subjective and bastardized view, is critiquing social and political structures and how they limit who we are and what we can be. If there were a point to this, it would be that everything is constructed, socially constructed.

This includes all forms of knowledge, and the act of asking questions itself. As Fish says: "Descriptions of the world are made by us, and we, in turn, are made by the categories of description that are the content of our perception. These are not categories we choose … it would make more sense (but not perfect sense) to say that they have chosen or colonized us. Both the 'I' and the world it would know are functions of language."

If the 'I' that you think with is a construct, then critical theory is a home for academics who are gluttons for punishment, because it will drive you insane. However, it does allow you to examine what sorts of questions you are allowed to ask.

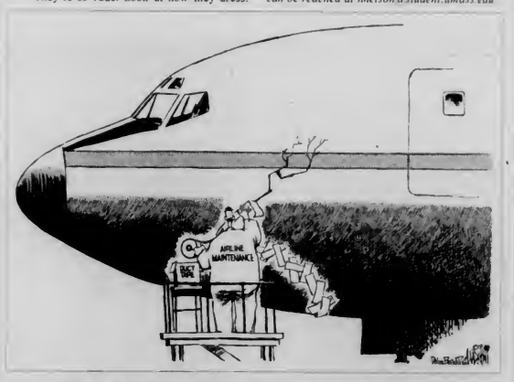
But I'm not talking about politics or academics. You can't deconstruct everything, but you can examine it. The problem with using criticism of culture or society to critique yourself is analogous to the whole teenage angst "Catcher in the Rye" type deal: At what point do you have to accept the world for what it is, "shut your mouth," and deal with it? Most people do. It's getting a job, getting married, having kids, watching your cholesterol. It's called growing up. If you don't accept this, then you're maladjusted. Holden Caulfield is theory, and theory is an angry prep school drop-out walking around New York reading graffiti. That graffiti is our culture. God help us all.

There isn't anyone who is O.K with the status quo. There is something wrong that people can't describe.

The moment when you go from adolescent angst to adult acceptance is the moment when critical theory can step in, and gets the nine-to-five starchiness out of being an adult. You have to keep questioning the world that expects you to act like an adult, because that world is harsh, hostile, and cruel. As an adult, as a "contributing member of society," you have to contribute to it, be productive within it, a tension that never gets resolved. This is where critical theory is more than pouty members of the French Academy smoking cigarettes. It gives you the tools to ask questions.

To be a member of society is to contribute to a world that creates borders within us, lines within us not to be crossed that we are not given the words to talk about. We tell our boys not to cry, we like our TV mediocre, in order to stave off "I need you" or saying that the world is an unfair place.

To become adjusted, to lose the "maladjusted," is to stop bleeding all over the place, to laugh at the angst that caused you to question in the first place. But when we look back, it wasn't really funny at all.



It is necessary to look at the world critically because this isn't where we wanted to go, right? There isn't anyone who is O.K with the status quo.

There is something wrong that people can't describe. If there wasn't, then there wouldn't be music, there wouldn't poetry, there wouldn't be politics.

So although there are limits to critical theory's questioning and postmodernism's deconstruction, it is a way to ask questions, questions that are normally considered superfluous or stupid or silly, and that at best are answered with a shrug and "that's life. Life's unfair," at worst with "grow up and shut up."

But is shutting up what being an adult is all about? Because if it is, then here's to hoping that my parents will be subsidizing my Diet Coke and Splenda habit for the next, I don't know, twenty years or so.

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cachase@student.umass.edu

The age conundrum

Having celebrated a roommate's birthday this past weekend, I started thinking about what it means to get older. Do we ever really grow up? Every year as we blow out the candles, does something inside of us change? Do we feel it? Sure, we evolve and experience new things, but is it possible that our childhood fantasies may subconsciously dictate our adult lives? Is the hope we keep as we get ready for a first date or a job interview just a product of youthful naivety?

Solmaaz Yazdiha

As children, everything is possible, and the world is ours to relish. Bending rules, we bite our lips, unsure which ones may break. We take risks without considering consequence, we jump unsure where we might land, and we do it with the handy excuse of youth. Youth can never be blamed. Invincible, we slip through grips like sand.

"Truth or dare," we ask: is growing up just giving up?

Where we once broke bones, we now break hearts, and over time, we repeat the same mistakes. The question is, do we ever learn? Are we truly wiser, or are we simply fooling ourselves, with time as our accomplice?

Peter Pan once promised Wendy a place where she would never, never have to worry about grown up things again. In her position, many of us would gladly escape without a backward glance. In the midst of college culture, with beer olympics on a sunny afternoon or bar crawls much larger and longer than lectures, growing up seems about as undesirable as a vasectomy.

In America, youth is as much a luxury as a first class seat. With the sole requirement to enjoy the ride, we make fun fundamental.

The common thought is that we grow up, we learn who we are, we find what makes us happy, and we settle down. But is that really a legitimate timeline? Has life ever proven so simple? Perhaps there is no point in time where we suddenly know exactly how to make all the chips fall into place. It's possible that as we grow older, we are as much as we age. Do we act accordingly to the number that's pinned to our chests simply to stifle the children we are at heart? "Truth or dare," we ask: is growing up just giving up?

Some like to think that we are really glassy-eyed and unaware as children. This presumption of youthful confusion may simply be the slant of jaded adulthood. Likely, this stereotype is a bitter fabrication by those who have grown to realize that there are no Band-Aids for heartache. Ultimately, we envy what we do not have, the innocent heart to trust without caution and leap with no safety net, and we act as though it's not what we want. Like children, we put something down to lift ourselves up. If in no other way, this shows that age may really be just a number.

So what will we do when we grow up? This most over-asked of questions is one of the hardest for us to answer. It is hard for us to know what will happen in our lives as the days and birthdays pass. In youth, we're sure in our replies, as aspiring astronauts (or in a more personal case, ice-cream testers). Sadly, as we age we're thrown curveballs, experiencing disappointment and even loss, and we realize we may not have all the control. As a result, our answer loses confidence.

There are things we learn to fight for, and walls we choose to build, bridges we have to burn and apologies we regretfully give at times. Experience becomes a prime ingredient to growing up, with a dash of humility and a pinch of self-discovery we mold ourselves like silly putty. We become. And maybe, somewhere along the line, we may even grow up. Just maybe.

Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu.

COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Obama v. the masses: the ultimate showdown

Our glorious future

Matthew M. Robare

It's official, people. Barack Obama is a Communist. Columnist Bill Kristol has outed him. Kristol noted that a comment Comrade Obama made at an April 6 fundraiser in San Francisco, "It's not surprising then that they get bitter, they cling to guns or religion or antipathy to people who aren't like them or anti-immigrant sentiment or anti-trade sentiment as a way to explain their frustrations," is similar in meaning to Karl Marx's famous "Religion is the opium of the people".

I am surprised it took us this long to figure it out. I mean, Comrade Obama is a Democrat who opposed the war in Iraq, voted for the renewal of the Patriot Act, is committed to expanding government power over the individual to the point where there will be a federal agency for volunteer work as an alternative to military service, supports universal healthcare, and would not feel bound by the limitations of the Constitution.

Comrade Obama, therefore, supports the "Revolution in One Country" brand of Marxism, otherwise known as Stalinism. This contrasts him with the neoconservatives, who want to spread the Revolution around the world by force of arms – in other words, they're followers of Trotsky – and Comrade Kristol is a very loyal Trotskyite.

Comrade Obama ... will make the greatest leader of the proletarian dictatorship since Comrade Lenin himself.

So, the age old battle to be the Heir of Lenin continues unabated in North America. With the Bush-Bernanke depression getting started, economic differences are poised to disappear almost entirely and the new dialectic will be between Republicans and Democrats. I am just a humble comrade and have not the towering prophetic vision of even Comrade McCain, so I will not make a prediction of who will be the winner at the end of the conflict.

I say that whichever young comrades live to see the day when the revolution is complete will behold a glorious End of History in this country. The United States will then again be a city on a hill, a glorious example to all of the fulfillment of revolutionary promise.

If the Democrat comrades win, we will see a marvelous welfare state on the European model come into being, where all will have access to healthcare when they need it, greedy corporations will be secretly subsidized, the poor and the homeless will be taken care of, women will be allowed to abort children as old as five, religion will vanish from public life, any nation that dares express an opinion contrary to ours will be made to disappear, and the State will be supreme.

If the Republican comrades win, we will see a marvelous warfare state on the North Korean model come into being, where all will have access to healthcare when they need it, greedy corporations will be secretly subsidized, the poor and the homeless will be taken care of, religion will vanish from public life, women will be allowed to abort children as old as five, any nation that dares express an opinion contrary to ours will be made to disappear, and the State will be supreme.

However, in the great dialectic of thesis and antithesis, synthesis will come. Yes, comrades, the conflict will be such that it will not be just Republicans Democrats winning the battle for history. Instead, forces beyond human control will mold the opposing forces into a new, triumphant ideology. When that day comes, we will not be New Republican or New Democratic Men, but New Democratic-Republican Men.

There will be a most glorious and exemplar warfare-welfare State. In this New Order, all will have access to healthcare when they need it, greedy corporations will be publicly chastened and secretly subsidized, the poor and the homeless will be taken care of, women will be allowed to abort children as old as five, religion will vanish from public life, any nation that dares express an opinion contrary to ours will be made to disappear, and the State will be supreme.

Comrade Obama – and the movement he has started – will be a most effective agency for social change. Moreover, Comrade Obama's credentials are pure, orthodox Marxist. He used his bourgeois law degree to help proletarians in Chicago, and he will make the greatest leader of the proletarian dictatorship since Comrade Lenin himself. Comrade Hillary, on the other hand, has only been a friend to the proletariat when it suited her or her husband – she even served on the Board of Directors of the evil, capitalist, worker-oppressing Wal-Mart! Comrade McCain delights in imperialist wars of aggression, and even in fighting against fellow communists in Vietnam.

What other innovations could synthesis offer us? Time will tell, but as the Feudal Age was shaped by the stirrup and the Capitalist by the steam engine, the computer will result in a new mode of production where proletarian and bourgeois will benefit equally. In fact, they won't even be proletarian or bourgeois any -longer, they will be the New Democratic-Republican Men.

Republicans and Democrats of the world, unite!

Matthew Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Missing the mark

Eric Magazu

There is no doubt that Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama's views on religion and economics are left-of-center. In a recent column run in the New York Times, William Kristol made the argument that, "behind his mask," Obama has disdain for the values of small-town Americans. However, I have found that Democratic candidates hold relatively consistent views on important issues, and that it is Republicans, in fact, that often take advantage of the values of small-town Americans.

In recent years, it has become a common Republican straw man to accuse Democrats, both overtly and implicitly, of elitism. The truth is that leaders in both major political parties reflect elitist thought. Both parties have their own policy agendas and seek to take advantage of the sensibilities of Americans for their own causes. Neither party appears to be sincerely concerned with the values of the American people, or of our American forebears.

It could even be argued that, under the orthodox Marxist standard of our own Student Government Association, Obama is a conservative.

Remarkably, there appears to be much more consensus among Americans throughout the land than there appears to be in Washington. That isn't to say that political leaders are not sincere in their ambitions, but that their ambitions are not rightly focused on what's important. Many of our leaders have studied political science at secular universities, and have learned the values of Karl Marx and Niccolo Machiavelli, rather than principles that endure.

In Obama's preface to his economic platform, he begins this way, "I believe that America's free market has been the engine of America's great progress … and it has provided great rewards to the innovators and risk-takers who have made America a beacon for science, technology and discovery." This doesn't sound like Obama is inciting the masses into a global class struggle in the mode of Marx, but instead appears to be so glowing with free market economics that his statements could make Adam Smith blush.

There is no denying that the details of Obama's economic platform are indeed left-of-center, and it is not my opinion to try to defend these points to be consistent with libertarian, free market economics, but only to say that they are far from Marxist in nature. It could even be argued that, under the orthodox Marxist standard of our own Student Government Association, Obama is a conservative.

An examination of the economic agenda of Republican presidential candidate John McCain shows remarkably similar left-of-center programs as Obama's. McCain's programs have the same intent as Obama's in attempting to placate small-town voters without actually taking their values seriously. It is important to point out that it is easier to say what I'm saying outside of power, rather than within the sphere of power. At the same time, the truly great leaders will preserve these values even once they have been granted power.

It would appear that some of the conservative animosity towards Obama is less accurately rooted in his views on religion and economics, but more on his foreign policy statements. Many politicians are uncomfortable with Obama's willingness to dialogue with Muslims generally, and Middle Eastern nations specifically. This is a fallacy. The mere element of dialogue does not remove the ability of America to act militarily in defense of its national interest.

It is through dialogue, not force, that man's actions most closely resemble God's. Speech is the most potent power granted to man to act in accordance with the will of God.

Kristol's column refers to Marx's critique of Hegelian philosophy to establish Obama's Marxist credentials. Marx's critique makes the following assertion: "Religious suffering is at the same time an expression of real suffering and a protest against real suffering. Religion is the sigh of the oppressed creature, the sentiment of a heartless world, and the soul of a soulless condition. It is the opium of the people."

It is true that Democrats tend to hold an inaccurate and unorthodox understanding of religion. Obama's defenses of religion seem to stress a therapeutic effect of faith, which reveals the same fallacy in thinking as Marx. However, it is doubtful that Obama would venture to continue by affirming, as Marx does, that, "the criticism of religion is the prerequisite of all criticism."

It is more often Republican politicians that seek to co-opt religious groups into their causes, while these same elite Republicans hold to the very same Marxian presuppositions about faith of which they accuse Democrats.

Faith is not something that can be co-opted by Democrats or Republicans, because it is not for our comfort or at the service of nations. Both in our personal lives and in the affairs of state, it is the duty of us all, according to our talents and abilities, to love God and live by the commandments. Unless we put our trust in the grace of a sovereign God, our hope is in vain.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

UMASS IN THE LONG RUN

Dear Editor:

The UMass Amherst Chancellor plays a pivotal role in determining the future direction of this campus, as ex-Chancellor Lombardi did.

Why should you care about the future of this campus in the years after you graduate? The answer to this question is the value of your degree. Often, the concerns most strongly expressed are how much you are paying, as opposed to what you'll get for your money, and that requires thinking ahead.

In the long run, the market value of your degree (the jobs you can get) will be more important than the food service and how the dorms look now.

That market value will depend on how UMass is perceived then, not now. It's a long-range investment that you make every day. State universities like Rutgers are far ahead of where they were 20 years ago, meaning that a Rutgers degree is now more competitive with a Princeton degree than it was then, even if that degree is 20 years old.

UConn is another example of a state university that has to compete with the Ivy League in its own state but is moving ahead nevertheless. These are results of substantial investments by New Jersey and Connecticut. So the market value of your UMass degree – as you confront the job market (again and again) – will depend on the vision for UMass that develops now between the Chancellor and the State.

Happily, the search for the new Chancellor, now in full swing, is open and transparent, and with opportunities for students and faculty to see the candidates. Go to one, and let your opinions be heard.

Paul Dubin
Department of Chemistry

THE VALUE OF ACTIVISM

Dear Editor:

Re: "Free your mind, first," Joe Ronan, Letters to the editor, April 10, 2008.

On Sunday, April 13, over 500 Darfur activists from around the country rallied in Washington, DC to deliver their demands of peace to President Bush. After five years of genocide in Darfur, Sudan, "students got angry, filling the streets and not taking no for an answer."

These words are directly from Michael Phillis' editorial about our generation's apathy. He claims that student activism is on the decline and lacks the passion that used to fuel the causes. As students who sacrifice grades and free time to work on the anti-genocide movement, we beg to disagree.

Look around the UMass campus on a sunny day. Representatives from all sorts of action-oriented RSOs, ranging from pro-lifers to promoters of safe sex, table outside the Student Union. We have at least three important rallies this week: the PHENOM Lobby Day for affordable higher education, the Radical Student Union's free speech rally, and the most recent sign of solidarity with Justice for Jason.

Last weekend, students forged ahead in the battle for social change. Young people from around the state attended the Massachusetts Powershift, the largest climate change conference in state history. Participants attended workshops, panel discussions and listened to the likes of Sen. John Kerry discuss ways to reduce carbon emissions. Many students also opted to skip class to lobby their Senators and Representatives to pass the Global Warming Solutions Act, a law which will mandate Massachusetts to reduce 20 percent of our carbon emissions by the year 2020.

Simultaneously, over 500 students attempted to lobby President Bush at the White House, cheering and chanting there for policy change. 18 of those students, including both authors of this article and two other UMass Amherst students, decided to take direct action.

Following a two-hour training session on civil disobedience, we took our demands to the White House gate. We were arrested for speaking politically in a politics-free zone. The tragedy in Darfur is five years too long. The approaching tidal wave of global warming will negatively change life as we know it forever. Clearly, activist students are working to end these two horrors of climate change and genocide.

The key difference between the activism of today and the 1960s is the media. Despite whatever laws young people may help to pass in Congress, stories about Britney Spears and Suri Cruise are just more entertaining.

Rebuilding houses in New Orleans or shanty towns in rural Uruguay, and working at a soup kitchen are not glamorous. Sure, there is a big difference between community service projects and organizing for sustainable social reform, but even two hours of volunteering for a good cause is an act of healing the world.

Our generation cares about success. We look ahead to our futures as lawyers, doctors and CEOs, and are afraid of jeopardizing our future high salaries. But campus activists also realize the work we do now will lead to a better future, both for humanity and ourselves.

Kids who lobbied for the Global Warming Solutions Act know how to bring their demands to elected officials. Those of us arrested at the White House are demanding Bush to listen to our voices. So pay attention next time someone in the Campus Center asks you to sign a letter to reduce carbon emissions. There won't be riots or CNN coverage behind her, but because you sign, our children will know four seasons in New England.

Stephanie Aines
Nikki Tishler
UMass students

A TRADITION OF PROTEST

Dear Editor:

Re: "Free your mind, first," Joe Ronan, Letters to the editor, April 10, 2008

It's hard to stand by and read the hollow ramblings of a student who seems to misunderstand the point and historical precedent of the protests of the 2008 games so badly. It's clear from Joe's letter that he's against protesting in any form, even when he blatantly agrees with the principles of the thousands of people who are protesting. Joe states: "The Olympics are supposed to be an event in which countries put aside political differences and compete against each other in athletics." It's clear that the long history of political boycotting and maneuvering involving the Olympics is something that Joe has never properly learned.

Incidents involving countries political differences affecting Olympic participation began back in 1956, when Spain, Switzerland and the Netherlands boycotted the games due to the severe repression of the Hungarian uprising by the Soviet Union.

In 1976, a number of African countries threatened to boycott the games if South Africa and Rhondesia (Zimbabwe today) were not banned from competing due to their history with the apartheid; the IOC eventually agreed and banned both countries. The greatest example of a political boycott came in 1980, which Joe mentions the fact he would be against the U.S. boycotting the Moscow games, but fails to mention that over 60 other nations refused to participate at all in the Russian hosted Olympics.

The Soviet Bloc nation countered at the 1984 games in Los Angeles, with over 16 countries skipping the events. History shows the Olympics as a worldwide stage for protesting against many different political disagreements.

But besides the fact that the history of Olympic political statements were ignored in Joe's article, the saddest part for me was the clear lack of one sticking up for one's principles.

Joe makes note of the fact that even though he "understands and support[s] the idea of why these people are protesting", but that he doesn't support the disruptions of the Olympic torch relay.

It seems almost un-American to stand by while the citizens of another nation are repressed and censored. I can't believe such a proponent of freedom thinks protestors should just stand idly by and allow the Chinese Government to continue throw journalists, defense attorneys, writers and activists in jail for only exercising their rights, which are supposedly guaranteed by their constitution. Or that he believes that it's okay the citizens of China have a completely censored version of the Internet, a lack of due process and a completely biased court system.

Ronan seems to think that everything should go on as if completely normal. This, more than anything, is an astounding assertion from someone who says they recognize the "blood stained history" of these countries.

If I could hope that Joe gains one thing from this letter it would be to show him that China's view of governance is almost completely opposite of ours, and that since protesters can and are routinely killed or imprisoned there, the Olympic stage represents the best chance they have to get their voices heard by the world.

So it's time for Americans to support the citizens of repressed nations when they are fighting for freedom, especially when it doesn't involve us diving in tanks first

John Taylor
UMass Student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the Editor should be no more than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com. We regret that not all letters can be printed. additional letters can be found online at dailycollegian.com in our Letters section. Guest columns are welcome from students, faculty and community members. They should be between 750 - 850 words and the editorial staff reserves the right to edit submissions for meet grammar, mechanics and space constraint standards.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Devine-ly quiet indie talent

Singer-songwriter to bring folk sounds to Pearl Street

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The city that never sleeps has a reputation of creating fast-talking, fast-moving personalities and even faster musicians like the Ramones and the New York Dolls. But this does not worry Kevin Devine, the 28-year-old singer-songwriter who was born and bred in New York City. He current lives in Brooklyn but also lived in Manhattan for some time. He went to college at Fordham University in Manhattan and as a teen, spent a lot of time on Staten Island as part of a burgeoning community of music fans and aspiring musicians.

When he thinks of New York, he does not automatically talk about an overwhelmingly vast landscape of sky-high buildings, honking yellow taxi-cabs and bustling action of day-to-day life. For Devine, New York is really about the quieter, solitary moments that are ignored.

"There's that like flickering apartment lights and wondering what someone's doing in that building. There's like sitting on a bench on the West Side watching across the bay and thinking what people's stories are," he said. It is this emphasis on the quiet side of life that seeps into Devine's songwriting style and sound.

Devine is never cited as a very "hard musician." Many would be surprised to know that he was heavily influenced by the Staten Island hardcore music scene of the 1990s. "I probably sound like a wispy little folk singer but I was in the pit watching people beat the hell out of each other with Xs on their hands," he said.

As part of this scene, he was exposed to an underground group of kids who spoke about Malcolm X, veganism, socialism and the straight-edge lifestyle. Although Devine never adopted the principles preached by the hardcore community, the nature of the issues made him more open-minded to the idea of active and alternative ways of thinking about the world.

These types of experiences led Devine to write some highly politicized songs, most strongly seen in the lyrics of "The Burning City Smoking," off of 2006's "Put Your Ghost to Rest." The song reads like a rant about modern life in America, embedded journalists and the media, consumerism and the government. He expresses confusion and distrust with those in power. He compares the government to nothing more than a movie set with government officials reading lines. In the end, Devine acknowledges he does not know of a solution to the problems of modern life.

"I think it's a pretty scary time to be a person because a lot of really heavy stuff happening," he said. "I certainly wouldn't say I know the answers to any of those things but I would say that I'm a person who spends a fair amount of time thinking about the questions."

Devine has been a mainstay in the New York music-scene since the 1990s. He was in an emo band called Miracle of '86. The band, which was named after the championship New York Mets of 22 years ago, was heavily influenced by the Replacements. He released several albums with this band, including 2001's "Every Famous Last World."

Since 2002, Devine has released several solo albums that have more of a folk sound, including "Circle Gets a Square" in 2002 on indie-label Immigrant Sun Records. He also released "Make Clocks Move" in 2003 and "Split the Country, Split the Streets" two years later on Triple Crown Records. Devine's most recent album, "Put Your Ghost to Rest," was released on Capitol Records in 2006.

"Put Your Ghost to Rest," which was his first album under a major label, represented quite a digression from the norm for Devine. Although the song-writing process was the same, the way in which the album was recorded drastically changed. In the past, Devine would record a couple of songs at a time, often in basement studios, on a meager budget. For this latest album, he lived in Los Angeles for two months and recorded with famed producer Rob Schnapf, known for his work with Elliott Smith and Beck. He visited locations where the Doors and Neil Young recorded some of their greatest work.

On this record, there is a strong presence by guest musicians who provided skillful piano, drums, extended harmonies and other related vocals. This collective is made up of people who have played with him in the past like Chris Bracco, Margaret White, Mike Skinner, Amy Bracco, Carey Brandenburg and Russell Smith.

The end product was an album full of acoustic gems with a rock-band feel and no shortness of sincere emotive qualities.

"Instead of making [the album] in a mad dash to get it finished in five days in a studio, you actually can have a month and a half in a big studio, taking your time and really pouring over every detail," he said.

Devine was dropped from Capitol when it merged with EMI and Virgin Records. But he rebounded and quickly signed to a Brooklyn-based indie label called Academy Fight Song. This label, which was founded in 2005 by members of Brand New including close friend Jesse Lacey, is home to Four Years Strong and the White Rabbits.

As a result of this new partnership, "Put Your Ghost to Rest" was re-released last year with three added bonus tracks: a previously unreleased track by Devine called "Wolf's Mouth" and two covers, Neil Young's "Harvest Moon," Neutral Milk Hotel's "Holland, 1945."

The musicians featured on the album make up the Goddamn Band and will be joining Devine on his current tour.

COURTESY DOUG WILLIAMS

Indie artist Kevin Devine likes the quiet life, and his introspection comes out in his music, which sometimes has strong political overtones.

Through it all, Devine maintains a down-to-earth nature that makes his music so accessible.

"I want to make a living and I want to be comfortable. I want to be able to do what I want to do. I am not the most boldly ambitious person," he said.

Devine will be playing with The Goddamn Band on Friday, April 18 at the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton. Brian Boaz and the Dog Hogs and BAKER will be opening up the show, which starts at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $10.

Allie Roth can be reached at aroth@student.umass.edu.

KEVIN DEVINE

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

FRIDAY APRIL 18

$10

UMass students donate time, business clothes to community

BY ELYSE HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Do you ever look in your closet and think you have nothing to wear? Maybe you're getting ready for a date, or a family get-together, or just for your Biology class, but no matter, the appropriate clothing is always in the back of your mind.

Now, imagine you're a woman searching for your first job, and you literally have nothing presentable to wear to an interview. What can be done?

Enter Dress for Success, a non-profit organization developed in 1997 in New York City. This establishment aids women who have gone through financial difficulties and are applying for jobs, but can't afford decent clothing to wear to their interviews.

"We provide everything – pants, blouses, shoes, even accessories like handbags and jewelry," says Cherry Ilean Shuler, a member of the board of directors for Dress for Success of Western Massachusetts. "Our mission is for economic independence for women. We help women with their attire, how to maintain their jobs, and how to transition into the workforce."

Since 1997, Dress for Success has been introduced in 10 different countries and over 40 states in the U.S., and has suited over 400 thousand women. Almost eight years ago, Western Massachusetts became a member of the Dress for Success family when a boutique was opened at 140 Wilbraham Ave. in Springfield.

This month, students from the University of Massachusetts are volunteering their services to help the cause. It all began when Dr. Alexandrina Deschamps, a professor in the Women's Studies department, asked her students to complete a community service project for her Honors Introduction to Women's Studies class. The class, which is open to students in the Webster/Dickinson cluster in Orchard Hill, chose to support Dress for Success by setting up donation bins every Friday through April in the campus center concourse. The clothes collected will then be distributed to the Springfield boutique, where women can go in and obtain their new outfits.

"It's so easy to get involved here on campus," says freshman Mark Borenstein, who is a student of Dr. Deschamps'. When asked why he thinks it is important for UMass students to give back to the surrounding community, Borenstein said, "It's essential; people need our help."

There is a core group of students that are getting involved with the program through the Webster/Dickinson cluster, but even more want to help. Although she is not a member of Dr. Deschamps' lecture, freshman Hannah DeLucia volunteered her time to lend a hand at the donation bins. "We hope people come support us with their time or clothes. We really appreciate it."

"Right now, we really need plus-size dress suits and size nine dress shoes," says Shuler. "But anything that can be given is appreciated! It's a good thing to give back to the community in any way you can, and it's a good feeling to see someone else want to see women who are dressed for success."

Last night, Dress for Success held their annual Common Threads dinner at the Log Cabin Banquet and Meeting House in Easthampton; the funds raised will benefit the Dress for Success of Western Massachusetts. At this event, women who have been suited through the organization participated in a fashion runway to showcase their triumph. Their hair and make-up was done professionally, and they were given the opportunity to dine with many of the volunteers and businesses that have helped by donating in the past.

"A lot of people who attended last year came back, and it would be nice for even more people to hear about it and volunteer," said Shuler.

Additionally, the foundation holds a large event in September called Behind the Bench.

"We have an auction of autographed sports paraphernalia, including basketballs and jerseys, and lunch is served," Shuler said. All of the profits from this event are donated to the upkeep of the Springfield boutique, which is managed by the executive director of the Western Massachusetts branch, and is maintained by volunteers, most of whom are college students. There is always room for more assistance, however. Donations can be made in the form of clothing, money or time.

So, if you're looking for a place to donate some of your used clothing as you clean out your closets this spring, consider those who are in need, and contribute to the efforts that have already been made by UMass students. Your help could give a young woman the extra edge she needs to make a difference in her life.

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu

CAITLIN CICCOLI/COLLEGIAN

Jessica Brady painted a T-shirt at yesterday's Queerfest in front of the Student Union. Queerfest is a week long set of activities to promote lesbian, gay, bi and transgender pride and awareness.

Fourth Phantom album delivers

BY CHAD JEWETT
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

When a band releases two high-profile albums with wildly disparate focuses, one can pretty much bank on the third album being a conservative step back in which the group focuses on incorporating these different styles into what could be called their "sound."

"Raise The Dead," Phantom Planet's fourth album, is largely this kind of record. Much of the group's popularity came with their 2002 effort, "The Guest," and the use of lead single "California" as the theme of FOX's "The O.C." Attention was also paid to drummer Jason Schwartzman, a rising star in films like "Rushmore," movies that were quickly becoming cult hits.

While this publicity led to sales, it had little to do with the band's art, and 2004's "Phantom Planet" was willfully antagonistic and sharp-toothed where "The Guest" was sunny and sugar-coated, an effort to shake off their connections with disposable pop-culture and their own celebrity. Songs like "Big Brat" were long on hooks, but the choppy, fuzzed-out guitars kept many, fair-weather fans at arms length.

Schwartzman's departure in 2004 and "the O.C.'s" cancellation left Phantom Planet free of distracting associations and their most recent album dispenses with the intentional alienation of their 2004 release. It is also much more mature than the throw-away pop of "The Guest."

Happily, the two sounds are for the most part incorporated and amalgamated here. Lead single "Do The Panic" features the same choppy Kinks-esque guitar of their self-titled album, but the punch is tempered by a "bop bop bop" hook and possibly the catchiest chorus the band has produced to date. "Leader" is similarly oriented, based around the sun-soaked acoustic guitars and harmonies that made "The Guest" a hit, but with touches of their rougher and more jagged work hanging in the background, characterized by distorted bass and sharp, almost aggressive drumming.

This integration of the band's various sounds may be the rule for "Raise the Dead," but there are exceptions. "Ship Lost At Sea" and "Dropped" feature a garage rock stomp reminiscent of the Hives and The Sonics and dispense largely with the bands more conservative power pop trappings. "Leave Yourself For Somebody Else" is the inverse, dominated by big hooks and harmonies with very little bite, and would be at home on the pop-dominated "The Guest."

But "Raise the Dead" is not merely the result of a band taking stock of its past, and many of the new developments on the record form its most interesting moments. Opener "Raise The Dead" begins with little other than stomping feet and acoustic guitar, but slowly builds with the addition of bass, piano, organ, vocal harmonies and drums until the simple tune blossoms into pop bombast. "I Don't Mind" explores similarly new ground for Phantom Planet; its simple, folky swing sounds more like a mid-career Paul McCartney number than the Weezer and Strokes influenced songs we've come to expect from them.

Ultimately, the issues of sounds old and new are irrelevant. Phantom Planet's newest album is a clever and varied piece of guitar pop, hinging more on the strength of singer/guitarist Alex Greenwald whose voice is able to impress and ensure repeated listens. His sheer sense of melody and rhythm fill even the simple verses of songs like "Dropped" with jittery hooks where lesser bands would have depended on lazy crooning. There are drawbacks to "Raise the Dead" – like its predecessors, it's front-loaded, and by the seventh track, the best songs have already passed. But by and large, Phantom Planet's fourth album is their best, a strong collection of smart, energetic and often challenging pop.

Chad Jewett can be reached at cjewett@student.umass.edu.

'Prom Night' doesn't put out

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an age where ghost stories and torture porn rule supreme in horror, old-timers jonesing for slashers have been hard pressed to find their fix. Attempts have come and gone, often with remakes like 2003's "Texas Chainsaw Massacre," but these ventures have failed to capture the magic of the old ways.

That's why Sony Pictures is looking to end that incalculable search, for now at least, with a remake of the 1980 classic slasher, "Prom Night." Done to death in a long strain of sequels, Sony figures it's time to give those legions of "Prom Night" fans the remake they've been clamoring for. With a fresh cast and a hipper-than-thou soundtrack, "Prom Night" boasts a night to die for. With any luck, that may actually be true.

Brittany Snow stars as Donna Keppel, member of the graduating class of 2008. She's got some heavy baggage – freshman year of high school, her entire family got slaughtered by a whacked-out schoolteacher (Johnathon Schaech). Except for the occasional nasty flashback – which seems to manifest only in times of prologue, she's seemingly put the past behind her.

Off to Brown in the fall, and tonight, to her senior prom, she's ready to bid high school adieu with all the pomp and ceremony befitting a normal teenager. But if only she knew that an old friend was in town special for the occasion, poor Donna may never have picked out a dress in the first place.

Snow, the breakout star of last summer's "Hairspray", has a tough act to follow in "Prom Night." She picks up a role formerly occupied by the legendary Jamie Lee Curtis during a time when Curtis was considered the Meryl Streep of scream queens. It's not quite "Halloween," but "Prom Night" enters the Curtis filmography before 1983's "Trading Spaces" brought the actress A-list reputability.

Snow shrieks at octave, but has issues duplicating Curtis' feral wails. The rest of the cast, looking light years older than the kids they portray, are cardboard cut-outs to the model. There's the boyfriend (Scott Porter) and the best friend (Dana Davis), both of whom are transplants from the wonderful world of primetime. There are other people too, mostly fodder for the chopping block. The trained eye should have no problem calling out the death order quickly.

Hot on the trail of the mad killer is a cop (Idris Elba) who specializes in utter incompetence. He's a graduate from the "Police Academy" school of detective work, so rather than seek out the bad guy, he just paces around the movie, scoping out cute girls and making lots of tedious calls on his cell phone.

"Prom Night" looks pretty bad from here, and none of this should really be news. A horror film that's silly and fantastical? Surely, dear reviewer, you jest. Before you sign this off completely, hear me out. By legitimate standards, sure, "Prom Night" bottoms out. But even by its own genre standards the flick is a mess, and here's why.

As a killer, Schaech's schoolteacher doesn't tread new ground. Seasoned fans will see through his pretty boy looks and puppy dog crush, and call him out as the uninspired hack job he is. Despite efforts, newcomers probably won't be chilled by his stalk and prey of Snow and her compatriots, either. No killer worth his salt ever checked into the hotel before the big slaughter, to say nothing of the puny pocketknife which he uses to dispatch his victims.

Slashers may be candy for the soul of aficionados, but the truth is, we're not in Haddonfield anymore. Slasher movie mainstays – senseless blood, guts, and nudity - are overkill. In light of recent trends, the things which made the original "Prom Night" a slasher staple show their age with today's audience.

Chalk it up to that great slayer of all things entertaining - political correctness. No one used to care much if chicks got sliced and diced topless, because it was all in the name of good schlock. Then one day, liberal party poopers got the memo that these things were offensive. Crying out misogyny and excess, they pushed the genre to a point where it had to alter its criteria, or else face mass condemnation.

As a result, things like topless chase scenes just won't fly in today's horror.

"Prom Night" isn't about to rectify this, but its absence ensures that the work suffers. While the old "Prom Night" may seem antiquated to audiences, the stuff that made it exemplary aren't allowed casually anymore.

Director Nelson McCormick, eager for an audience but hesitant to commit to anything too obscene, keeps "Prom Night" clean as can be, and that's a huge problem. The last thing anyone wants to sit through is a neutered slasher flick.

"Prom Night" could stand to grow a pair, or at the very at least, put out a little. By any measure, slasher flicks needn't be good to be entertaining. The re-envisioned version of "Prom Night" is neither. The flick leads its audience on with the promise of sexual themes and gruesome imagery, but it's only a tease. It would be better for all involved if the flick succumbed to the baser demands of the genre, but instead, it remains wedded to its PG-13 rating and horrific insinuations.

So much for scoring on "Prom Night". If anyone needs me, I'll be out back dusting off my VHS copies of the classics.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at smurphy@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PHOTO

"Prom Night" doesn't compare to the Jamie-Lee Curtis original. With a contrived plot and not enough gore, this slasher falls flat.

PROM NIGHT

STARRING: BRITTANY SNOW AND JOHNATHON SCHAECH

GRADE: D

Refreshing spring drinks to buy, make for every occasion

BY BARBARA A. BOORAS
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

On your way to class you can't help but notice spring has finally arrived at the University of Massachusetts. Students are lying out in the quad, playing Frisbee and wearing shorts and sandals. Say goodbye to hearty foods like stews and hot drinks and hello to the lighter spring fare of fresh salads and chilled beverages. Instead of just getting the usual iced coffee at Dunkin Donuts, why not try something new? Here's my list of must-have local "Spring Bevies" here in Amherst.

I cannot help but start with one of my personal favorites - Samuel Adams Summer Ale. Although, it has the name "summer" in the title, you can never fail with this seasonal beer. Sam Summer is currently available at most local packies and bars. Nothing beats Sam Adams' perfect brew, made from "grains of paradise" according to its label. There's no disputing that this refreshing beverage garnished with a lemon wedge is the perfect way to celebrate the gorgeous weather and the start of spring.

If you are looking to get your caffeine fix, skip the hot, regular coffee and stop into Rao's Coffee in downtown Amherst and order an iced latte. Their eye-opening espresso will be sure to give you more energy than shot-gunning three Red Bulls (which I am definitely not recommending). If you are not familiar with coffee terminology an iced latte is composed of shots of strong and delightfully bitter espresso coffee topped with milk and served over ice. The iced latte, depending on what size you pick, is around $4.00.

Fruity, frozen blended concoctions called smoothies are available both on campus and in restaurants in the center of town. You can use your swipes on campus at Freshens Smoothie Bar located in the Blue Wall or venture out onto North Pleasant Street to Bart's or Ben and Jerry's Ice Cream.

Both Bart's and Ben and Jerry's are known for their rich ice creams but they are also serving up tasty smoothies to quench your thirst. Bart's has a small selection of four sorbet-based smoothies. I tried their 'Very Berry' smoothie, which has raspberry sorbet, black raspberries and non-fat yogurt. The finished product was a beautiful deep purple color speckled with raspberry seeds. It was a little on the sweet side but the perfect way to cool off on a sunny spring day. All of the smoothies come in one size and cost a moderate price of $5.00.

If you want more selections, walk up North Pleasant to Ben and Jerry's where they have a list of seven or so smoothies, with an option to make your own. The smoothies at Ben and Jerry's are fifty cents more but your frosty 'bevie' is made from fresh strawberries when they are in season, bananas, and a variety of frozen fruits too.

According to a Ben and Jerry's scooper, the Strawberry Lemonade smoothie is the most popular, but a lot of people aren't afraid to create their own. Your stop into Ben and Jerry's will also be guilt free (believe it or not!). All of their smoothies are either fat-free or low fat.

For an interesting twist on this Spring Drink list, check out the bubble tea available at the new and improved Souper Bowl. Bubble tea, which also goes by the name 'Boba,' originates from Taiwan and has recently increased in popularity in the United States. It is a sweetened, black milk tea served chilled. It can be served plain or flavored. Two of the most popular flavors are the coconut and raspberry bobas. The bubble part in bubble tea is named for the tapioca balls found at the bottom of this exotic drink. You're sure to enjoy the gummy surprise as you sip up your bubble tea through a special extra wide straw. Bubble tea is one of the more unique and affordable spring thirst quenchers rounding out at $4.00.

Finally, if you are someone who enjoys entertaining, I have included a lip-smacking recipe, perfect for your next springtime cocktail party. Not only is it a crowd pleaser but also it is impressive and requires little preparation. Frozen Peach Champagne Cocktails were the brainchild of culinary queen Rachael Ray. This Bellini inspired drink should be served immediately and looks beautiful garnished with a fresh sprig of mint and fresh raspberries.

Next time your jones-ing for a refreshing drink this spring, skip your usual and try out one of my suggestions that are sure to please.

FROZEN PEACH CHAMPAGNE COCKTAILS
¼ cup sugar, to rim glasses
1 pint peach sorbet
2 shots Triple Sec, Grand Marnier or Cointreau
Chilled champagne or sparkling wine, to fill blender, 1 3 bottle
Raspberries and 4 sprigs mint optional garnish

Place a shallow bowl of water along side a shallow bowl with ¼ cup sugar in it. Dip 4 cocktail glasses in water, then sugar to rim glass.

Place 4 scoops peach sorbet in blender. Add 2 shots orange liqueur. Fill blender with Champagne to maximum fill line or up to 1-inch from top of blending pitcher. Place cover on blender tightly. Blend until smooth and pour into cocktail glasses, keeping an eye out not to wreck the pretty sugar rims. Garnish with a few raspberries and a sprig of mint and serve.

Barbara Booras can be reached at bbooras@student.umass.edu

Rachael Ray, TV personality and self-taught chef, created the simple recipe for Frozen Peach Champagne Cocktail, the perfect drink to make for a party on a hot summer day.

GET NEWS ON THE GO @ www.dailycollegian.com

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

Hair By Harlow
SALON & DAY SPA
Welcome our NEW esthetician
Colleen Bianco
EXPERIENCE...
• Rejuvenating facials
• A variety of massages
• Nail pampering
• Hair design
220 NORTH PLEASANT STREET • AMHERST, MA 01002
PHONE: (413) 253-8898

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

It's not too late to sign up for the FIVE COLLEGE AREA Relay for Life!
4/18 - 4/19
6:30 PM to 9:30 AM
Pratt Field, Amherst College
RELAY FOR LIFE
American Cancer Society
Can't make it?
Donations are always welcome!
Are you a cancer survivor?
Please join us for the survivor's lap!
For more details visit
http://main.ascevents.org/rflmafivecollege

Dixon's career in tennis enough for HOF

DIXON from page 12

Dixon felt nervous playing with the tennis legend. King changed the way she would look at the game and herself for a long time.

"It was scary, inspiring and motivating," Dixon said. "She changed the way I thought about tennis, and my attitude toward the sport and myself. I took myself more seriously, and I took the sport more seriously."

Dixon continued to make history. When she was 23, she became the head tennis coach at Yale, and a few years later she became the first person ever to sue under the newly-established Title IX.

Title IX states that no person in the United States, based on sex, should be excluded in any form of participation or be denied any benefits in a program or activity that receives federal financial assistance.

When Dixon left Yale, she had to make a decision on whether or not to continue in the coaching profession; she decided to stick with it and help young players reach their potential.

"I want to keep coaching as long as I'm able to make an impact," Dixon said. "I want to help until the game passes me by."

Being a great teacher is only a part of being a successful coach. Her team has taught her a lesson in resilience that can also be applied to life's rough moments. Her Minutewomen began their 2008 season facing the national powerhouses from the Ivy League and didn't fare well. They persevered and never gave up as the season went along finishing atop of A-10 during the regular season.

"She is very experienced, she makes the team feel like home," present player and team captain Masha Pozar said. "She is always supporting us and making sure we are playing the best we can."

Dixon came to UMass in 1992 as the athletic department decided to revive the defunct program. There was only a half a scholarship awarded out from the tennis team, which means only half of the money needed to attend the school was awarded to the player that was chosen. The team had no courts to practice on; they had to travel 20 minutes to Mount Holyoke where it hosted both matches and practices.

During the past five years, the team earned more scholarship money and currently boasts the No. 1 seed in this weekend's A-10 Tournament. Dixon couldn't be happier here, she feels supported entirely by the University and the community. Without those two factors, a coach would be unable to succeed at any school.

She described her situation as being ideal. She arrived at the school when the program was at the absolute bottom and built it to a respected competitor. You can't ask more from a coach that came to this program teetering on the edge of existence.

As for personal accomplishments, Dixon acquired many. She graduated from the University of Southern California with a B.A. in Psychology. For the Trojans, Dixon, a three-year letterwinner, played both first singles and doubles. In 1967, she won the Junior National Championship and also earned the 1973 Pacific doubles title.

On numerous occasions Dixon has been a contributing writer for Sportswoman Magazine and a special guest commentator on ABC's "Eye on Sport." She earned the Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year three times. Along with her coaching undertakings she has competed at Wimbledon and on the Virginia Slims tour. She is involved in clinics at the U.S. Open along with former partner, King. Previously in 1975 Dixon enjoyed a career as a journalist; she was nominated for an Emmy Award in sports broadcasting for her color commentary at the Spalding International Mixed Doubles Championship.

Judy Dixon will be inducted into the Hall of Fame on June 21st. She brought her experience and talents to this school where she shed her qualities on her players. Dixon made the right move coming back to coaching; she turned the program upside down and transformed it into a program that threatens to win each time on the court.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass tennis coach Judy Dixon will be inducted into the Tennis Hall of Fame in a ceremony to be held on June 21.

UMass favorites for Atlantic 10 tourney

TENNIS from page 12

this season. UMass has defeated the Rams 10 out of the last 11 times the teams have met.

Provided that the Minutewomen win that match, they will go on to the semifinals on Saturday at 3 p.m. and could play No. 4 Duquesne, No. 13 St. Josephs, No. 5 Xavier or No. 12 St. Bonaventure. UMass has not played any of those teams this season. If the Minutewomen win that match, they will play in the title game this Sunday.

The doubles portion of the meet is only worth one out of the four points necessary to win a match, but it is far more important than that for the Maroon and White. In 19 out of the 21 matches the Minutewomen have played so far, the team who wins the doubles point has gone on to win the meet.

Luckily for UMass, the team boasts some excellent doubles pairings. The top doubles team consists of senior captain Masha Pozar, who is a two-time all conference player, and standout freshman Candynce Boney, a five-time Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week. They are 23-10 as a pair counting the fall matches.

The Minutewomen's third pairing of Maude Lecluyse and Laura Dinai also has been extremely solid this year, and have won nine of their last 11 matches together.

Masha Pozar has 65 career wins, two games behind Michelle Spiess for the all-time wins at UMass. She will have an opportunity to break the record if the Minutewomen make it to Sunday.

Second slot Boney and sixth slot Dinai will be among the most important competitors for the Minutewomen in the singles game. Boney leads the team with 17 victories and is noted by coach Dixon as having overachieved all season long. Dinai typically plays the last game of each meet and was described by Dixon as the most consistent player on the team.

The A-10 Tournament will be held indoors, a welcome change for UMass, which has had to play its last two matches outdoors in very cold conditions. Dixon notes that shifting from outdoor to indoor matches is far easier than vice-versa.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Masha Pozar and the Minutewomen enter this weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament as the No. 1 seed.

Dietz continuing success

DIETZ from page 12

"I think it's kind of understood on our team that he expects excellence on the water and in the classroom. He really stresses that we get everything done. He doesn't really have to say it flat out, we know that if we don't do it, we're in trouble," Marsan said.

Most of the rowers have managed to stay out of trouble by maintaining excellent grades in their academics. Marsan is one of five current rowers who were named a Collegiate Rowing Coaches Association Scholar-Athletes for upholding a 3.5 cumulative grade point average last spring. The four others include senior captain Amanda Mawn, and juniors Airlina Burill, Erin Kelly and Karen Plevock.

UMass rowers have gone on to earn many other awards over the years, such as four U.S. Rowing Association Academic All-Americans and 26 A-10 Academic All-Conference performers.

As well as academic excellence, many of Dietz's rowers have experienced more success in rowing outside of UMass. Sara Jones, a former rower at UMass, went on to race in the 2000 and 2004 Olympics and five other former rowers have taken part of a number of U.S. National Teams as well as one on the Canadian Under-23 National Team.

Dietz has also led two UMass teams to the NCAA Championships. In 1997 and 1998 his Varsity 8 boats earned silver medals and the UMass crew earned a fourth-place finish in the 1998 championship. 1997 and 1998 were two of the seven years that Dietz earned the A-10 Conference Coach of the Year Award.

"I don't set any limits; you can be as good as you want to be. Having put six or seven people on the national team, it proves that it can be done," Dietz said.

With UMass winning 12 consecutive A-10 Championships, it speaks volumes about Dietz and all of the rowers who have rowed here over the past 12 years. With the tools that Dietz has given the girls and how he stresses hard work and responsibility, he has instilled in his rowers what it takes to be champions.

"If they want to be successful, I'll give them all the tools that they'll require to be successful, but the motivation in sports has to come from within the person," Dietz said.

Motivation is one of many things that the rowers at UMass have had. Without that motivation to push themselves, and the leadership and tools provided by their coach, the rowers would not have been able to accomplish the great feat of winning 12 straight conference championships.

"We've all inherited this tradition of UMass rowing having a winning tradition, and everyone is doing an outstanding job being accountable, putting the team before themselves and just coming together in that fight," Mawn said.

That tradition is one that has created a family of rowers, past and present. The tradition looks to continue this weekend on the Cooper River in Pennsauken, N.J., when Dietz and his "gals," as he calls them, look to extend their streak of consecutive championships. But even if the team's streak ends at 12 years, Dietz knows his gals have the tools to succeed in life for much longer.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Rowing coach Jim Dietz has steered the Minutewomen to 12 straight Atlantic 10 Championships and coached 26 A-10 Academic All-Conference performers. They will try for No. 13 this weekend.

Team looking for 13th straight title course. The rough water may have given the Rams a slight edge.

ROWING from page 12

UMass is hoping the forecast holds and that the water will be flat for the championships.

"We're working on different riggings to try and get our stroke ratings up to move a little quicker this week," Dietz said.

The Minutewomen have had to move their practices this week to the Oxbow in Northampton due to heavy flooding in their normal practice location. With the fast moving water it made it difficult for the Minutewomen to get a feel for the water. The Oxbow's steady waters will give UMass more consistent runs to see which riggings are producing faster stroke ratings, or strokes per minute.

The championship is divided into two sections, the trials and then the finals. In the trials, the Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8, Varsity 4 and Novice 8 will race in two separate heats to earn their way into the petite final or the grand final.

The petite final and grand finals of the Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8, Varsity 4 and Novice 8 will take place after a two hour break from 9:50 a.m. to 11:50 a.m. followed by the finals of five other events. The Second Novice 8, Novice 4, Lightweight 8, Lightweight 4 and the Quad will also race that day.

Last year, the Minutewomen only finished first in one event, the Quad final, but performed well enough in the rest of the events to earn first place. UMass will face some of its toughest competition ever in this year's A-10 Championship, as they go for their 13th conference title.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Check us out on Facebook!

Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.

Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.

Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.

If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.

We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.

Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com

TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

What: Business Manager
Where: The Daily Collegian
When: Next Year

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

Late comeback falls short in loss to Eagles

BASEBALL from page 12

Mickey Wiswall hit a two-run triple later in the inning, and Garrett Smith followed with an RBI single. Freni finished the inning but was relieved by Nathan Monroy for the fourth.

Monroy pitched well the sole run he allowed was a sacrifice fly in the fifth inning. He pitched himself into bases-loaded situations but escaped with the one run on a pair of fly ball outs. He pitched 4 1/3 innings before Mike Gedman relieved him to pitch the final 2/3 innings of the game.

The Minutemen had a chance to tie the game in the ninth. Adam Tempesta and Franczek were on first and second. Jim Macdonald came to the plate, but BC's Michael Belfiore recorded his second strikeout of the inning to save the game.

Game notes

Adam Tempesta and Brian Baudinet each recorded three hits for UMass … Leonard entered the game with an 8.31 ERA but his record now stands at a perfect 3-0 … BC will play No. 4 North Carolina this weekend. The Eagles have already lost six games to No. 1 Miami and No. 2 Florida State this season … UMass outhit the Eagles, 12-7.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Starting pitcher Jared Freni allowed four runs in three innings of work in yesterday's loss to Boston College.

Offense hitting stride for UM

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is about to enter its final weekend of regular season play before the Atlantic 10 Championships. Currently, the Minutewomen are ranked third in the A-10, just one place behind their preseason ranking.

The beginning of the season was a struggle for them. The Minutewomen (5-9, 3-2 A-10) encountered stiff competition, but it ultimately prepared them for their conference games and the final days of their season.

Last weekend the tables turned, and for the first time this season, the Minutewomen won two consecutive games, securing their third place position in the A-10. The top four teams in the conference will compete in the A-10 Championships.

"The exciting part of the season is that we haven't reached our potential, and you really do want to be peaking towards the end of the season. That's what we're doing now," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen took awhile to click because a large portion of the team is new to the UMass roster. This has made an interesting start to the season adding to their already difficult schedule.

"You really never know how long it is going to take. Some teams click in a couple days or weeks. For us, it took a little bit longer," Venechanos said.

Venechanos and the rest of the team now know what it takes for the team to play well together. The players have started to settle into their positions and have gotten used to each other's tendencies on the field.

Increased offensive

In last Sunday's game against La Salle, the Minutewomen had 11 different players score a goal. This has made UMass a very dangerous team offensively, which is what they have struggled with since the start of the season.

"At the beginning [of the season] we just couldn't get the ball in the back of the net," Venechanos said.

Having seven main scorers on the team makes it easier for the Minutewomen to increase scoring opportunities. If two players are having an off game, it still leaves five more to step up and create scoring chances. This season, they have been able to use a variety of different people to score goals including midfielders and defenders. It is difficult for opposing teams to hone in on one or two players, let alone seven offensive threats.

The Minutewomen have vastly improved their offensive attack in recent weeks, moving up to a tie for third place in the conference.

"It makes us really dynamic and multidimensional," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen have started to play together as a team, increasing their overall dynamic. In the past, they struggled bringing the ball up the field and getting the ball to the attackers for a chance at a goal. As the team started working together, they have been able to use the defenders to bring the ball back up the field for more scoring opportunities.

UMass has started to have better control over the ball and slow down the pace of the game, as opposed to rushing with the ball and making mistakes something that was a past problem for the team. Being able to carry the ball up the field and control the pace of the game has decreased their opponents' chances for a run at the goal.

The Minutewomen have been working in practice on being more creative with the way they play during a game. They have been putting different plays into use and adding tricks on attack while defensively making their team a little less predictable. That allows them to do what they want during a game, increasing their ball control and scoring opportunities.

"When you aren't a predictable team, it's harder for other teams to scout you," Venechanos said.

One game at a time

At the start of the season, the team's goal was to put themselves in a position to go to the A-10 Tournament and ultimately win it, but instead of just focusing on that season goal, the Minutewomen have taken it one step at a time.

"To put it in perspective, you know there are steps [that] we're just taking it one game at a time. We respond well when we make things short term," Venechanos said.

Venechanos makes sure that the team only focuses on the game at hand, not the future. That is what helped them defeat both Saint Joseph's and La Salle last weekend. They hope to take that momentum into this weekend when they take on Saint Bonaventure and Duquesne at home.

Schreiner named A-10 Rookie of the Week

On Monday the A-10 announced that freshman Kelsey Schreiner was named Rookie of the Week. Schreiner has improved a lot this season from her successful draw controls to being an offensive threat for the Minutewomen.

"Schreiner is getting more look on attack, she's shooting more and putting some shots away," Venechanos said.

Schreiner scored five goals last weekend, the winning goal against St. Joseph's and four more goals in a 20-11 win against La Salle.

Schreiner is tied with Jessica Villapiano for the fourth highest points on the team with a total of 10. Schreiner has seven goals on 13 shots and three assists on the season. She is leading the team in draw controls with 28 and has seven ground balls.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Freshman midfielder Kelsey Schreiner was named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week after scoring five goals in two weeks.

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 18 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders Barback
Cashiers Waitstaff
Security Staff
SATURDAYS
SkyPlex 10 Stepms Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potters-auto.com
(One mile North of UMass on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Get Dressed.
New dresses just arrived.
Open LATE Thursday nights!
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Home for the summer?
Take a course.
Enroll in a summer course at MWCC and transfer it back to your college or university this fall.
MWCC credits transfer to most colleges across the country. It's easily done, usually through your college's registrar's office. Check there first to ensure the course meets their requirements. Once you complete your MWCC course, request a transcript from the MWCC Enrollment Center to transfer the credit to your home institution.
You can complete a course in five to ten weeks!
ENG101 English Composition I
ENG102 English Composition II
ECO101 Macroeconomics
ECO102 Microeconomics
PSY105 Introduction to Psychology
SOC103 Introduction to Sociology
BIO109 Biology I
CHE107 General Chemistry I
HIS201 History of the United States
HUM280 The Art of Being Human
MAT160 College Mathematics I
MAT161 College Mathematics II
and more!
Check out MWCC classes this summer!
Go to www.mwcc.edu, click on "Class Schedules"
For more information, call the Enrollment Center (978) 630-9110; email admissions@mwcc.mass.edu
Mount Wachusett Community College
www.mwcc.edu

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

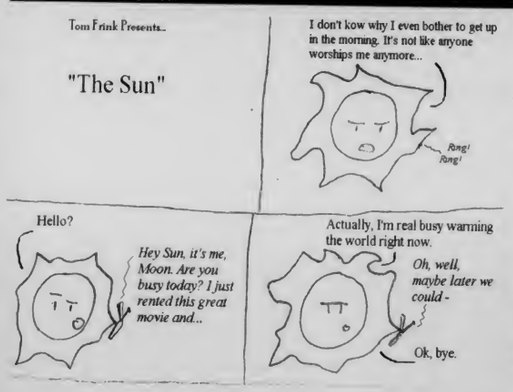
June Cleaver was hot.

		8	5	3
			6				8	4
7		2		9	4
		3				5	1
		9				2
	6	1				7
			7	5		4		9
3	2				6
				4	8	3

QUOTE OF THE DAY

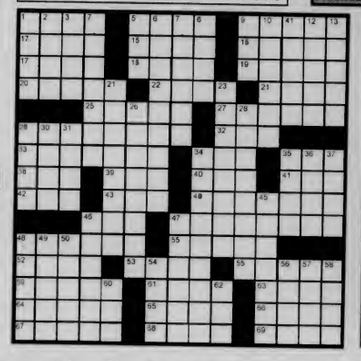
"What did Christ really do? He hung out with hard-drinking fishermen."

— Iggy Pop



ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



THE SUN By Thomas Frink

ACROSS
1 As a result
5 Desiccated
9 Egyptian dam
14 Once in a blue moon
15 Child's taboo
16 Valerie Harper role
17 German car
18 Harbor vessels
19 Miscalculated
20 Deep pile fabric
22 Turns right
24 Isolated land
25 Nocturnal insects
27 Midpoint
29 Hopeful
32 Pose questions
33 Commeal concoction
34 Well-suited
35 Chinese food additive
38 Kisser
39 Personal quirk
40 Regret
41 Got a bite
42 Golfer Ernie
43 Bic filler
44 Prohibited
46 Marshland
47 Church books
48 "___ Stopped at Eboli"
51 All confused
52 Raise a stink
53 Milanese eight
55 Replay gimmick
59 Caine movie
61 Scraps for Fido
63 Turner and Clanton
64 Michigan city
65 Dermatologist's concern
66 Shrinking Asian sea
67 Deadly
68 Pissed
69 Eur. alliance

DOWN
1 Golf hazard
2 Cart
3 Pakistani tongue
4 Subject to earthquakes
5 Aardvark food
6 Oil-rig worker
7 Eti
8 Medicinal quantity
9 Metric measura
10 Head doctor?
11 Lasst satisfactory
12 Fred's pre-Ginger partner
13 Consumer advocate Ralph
21 Algar and Hornblower
23 Shoulder bones
26 Liking
28 Gatty and Winwood
29 Alas!
30 Saint
31 Wooden fasteners
34 Alexander the Great's tutor
35 Self-defense spray
36 Arouse
37 Acquires
45 Romance language
46 An atoll
47 Pound a beat
48 Vassel
49 Hi!
50 Repair again
54 Male cats
56 Creole vegetable
57 Essence
58 Norway's capital
60 List-ending abbr.
62 Do tailor's work

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, Apr 18 - Thu, Apr 24
The Duchess of Langeais 3:30 6:30 9:15
THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 5:00 7:30 9:45 No 2:45 Sun or Thu
UGETSU Sun 4/20 2:00 Thu 4/24 7:00
Hampshire College FACULTY FILM FEST! Sun 4/20 7:00
INSTRUMENT PETTING ZOO! Thu 4/24 1-3pm
UNDER THE SAND MOON 4:45 9:30
The Band's Visit 2:30 7:15 No 7:15 Sun or Thu
26 Amity St. Downtown Amherst (413) 253-5241 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, April 18 - Thu, April 24
YOUNG @ HEART 2:30 3:30 4:45 6:00 7:00 8:30 9:15 PLUS 12 & 1pm Sat & Sun AND 10am Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5843

LOU REED
Live in Concert
plus THURSTON MOORE
SUN. APRIL 20 · 8 PM
CALVIN
19 KING ST • NORTHAMPTON, MA
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If only you had a Coach ice cream cone to accessorize with this warm and sunny day.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Jam bands, with their endlessly repetitive noise, are slowing down the evolution of music in contemporary society.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Sweatpants may be the antithesis of rock and roll, but they are pinnacle of comfort.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
If your emotions are best explained by Hootie and the Blowfish, your emotions are not real.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You have the hands of a nine year old girl but the heart of a hippo.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your cup of life may not be full of glamour, but at least it's full of something.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
There are many challenges on your to do list, but conquer the most attractive ones first.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If you're looking for some fun, try hitting on a nun.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you want to learn about time travel, ask an earthworm to show you his hole.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
A little facial hair is cool, too much makes you look like an animalistic heathen.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The slime exctreted by hagfish must be peeled off as rinsing it with water will only cause the slime increase in volume.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Napolean was the fierce and vicious military god of an imperial empire...and then they named a pastry after him.

CENTRAL
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS
FREE ADMISSION - RAIN OR SHINE
AT VAN METER COURTS
4:20:08 RUN FOR THE HILL
- 6:15
- 5:00
- 3:45
- 3:00
- 2:00
- 1:00
- 12:00
Sponsored by Central Area Government, an alcohol-free event, all bags are subject to search.
This Program Made Possible in Part by a Grant from the U Mass Arts Council.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Say Cheese! UHS needs students for a photo shoot this month. Have fun, get a gift and maybe win a prize! Get info and sign up at the UHS website, www.umass.edu/uhs, by April 17.

APT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gwade@student.umass.edu

APT FOR RENT

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1600 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+ 4 Bedrooms $1500+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last.

APT FOR RENT

www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

#1 easy college biz opportunity up to $5k/wk. -special-http://kbo.vacationpower.com Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

verizon wireless

Be the enV of your friends.

Get the enV and see what it can do!

enV™ by LG
$79.99 after rebate
LG VX9900: $129.99 2-yr. price – $50 mail-in rebate. With new 2-yr. activation.

connect in more ways:
txt, pix, video, email & IM

know what's going on:
download new music & video on the go, get the game score and keep an eye on social networking sites

Win a hybrid!

Sign up for service at a participating Verizon Wireless Communications Store and ask how you could win a brand new hybrid car! Your friends — and the planet — will love you!

Switch to America's Most Reliable Wireless Network®

For sweepstakes details and store locations go to vzwcar.com.

Sweepstakes: NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Visit a Verizon Wireless Communications Store (BJ's and Circuit City not included) and activate a new line of service on a calling plan $39.99 monthly access or higher w/ 2-yr. Agmt, then register online by May 31st to enter. New line of service must be active for at least 30 days to remain eligible. On how to enter for free, see Official Rules at vzwcar.com. Sweepstakes begins on 4/14/08 and ends on 5/31/08. Must be 18 yrs. of age with valid driver's license and legal U.S. resident. Void where prohibited. Limit one entry per person.

Activation fee/line: $35 ($25 for secondary Family SharePlan® lines w/ 2-yr. Agmt).
IMPORTANT CONSUMER INFORMATION: Subject to Customer Agmt, Calling Plan, rebate form & credit approval. Up to $175 early termination fee/line & other charges & $1.99/MB (incl. Mobile Web ads). Offers and coverage, varying by service, not available everywhere. V CAST Music: per song charges req'd; airtime may apply for music downloads. Rebates take up to 6 weeks. Limited-time offers. While supplies last. Network details and coverage maps at verizonwireless.com.
© 2008 Verizon Wireless.
55054

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 2008

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One day after defeating Boston College for the Beanpot Championship at Fenway Park, the Minutemen dropped a close game to the Eagles, 5-4, in Chestnut Hill.

Not this time around

UMass falls to BC one day after beating rivals

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

One day after winning its first Beanpot Championship since 2000, the Massachusetts baseball team met a familiar opponent, Boston College.

However, this time the result was different, and the Eagles (19-18, 5-13 Atlantic Coast Conference) escaped with a 5-4 victory in Chestnut Hill.

UMass will host Charlotte for a three-game series this weekend at Earl Lorden Field.

Yesterday, freshman pitcher Kevin Moran struggled early for BC, allowing three runs in the first inning before being pulled from the game in the second after allowing a leadoff walk.

Today, the Eagles threw another freshman on the mound, but he enjoyed far greater success than Moran.

The Minutemen (11-15, 4-8 Atlantic 10) registered nine hits off Jeff Leonard (6 2/3 innings pitched), who shut UMass out for the first six innings before allowing four runs in the seventh, although none were earned.

Trailing 5-0, UMass scored four runs in the top of the seventh inning to cut the deficit to one.

The inning didn't appear promising for the Minutemen as Bryan Garrity and Garrett Glashoff both flew out. Andy Tuetken reached on an error from the second baseman and the rally followed.

Freshman Kyle Multer knocked in Tuetken on a single and later scored himself on a two-run double by Ryan Franczek.

Franczek scored on a single by Adam Tempesta, but UMass failed to score the remainder of the game.

Jared Freni started for UMass. After holding a clean slate through the first two innings, he allowed five hits in the third.

BC led off the innings with a double and consecutive singles before Freni recorded the first out.

See BASEBALL on page 9

Aiming for the crown

Minutewomen ready for A-10 championship

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The players have been waiting all season for this, and this weekend it is show time as the Massachusetts tennis team will travel to Pittsburgh, Pa., tomorrow to compete in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Minutewomen (11-10, 4-0 A-10) have secured the top seed in the tournament by virtue of their undefeated conference record and challenging schedule, in which they have faced many top Ivy League programs, including Dartmouth, Cornell, Brown and Yale.

UMass comes into the tournament with a 6-1 record in their last seven games. Aside from minor issues, such as Masha Pozar's recent back spasms, the team is quite healthy – something UMass coach Judy Dixon feels is very important.

"I always say sometimes it is not the best team at the end of the year that wins the championship, but the healthiest team," Dixon said.

Pozar is expected to be ready to go this weekend.

Injury issues on other teams played a key role in the Minutewomen's 4-0 conference record. When UMass faced Temple, the top team in the conference, the Owls were missing two of their starters who were out with injuries. The Minutewomen victory knocked Temple down to the second seed in the tournament.

UMass will receive a first round to its top seed in the tournament. it will face the winner of eighth-seeded St. Louis and ninth-seeded Fordham.

The Minutewomen likely would prefer to face the Fordham Rams, having beaten the Rams 5-2 earlier

See TENNIS on page 8

Senior Masha Pozar and the Minutewomen are the No. 1 seed heading into this weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament in Pittsburgh, Pa. They went undefeated during conference play this season.

Dixon's career worthy of fame

Longtime coach bestowed with highest possible honor

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

In order to be elected to the Tennis Hall of Fame in Newport, R.I., you would have to hold a resume that stands out above the rest. Massachusetts tennis coach, Judy Dixon, has one that qualifies.

Growing up in New Jersey by the ocean, a girl only had limited choices on what activities to pursue – tennis or sailing. Dixon, motivated by watching her father, chose tennis, and it didn't take long for her to excel; two years later, the 11-year-old was ranked third in the country for her age group.

She belonged to the first-ever national 11-and-under doubles team. Shortly after her first of many achievements, Dixon met the woman that would be her coach, teacher and friend over the next 10 years, Wimbledon champion, Doris Hart.

Seven years later, at the age of 18, Dixon was fortunate enough to play alongside one of the most famous tennis players ever, Billie Jean King.

See DIXON on page 8

UMass tennis coach Judy Dixon will be named to the Tennis Hall of Fame in Newport, R.I.

Rowers look to defend title for 12th time

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team will return to the Cooper River in Pennsauken, N.J., this weekend in hopes of extending its reign over the Atlantic 10.

UMass has won the conference championship every year since its inception in 1996, winning last year's by its smallest margin of victory ever. Rhode Island came within one point of ending the Minutewomen's streak, though UMass still won, 45-44.

At the beginning of the season, UMass and URI were tied in voting by the A-10 coaches to win the conference and up to now, the Rams have gotten the better of the Minutewomen. After facing each other in the Yankee Cup back on March 29 and again this past weekend in the Knecht Cup, both teams have seen each other enough to know what they are up against.

Along with UMass and URI, Dayton, Duquesne, Fordham, George Washington, La Salle, Saint Joseph's and Temple will also compete for the conference championship.

In the Knecht Cup, the Minutewomen raced faster than URI in many events in the first two rounds, but were outdone by the Rams in the finals. Despite the tough loss last weekend and the loss in the Yankee Cup, team morale is still high.

"Everyone thinks we can still pull it off, and that's really positive," UMass coach Jim Dietz said.

The water was rough the day of the finals for the Knecht Cup, and the Minutewomen lack experience rowing in those conditions because the Connecticut River, where the team practices, is a relatively flat

See ROWING on page 8

Dietz's résumé growing by the day

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

When asked what the most successful sports team at the University of Massachusetts has been over the past decade, few would respond the women's rowing team.

But over the past 12 years, the rowing team has set a record for most consecutive Atlantic 10 Championships, and look to extend that record to 13 this weekend.

The 12 championships date back to the first ever A-10 Championship in 1996, and the Minutewomen have not lost one yet. A year before the first championship, Jim Dietz was hired to coach the women's program when it jumped from a club sport to a varsity program.

A coach who had quite a name before coaching UMass to so many championships, Dietz has used his experiences over his career, to help create a winning tradition here at UMass.

"I went out for the track team [in high school] and a bunch of the guys on the rowing team came down, and because I was a big kid they grabbed me and said, 'You're coming with us to rowing practice, or we're gonna beat the crap out of you.' That's the way it all started," Dietz said.

Dietz has those rowers to thank for what turned out to be a very successful rowing career. His high school was affiliated with the New York Athletic Club, one of the premier rowing clubs in the country, and Dietz went on to race for the club in all classes of rowing and sculling events.

While in high school, Dietz would go on to win all United States and Canadian Scholastic Championships in both single and double sculls from 1964 to 1967. In addition, Dietz went on to win the first Junior World Championship in single sculls in 1967 in Ratzeburg, Germany. Dietz also competed on his first U.S. National team during his high school years.

After high school, Dietz went on to row for Northeastern and raced in the International Circuit in Europe during his summer breaks. He also raced on many Pan American teams, capturing medals in 1967, 1975, 1979 and 1983.

Dietz graduated from Northeastern in 1972 and immediately made the jump to the Olympics. He went on to compete with three consecutive Olympic teams from 1972 till 1980 before the age of 36, missing the 1984 Olympics.

After rowing in the Olympics, Dietz started a new career coaching the Olympic team in 1988, 1992 and 2000, where he continued the success he had experienced since his days in high school. In 2000, Dietz coached the women's lightweight double to a bronze medal in Sydney, Australia.

Dietz's college coaching career began when he started coaching men at the Coast Guard from 1985 to 1994, before coming to UMass to coach the women's program in 1995.

"I decided to reinvent myself, and although I was offered [the job] coaching [the men's team] at the 1996 Olympics, I passed it up because I wanted to start coaching with women," Dietz said.

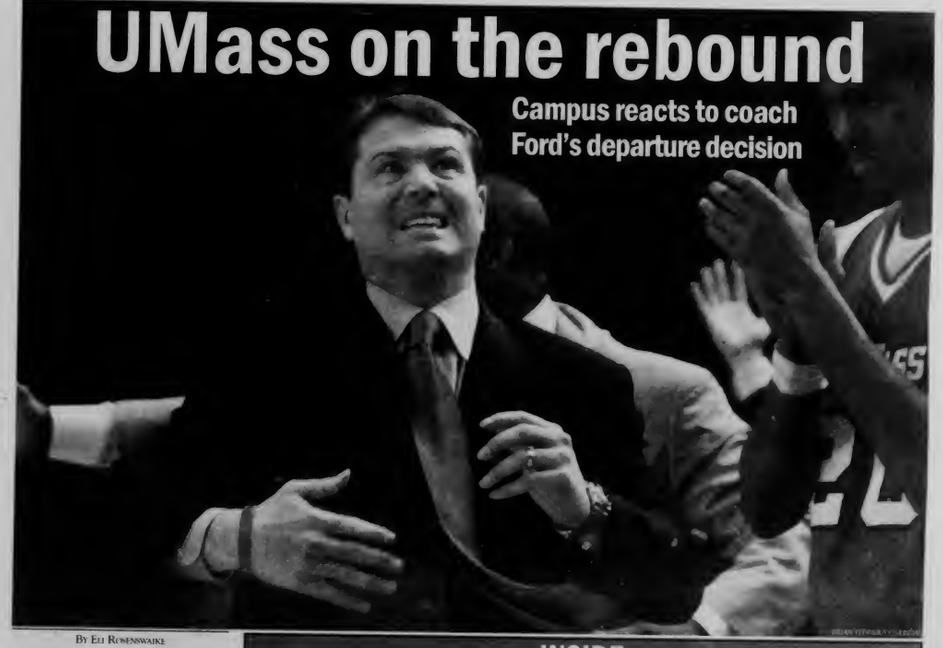
In all of Dietz's rowing experiences, from rowing for the New York Athletic Club to rowing and coaching in the Olympics, there was one thing that Dietz had learned that he would bring with him to coach at UMass.

"The only thing that counts is hard work, and you just work as hard as you can, and you just assume that you can be faster," Dietz said.

While coaching here at UMass, Dietz has taught his rowers the importance of responsibility and hard work. These points that Dietz has stressed have proven themselves with the success of his teams.

"He leaves it in your court. It's your call how hard you want to work, and what you put in, you get out. If you work harder than anyone, you're going to be in the best boat and you're going to be the best athlete. I think he expects a lot, he expects really responsible athletes," senior captain Sarah Marsan said.

Dietz expects much more than just to be good rowers from his teams.



See DIETZ on page 8

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:82 | SAT H:80 | SUN H:67 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 18, 2008

UMass on the rebound

Campus reacts to coach Ford's departure decision

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

One week after saying he was "100 percent committed" to the Massachusetts men's basketball program, Travis Ford left for a higher-paying job at Oklahoma State.

The reaction afterward from UMass fans was essentially 100 percent united: Don't come back.

"I wish Travis Ford the best, but at the same time I hope he knows not to step foot in Amherst," said sports director and host of UVC-TV 19's UMass Sports Weekly Dan Exter. "People are pretty pissed about what's been going on here."

See FORD REACTIONS on page 12

INSIDE:

NEWS
Chancellor candidates tour and speak at UM
Page 2

FEATURES
Frat food drive shows community dedication
Page 4

ARTS & LIVING
Dancing in drag: campus shows a little leg
Page 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 123

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Hobody Nere

Chancellor finalists pay visits

By Eric Schlicht
Collegian Correspondent

Campus visits began earlier this week for the four finalists seeking the University of Massachusetts chancellor position. Each candidate will spend a day touring the campus and meeting with staff, faculty, students, alumni, the UMass administration and leaders of the Amherst community.

Satish K. Tripathi, provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at the State University of New York at Buffalo, made his official visit on Tuesday.

Martin Hall, deputy vice chancellor at the University of Cape Town, South Africa, followed Tripathi, meeting with campus leaders Thursday.

Harris Pastides, vice president for Research and Health Sciences at the University of South Carolina and executive director of the University of South Carolina Research Foundation, will visit Friday.

The final step of UMass familiarizing itself with the candidates takes place this Tuesday when Robert C. Holub, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, comes to campus.

The candidates share similar views on issues such as advancing UMass's academic reputation both nationally and internationally and improving the experience of undergraduates.

At the same time, however, each drew upon their own experiences and credentials as to why they would be best suited to lead UMass.

Mr. Holub, who served as the Dean of the Undergraduate Division at UC Berkeley, said he was an advocate of undergraduate education.

"Students on a research campus must be a part of the research process, taking an active role in archives and laboratories, in practical and theoretical endeavors of the faculty," Holub said. "Undergraduate research programs are essential, as are capstone experiences and opportunities to participate in the life of the institution."

Hall also expressed his devotion to undergraduates.

"Undergraduate education is absolutely critical for UMass's mission," Hall said.

He added that the large amount of students on campus provided an excellent opportunity for campus life. He also stressed the importance of listening to the student body when learning about the issues facing UMass.

Tripathi expressed his view that a truly educational undergraduate experience needs to incorporate both formal curriculum as well as extracurricular activities in order to be complete.

Pastides' main goal is to take the resources that come with a large university, like UMass, and combine it with the feel of a smaller college. He says he hopes to implement ideas such as students working closely with faculty and researching in small groups.

Each candidate cited his experience to prove why he would be a top-notch chancellor.

Tripathi said he gained knowledge from serving in various leadership positions and this has allowed him to see that while the chancellor, deans and provosts "set the definition of academic excellence," the faculty are "the core of the university."

He said this blend of faculty and administration is what is needed to "capitalize on strategic opportunities."

Along similar lines, Holub cited his ability to understand the hierarchy of a university and to build strong leadership teams.

"I do not shy away from making difficult decisions," he said. "I invite input from all shareholders so that my decisions are well informed."

Pastides differed, saying he would take a hands-on approach and as an "engaging chancellor" would "represent the University in every corner of the Commonwealth and the nation."

Hall brought to attention his unique situation in South Africa.

"Issues that we face and have fought and faced over the last 10 to 15 years in South Africa are common to more than the universities but they are in more extreme form," Hall said. "And that's given me a lot of insight into the key issues that face universities as they move forward."

He also noted his status as an "international academe and researcher" as well as his almost 15 years of leadership positions at the University of Cape Town.

The candidates all voiced different reasons for their initial interest in the UMass chancellor position. Tripathi said he hadn't been looking for a new leadership opportunity, but was "honored" when UMass asked him to consider being a candidate. Pastides was also nominated by the university and felt compelled to seek the chancellor position.

Hall has had connections with UMass for "a long time" through partnerships between UMass and the University of Cape Town, and his daughter and step-daughter have both gone to school at UMass. Holub's interest was piqued when he had the opportunity to become part of a public university that "wants to move forward" into the top tier of public education.

When the candidates were asked to pick out a particular experience that served to shape them as an educator and a leader, Hall again referenced his time in South Africa.

"South Africa's democratic transition in 1994 has a lifetime effect on anyone who is privileged enough to be a part of it. It's been one of the more extraordinary political transitions of our time," Hall said referencing the end of the South African apartheid and when free elections were first held.

Pastides could not pinpoint one experience as paramount, but regarded his time teaching undergraduate and graduate students, serving as an administrator, and filling a number of other positions at universities as equally important in equipping him with the skills necessary to do a chancellor's work.

Tripathi recalled his time as chairman of his department as well as his work in building up the engineering department at UC Riverside as landmark events. For Holub, he noted time spent serving on the budget committee at Berkley, which helped him "to see the university not from the perspective of my own narrow discipline, but as a great collection of individuals, fields, interests, and initiatives that contribute to the collective good."

For closing statements, each candidate expressed the most exciting part about the possibility of serving UMass.

Holub reiterated his goal of advancing UMass to a top-tier school, with the ultimate aim to be regarded as one of the "top two dozen schools in the nation." Pastides, who left UMass in 1998, conveyed that "the occasion to lead one of the nation's great universities, coupled with an opportunity to renew old friendships and community ties, is most exciting."

Tripathi remarked on the strong sense of UMass pride and hopes to participate in the excitement of Amherst community.

Finally, Hall beamed about UMass's potential to continue to better itself as well as to help improve surrounding areas such as Holyoke and Springfield.

Both he and Holub commented on the challenging years ahead for public universities and the crossroads they will face, noting the increasing lack of funding and the rising costs of a university education as reasons why proper leadership is essential in the future years.

After president Jack M. Wilson has met with each of the candidates, he will make a choice which then must be approved by the Board of Trustees.

Tree catches fire outside Gorman Hall

A tree outside Gorman hall in Central residential area at the University of Massachusetts caught fire at around 1 a.m. Thursday.

Residents were evacuated for about a half-hour as the Amherst Fire Department extinguished the blaze. The fire reportedly started in a pile of branches and brush left by UMass Physical Plant employees who had been trimming the tree early Wednesday morning.

"All of a sudden our neighbor said, 'There's a tree outside on fire,' and I heard someone yell, 'Run. Get outside!'" said Enget Dang, a Gorman resident and UMass sophomore.

UMPD declined to comment, but officers were asking residents if they had seen anyone around the area prior to the incident.

"I was brushing my teeth on the fourth floor when I smelled smoke," said Anthony Weber, Gorman resident and UMass sophomore.

"I looked out the window and saw what looked like a small, contained fire. Then I went to spit out my toothpaste and when I looked back, the flame was licking the tree and the tree caught fire. It escalated rather quickly," Weber said.

Within the hour, firefighters had put out the fire, leaving the tree looking "like a totem pole," according to one resident.

Residence Life staff asked Gorman residents to keep their windows closed for 24 hours to prevent smoke inhalation.

– S.P. Sullivan

Collegian | Jonathan Hanks

A fire outside Gorman Hall started in a pile of brush and spread to a nearby tree.

RSU fights for poster rights, ACLU speaks

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

The day before a judicial hearing determining the future status of the Radical Student Union, the organization held a rally for free speech on the steps of the Student Union.

Standing in front of a banner reading "Whose University? Our University," members of the registered student organization lambasted the University of Massachusetts administration for what it considers suppression of free speech on campus.

"There is no explicit protection of free speech here at UMass-Amherst and this affects every individual student as well as every student group on campus," said Constantinos Savaros, student senator from Orchard Hill and member of the RSU. "What you say here is not guaranteed to be protected and you're all at risk to be disciplined for expressing yourselves."

Savaros criticized University policy as limiting the freedom of speech by giving undue authority to the chancellor for determining what can and cannot be displayed on campus.

"There is no criteria outlined on how to determine what is and is not acceptable and thus the chancellor can make up the criteria as he wishes," Savaros said. "The arbitrary nature of these rules makes free speech non-existent here. The chancellor determines who can say what and where they can say it according to the vague rules that currently exist."

Bill Newman, the director of the American Civil Liberties Union's (ACLU) Western Massachusetts office, charged the University with putting a chilling effect on the First Amendment at UMass.

"It's about the right to express yourselves," he said to a crowd of nearly 100 onlookers. "It's not only your right, it's your obligation to make those statements."

The rally arrived on the eve of a judicial hearing that, according to members of the RSU, will likely determine whether the group will lose either its office space or status as an RSO. The group has been charged with failure to comply with an administrator and the theft, misuse or damage of University property for defying a directive to remove a safe-sex brochure graphically displaying two men engaging in sexual relations earlier this semester.

"I think a student group that has any type of rally that promotes a positive message is doing a service to the school," said Brad DeFlumeri, president of the UMass Republican Club. "We appreciated what the RSU did today in bringing in a high-ranking member of the American Civil Liberties Union."

Some students, like senior Brian Scannell, remained more ambivalent about the rally and its effect on current state of campus free speech.

"I'm a student here, and I'm not part of the administration and I'm not a part of the Radical Student Union, so for the administration to tell me what I can't see or for the Radical Student Union to tell me what I have to see, it's just two different types of tyranny," said the mathematics and economics major.

Scannell called for both the administration and the Radical Student Union to seek out the opinion of the student body.

"Both the administration and the RSU now need to consult the students and ask them how they feel instead of telling them how they should feel," he said. "The administration tells us how we should feel one way and the RSU tells us how we should feel the other way and nobody actually asks us how we generally feel."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

Bill Newman, director of the ACLU's western office, spoke about free speech rights and what he believes was a violation of the RSU's constitutional rights at the group's rally yesterday.

Campus caters kosher during Passover

By Sara Afzal
Collegian Correspondent

For some Jewish students at the University of Massachusetts, keeping kosher is easier with the kosher food option offered at Franklin Dining Commons.

According to freshman Hannah Grossman, the kosher meal plan has not only allowed her to maintain her kosher diet, but meet other Jewish students keep kosher.

"When you eat kosher you know there will always be other students eating kosher too," said Grossman.

For UMass sophomore Howard Feibusch, kosher dining has made it easier to maintain his kosher diet. Feibusch said he grew up in Lawrence, N.Y., eating strictly kosher food.

Kosher cuisine abides by Jewish dietary laws, which includes not eating pork, shellfish, or other non-kosher animals. Dairy and meat cannot be cooked or served together.

Kosher food at the dining commons is prepared in a non-dairy kitchen.

A typical menu includes potato soup, spinach salad, fresh fruit salad, corned beef, shepherd's pie, tuna salad sandwich and chocolate raspberry cake.

The kosher meal plan offers only lunch and dinner options.

The 35 students on the kosher meal plan can have an unlimited choice from the kosher menu.

"This is the only place I can get kosher meat and the food is really good," said Grossman.

Poultry and beef must be slaughtered in accordance with Jewish ritual. Certain parts of the animal must be removed and severed, which is done by a trained individual, called a shochet. This special method of slaughter is called the shechita.

This is the first year the kosher option has been offered at Franklin Dining Commons. Previously, kosher food was offered only at Hampden Dinning Commons in the Southwest Residential Area.

The kosher option is an additional $200 charge per semester to the student meal plan. Typical meals plans include unlimited meals for $1,950 per semester or a lesser option, the value meal plan, which offers 224 meals per semester for $1,663.50.

At Franklin Dining Commons, executive chef Willie Sng, runs the kosher kitchen, prepares strictly kosher meals and orders kosher food products. Kerry Loux, a culinary worker, supervises the food preparation.

Loux said all fruits and vegetables are carefully washed and meat is prepared well-done because rare meat is not permitted. Under Jewish dietary law, animal blood must be removed as much as possible.

Loux explained that kosher dining endorses 18 different kosher symbols, which identify food as kosher. Kosher symbols include food products labeled with a "K" inside a triangle or a "U" inside a circle.

In the kosher kitchen, there is sterilization of all the equipment. Utensils touching non-kosher foods can reclassify kosher foods as non-kosher.

The non-Jewish staff of the kosher kitchen must abide by all Jewish dietary laws for kosher food preparation.

As a blessing, Rabbi David Ruderman lights a candle which remains burning inside a metal container in the kitchen. This permits the non-Jewish staff to prepare the kosher food.

Ruderman supervises kosher dining and works as the Jewish learning initiator at the Hillel House – the center for the Jewish community on campus.

Grossman attends Hillel House and helps prepare the kosher food for Friday and Saturday Shabbat, or Sabbath – a dinner celebrating the day of rest. Before dinner candles are lit, the rabbi leads them in prayer.

Hillel House brings the Jewish community together, and the kosher meal plan has allowed students to easily maintain Jewish dietary law.

At the Chabad House on North Hadley Road, Feibusch celebrates Sabbath, or weekly day of rest from Friday after sundown until Saturday after sunset. During Sabbath he abstains from his routine activities of the week, like schoolwork and watching TV.

Starting this week, Jewish students will observe the holiday of Passover, which celebrates the exodus from Egypt. Kosher food will only be served at Hampden Dining Commons during Passover.

Christian Gomez | Collegian

Hillel House, the center for the UMass Jewish community, caters to kosher diners, serving meals on Friday and Saturday which are free to all UMass students.

FEATURES

Pick-up for the needy

Justin McGrail (left) and Joe Scult pack the bed of their truck full of food picked up at local retailers. The food will then be delivered to the Bangs Community center in Amherst.

Local frat donates time, effort to help

BY SHELBY LANDECK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While most University of Massachusetts students are still sleeping, two Theta Chi fraternity brothers wake up early, every Wednesday morning, to do their part in making sure the Bangs Community Center in Amherst's Bread and Produce program runs smoothly.

The program, which has been running at the senior center for 13 years, helps people in need save a few precious dollars. "With the cost of fuel and food rising this program is a tremendous help to seniors who live on a fixed income," said Maura Plante, the program director for the center.

This particular Wednesday, as 7:30 a.m. rears its ugly head, Justin McGrail and Joe Scult are the two brothers who emerge from the frat house. They are surprisingly more alert then you would expect an average college student to be at this hour.

"I don't mind doing it," confesses McGrail. "It's only once a semester and usually when I get back, I'm more productive because I'm up early and I have a lot of time to get more things done."

With the rest of UMass as dissorted as an old-western ghost town, the fraternity brothers make their way through the dusty dirt parking lot, dodging Solo-Cup tumbleweeds along the way. When they reach a fellow brother's Dodge Dakota, which is lent out and used every week, the guys hop in, put the truck in drive and head off.

After a 10-minute drive through Amherst, Scult and McGrail arrive at their first destination: Atkins Farm. The country market is the first among three stops that will eventually fill the truck bed with food. After picking up a heavy box of baked goods, they head to the next stop.

Driving through the back roads of Amherst and Hadley the guys eventually end up at Panera Bread, where today the workers seem a little embarrassed. Apparently, they gave some of the food to another program, and much to their dismay only have two grocery bags full of bread and two garbage bags full of bagels to offer McGrail and Scult. The workers may have been ashamed at their poor offering, but the amount of bagels given away could have easily fed an apartment full of college students for a month.

"Next stop is Whole Foods, that's the real money-maker," McGrail said with a smile. The boys pull their truck around to the loading docks behind Whole Foods. When they walk in the door they need look no further. Parked right by the door, ready to be loaded up and brought away, are two shopping carts overflowing with food.

Riding the shopping carts over to the truck, McGrail and Scult pack in the food. Just as it looked like they had it all tucked safely into the truck bed, a few Whole Foods workers brought out more. Boxes of fresh strawberries, grapes, peppers, onions, potatoes, muffins, cereal, assorted canned goods, apples, oranges, and just about anything else you can think of, was brought out and loaded into the truck.

After pausing to admire what they had received, the Theta Chi brothers left for the community center to finish their task.

"They have been a tremendous asset to the Senior Center, as many of the volunteers do not have the physical strength needed to lift and carry heavy boxes, and large plastic bags of food and bread," said Plante.

Plante explained that after the members of Theta Chi drop of the truckload of food, a group of dedicated volunteers sort and package the bread, bagels, other bakery items and produce, while another center employee decides how many of each fresh produce item each participant may have."

After the bread is sorted and labeled, people begin to arrive. "At 9:15 a.m. each participant signs in and draws a number between one and 50. At 9:30 the doors open and, in groups of about four or five, people go in to pick up items they'd like to take home," Plante said.

With the donations received from the three stores, everyone gets a fair share. "As we always receive a tremendous amount each person can take up to seven loaves of bread," said Plante.

Though the program has been around for some time, Theta Chi has been working since the beginning of the Fall 2007 semester.

Edward Stone, Theta Chi's philanthropy chair organizes the schedule and ensures that there is set of brothers every Wednesday morning ready to help out.

With Theta Chi's help, Plante is confident the program will continue successfully for many years. "The senior center would have a very difficult time being able to run this program as well as we do if the Theta Chi brothers were not helping us."

And though it's an easy routine, it isn't always a cakewalk. Stone said Theta Chi often runs into some problems during winter and summer break, because they don't have access to the truck or a large number of brothers on hand.

But Stone is enthusiastic about continuing to run the program in the future. "We are planning to continue contributing to the food pick-up and hopefully leave the framework for future members of Theta Chi to continue helping the Senior Citizens of Amherst long after we're gone."

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu

Teen births No. 1 in Holyoke

DAVID HUMPHREYS & FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of the many problems the city of Holyoke faces on a daily basis is its No. 1 ranking of teen births, according to the Public Health Council's annual "Massachusetts Births 2005" report.

With 96.8 of every 1000 females between the ages of 15 and 19 giving birth, Holyoke far exceeds Chelsea's No. 2 ranking by over 20 births, the report said.

Although these numbers are down since 1995, they still show an alarming trend in the city's birth rates, which have increased more than any other Massachusetts city since the 2004 report. The big question is: will Holyoke's rank drop in the 2006 report? The simple answer is no.

"This is not a new thing that Holyoke is No. 1, what we do this year isn't going to change that," Amy Leos-Urbel, Director of Student Support Services at Community Adolescent Resource & Education (CARE) Center, Inc. in Holyoke said.

According to Leos-Urbel, the high teen birth rate is a combined effort over many years to help educate young men and women about parenthood and safer sex practices.

To help promote teen parenthood education, the CARE Center, one of few institutions in Holyoke dealing with the teen pregnancy problem, offers an alternative day school to teenagers who are either pregnant or have given birth. This program addresses the city's elevated high school dropout rate by giving the teens a chance to get their GED while offering services such as daycare and support groups. In the last three years, more than 85 percent of Care Center participants who have received their GED have gone on to college.

Girls, Inc., another agency serving young women in the city, started in 1982 after the local YWCA shut down. Over the past three years, only two members of the program's three thousand teens have become pregnant. Girls, Inc. attributes outstanding statistic to its strong focus on a variety of issues that affect female teens including pregnancy prevention.

"The way that we address teen pregnancy prevention is by a whole host of health education trainings... We do everything from distribute free condoms to having health clinicians come in from Planned Parenthood or the Holyoke Health Center, and they'll do on-site counseling and contraception education with the girls," said Heidi Thomson, the Girls, Inc. director of development and public relations.

According to Thomson, a high school student at Holyoke High School only receives eight hours of health education during their four years. However, at Girls, Inc., in one year, a teen will receive 120 hours of education, primarily related to sex.

The various educational programs used by Girls, Inc. include Preventing Adolescent Pregnancy and Making Proud Choices, which is run by peer leadership programs.

"Each curriculum we use is... proven to be effective. On a more informal basis, however, our girls do street outreach and peer education about the local resources of health education and how to stand up for yourself," said Thomson.

Despite what is being done to educate teens about parenthood, Girls, Inc. and The Cafe Center are both having their funding lowered because Massachusetts has the lowest teen birthrates in three decades. And while this may save money for use in other areas, it doesn't help the city of Holyoke.

According to Thomson, the changes made within government administration ultimately have the strongest impact in the amount of funds available to agencies dealing with teen pregnancy and teen pregnancy prevention. The amount of allocated funds change from year to year based on the personal agenda of whoever is in charge of federal and state funding, she said.

"I think of [the high teen birth rate] as a symptom rather than a cause," Leos-Urbel said, citing Holyoke's high poverty rate and unemployment as two of the top factors contributing to the birth rate.

Heidi Thomson agrees: "I think that you can never look at teen pregnancy in isolation from other social issues. When you put together the socioeconomic challenges that this city has, you're bound to have a breeding ground for other social issues, like teen pregnancy, drug abuse, crime rate, and it's all factored together," she said.

Also, according to Leos-Urbel, ethnicity may possibly play a role in teen pregnancies. "For some Latinos, there isn't a stigma [associated with teen pregnancy]," she said.

According to statistics from the birth report, 73.2 of every 1000 Hispanic teenage females in the state gave birth in 2005, compared to the next highest group, Black, non-Hispanics, with 36.4 out of 1000.

These numbers are lower than the 2005 national average, which are 81.5 births per 1000 Hispanic teens and 60.9 births per 1000 Black, non-Hispanic teens, the Child Trends DataBank Web site said.

According to the 2000 census taken by the U.S. Census Bureau, with 41.4 percent of all Holyoke residents reporting Hispanic heritage compared to the statewide average of 6.8 percent, ethnicity may indeed play a significant part in contributing to city's high teen birth rate.

"The main problem may be that teen pregnancy is looked at as a women's issue, when it's not. Girls aren't getting themselves pregnant. Who's educating the boys? It's not happening in schools and it's not happening at home. There's a social lack of responsibility concerning fatherhood," said Thomson.

Whether Holyoke's high teen pregnancy rate is due to the high Latino population, lack of funding or even just a poor health curriculum, its status as the teenage birth capital of Massachusetts won't disappear overnight. It will take work from both adults and teens to combat this problem and help control the runaway pregnancies plaguing this city.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

See FOOD on page 5

Shopping for a cause

BY ERIN NELSON
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As she walked in the Hospice Shop of the Fisher Home, a customer said, "I make a trip into town just to stop by the shop and see what new things came in ... I always find the best treasures." She had just found a wooden bowl set of four.

The Hospice Shop is located on University Drive, next door to The Hangar. Amanda Hersh, a junior at the University of Massachusetts, is interning at the shop this semester.

She explained that the shop, which primarily sells second-hand clothing, also sells just about anything from dishware to small furniture. "Everyday I say I won't buy anything, but I always do," said Hersh.

Another aspect Hersh loves about the shop is the turnaround of merchandise. "You come in one day and there's stuff, you come in another day and there's totally new merchandise," she said.

The front room is where they usually keep sale items and the back room has house wear and other odds and ends. In between there is a large variety of merchandise including suit jackets, shoes, jewelry, dresses, pants and children's toys.

"It's pretty easy to find what you're looking for, but I like looking around to see what I can find. You can look through the prices and it's always a good deal," Hersh said.

The store is ideal for college students – name brands and vintage looks that have just come back in, at amazing prices. Among the many things Hersh has bought, she found a tweed coat that fits her perfectly and Italian leather boots.

The shop has about 15 volunteers and one director, Pat Keith who works full time. Each volunteer works a minimum of 3 hours every other week, but there are many who put in much more time than that. "The time goes by fast and you get to meet people," said a volunteer.

Adele Mack is one of the more regular volunteers and has the title as the store's seamstress. She enjoys working there so much that she calls it her "second home."

"It gives me a creative energy and I'm doing things here that I've never done before. I feel good giving my time and expertise to contribute and make money for the hospice home, which I thoroughly believe in," she said.

At the shop, someone brought in a dress with a missing button. The button couldn't be replicated so Mack free-stitched a flower that matched the pattern at the top of the dress. It looked as if the dress had originally been designed that way.

The Shop provides discounted, used items benefiting the Fisher Home and other local charities

Aside from Hersh, there are no other student interns or student volunteers; the intern position was created last semester and requires between 10 and 15 hours a week that can be divided between in store and out of store help. It has allowed Amanda to gain a behind-the-scenes outlook on how a clothing shop is run and also gives her experience in customer service, sales and fashion display.

"I always have fun coming into the store, and other's will enjoy it too," she said, while explaining that there are no rules and that everyone is allowed to help with anything. Working in the shop has also given her valuable experience in the fashion industry.

"I really enjoy working here, but it also makes me feel good to know that I'm benefiting someone else," she said.

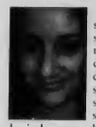
The Hospice Shop is a non-profit organization that raises money for the Fisher Home, an "end of life" care center, and for other patients under hospice care in their own homes.

Hospice care is designed for those that are in their final stages of terminal illness and creates a comfortable atmosphere that focuses on the patients being free of pain.

Keith said the shop is always looking for any kind of new donations. "We're trying to focus on minimizing waste, so even if we can't sell it here, we will find some place that can use it," Keith said.

Two years ago, a cancer survivor created the idea for the hospice shop. She wanted to raise money for those that struggled with terminal illness. After a year of planning, the shop was up and running. On April 29, the shop will be celebrating their first-year anniversary, with specials throughout the day.

Erin Nelson can be reached at enelson@student.umass.edu



CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/18/2008 thru Thurs. 4/24/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

88 Minutes (R)* 1:45 4:40 7:40 10:25
Forbidden Kingdom (PG-13)* 1:20 4:20 7:30 10:10
Forgetting Sarah Marshall (R)* 1:10 1:55 4:00 4:55 7:00 7:50 9:40 10:30
Young@Heart - CinéArts (PG)* 1:15 4:30 7:15 9:50
Prom Night (PG-13)* 1:40 4:50 7:45 10:10
Smart People - CinéArts (R)* 1:35 4:45 7:25 9:45
Street Kings (R)* 1:30 4:10 7:10 9:55
21 (PG-13) 1:05 4:05 7:20 10:15
Horton Hears A Who (G) 1:00 4:15 6:45 9:00
Leatherheads (PG-13) 1:15 4:25 7:05 10:00
Nim's Island (PG) 1:25 4:35 6:55 9:15

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

EDITORIAL OPINION

Grow up, give in

Leigh Greaney

Other people are starting to see it in you. You're starting to see it in yourself — this imminent metamorphosis, this epic change, this threshold crossing concept of "growing up." You start to learn from mistakes, you start to better yourself, and you start to deviate from your childhood ways.

We're told that this change is for the best. We're told that growing up is growing out and it's something we all should do. It's something we all do at different times, in different ways, and at different levels. But what does that really mean?

The two categories are so separate in society. There are children and there are adults. The conventions attached to each determine what is acceptable and what is not. We are given these boundaries by the law and by how we are raised.

If a child is found playing on property that doesn't belong to someone they know it's not frowned upon or punished by the law. If someone over 18 is found on that same property it's considered trespassing. Children are allowed to not know any better, while adults are responsible for their own misdeeds. Excuses seem to come easier to those who are young.

The exclusive difference between "mature" and "immature" revolves around one main concept. It answers the question: What rules us as children and what rules us as adults? The barrier between growing up to grown up begs to answer it.

When we are young, everything is not only bigger to us, but it feels bigger. Every emotion, every cut, every toy taken away, every piece of broccoli we were made to eat becomes the most important thing in our life. We cry more. We laugh louder and longer. We allow ourselves to get carried away. We allow the world to make us feel things at the most intense levels.

As we grow older, experience and reason overshadow emotion. We are taught how to avoid these extremes. We are told to learn from our mistakes in order to keep us from reaching our lowest lows. We are taught to bottle things up to avoid drama and to avoid breaking down. We set boundaries for ourselves.

Sometimes those boundaries work against us. Sometimes we need to break down. Depression, anxiety, and inner suffering take the place of the tantrums. We muffle our impulses with thoughts of "this is immature." We keep ourselves at a distance from what we truly feel. We stop trusting our senses.

It's apparent that those impulses still breathe underneath the shell of maturity. Adults feel empathy for children. Seeing a child fall down or cry hits us differently then if we saw an adult cry or trip and fall.

We feel compassion for the child and we feel awkward for the adult. An adult falling is almost comical, while a child falling makes us scrunch up our face and wonder if they're OK. We assume the adult will be OK and while empathy may still be present, it's exaggerated for the child.

But emotion is still emotion. Why do we feel such an emotional connection with children and their feelings, yet we dismiss adults and dismiss our own feelings? It should still be important. It should still make us scrunch up our face and wonder if they're OK.

Maybe it is because adults feel as if they are in control of children and therefore in control of their range of emotions. Adults realize their impact on children. They know they can console them to stop crying or tickle them to make them laugh.

Why do we feel such an emotional connection with children and their feelings, yet we dismiss adults and dismiss our own feelings?

We feel so powerful over their happiness, because we are powerful over it. But are we also powerful over ourselves and of other adults?

The caste system of age seems cyclical. The older we get, the more control we decide we have over ourselves and our emotions. We mature into beings of power over those who are younger. We feel we have earned our privilege to give advice to anyone with less experience in life. We bottle our impulses to continue to earn that privilege.

Then, the tables turn. Once we become too old, too experienced, too enhanced, we lose that privilege and return to childish impulse. After you're old enough to start losing your health, your drive or your ability to manage by yourself, you are again ruled by your polar emotions.

You can be put in nursing homes where you're excused for things you were once excused for as a child. All the while, the adults of the world, who can still manage for themselves, are allowed to view themselves as more privileged.

It seems like we can't win. We are chastised for acting as we want. We feel shame for feeling things as they truly feel in our hearts. Sometimes we just want to scream, or cry, or laugh until it hurts, and we should.

If we become OK with emotional release, we become OK with ourselves. And why should we bottle up something so pure and so important? Sometimes we all need a good cry or a good scream or a good laugh. So let it out.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Debunking Gen-X myths

Hannah Nelson

Gen Xer Jeff Gordinier, author of "X Saves the World: How Generation X Got the Shaft But Can Still Keep Everything From Sucking," claims that his generation is saving the world.

But there are a few analysts who suspect the title "The next great generation" may just go to Generation Y, or the Millennials. It won't be as easy as that to land the title though for the children of the '80s and '90s.

There are plenty of skeptics raining on the Millennial parade as they enter the workplace. "Arrogant. Individualistic. Unable to commit. Short attention span," while that may sound a lot like a description of your ex, it's actually a description of Gen Y by some employers.

One employer described Gen Y as "know-it-alls" and "high-maintenance," which seems a tad bit harsh in comparison. The boomers complain that Millennials are easily bored with work and leave easily, making it hard to retain the new workforce that was supposed to be so promising.

It's constantly said that 9/11 will mark this generation, for better or worse, but what exactly does that mean?

That leads to complaint number two, that Millenials are too flighty, too willing to do a bit of job-hopping, and employers aren't taking kindly to the losses. Spreading the word on an unfavorable boss to a few scores of friends and acquaintances isn't that hard in today's world.

All those hours spent on community outlets are turning out a generation that is willing to take a job, or leave one, just so they can share a workspace with a friend. Correct me if I'm wrong, but last time I checked that could be considered a virtuous little thing called "loyalty."

It turns out that the Millennials do have to let go (however grudgingly) of the supposed monopoly on technology. Gen X and the Boomers are becoming just as savvy and don't need to rely on Generation Y anymore as the go-to guys and gals when that BlackBerry has a glitch.

Whatever happened to the old standby of knowing how to work all the latest gadgets? At least that was something. The Millennial digital know-how was supposed to be the big ticket to landing all those jobs in the first place.

"They're so rude. Look at how they dress. It's been going on forever," Dave Verhaagen, a child psychologist said of employer reactions. "But I don't think the data supports that for the Millennials."

Verhaagen published a book about how to parent the Millennials several years ago. And his colleagues are in agreement, every generation faces the same criticisms, the elders forgetting that they were once the greenhorns themselves.

Maybe the boomers just had too high of expectations in the big shadow the de facto tiny group of Gen Xers left behind. Although I do recall they were being reputed as slackers at some point in time.

There are some Gen Y advocates though, and they turned out last week at a Society for Industrial and Organizational Psychology conference to persuade future employers to see the evidence that speaks favorably.

It turns out that hard facts show that Boomers are just as likely to commit the job hopping sin as their younger coworkers. Also to be buried at the San Francisco-held conference was the idea that Gen Yers want, or rather need, that instant gratification in job.

That particular claim has actually struck so much fear into the hearts of companies in the past that they have actually been restructuring applications to take less time to fill out, just so that Gen Yers won't be deterred.

Gen Yers are goal-oriented with high expectations of themselves, and others. That then begs the question, are expectations too high; are Millennials so optimistic that they just won't settle till they get the job they want?

And since when has that been a bad thing? Whatever happened to chasing the dream? It's constantly said that 9/11 will mark this generation, for better or worse, but what exactly does that mean?

In defense of my fellow Millennials, there is in fact a nice thing or two to be said for us that pushes us a few steps further than some employers thought.

Gen Y is said to be less likely to be discriminatory based on race and gender than previous generations. And apparently we've put in more hours of study time than the previous generations.

We show the most dedication toward community service, so much so that an estimated half of Millennials will look for a job that provides community service opportunities. So love us or hate us, one thing that can be said is that we aren't any worse than our predecessors, maybe we're just aiming a bit higher.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

A time for Passover and redemption

Eric Magazu

"What makes this night different from all other nights?" This is the most well-known question that will be asked tomorrow evening at Seders (ceremonial meals) that mark the first night of Passover.

During the Seder, the wise son will ask his father, "What are the testimonies, the statutes and the laws which the Lord, our God, has commanded you?"

This question is important to us because it testifies to our purpose in the world. Man was created to love God, observe His instruction and keep the Ten Commandments.

The events of Passover bear witness to a time when men will be guided by the knowledge of God and live with his neighbors with a perfect measure of justice and mercy. These events prefigure the redemption of mankind from our separation from God's presence, or shekhinah, in the world.

This time of men living by God's law need not be seen as something that is far from us or concealed from our understanding, because it is in our mouths and in our hearts.

We all can live by the Commandments, if we place our trust in God. God's instruction not only teaches each of us individually how to live in harmony with our fellow human beings, but teaches all nations how to live in harmony with each other.

In Hebrew, the four-letter name of God represents the two primary attributes of God, justice and mercy. Justice and mercy serve vastly different roles, and neither can survive wholly without the other.

The way God governs the universe through the proper balance of justice and mercy can be seen as an example of the right way for us to live as nations and as individuals.

In our relationships with our fellow human beings, in order to bring about harmony, we ought to live by mercy.

According to the Targum Onkelos, an Aramaic exegesis on God's Word, Rabbi Ari Kahn, writing on the Web site of Aish HaTorah (Fire of Torah), said that speech is unique to man over all the animals.

The combination of our spirit and flesh is made manifest in our ability to speak, and it is through speech that we are able to live by God's will, or to rebel from it. It is through speech that God's justice is brought to fore.

When we use speech wrongly, we cause destruction in our world, we make a mockery of the handiwork of God. We fail to bring out the holiness in our fellow man.

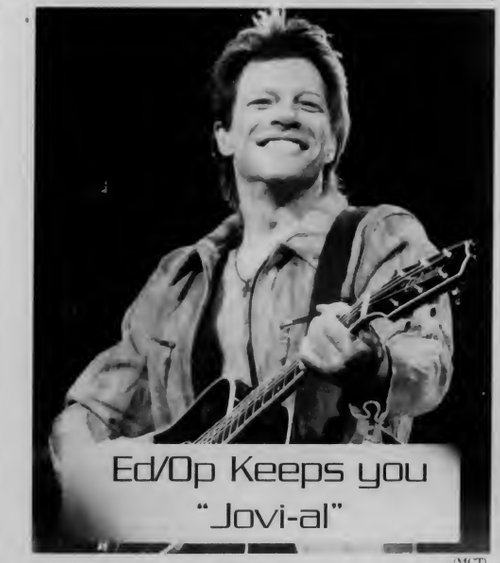
When we use speech rightly, we bring in God's justice. It is through speech that we call upon the divine notions of right and wrong that exist within the heart of every man. However, it is best not to speak in these ways at all, as this allows for the reign of God's mercy.

When parties must come before a judge, the judge, acting in the place of God, must respond to the claims of the parties with justice. This is because the claims of each side are being made with speech, and once speech exits the mouth of a person, it requires the action of justice.

Once the judge hears the claims of both claimants, he is mandated to rule with justice. But it is impossible to be merciful on behalf of another person, just as it is impossible to be charitable on behalf of another person.

While we all yearn for justice, justice will never bring about the perfect harmony of man with man, or of God with man. One party will always lose, whether it is in a case between two people, or in a case between a person and God. In the latter case, we can be fairly certain of the outcome, since, unlike the justice of human judges, the justice of God is perfect.

In our relationships with our fellow human beings, in order to bring about harmony, we ought to live by mercy. It is better that we take all the steps necessary to simply forgive the debts of our fellows, without recompense, whether these debts are monetary in one form or another or more intangible insults to our honor.



Likewise, in our relationship with God, we ought to live by mercy. In this case, we are most fortunate, because, as with God's justice, we can rely on the perfection of God's mercy. Therefore we ought to waste no time to be reconciled with God, as the length of our lives is not known to us, but our purpose is known.

We can now more adequately reply to the wise son's question. We are to love the one God with all of our heart, soul and might, and live by the commands that God has already written upon our hearts.

We are to testify these commands with our families and bear witness to them with our neighbors. The commands of God should be on our minds all the time and we ought to retreat often into God's word within our homes.

The law of God is simple and easy for us, and brings harmony in our world, if only we place our trust in the grace of God.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu

(MCT)

"Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere"

-Martin Luther King, Jr.

Men and women alike have a Ball in Drag

DANIELLE ACOSTA/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Pride Alliance hosted "Drag through the Decades" in the Student Union Ballroom last Wednesday night. The event, held to allow Five College students an outlet to unleash themselves in a judgment-free zone, was nothing if not entertaining.

By Heather Waxman
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Flashing disco lights and rapid dance tunes blared throughout the University of Massachusetts' Student Union Ballroom Wednesday evening. The Drag Ball, hosted by the student-run organization Pride Alliance, donned the playful them "Drag Through the Decades."

The UMass Pride Alliance is a registered student organization that has been in operation for over 30 years, originating in 1970 as the Student Homophile League.

Pride Alliance serves the needs of the homosexual community of the Five College area including undergraduates and faculty as well as and non-students. Their primary function is to offer a supportive atmosphere for the gay community in addition to educating others about the homosexual lifestyle while refuting myths about gay life.

Students were decked out in their drag finest, men in wigs and gaudy prom-inspired eveningwear and women suited up with matching fedoras and suspenders.

The Drag Ball kicked off with an entertaining introduction from host Envy Chanel, winner of Miss New England International Plus 2008. The feisty bundle of joy donned an outfit nothing short of noticeable.

"I bought you disco ball arms, Asians on the body, and slippery black boots," she playfully cooed.

A performance from UMass's Dynamic Motion Dancers got the crowd going as they shimmied away to Timbaland's summer smash, "The Way I Are" and Outkast's "Idlewild Blue. (Don't Chu Worry 'Bout Me.")

Chanel herself performed a dance number to Janet Jackson's recent hit, "Feedback." She graciously took bills in exchange for a smooch from her fellow bidders, sporting a barrel of confidence any woman would envy – no pun intended.

Lexie DeVille was certainly a show-stopping highlight of the night. Having performed at such nightclubs as "Diva's," it was evident that she had the self-assuredness, not to mention the goods to prove it.

DeVille pranced away to Danity Kane's debut single, "Damaged." The saucy vixen not only motorboat'd an audience member, but threw off her wig halfway through the number, generating a buck wild applause from the audience.

Pride Alliance's vice president and a New Hampshire-native, "Regina Chanel," stocked up on dollar bills from the audience during her renditions of "It's Raining Men" and "Last Dance."

The show was nothing short of humorous but it went far beyond that, serving as an outlet for students to unleash themselves free of judgments and repercussions. Pride Alliance: mission accomplished.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Student-created works allow non-majors to explore interests in art

By Sophia Pastore
Collegian Correspondent

Unless you are an art major or minor, taking art classes at UMass is close to impossible. Instead, you are forced to look off campus, send pleading e-mails to professors, or trek down to the Craft Center.

Thankfully, there are still outlets for creative expression on campus that do not come with that discouraging "art majors only" restriction.

"Recreating a Historic Masterpiece," a Capstone Experience course offered by Commonwealth College and recently taught by John Simpson, gives undergraduate honors students the opportunity to re-create famous works of art.

The pieces made in the class are currently located in an exhibition aptly named "Creation and Recreation," curated by instructor John Simpson and located in the Central Art Gallery in Wheeler Hall.

The only obstacle between the common public and viewing this exhibition is the fact that it is located slightly outside of the center of campus, in the Central living area behind Franklin Dining Commons, inside of a dorm where resident card entry is necessary.

Upon entering the small ground-level room, it is easy to recognize some of the paintings and sketches from the Renaissance and similarly familiar eras; while others seem to be originals, depicting pop culture icons and scenes of drug use.

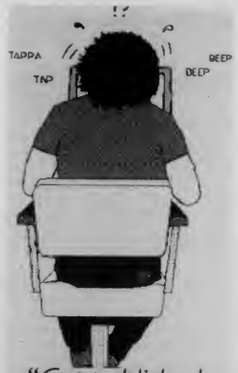
The most extensively used medium in the showing are oil paint and charcoal, although some sketches are done in pencil. Depictions range from the whimsical – a sketched row of lollipops next to the similarly sketched form of a bare foot – to the ordinary – a large-scale painting of two embracing sisters. Portraits of John the Baptist and Moses keep a religious theme.

Although not all of the creations are original, they are not lacking in talent or presentation. Some go beyond the surface, providing commentary on modern life. Artist Megan Crowley's sketches are especially striking, revealing a darker image of recreation that includes needles and stacks of cash being sorted on a table.

All the pieces in the collection are labeled by the artist's name and major. Not one of them says "Art" or even "Art History."

The majors represented include accounting, math, science (general and political,) communications and English.

The artworks are familiar, relatable and much less intimidating than most modern art in part because they are created by people with varying interests with the common goal of keeping classic works relevant.



In the coming week, when you are fervently searching SPIRE for a class that will let you express yourself in some small way, don't give up so easily. Look beyond the art department and you might find something surprising.

The pieces will be on display from now until Thursday, April 24. The gallery is open Monday through Thursday from 3 to 6 p.m. and on Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu

Through next Thursday, Wheeler dormitory is host to a student-created art gallery.

"Get published, you'll be able to Google yourself!"

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

What:
Business Manager
Where:
The Daily Collegian
When:
Next Year

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

From 'Berlin' to Noho - Reed to play at Calvin with Sonic Youth frontman

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Lou Reed is sort of an art snob. He was trained by poet Delmore Schwartz, whom most of us have never heard of, and he writes soundtracks to films about obscure Nelson Algren novels that never come to fruition. He records Top 20 hits, grows disenfranchised and releases double albums of distortion. He puts out brilliant rock operas, stylized renditions of the works of Poe and, more recently, meditation music inspired by the Hudson River.

Lou Reed isn't appealing to your tastes, and that's what makes him appealing.

The former Velvet Underground frontman and notorious curmudgeon will be playing at The Calvin Theater in Northampton Sunday, April 20 with Sonic Youth frontman and NoHo resident Thurston Moore. Reed is embarking on a brief U.S. tour with Moore and, later, the rest of Sonic Youth before heading transatlantic to promote the recently released Julian Schnabel documentary "Lou Reed's Berlin," according to Pitchfork Media.

It is difficult to say what to expect from Reed's tour, as his last studio album, "Ecstasy," came about in '00. Since then he's kept himself busy with rock operas, aforementioned projects on Poe and a diary published in The New Yorker magazine. But Reed's repertoire – ranging from songs written with The Velvet Underground to his solo rock-opera masterpiece "Berlin" and his more recent delving into meditative soundtrack – is more than enough to fill a solid set of the avant-garde.

Schnabel's documentary focuses on the live performance of "Berlin," Reed's third solo album. Following the success of the David Bowie-/ Mark Ronson-produced glam rock hit "Transformer," made famous by the Nelson Algren-inspired song "Walk on the Wild Side," Reed's "Berlin" tells the tale of two star-crossed, drug addicted lovers in the city of same name.

Reed's diverse (sometime odd) discography is evidence that his output has been focused on art, and not hits. While most artists will say they aren't in it for the money, few (save for Neil Young, Frank Zappa, Tom Waits and a few others) will fly in the face of convention, whether the market is there or not.

Mentored as an undergraduate at Syracuse University by poet Delmore Schwartz, Reed was encouraged to speak colloquially in his writing, in the tradition of Schwartz and famed American poet William Carlos Williams.

In a 1987 interview with Rolling Stone magazine, Reed said his goal as a musician was to bring the sensitivity of the novel to rock music; he did that with "Berlin."

Reed's output, both pre- and post-Underground, has influenced every angry, snotty, realist musician since. Moore, who along with My Morning Jacket played at the South by South West (SXSW) tribute to Reed in March of this year, will be performing with Reed this Sunday at the Calvin. Moore will be joined by his Sonic Youth bandmates later in the tour.

The show will start at 8 p.m. at the Calvin Theater in Northampton, and is being put on by Iron Horse entertainment Group. Tickets prices range from $35 and $55.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliva@dailycollegian.com

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, April 18

MUSIC

Buffalo Tom, an alt-rock band originally from Western Massachusetts best known, arguably, for their prominent role on the '90s teen-drama "My So-Called Life," will be playing at Iron Horse Music Hall at 7 p.m. The tour is in support of their first album in nine years, "Three Easy Pieces." Boston rock band Mean Creek will be opening up the show. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

•

Singer-songwriter Kevin Devine and the Goddamn Band will play in the Clubroom at Pearl Street Night Club at 8:30 p.m. He will be joined by two opening bands, Brian Bonz & the Dot Hogs and Baker. Tickets are $10 in advance and at the door.

•

In the ballroom of Pearl Street Night Club, jam-bands Railroad Earth and The Amity Front will be performing at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $17 in advance, $20 at the door.

PERFORMANCE

"Theater Festival of One-Act Plays" will be taking place in Theater 14 at Mendenhall Center for the Performing Arts on Green Street in Northampton. The event, which features three one-act plays written by students of Smith College and Hampshire College, begins at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 for the general public and $5 for seniors and Five-College students. Another presentation of the performance will take place on Saturday at the same time and place.

•

A celebration of Zimbabwean culture titled "Destination Zimbabwe: A Festival of Art & Culture," will take place from 8 to 10 p.m. in the Blanchard Great Room at Mount Holyoke College. The event, which is made up of music, theater, dance and spoken word pieces, is free and open to the public.

Saturday, April 19

MUSIC

Smith College presents "Groove Jam," a concert featuring Groove Acappella with guests Dear Abbys. The event will take place at 7:30 in Helen Hills Chapel. It is free and open to the public.

PERFORMANCE

"Parallel Lives," a collection of one-act performance pieces about a wide range of human experiences will take place in Hooker Auditorium on the Mount Holyoke campus. It will take place from 8 to 10 p.m. and admission is free and open to the public.

Mount Holyoke College Democrats Club will hold a "Wild-Wild West Charity Date Auction" from 9 to 11 p.m., with an after-party to follow. The auction will take place in Chapin Auditorium, moving to the Blanchard Great Room for the after-party. Admittance to the auction is free but the post-event, scheduled for 11 p.m. to 2 a.m., will cost $3 for Five-College students and is free to auctioneers and their dates.

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

NOW HIRING

Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich_daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

"See your name in print! Write for Arts."

Minutewomen look to close out season well in A-10

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Just one month ago, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team was in a hole that it desperately needed to get out of.

Losing six of its first seven games, the offense, led by senior captain Kathleen Typadis, was struggling, while the defense, led by the duo of Julie Papeleo and Jackie Rosenzweig, was inconsistent behind a pair of goaltenders who were splitting time.

All of this seems to be forgotten, as last weekend the Maroon and White registered its first back-to-back victories of the season, defeating Saint Josephs 9-8 on Friday, followed by a 20-11 victory over La Salle.

"We kept believing in each other and with the games we did lose, we learned more lessons," said UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

"We talk about how the conference games are the ones that matter more, and being in these close games in conference, and being able to get some wins, is I think, a tribute to us playing in tough games out of conference."

Over the past seven games, Typadis has scored 18 goals on 46 percent shooting, posting five hat tricks on the season, with a season-high four goals against Boston College on March 22.

On Sunday, 11 different Minutewomen registered goals against the Explorers as attackers Mcormick and Melynda Zwick each had hat tricks, while freshman Kelsey Schreiner had four goals in the victory.

UMass looks to build on the victories this weekend when the team closes out its regular season in a pair of key Atlantic 10 matchups in the final weekend of conference play.

The Minutewomen host St. Bonaventure on Friday at 4 p.m. and Duquesne on Sunday at 1 p.m. at McGuirk Stadium in games that will determine UMass's fate in the A-10 tournament and a possible birth in the NCAA Tournament.

UMass is currently tied with the Dukes (6-8, 3-2 A-10) for third place in the A-10 while the Bonnies (3-9, 1-3 A-10) are in seventh.

"St Bonaventure plays a great team game and they definitely have some threats on attack, as well as we do," Venechanos said.

The top four teams in the conference will qualify for the A-10 Tournament, which will be hosted by UMass from April 25-27.

The Minutewomen missed the tournament last season, finishing in fifth place in A-10 with a 3-4 conference record. However, Venechanos is optimistic of her team's chances heading into the weekend.

The Minutewomen are 5-3 all time against St. Bonaventure, but have not won since 2004. UMass has fared better against Duquesne as of late, winning the past two meetings in a series that is 6-4 in favor of the Maroon and White.

The Minutewomen have gotten back on track, winning three of their past four games, including an overtime victory against George Washington on March 30.

"I think its going to be a great matchup and am looking forward to the opportunity to play," Venechanos said. "I'm really excited that we were able to put some goals away against La Salle and am really excited about the team's chemistry."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

UMass racing in N.J.

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams travel to Princeton, N.J., this weekend for the Larry Ellis Invitational.

Aside from using the meet as a tune-up for next month's Atlantic 10 Championships, the Minutemen hope to qualify for the IC4A Championships, and the Minutewomen are looking to gain entrance to the ECAC Championships. However, this weekend will feature the best teams in the Northeast. The Maroon and White will go against the Ivy League, Big East and the A-10.

"We get to see schools we haven't competed against yet," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. "It acts as a springboard to our championship meets."

In the 400-meter dash, sophomore Samuel Laorenza (49.46 seconds) and freshman Michael Perotta (49.26) just missed qualifying for the IC4A Championships. They need to reach a time of 48.50 seconds to come back to Princeton from May 16-18. Tyler Cotto (14.95) finished .1 seconds away from qualifying in the 110-meter hurdles.

O'Brien still holds modest expectations for the Minutemen, due to the youth of the team.

"You have to have a little bit more of an objective evaluation," O'Brien said. "Thirty-five percent of the team is made up of freshmen and sophomores. It's difficult to hoist that type of expectation too often."

The Minutewomen plan on getting more athletes in the ECAC Championships. Redshirt junior Kristen Bakanowski (3.85 meters) already qualified for the tournament in the pole vault with her height at the UMass Invitational.

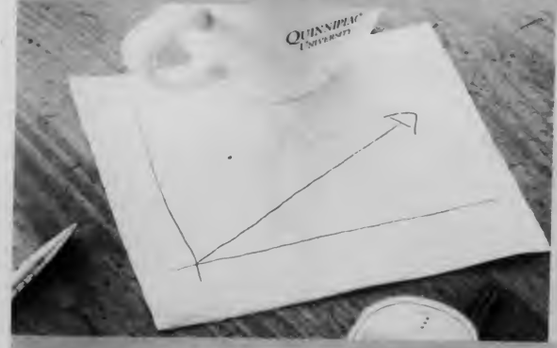
Senior Christina DeRosa qualified for the 5,000-meter run (17 minutes, 10.35 seconds) and the 10,000-meter run at the Stanford Invite (34:26.95).

If DeRosa finishes at 16:52 or better in the 5K this weekend, she will also qualify for the NCAA East Regional Championships on May 30-31.

UMass coach Julie LaFreniere is hoping to also get redshirt freshman Shiyi Zan in the 5K this weekend. Zan came in second at the UMass Invitational (18:14.22), but is still short of qualifying at the ECAC Championships by 12 seconds.

"She's done a nice job, but I think she can run better," LaFreniere said.

One of the surprises for the Minutewomen this season is senior Alisha Tatham. Tatham took first in the 100 meters (12.19) and the 200 meter (24.94) in her first meet of the season after finishing the season with the women's basketball team.



Tatham's running style is unorthodox for most track athletes. She runs bent over, which LaFreniere thinks is because she's used to running while dribbling a basketball rather than straight sprinting.

Tatham also has to learn how to get off the starting blocks. She has no experience running track, including high school, so she must learn certain things that come second nature to most track athletes. LaFreniere still feels confident in Tatham's speed, despite her inexperience.

"She will be qualifying for ECAC," LaFreniere said. "There's no doubt in my mind."

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

THE ONLY THING GROWING FASTER THAN OUR GRADUATE PROGRAMS IS OUR REPUTATION.

Accounting
Cardiovascular Perfusion
Computer Information Systems
Education – Elementary Education – Secondary
Forensic Nurse Clinical Specialist
Interactive Communications Journalism
Law
MBA/CFA® (Chartered Financial Analyst)
MBA/HCM (Health Care Management)
MBA/JD (Joint degree in business and law)
Medical Laboratory Sciences/Biomedical Sciences
Molecular & Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant

Graduate Online Programs
Organizational Leadership: Higher Education, Human Resources, Information Technology, Insurance

Learn more: www.quinnipiac.edu

Graduate Programs: graduate@quinnipiac.edu
Graduate Online Programs: quonlineadmissions@quinnipiac.edu
Law School: ladm@quinnipiac.edu

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
1-800-462-1944 | Hamden, Connecticut

Balschmiter shuts down Boston University on road

Team wins seventh game in seven days

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team continued its weeklong marathon of games yesterday, defeating cross-state rival Boston University, 6-0, behind a 10-strikeout performance by pitcher Brandice Balschmiter.

The Minutewomen (28-11) pounded out 14 hits and went through three different Terrier (23-15) pitchers, and every player got at least one base hit. UMass has played seven games in seven days dating back to last Friday, a 1-0 victory over Saint Joseph's, so to see the bats come alive with fatigue beginning to set in was a positive sign for UMass coach Elaine Sortino.

"I had great concern coming about our energy coming into the game," Sortino said. "It's been a grueling week, but I was satisfied with our effort today."

The Maroon and White jumped ahead in the second inning, scoring two runs off a triple to right center field by Carly Normandin, her second three-base knock this season. Sarah Reeves and Carly Morin scored on the hit after each recorded a single to put two in scoring position.

Whitney Mollica (2-for-4, RBI, run scored) extended the lead in the third with a leadoff home run, her fourth of the year. Samantha Salato followed with a single to left, forcing BU pitcher Cassidi Hardy from the game after two-plus innings. She gave up six hits and three earned runs and struck out one.

Megan Currier replaced her, but after getting out of the third unscathed, she found her own trouble in the fifth.

The Minutewomen broke the game open, grabbing three more runs to create a little more breathing room between them and the Terriers.

Singles by Mollica and Lindsay Maroney singled to put runners on second and third with two outs. BU coach Shawn Rychcik made another switch in the circle, pulling Currier in favor of Kelly Engman.

The first batter she faced, Morin, singled to right field, scoring both runners and extending the lead to 6-0.

Balschmiter, who has pitched in five of the Minutewomen's seven games in the past week, did not have her usual stuff and lacked the control she usually enjoys. Despite being overworked, she managed to strike out 10 batters while allowing three hits and one walk. She did not give up a run.

"She wasn't the same pitcher today," Sortino said. "She was leaving balls up a bit. She just wasn't as sharp. Against Temple on Sunday (14 strikeouts, one hit, one walk), she was sharp."

The Minutewomen are back at home Sunday for a doubleheader against Dayton (18-21, 5-7 A-10), the final conference home games of the season. UMass has one more home game after meeting with the Flyers, an April 29 matchup with Connecticut. The game will be the back end of a home-and-home series with the Huskies, who host UMass April 23.

Game notes

Maroney improved her season batting average to .350, the best on the team. She also leads in stolen bases (five steals in six attempts) ... Balschmiter improved her ERA to 0.62 on the year, ranking her in the top 10 nationally ... Mollica's home run tied her with Reeves for second on the team with 23 RBIs; Salato leads the team with 27.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Many UMass students mad with Ford's move to OSU

Some upset with method of exit

FORD REACTIONS from page 1

"I'm disappointed; I think it shows a lot of character flaws to come out and say you're committed to a program 100 percent and leave six days later," UMass senior Matt Sheehan said.

For students on campus that follow the team, those were the standard responses.

It was either that, or "who the heck is Travis Ford? I don't follow the basketball team."

Much like some of the Minuteman players, fans of UMass hoops on campus were both surprised and frustrated with the situation – especially when a week ago this all appeared to be over.

Fans were generally very upset with the way Ford handled everything, but many wouldn't criticize him for why he took the job in Stillwater.

"You can't blame him," Sheehan said. "It's a better conference; they have great resources and very rich alumni. But at the same time he didn't have to say he was committed to UMass if he wasn't."

"I wish I could be mad at him," said sophomore Andy Carbaugh. "I wish he wasn't so sincere [when he said a week ago he was staying], because it makes him look like an idiot now."

Despite the great opportunity Ford will have at OSU, Exter wasn't as understanding.

"It doesn't matter. The man should have kept his word and stayed here," he said. "He gets the players, campus and town of Amherst behind him, and then does that."

BRIAN TEUTSCH – COLLEGIAN

UMass will need to find a new coach after Travis Ford left for OSU.

One of the aspects most agreed upon was how important it is to hire a good replacement. Fans want someone who can stop the program from taking a step backward.

Depending on who UMass hires, Carbaugh thinks it can recover. But he remains frustrated that the athletic department has to go through this process yet again.

"I've been following this team for a long time and it sucks that this is the third time in seven years that we have to find a new coach," he said. "If we have the right hire I think we'll be able to at least maintain what we have now."

Sheehan isn't sure who the right coach is for UMass, but knows what type of coach he wants roaming the sidelines next season.

"Hopefully they can get somebody who wants to be at UMass – someone who wants to keep progressing and build something here," he said.

Most fans acknowledged that they viewed Ford as a good, young coach, but some were more surprised at the fact that OSU wanted him, rather than the fact that Ford was leaving just a week after saying he was here for the long haul.

"A week ago OSU thought they were going to hire [Kansas coach Bill Self] of the defending national champions. And now they're paying Ford all this money with only an NIT championship appearance to his name," Carbaugh said. "I fault Oklahoma State more than Travis, because they made a very questionable hire just taking away our coach."

Sheehan wishes Ford good luck in the future, but was still upset when hearing the news Ford was bound for Stillwater. But he looks at this as an opportunity.

"Hopefully we'll beat him sometime," he said.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS.
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

UMass takes on Hoyas

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Just as the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team appears to be on the cusp of permanently turning around its season, the Minutemen face their biggest challenge on the field yet: No. 5 Georgetown.

After losing to Loyola by 14 goals on March 22, the Minutemen reeled off three straight wins through strong defensive performances and timely scoring. UMass defeated Hobart last week, 8-7, with an overtime goal from freshman Peter McNichols.

With a victory, the Maroon and White (5-5, 3-1 ECAC) can position itself for second place in the conference behind Loyola and it would also mark the team's first win over Georgetown (7-3, 3-1 ECAC) on the road since the 2002 season.

UMass scored several goals last weekend by running scripted plays in the offensive third. Against a Georgetown team that features both size and athleticism on defense, the Minutemen will need to create scoring chances via one-on-one situations.

"They'll throw a lot of checks at us; they play very aggressively between the lines," said UMass coach Greg Cannella. "But we also have to limit our unforced errors – those are the ones that kill you."

The coach also acknowledged that a low-scoring game would favor his team's chances as the potency of the Georgetown offense could create a large deficit for the Minutemen very quickly.

Though the Hoyas boast an offense that averages a league-leading 11 goals, Georgetown derives much of its scoring through transition opportunities. The onus of defending the transition game will fall to the UMass midfield. The Minutemen will need to create turnovers using its aggressive ride defense and force the Hoyas into passing situations.

In the team's 15-1 loss to Loyola three weeks ago, the Minutemen were unable to pressure the Greyhounds into making unforced errors before the team's fast midfield scored easy transition goals.

The Hoyas also have several talented scorers who are capable of creating offense on their own in set-offensive situations. Senior Andrew Baird and sophomore Brendan Cannon lead a Hoya offense that converts 30 percent of its shots – a shooting percentage 10 percent higher than that of UMass.

"Defensively we're going to have to hunker down because they have so many guys who can score," Cannella said.

Though the Minutemen outlasted Hobart in their overtime victory, depth could be a factor against Georgetown. Fatigue has caused problems for UMass all season, especially in the midfield and attack.

"With the style that we're playing now, hopefully we can slow it down and make it less of a run-and-gun game," Cannella said.

Meanwhile the Hoyas bring a unique depth at every position. The team has the luxury of switching between an offensive and defensive-oriented line-up, as dictated by the game situation.

"The key for us will be to handle their pressure," Cannella said. "We can't go into this game and turn the ball over 18-19 times and expect to win."

Last season, the Hoyas defeated the Minutemen in Amherst by a single goal. Georgetown took an early lead and survived several UMass scoring runs through the second half.

Georgetown entered last weekend ranked No. 4 in the Nike Inside Lacrosse Media Poll, but fell to Loyola, 11-9. However, the Hoyas boast the most impressive win in the nation at this point in the season: an 11-7 victory over Duke on March 22. Georgetown is the only team to have defeated the No. 1 Blue Devils this season.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

BRIAN TEUTSCH – COLLEGIAN

Evan Blum and the Minutemen will try and pull of a monumental upset this weekend on the road against No. 5 Georgetown.

Minutemen host Charlotte

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Beanpot Championship victory over Boston College at Fenway Park on Tuesday was big for the Massachusetts baseball team.

A series win this weekend over Charlotte – the class of the Atlantic 10 – would be even bigger.

The 49ers (27-8, 9-3 A-10) were recently ranked in the USA Today/ESPN Top 25 national poll, but dropped out after losing three of their last four games – all of which were decided by one run.

Six Charlotte regulars are hitting over .300 so far this season, including senior outfielder Brad McElroy at .401. The 49ers average almost 8.5 runs per game, with a team batting average of .324. The pitching staff has been right on par with the offense, limiting opponents to 4.6 runs per game.

Starting pitchers Mitchell Clegg, Bryan Leigh and Nick Serino will try to shut down the big 49er bats this weekend in a three-game set at Earl Lorden Field in Amherst.

UMass coach Mike Stone hopes his team can build on the thrill of winning its first Beanpot title since 2000.

"To have a good chance of playing with them and beating them, we need to probably be playing better than we have all year," he said.

The Minutemen (11-15, 4-8 A-10) hung tough with Charlotte last year, but were swept in their first-ever series against the 49ers. This year, however, UMass looks to be ready to handle the potent Charlotte team, as the Minutemen feature a more balanced team offensively and a deeper pitching staff.

Sophomore outfielder Brian Baudinet sits atop the batting order for UMass and has been terrific setting the table for the middle of the order. His .409 average and .504 on-base percentage easily pace the team, and the hitting has trickled down to virtually everybody in the lineup. UMass's team average is way up from last year.

Stone attributes much of that to Baudinet, who hit just .132 (7-for-53) last season.

"He's the type of guy that after we played the Beanpot, he's in the weight room at 10 o'clock at night when we got back," Stone said.

Last year only second baseman Adam Tempesta batted over .300 for the Minutemen. But this season five different players are above that mark.

Although the ERAs from the last two years are nearly identical, Stone's pitching staff is stronger now than it was in 2007. The three starters this weekend are a big reason why.

Serino's 2.73 ERA leads the team, while Leigh has a solid 3.62 mark. Clegg is further behind at 4.34, but he's been brilliant in more than a few starts this season.

Following the series with Charlotte, the Minutemen take on Central Connecticut State at home in a non-conference game. Next weekend UMass returns to A-10 action for a road series with Saint Joseph's.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

FINE DINING SPIRITS

A Locally Grown Eatery and Catering Company

BUTTERNUTS

Butternuts congratulates seniors and welcomes the UMass community to join us for our creative New England cuisine.

Make your graduation plans now!

Hours: Tues - Thurs 11-9 | Fri - Sat 11-10 | Sun 11-9
Closed Mondays

See our full menu on our Website!

413-586-0234
195 Russell Street
www.butternutsonline.com

Butternuts Features:

The freshest & finest local products

Celiac Friendly/ Gluten Free Dining

Full Service Bar with Celiac & Organic Selections

Vegan/ Vegetarian Selections

Extensive Wine Menu with Organic Selections

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

RAFT GUIDES

Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoarouldoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

CAMP TAKAJO

Naples, Maine. Noted for picturesque lakefront location; exceptional facilities. Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, golf, flag football, roller hockey, field hockey, swimming, sailing, water skiing, gymnastics, dance, horseback riding, archery, weight training, newspaper, photography, video, woodworking, ceramics/pottery, crafts, fine arts, silver jewelry, copper enamel, nature study, radio/electronics, theater, costumer, piano accompanist, music instrumentalist, backpacking, rock climbing, canoeing/kayaking, ropes course, secretarial, nanny. Call Takajo at (866) 356-2267. Submit application online at takajo.com Will be in the Campus Center Job Fair tomorrow.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postenng@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State. Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab.linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Expenments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email .phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voice-mail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

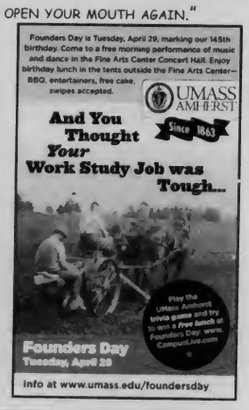
SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

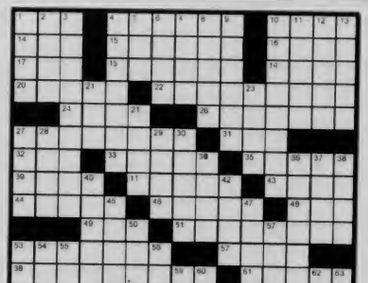
Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES



Spring Break from $199. Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away. 1-800-GET-SUN-1



ACROSS
1 Schuss
4 New Orleans University
10 Crow
14 Ages and ages
15 Endangered antelopes
16 Dynamic prefix
17 Mythical bird
18 Political agitation
19 Ransack
20 Knock for a loop
22 Set up
24 Hold tight
26 Paper fasteners
27 Friendless
31 Memorable period
32 Infamous Amin
33 Itsy-bitsy
35 Unruly kids
39 Evening in ads
41 Main field of study
43 Recognized
44 Bowline and granny
46 Sound judgement
48 Pekoe or Assam
49 URL ending
51 Sailing sport
53 Bring to fulfillment
57 Whole lot
58 Newspaper opinion
61 Loco
64 Noble Italian family
65 Mouse sound
67 View
68 Butt
69 Old World
70 Bo's number
71 Cinders of comics
72 Less fatty
73 WWII spy org.

DOWN
1 Medieval peasant
2 ___Act
3 Disguised
4 Vacationer
5 Pedestal vase
6 Ancient harp
7 Central lines
8 Fits inside
9 Real property
10 Shea or Wrigley
11 Add more lubricant
12 Sprung up
13 Sackers of Rome
21 Unrefined mineral
23 Cutting remark
25 "Trees," e g
27 Chain unit
28 Valhalla bigwig
29 Coarsely ground food
30 Have a ball
34 Hindu discipline
36 Course of appetizers
37 Adolescent
38 Booty
40 And so forth
42 Rolling in dough
45 Go it alone
47 Game board piece
50 Tidbit
52 Black goo
53 Tractor man
54 Ford flop
55 Essential
56 Umbrage
59 Invisible emanation
60 Ponce de
62 Final letters
63 Yearnings
66 Do monkey see monkey do

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki!

This is the tootle box.

Say "bye-bye."

More repetative than the drunk girl in the corner...

	3	4		6
9	2	6
		7	3	1
					6	4		1
3			5		9			6
2		8	7
				9	4	8
						9	5	7
				7		2	6

Quote of the Weekend

"I stare at myself in the mirror and I think, 'Wow, I'm really great-looking.'... I think I'm the greatest, anyway"

— Iggy Pop

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Chris Martin

Next week's contest will start on Monday. See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

I've been wearing this dress since the last time this photo was used in a caption contest. Who's hot now?

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Just like sperm, when you make a batch of cookie dough, not all of it will make it to the oven.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Good sportmanship will never be more important than product endorsements and strippers.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you Lycopene so much, why don't you marry it?

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You spend too much time in front of a mirror and not nearly enough time reflecting on your inner self.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If you shoot arrows into a dark room, you don't really know what you're missing, but you also don't know what you're hitting.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
O.J. Simpson may or may not still be considered a good role model. The jury's still out on that one.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
There is a deadly mold spreading like wildfire across the forest of your flatware. You must sterilize everything you own.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Even though this is a long weekend, you're short on time. Manage each second wisely or you will be a sorry studmuffin.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you are going to foresake your ancestors, you better make it count.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
For all you know, robots might be taking over the world, but you can't tell from behind your stupidly large sunglasses.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your priorities are off balance. Restore equilibrium to inner ear, then try to stand up.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you're not watching "Golden Girls", I don't know what you're doing.

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Sports Weekend

Friday, April 18, 2008 www.dailycollegian.com

Georgetown lies ahead

Page 13

Not Published

Holiday

EXTRAVAGANGA HITS AMHERST CENTER | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
W ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 78 LO: 44 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2008

Chancellor candidates arrive on campus

South African vice chancellor puts emphasis on affordability

BY KATIE HUSTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

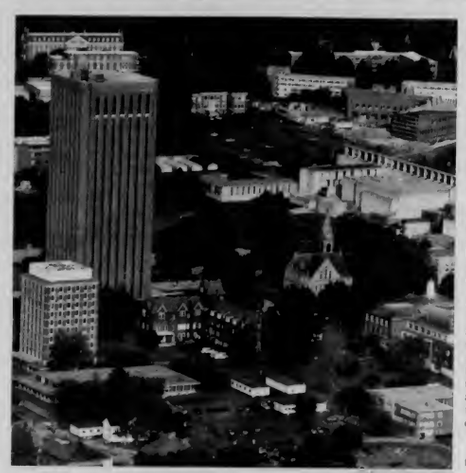
Editor's note: Unfortunately, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian was unable to cover chancellor candidate Satish Tripathi's visit to campus on Tuesday. More information on Tripathi can be found online at massachusetts.edu/amherstsearch.

Chancellor candidate Martin Hall presented himself as a leader focused on affordability, dialogue and attention to detail when he met with students last Thursday at the University of Massachusetts.

Hall, one of four candidates vying to fill the spot of Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, is currently the deputy vice chancellor at the University of Cape Town in South Africa and a professor of UCT's graduate school of business. He also has a background in archaeology and has been a visiting professor at Stanford University.

The four finalists for the position were announced on Friday, April 11 from a pool of over 100 people, according to Robert Connolly, spokesperson for the office of UMass president Jack Wilson. Robert Holub, Harris Pastides and Satish Tripathi are also being considered for the job.

Hall, the only candidate from overseas, highlighted his long relationship with the campus. His daughter graduated from the Commonwealth College honors program before earning her master's in speech therapy, and now works in Holyoke; his stepdaughter is currently earning her master's in public health.



During the meeting with undergraduate students, Hall emphasized the importance of increasing access to and affordability of education.

"The cost of higher education is going through the ceiling," he said. "It's a recent trend to accept the fact that you have to graduate with $25,000 in debt."

He expressed optimism about a Massachusetts' state government "that takes higher education seriously," but said that UMass still faces challenges as a university without an endowment.

"The endowment that Harvard has is bigger than the economies of 15 African countries," he said.

See HALL on page 3

Martin Hall, Satish Tripathi and Harris Pastides, all candidates for the position of University chancellor, made campus appearances last week.

USC vice president optimistic for UMass

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dr. Harris Pastides isn't afraid to hear the word "no."

Pastides, a finalist candidate for chancellor at the University of Massachusetts, spoke with students, faculty and community members on the 10th floor of the Campus Center Friday afternoon.

He told the approximately 60 attendees that, upon leaving his previous position as chairman of the department of biostatistics and epidemiology in the School of Public Health and Health Sciences, he asked one of his superiors if he could come back if his position at the University of South Carolina didn't work out.

He was given an unambiguous "no." He left anyway; it worked out.

Pastides, recently the vice president for research and health sciences at USC, was able to make great strides in increasing funding for the university's Arnold School for Public Health, making USC a leader in areas including public health and nanotechnology. He said he enjoyed his work at USC, and isn't "looking for a higher job," but came back for the opportunity to bring UMass to "where it ought to be."

"I think this place can move," he said.

Pastides spoke mainly of the need to increase funding for the university, but addressed questions

See PASTIDES on page 2

Noho votes to go fair trade

Town passes resolution supporting local shops

Most residents of the Pioneer Valley area know about buying local, evident by the farm stands and "Fair Trade" logos found across the region. But Northampton's dedication was recently made official with the passing of the "Buy Local, Buy Fair" resolution – which makes Northampton the sixth Fair Trade Town in the United States.

The Fair Trade Town movement began as a way to promote awareness of how fairly treated products make a difference in the lives of producers and their communities by providing them with a fair wage for their work, according to a statement.

With the town government involved, there is even more support for the already popular local-purchasing trend.

Yet, the movement is only just beginning in the United States, although there are 300 international communities who have taken on the project.

"I am very pleased that with the passing of the 'Buy Local, Buy Fair' resolution the city's procurement practices will lead the way in strengthening economies locally and globally," said Teri Anderson, economic coordinator for the city of Northampton, in a statement.

To get the resolution started, an educational committee formed in 2007 that screened films, hosted speakers, had Fair Trade food tastings, promoted the availability of those products and encouraging local businesses to use Fair Trade products. Coffee, tea, chocolate, sugar, bananas, rice, vanilla, flowers, body care items and handicrafts are just some Fair Trade products the committee aimed to promote.

"Our economy will benefit from purchasing locally produced goods sold by local owned businesses, and communities around the world will benefit when we purchase fairly traded products," Anderson said.

The Fair Trade campaign, through a certification and monitoring process, guarantees producers a stable price, good working conditions, access to credit and direct trade relationships and the ability for producers to organize themselves into cooperatives, where they work on sustainability issues and provide additional income to develop their communities.

Amherst is already a Fair Trade Town, as is Brattleboro. The volunteer-run group Northampton Fair Trade is planning a World Fair Trade Day on May 10.

Kate Olevin

Northampton joined Amherst as one of six Fair Trade Towns in the United States.

Network break-in leaves UHS offline

150 computers out of service

Officials have launched an investigation into an electronic intrusion that has left University Health Services employees using pens and paper rather than computers for the past week.

According to University officials, it is not yet known whether any personal medical files had been compromised and accessed from the outside.

The break-in to the network occurred on April 11, and after an initial investigation, the University of Massachusetts opted to shut down 150 computer workstations at UHS. As of the end of last week, around 30 workstations had been restored. In the meantime UHS has continued operation by using paper records.

According to University officials, most personal files are kept on paper, and the workstations compromised in the network break-in contain only limited information.

All of the workstations are expected to be operational by the end of the week, officials said.

—Derrick Perkins

Five Colleges, Inc. director to retire after 30-year career

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The executive director of Five Colleges, Inc. will retire next June after a career of nearly 30 years.

Lorna Peterson became the group's first development officer in 1980 and 10 years later, assumed leadership of the organization, consisting of 36 people and directed by the presidents of the five colleges represented: Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges and the University of Massachusetts.

During Peterson's term as executive director, the budget for Five Colleges, Inc. tripled, a dozen multi-campus certificate programs were established and the number of joint faculty appointments just about doubled. According to a press release from the organization, about 5,000 student course exchanges take place every year.

In addition, Peterson's tenure included the creation of a Five College film studies major and the establishment of the Five College astronomy fellows program. Also, during the last decade, multi-campus student performances have been popular, including the annual PoetryFest, the Five College Student FilmFest and Five College Multicultural Theater's "Word."

"For me, a highlight of my

See PETERSON on page 2

UMass sweeps UD in weekend series

Home runs and quality pitching lead the way

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The combination of power hitting and perfect pitching extended the Massachusetts softball team's win streak to 20 games and 37 straight games against Atlantic 10 opponents.

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter threw her second perfect game of the season in Game One as UMass romped Dayton, 12-0. In Game Two, sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders gave up three runs (two earned) in a 13-3 bashing.

UMass	13
Dayton	3
UMass	12
Dayton	0

"I think she's really matured a lot, I really do," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said of Balschmiter's junior season. "She's a different Brandice than the previous two years. There's no doubt in my mind you want the ball in her hands."

UMass (30-11, 16-0 A-10) combined for six home runs including two from sophomore Carly Normandin. Normandin, known for her defense in center field, went 5-for-5 in the doubleheader with 10 RBIs. In Game One she went 2-for-2, both home runs, including her first-career grand slam. In Game Two she kept the production going with two singles

See SOFTBALL on page 7

Brandice Balschmiter pitched her second perfect game of the season against Dayton in a 12-0 five-inning victory over the weekend.

Balschmiter carrying team

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When they walked off the field last May 20 following a 6-3 loss to Oklahoma in the NCAA Regionals, the members of the Massachusetts softball team seemed in disbelief.

A year removed from reaching the Super Regionals with a freshman pitcher and coming within one win from reaching the first Women's College World Series since 1998, the Minutewomen came up short at home and lost their chance to finish what they had started in 2006.

Another year later, that freshman pitcher is on a mission.

Now a junior, Brandice Balschmiter is showing just how badly she wants to carry this team to its fourth World Series appearance in program history. Two weeks after throwing the first perfect game of her collegiate career, an 8-0 win over George Washington, she threw another one.

"She's just in the zone right now," sophomore catcher Jessica Serio said. "She has a goal, and she set her mind on it. She's really focused on doing what she has to do to reach it."

Balschmiter's line from Sunday's 12-0, five-inning

See BALSCHMITER on page 7

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 124

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Szagin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. It published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been headquartered since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

Pastides seeks to increase donations pertaining to staffing, diversity and environmental sustainability.

PASTIDES from page 1

"The stack of cards this university has is people – students, faculty, alumni, community members. But its endowment is not nearly at that level," he said.

Pastides said philanthropy, a major source of revenue for many research institutions, is something UMass "has to do better at."

He said that as chancellor it would be his responsibility to approach prospective donors, and to be willing to accept the much-dreaded nos.

"An overwhelming number of first asks are nos," he said. Pastides went on later to say if appointed chancellor he "wouldn't be the 'e-mailing chancellor,'" and would be hands-on in the process of soliciting philanthropy and endowments.

"People give to people," he said.

He noted that "most universities are under-funded; that's no big deal," but outlined three key sources of revenue that the University should explore further: philanthropy, public-private partnerships and government endowments.

"I can tell you that governments across the nation, across the world, are investing in universities. It makes no sense that it shouldn't be going on in Amherst," said Pastides.

When asked by students what he planned to do about campus sustainability, Pastides once again pointed to his tenure at USC as evidence of what's possible.

"I'm for sustainability not as a political platform, but as a part of who I am," he said.

Pastides said USC has the nation's first "green dorm" on its campus, complete with grass grown on the roof, lights that shut off automatically upon exit and incentive programs for students to decrease their own emissions footprints.

Marianne Winters, director of the UMass Everywoman's Center, commented on the "lack of diversity" in the chancellor candidate pool, and asked Pastides about his policies concerning gender diversity.

Pastides replied that he himself was disappointed with the lack of diversity among the candidates. "I was disappointed that if I got the job, people would say 'Oh, he was one of the four white guys,' because that's no good," he said. Pastides said that a diverse faculty enriches the quality of education and experience at a university.

When asked by an attendee about the "budget cuts and morale cuts" going on at the University in recent years, Pastides said that improving conditions at UMass Amherst "starts with a great relationship with [University system president] Jack Wilson."

He went on to say that as chancellor he would be "in Boston with the governor, in Boston with businesses and in Boston with the people that move all the time," as much as possible, to represent the flagship University in person.

Pastides is one of four finalists to fill the chancellorship vacated by John V. Lombardi, who left in fall of 2007 to be president of the Louisiana State University.

The other three candidates are Satish K. Tripathi, provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at the State University of New York at Buffalo; Martin Hall, deputy vice chancellor at the University of Cape Town, South Africa; and Robert C. Holub, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville.

Pastides said he was looking forward to working with Wilson and other decision-makers in Boston and at the other UMass system schools.

"I'm a collaborator," he said, "I want to know who's on the team."

Several community and faculty members declined to comment after the forum, stating that they'd prefer to see all four candidates speak before making judgment.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

BSU talks sex, gender and double standards in society

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

The Black Student Union brought forward the double standards women and men face with their sexuality, how the media sells sex and issues of infidelity with a forum last week.

Mohamed Vandi, the secretary of BSU, welcomed the attendees to the Malcolm X center, by encouraging everyone to part take in the laid-back conversation about sex.

"Start it off and don't be shy," Vandi said.

Kenisha Jackson launched the discussion with the question, "If a girl has sex with a lot of guys what is she called?"

She elicited mixed responses as some attendees said "promiscuous" and others said "hoes."

The women in attendance expressed that men should be also categorized as "hoes" just as women are.

"Ho-ism is for males or females," said Jackson.

The attendees discussed that this double standard does exist as part of the control women have over their sexual partners.

"[Women] have the power if the man is going to get some," said Casimir Mazariars. This response elicited a student to make the point that men have to "spit game" in order to get the women that interest them.

"A guy has to put in work to get a girl," said Vandi.

The attendees discussed concerns over how relationships are established when sex ignites them was discussed. The students present voiced opinions that honesty must be the rule when establishing the intentions of a relationship.

"Direct communication most girls get attached. You can't be blunt, they will turn fatal attraction on you," said Jackson.

The forum also discussed specific time duration that needs to occur before a women is considered a "ho." Hipolito Cruz spoke with reassurance in regards with the time that he enforces, "three weeks to know her good enough [but] three days, she's a ho."

"You can't put a time. Based on a value system there is a double standard withholding sex. I have something that men have to work hard for," said freshman Asia Taylor.

The forum also discussed the influence the media has on how women's sexuality is defined.

Vandi also asked how women felt being portrayed as sexual objects by the media.

Some attendees agreed how the media can add more pressure to women as they are constantly being compared to celebrities.

"[Media] plays a lot into it; why can't you shake your booty like Beyonce or your hips like Shakira? I'm only me," Jackson said.

Students discussed how the media should be seen as a business.

"It's all about making money sex sell, it's in the media it offends women. But the message is sex sells, "Cruz said.

A student asked, "Why do men cheat?" This simple question put the spotlight on the men in present at the forum. Attendees discussed that infidelity only counts if partners are caught in the act.

"We get caught in the worst ways; women know how to lie about it better," said Cruz.

The students also tried to highlight the reasons as to why men are more apt to cheat on their partners.

"Men cheat because girls let him, the man will," said Gregory Saint-Dick.

Attendees agreed to this claim to some extent but expressed that women are at fault when they take back their unfaithful partners while adding that they are not less of a woman if their partner is unfaithful.

"It's not the girl's fault; he is not going to stop. Girls need to take initiative," said Jessica Theophile.

A solution to men infidelities was brought up during the discussion.

"I will throw hot-grits on you in the bed with her. Hot grits is going on both of y'all," said Jackson.

Gisel Saillent can be reached at gsaillen@student.umass.edu.

Search committee to find new director

PETERSON from page 1

time here has been working with faculty when they get excited about developing a new area of the curriculum or new center for study, such as when we created the Center for the Study of World Languages and the Women's Studies Research Center," said Peterson in a statement.

President of both Smith College and the Five Colleges, Inc. board of directors Carol T. Christ is currently assembling a search committee with representatives from each of the five colleges to find a replacement executive director. Until her retirement in June 2009, however, Peterson plans on developing more for the joint faculty appointments program as well as promoting the campuses as an employment opportunity to a more diverse community.

"It is hard to speak of cooperation in higher education without invoking Lorna," said Christ. "Her leadership has created a dynamic, innovative, synergistic partnership among five distinctive institutions that is the envy of university systems and consortia across the country and abroad."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

Correction

In Friday's article entitled "RSU fights for poster rights, ACLU speaks" (4/18/2008) the speaker for the Radical Student Union was misidentified as Constantinos Savaros. His correct name is Constantinos Stivaros.

Write for news

news@dailycollegian.com

(We might tell you the answer to the crossword)

Free Food - Free Music
Free Shop - Free Education

Free Yourself
EARTHWEEK
Free the Earth
2008

FEATURING:
-The Yoga Zone
-Cold Frame Construction
-Chicken Tractor
-New Dirt on the Roof

April 22nd-26th
Library Front Lawn

FEATURING:
-Plant Sale
-Food not Bombs
-How to Forage
-Local Soda

Brought To You By the EcoCoalition

The Office of Jewish Affairs,
Center for Student Development, and
Student Affairs & Campus Life

extend our warmest Passover greetings
to the campus Jewish community...

Happy Passover!

May this joyous festival be a time
of renewal for you and your families

UMASS AMHERST
The Office of Jewish Affairs is part of the Center for Student Development. Visit us online at www.umass.edu/jewish or call 545-9642

CALL NOW TO SECURE YOUR POSITION
PAINTING SUMMER MONEY FUN
ATTENTION STUDENTS: It's not too late to score a great summer job! We are College Pro Painters and we are currently hiring for the summer.
You could earn $3000 to $7000 Plus!
NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY
- We are currently hiring for Painter and Job Site Manager positions. Many positions are available throughout your state.
- We offer an awesome bonus structure for those who want to earn even more money.
- You can work outside with other students and make new friends.
- You can learn useful skills such as planning, organization, and customer relations.

Hall focuses on social justice diversity, and communication

HALL from page 1

Hall also said it is important to focus on increasing and supporting diversity at UMass. The fact that the University, which has a minority population of about 18 percent, is approximately reflective of the state population does not mean that UMass does not need to address issues of race and minority access, Hall said.

"Whites often carry the assumption that we don't have race," he said.

In addition to race, he stressed the importance of open dialogue about issues of gender, sexual orientation, religion and other issues. He has had extensive experience dealing with issues of identity, he said, coming from a country with a homophobic history and large populations of both Jewish and Muslim students.

"I think a chancellor has to lead that conversation intellectually," he said.

Hall is familiar with issues of diversity and access. From 1999 to 2002, he served as the dean of higher education development at the University of Cape Town, where he worked to transform the university's student body to be more reflective of the South African population. Under the apartheid regime, non-whites, who make up the majority of South Africans, were largely prohibited from accessing higher education.

He said that in South Africa, issues of accessibility and race "are much sharper, but they're the same" as the issues facing UMass.

"Exclusion works in extremely subtle ways," he said.

He called for an admissions policy that is less focused on SAT scores, which disadvantage low-income and minority students who cannot afford to pay for test prep courses, and cited studies that suggest SAT scores are poor predictors of whether a student will graduate from college.

Hall described his leadership style as one of "matrix management," which means cutting across university hierarchies, and said that the chancellor must engage directly with student leadership. He holds monthly, open-agenda meetings with student leaders at the University of Cape Town.

"I want to engage with student government to understand what the issues are," he said.

He identified UMass's large residential population as "a huge educational and social opportunity," and said he wants to increase "engagement and experiential learning," pointing out nearby Holyoke and Springfield as opportunities to turn the formal knowledge from the classroom into lived experience.

He also said he's "obsessive about engaging with detail."

"I find myself spending a lot of time trying to see whether the condom machines are filled up," he said, pointing out that students at the University of Cape Town are at high risk for contracting HIV.

Hall also said that as chancellor he would focus on improving infrastructure, attracting private capital for research and increasing the number of faculty.

At an open meeting that afternoon, at which closer to 50 people were present, Hall also emphasized the importance of raising UMass's international profile, preserving freedom of speech and the importance of interdisciplinary studies.

"I'm a passionate believer in interdisciplinarity," he said. "I think interdisciplinarity drives innovation."

Hall also floated the idea of establishing an institute for advanced studies, which would bring 10 to 15 scholars to campus and "revitalize faculty, revitalize grad students."

"We're really pleased with the quality and caliber of the finalists," said Connolly. "Any of them could be an outstanding new chancellor."

Student trustee Ruth Thompson, who attended the student meeting and served on the chancellor search committee, said she was glad to see Hall addressing issues of white privilege.

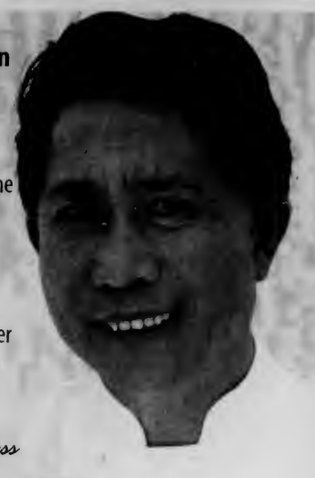
"He was very social justice-based, which was really good to see in an administrator," she said. "I liked him a lot. I think he's one of the best candidates."

Junior Emily Zimmerman, who attended the meeting, liked that Hall answered questions directly and addressed difficult issues.

"I really liked what he's done, his work in Cape Town," she said. "I think a lot of times people tend to shy away from the race answers and the diversity answers and the homophobia answers, because that's politics, and it really impressed me that he was able to stand up and answer them."

Zimmerman also said that Hall seemed "dedicated" and he related well to students. "He seems like he would be the kind of chancellor that would be here for the students and faculty ... He just seems easy to talk to, which I think is important," she said.

After the last candidate, Robert C. Holub, visits campus today, Connolly said, President Wilson will make his recommendation to the Board of Trustees, which will make the final decision.



"The sooner this is done, the better," Connolly said. "We think it's really important that the new chancellor get here as early as possible, so he has ample opportunity to get familiar with the campus. There's no substitute for being on the ground here, meeting faculty and staff, and being fully engaged by the time the new academic year starts in September."

Gisel Saillant contributed to this report.

Katie Huston can be reached at managingeditor.dailycollegian.com

Check out
BLOGS, PODCASTS, AND MULTIMEDIA FEATURES AT
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

Chef Martin Yan
Author
TV Celebrity Chef
Master Chef
King of Asian Cuisine is coming to the
Taste of UMass
April 24, 2008
4:30 to 8pm
at the Mullins Center

Taste of UMass 2008

You have always wanted to cook with a celebrity chef. Here's your chance!

Just send us a short essay explaining why you want to cook with Chef Martin Yan at mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu no later than April 22.
12 winners will be chosen!

PLUS
Participants will receive an autographed cook book!

Yan Can Cook
Martin Yan

Dining Services UMassAmherst
Ivy

Taste of UMass 2008
THURSDAY APRIL 24, from 4:30 to 8:00 PM
The nation's largest campus food service event

75 booths with healthy options

• Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest
• UMass Idol - Singing Contest
• Student Iron Chef Competition

• Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Martin Yan

APPEARANCES
• Student Dance Group
• Minuteman Mascot
• UMass Cheerleaders & Dance Team

ENTERTAINMENT
• Magic Show
• Battle of the Bands

KNOWLEDGE
• Sustainability

• Two tickets via American Airlines in North America or Canada
• iPhone drawing every half hour
• Many fabulous prizes

Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash

Worcester & Berkshire DC will be open at 9:00 pm for late night snacks.

AT THE MULLINS CENTER
All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to the Mullins Center will leave at 4:00.
Doors Open at 4:00

Nathan's Famous
OFFICIAL
Hot Dog Eating Contest

Dear Students,
On April 24, between 6:00 and 7:00 pm during the Taste of UMass in Mullins Center, you can compete as one of 12 students in the Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest and a chance to go to the national competition in Coney Island.

To register send an e-mail to: mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services at 413-545-2472. Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, class and telephone number

Best of luck,
Dining Services

UMass contest limited to 12 UMass students

To qualify for national competition you are required to eat at least 16 hot dogs, including bun during a specific time.

umass.edu/diningservices

Dining Services UMassAmherst
Ivy
Taste of UMass 2008

*Contest open to current UMass students only. Contestants must be at least 18 years old with identification. Contestants must sign a UMass contest waiver.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Call a spade a spade

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

The American University in Cairo auditorium fell silent as I penetrated the eyes of the oldest living former American president, Jimmy Carter. In the middle of his recent trip to the Middle East, former president Carter stopped by the University to give a short speech explaining the purpose of his visits to Egypt and Syria.

During those visists he talked with prominent members of Hamas about the Israeli-Palestinian issue. Hamas, the political movement democratically elected in the Gaza Strip in 2006, is considered to be a terrorist organization by the United States, Israel and the European Union.

President Carter emphasized to the AUC audience that his trip to the Middle East was not promoted by the U.S. government, but rather was a manifestation of Carter's individual initiative as a private citizen to help the peace process.

"You can't have an agreement that must involve certain parties unless you're willing to talk to these parties while you conclude the agreement," he explained.

This notion hinges on the assumption that Hamas is willing to negotiate with its adversaries to promote a permanent peace in the region, thus contradicting the message behind Hamas' founding charter that explicitly denies the right of Israel to exist.

Moreover, its systematic and persistent targeting of innocent Israeli civilians up to this day leaves little doubt that many Hamas terrorists are not ready to abandon this extremist position to embrace a more conciliatory approach towards a two-state solution.

Yet interestingly enough, an AUC friend named David, who has an expansive knowledge of the Israeli-Palestinian issue and has previously done volunteer relief work in the West Bank, insists that there are different factions within Hamas that span from extremist to moderate.

One is ill–prepared to solve a violent conflict unless he first confronts the reality of the forces which cause the violence.

He feels that both Israel and Fatah, the more moderate Palestinian leadership of the West Bank, must try to co-opt these moderate Hamas members (if you can call them that) into mainstream Israeli-Palestinian political dialogue.

Nevertheless, I was troubled by former president Carter's continued insistence throughout his speech on calling the Hamas members with whom he was meeting on his trip as "leaders" and not "terrorists."

This word play may have been intended to assuage these people into accepting Carter's political aims, and not as a reflection of his failure to portray the organization for what it actually is.

Yet Carter's answer to the question I asked him suggested that this was not the case. Instead, it seemed more like Carter truly did not believe that an organization devoted to the intentional targeting of innocent civilians constituted a terrorist group.

When Aristotle said thousands of years ago that people become moral by committing moral acts he was emphasizing that labels should reflect your repeated behaviors.

Thus, my question to Carter was, "Throughout your speech, why did you keep calling Hamas members 'leaders' and not 'terrorists,' even though they indiscriminately target and kill innocent people consistently?"

Carter equivocated by saying that some Hamas leaders were guilty of "acts of terrorism," implying that their targeting of innocents are not systemic events but rather isolated instances. Clearly this is not true if one looks at the history of the organization's violence.

One is ill-prepared to solve a violent conflict unless he first confronts the reality of the forces which cause the violence. By refusing to label Hamas "leaders" as terrorists, Carter's remarkable evasion of the question reveals how some people are unable to face facts. This may be because they are unable to face them, or, as is more likely, they do not want to face them.

Do not be fooled: the Middle East peace process will never solve anything tangible if people like Carter do not recognize what is right in front of their own eyes.

One wonders whether Carter would have a change of heart and mind and begin to label Hamas members "terrorists" if his wife or son were the victim of one of their indiscriminate attacks on innocent populations.

Carter's thinking, and the thinking of many present at the AUC auditorium, directly contributes to the lack of international outrage over the targeting of innocents in Israel, which, in turn, puts innocent Palestinians in danger as well because of an inevitable Israeli military response.

Those who embrace Carter's ideology without expressing unequivocal outrage over Hamas undermine the peace process when they refuse to acknowledge that humanity collectively must renounce terrorism before any further steps for peace are taken.

If humanity is not united against terrorism, then violence in the Middle East will not stop. And regardless of its good faith intentions, Carter's thinking, and that of all those who support it, will engender exactly what happens when people do not face facts of good and evil: the continued deaths of innocent people, in this case both of Palestinians and Israelis.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

A sad fate for grads

Devon Courtney

I truly enjoy this time of year. Not only do we get rewarded for all our hard work by being sent a fat tax return in the mail, we're also able to individually analyze what our lives are worth on an annual basis.

There's a fantastic tool to help us do this, in the form of the April 13 "Tax Day" edition of Parade Magazine. Every year at this time, Parade releases an entertaining and informative general report featuring the yearly earnings of people from all walks of life.

If you should take a couple of minutes to skim it over, you will probably hope to see yourself in the future, the fruits of your hard work throughout college someday turning into a lucrative career.

Actually, your blatant inability to interface with reality in this case is just about the only thing that would keep you from placing your head in your hands, sobbing quietly, and saying, "What the hell am I doing with my life?"

For those of us who are graduating, we have been fully briefed on the fact that the job market has been deep-sixed into the proverbial toilet.

I say this because if you have a sensible dream of studying education and becoming either a high school or elementary teacher and getting about $30 grand a year for your hard work, your wages will be dwarfed by the likes of someone named Miley Cyrus, some 15-year-old singer/actress who makes 18 million bucks every time she bats an eyelash.

Perhaps computer science is your thing, and maybe you dream of becoming a software engineer like Renita Rhodes. At 31 years old, she was able to scrape together $72 thousand in the St. Louis job market.

That's not a bad haul, but it's peanuts compared to the $12 million that Leona Helmsley's dog "Trouble" got for doing NOTHING. Trouble doesn't even have a college degree, but I'll bet Renita Rhodes doesn't urinate on the furniture.

It really does little good to cry over the proverbial spilled milk, though. So more importantly, where are all the jobs?

Here's one more example. Yordana Rodriguez, a 25-year-old pharmacy technician from Tampa, Fla., earned a measly $23,000 last year.

Given our society's high regard for life-quality enhancing drugs, it's surprising how little Rodriguez earned. Mary-Kate Olsen, on the other hand, made $17 million for doing drugs.

Obviously, the problem isn't that there's no money in the economy right now. Jeff Foxworthy made $10 million last year for telling crappy jokes, and the near-goddess Oprah doesn't-need-a-last-name Winfrey made 260 million bucks for telling people what to read.

Operating budgets for people making about the average salary in this great country last year (which was about $36,000, says Parade) have been strained due to the fact that people are paying "five percent more for food, 8.6 percent more for hospital services, and a whopping 35 percent more for gasoline."

It really does little good to cry over the proverbial spilled milk, though. So more importantly, where are all the jobs? I was hoping to have this question answered by the end of this column, and for the love of God, hopefully before I graduate in May.

If you don't have the credentials to become Dr. Phil McGraw and bring in 90 million clams every time you make a poor analogy, you'd best keep in mind that some of the fastest-growing segments of the job market are in the health care field, which (unlike our friend Dr. Phil) you actually need a license to practice in.

Other fields that are sustainable in today's economy are in "education…security services, and information technology," according to Parade.

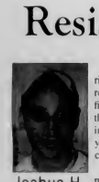
Health care jobs have soared "45 percent in the last 15 years," and nurse practitioners are making more money than ever. Archie McEvers, a nurse practitioner in Syracuse, N.Y., made $79,000 last year, a salary many of us would love to have coming out of our graduation.

As far as education, there will be "2.8 million new teaching-related jobs over the next eight years," according to the national Center for Education Statistics.

It's a fast-growing market, and naturally, more demand equals higher pay. That is except, of course, if you're 50 Cent, who brought in $33 million for mumbling incoherently into a microphone. I didn't realize there was any demand at all for that.

For all you dance and theatre majors out there, I've got some troubling news. The average performer would be lucky to earn $12 an hour. Jerese Kimbrough, a dancer in Brooklyn, N.Y., only put together $3,200 last year.

What single thing is even more depressing than that is that Brian Prigel, the prestigious mayor of Bingen, Wash., made barely more than that, at $3,600. I could probably do better after a year's worth of searching couch cushions.



Unless you have a pretty good idea of what you're going to be doing with your life after you graduate, this really will be a tough time for our generation.

We're expected to grow up and take our rightful places in the global economy, but every day it's looking more and more like we're going to have to really fight to earn them.

But what do I know; I didn't even get paid to write this column.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu

Resisting conformity in the political arena

Joshua H. Wilder

As bummed out as you may be right now, sitting in a stuffy classroom the day after a long weekend filled with sun and fun, look on the bright side. While students here in good old Massachusetts enjoyed yesterday off, our friends across the country were not so lucky.

College students usually don't need a reason to take a day off from classes, and the three-day weekend served as a quaint little break before the chaos of final exams takes over.

Since sleeping in late and seeing friends is a lot more fun than hitting the books, most of us in the Bay State don't ask any questions. But how many of you really know what Patriot's Day is about?

The civic holiday known as Patriot's Day is actually only observed here in Massachusetts and parts of Maine, and is a day set aside to honor the first battles of the Revolutionary War.

Taking place in Lexington and Concord respectively, these were the first of many crucial struggles for our independence from the British.

Today the holiday marks the day of the Boston Marathon and the long awaited arrival of warm weather. Yet originally Patriot's Day served to honor those who sacrificed their own welfare for the greater good of the commonwealth and the country.

For example, take John Parker, an American mechanic and soldier who led the Lexington militia at the Battle of Lexington. Parker's bravery and dedication to the colonies inspired others to get involved and help take down the redcoats to create the great country we live in today.

Without the work of patriots like Parker, who can say for sure that any of us would have the freedom to do what we are doing today? That is, would I have ability to write whatever I want in this column, and would you have the freedom to read the first few paragraphs and then skip over to the crosswords?

With the great patriots of years past being honored, it seems fitting to think about some contemporary Americans who symbolize what this holiday is all about. Interestingly enough, Patriotism seems to be on the tip of everyone's tongue lately, especially when it comes to this upcoming presidential election.

There is no correlation between wearing a flag and being qualified to run this country, despite what Sean Hannity might say.

In the last few weeks, an unbelievable amount of time and attention has been focused on one candidate in particular and a specific piece of his wardrobe, or one that he has left out. Of course I am talking about Barack Obama and the little American flag lapel.

This issue has been blown completely out of proportion, thanks in large part to the 24 hour news cycle and shows on Fox News such as The Beltway Boys and The O'Reilly Factor. Of all the criteria to judge a potential presidential candidate by, this one baffles this humble columnist the most.

A lot of questions have been raised lately regarding Obama's past and his own personal beliefs. From his refusal to say the pledge of allegiance to his affiliation with the kooky Reverend Wright, the potential Democratic nominee has given talk radio hosts and others a lot of ammunition.

It seems that most of these subjects are worth looking into, at least briefly, for no other reason than to get a better idea about who Obama is and what he believes. But this whole flag on the shirt business is ludicrous and asinine.

For a country which prides itself as being the land of the free, a place where people are free to be themselves and flourish as individuals, conformity sure seems in style.

While the flag lapels are nice and tacky, it seems strange that it has become one of the most important issues concerning a potential president.

It is understandable that some see the flag as a symbol of unity and pride but it shouldn't be the deciding factor in who we choose.

Wearing the lapel on one's shirt does not automatically lead to a good president; take George W. Bush, for example. Sure, he wears the flag every day, but is he doing the greatest job as president?

There is no correlation between wearing a flag and being qualified to run this country, despite what Sean Hannity might say. It seems that Americans would be better spent analyzing Obama's policies and plans for what to do if he ever gets into office rather than his wardrobe.

There are plenty of reasons to discredit Obama's candidacy, but the little flag pin is not one of them. To force everyone to wear the same thing in order to express their patriotism is a blatant violation of what this country is supposed to stand for in the first place. Refusing to consider a candidate because he fails to conform to some pointless preexisting standards reminds me of something – oh yes, fascism.

Instead of just telling people what to wear, why stop there? While we are at it, let's make everyone act and think the same way too. Such a notion would make the late great John Parker roll over in his patriotic grave.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

Great wall of Chinese thought

Chris Amorosi

Imagine a college campus without political debate. A campus where attitudes towards the government's policies are not merely a passive acceptance without question but enthusiastic support. A campus where not only the Republican Club is a relevant institution, but so popular that you yourself are a member.

You may find all these horrors on a Chinese campus, according to Matthew Forney of the International Herald Tribune. "Educated young Chinese, far from being embarrassed or upset by their government's human rights record, rank among the most patriotic, establishment-supporting people you'll meet," he said.

It's debatable to even say that these youth are "educated," given Forney's description of their education system, "which can accurately be described as indoctrination … Students learn the neat calculation that Chairman Mao's tyranny was '30 percent wrong,' then the subject is declared closed."

It disturbs me that the pro-PRC protestors on campus exhibit a similar love for Big Brother without such a syllabus. Not because my last name is McCarthy or that my precious bodily fluids may be infiltrated, but because such idiotic nationalists conflate economic progress with a successful society.

Forney quotes a Beijing human rights lawyer who said "Young Chinese have no sympathy for Tibet."

The People's Republic's phenomenal economic growth has often been at the expense of the people. Relatively primitive coal power provides 80 percent of China's electricity, belching pollution so severe that the International Olympic Committee voiced concern over the health risk to athletes in Beijing.

Power plants and factories in the area have been shut down in an attempt to clear the air, but only for the temporary benefit of their international guests.

The People's Republic's phenomenal economic growth has often been at the expense of the people.

Such are the consequences of a government run by the jingoistic morons their education system raises. At least the aging current generation of Chinese leadership has some awareness of Mao's worst excesses and the millions who died in consequence.

Those groomed to replace them have neither those experiences, nor much knowledge of the Tiananmen Square massacre and what that represented. One can hardly blame the Free Tibet movement's agitation for independence from an obviously doomed economic and political system except those in the Free Tibet movement who are morons themselves. Self- determination, along with various incarnations of Communism, created a generous portion of the previous century's misery and continues to plague us today.

When combined with the oliquish mentality of a nation state, self determination succeeded in thoroughly obliterating peace and security throughout much of Europe, Africa and Asia.

What intrinsic right do a people sharing a common language and mythology have to their own separate political system simply because they may represent a majority in certain areas?

And where has a region based such segmentations enjoyed less strife because of those divisions? It's surely not the Balkans, torn apart throughout the 1990s over ethnicity and religion.

And it's surely not in Africa, where millions have died and will continue to die for the foreseeable future as dictator's fuel their regimes with pogroms and war.

Tibet would fare no better. Comparable to the size of Alaska, Tibetans in China are limited to a mere few millions of people.

Due to settlement after the Communist Chinese invasion, Tibetan areas now have significant minorities of Han Chinese and other ethnicities with ties to the rest of China.

It is located in one of the most inhospitable places in the world and already isolated from the global community economically and culturally.

Perhaps the most repugnant idea of a Free Tibet is a Tibet under a theocracy. The Dalai Lama only allowed limited democratic elections for his government in exile in 2001, and still the government is headed by a religious figure not unlike the Pope in Rome.

The Italians, in the course of their unification wars, were wise enough to confine the Pope's temporal authority to a church and not his vast land holdings of previous centuries.

The best solution to Tibet starts with finding the truth. Even those haughty pseudo-intellectuals within China know very little about the true origins of Tibetan discontent.

To placate the younger generations, genuine concessions and limited autonomy may be necessary to stop the bloodshed. As for the older theocrats and monks, let them die off.

If China listens to Tibetans, Tibetans will stop listening to anachronisms. Tibetan dignity should not depend upon independence but upon the preservation of lives through peace and cooperation.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The highs of 4/20 weekend

Extravagant festivities held in the name of cannabis

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A slightly sweet, earthy smell could be detected throughout Amherst this weekend, as the community came together for the 17th annual Extravaganja and the second annual Spring Concert on the Hill. With clear blue skies and the sun finally shining warm, it was a perfect weekend for a celebration.

On Saturday, the University of Massachusetts' Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) sponsored Extravaganja, an event supporting the freedom of marijuana. Paying homage to the hippie culture, Extravaganja saw reggae, rap and rock bands setting the mood. Booths were lining the perimeter of the Amherst Common, selling handmade clothes, tie dye T-shirts and an array of blown-glass pieces.

These booths, however, are not what make Extravaganja a unique event. It's the people. Looking around the lawn, one could see individuals of every age and every style, those who were there in support of the issue, and those who were just along for the ride.

Howard Hanna, 31, has lived in Amherst just under a year. He was just planning on grabbing some food downtown when the stream of people heading toward the Common pulled him in. Though he wasn't sure at first, he quickly "got a feel for what [the festival] is endorsing," he said.

"I'm just looking around, taking it in," he continued. "It's a great community event."

While there were definitely a fair share of people like Hanna, the majority of the people attending Extravaganja seemed to be more than familiar with the issues.

Attendees donned whatever marijuana-related clothing they had, from one girl who wore a white pull over decorated with pink leaves, to one man who wore shorts, a backwards hat with a leaf decal and a cape.

Some people opted for no clothes at all. An older man with a long gray beard walked confidently around the festival with nothing on but brown rags and huge green pack on his back. Another girl, grooving to the live music provided by a string of bands booked by the CRC wore nothing on her chest but painted leaves.

Between the bands, speakers would talk about the issue of legalizing marijuana. One impassioned man urged people to vote, discussing the referendum that will be on the November ballot that will decriminalize marijuana.

"If the two parties don't appeal to you, there's always a third party," he yelled to the crowd.

Greg Depot and Art Laramee, both residents of the area, are familiar with Extravaganja, having come to the festival a few times before. When asked if they supported the cause, both men answered with a strong "yes."

"It's probably the least of all evils," said Laramee, continuing to say that it's no worse than drinking.

The culture and atmosphere of Extravaganja would have been right at home in the '60s. People with long, braided hair were dancing without a care in front of the stage, people were getting their faces painted and body painted dancers were hula-hooping around. Bob Marley would have been proud.

The next day, on 4:20 itself, the Central Area Government (CAG) put on their Concert on the Hill. Starting at noon and running until dusk, local bands played as Frisbees and footballs flew through the air. Student-run businesses on campus set up booths selling burgers and drinks. The CAG offered free waters and munchies.

The hill was a sea of different faces, peaking at close to 1,000 people. The event was a culmination of a lot of hard work by the CAG. According to junior Mike Megaro, the governor of CAG, they started planning last semester, after the similar fall concert Rocktoberfest.

A lot of the publicity was done via Facebook, which proved to be more than effective.

"It's awesome … we're expecting over a thousand," said Bilal Janjua, the lieutenant governor of CAG, early in the day.

CAG was able to provide food for this huge number by striking a deal with the Blue Wall Audio Promedia provided the sound equipment and the UMass Arts Council gave the CAG a grant, both of which made the whole concert possible.

There were seven bands playing over the course of the day, all with very different sounds. There were funk jazz trios, '90s powerpop bands, among others. On the Rocks got the crowd on its feet with covers like "I love Shack."

At 4:15 p.m. the crowd stood like a wave and started to boo the cop car that had appeared at the top of the hill. According to eyewitnesses, a police officer searched someone's bags and then took the culprit in the car.

Less than five minutes later, the party mood returned, as the Boston-based jam band State Your Mind took the stage. Exactly at 4:20 p.m., cheers echoed around the hill and the band started to play. Throughout their performance, the members of State Your Mind would wish the hill a happy 4:20.

The community spirit was prevalent on the hill. People were grilling their own burgers and playing catch, just hanging out and having a good time.

Johanna Mayorga, a UMass sophomore, was enjoying herself, despite expressing the sentiment that the concert was a little hyped up.

"I've been having a good time – very chill. I missed [relaxing]," she said.

Senior Thomas "Stubbins" Hill agreed. Though he wasn't partaking in most of the festivities of the day, he was still enjoying the music and the sun, and, as he said, "I caught myself tapping my toes a little bit to State Your Mind."

The weekend seemed to be a success for both the CRC and CAG. It brought together a community on a beautiful spring weekend for a cause that resonates with a lot of UMass students and Amherst community members.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Call a spade a spade

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

The American University in Cairo auditorium fell silent as I penetrated the eyes of the oldest living former American president, Jimmy Carter. In the middle of his recent trip to the Middle East, former president Carter stopped by the University to give a short speech explaining the purpose of his visits to Egypt and Syria.

During those visists he talked with prominent members of Hamas about the Israeli-Palestinian issue. Hamas, the political movement democratically elected in the Gaza Strip in 2006, is considered to be a terrorist organization by the United States, Israel and the European Union.

President Carter emphasized to the AUC audience that his trip to the Middle East was not promoted by the U.S. government, but rather was a manifestation of Carter's individual initiative as a private citizen to help the peace process.

"You can't have an agreement that must involve certain parties unless you're willing to talk to these parties while you conclude the agreement," he explained.

This notion hinges on the assumption that Hamas is willing to negotiate with its adversaries to promote a permanent peace in the region, thus contradicting the message behind Hamas' founding charter that explicitly denies the right of Israel to exist.

Moreover, its systematic and persistent targeting of innocent Israeli civilians up to this day leaves little doubt that many Hamas terrorists are not ready to abandon this extremist position to embrace a more conciliatory approach towards a two-state solution.

Yet interestingly enough, an AUC friend named David, who has an expansive knowledge of the Israeli-Palestinian issue and has previously done volunteer relief work in the West Bank, insists that there are different factions within Hamas that span from extremist to moderate.

He feels that both Israel and Fatah, the more moderate Palestinian leadership of the West Bank, must try to co-opt these moderate Hamas members (if you can call them that) into mainstream Israeli-Palestinian political dialogue.

Nevertheless, I was troubled by former president Carter's continued insistence throughout his speech on calling the Hamas members with whom he was meeting on his trip as "leaders" and not "terrorists."

This word play may have been intended to assuage these people into accepting Carter's political aims, and not as a reflection of his failure to portray the organization for what it actually is.

Yet Carter's answer to the question I asked him suggested that this was not the case. Instead, it seemed more like Carter truly did not believe that an organization devoted to the intentional targeting of innocent civilians constituted a terrorist group.

When Aristotle said thousands of years ago that people become moral by committing moral acts he was emphasizing that labels should reflect your repeated behaviors.

One is ill–prepared to solve a violent conflict unless he first confronts the reality of the forces which cause the violence.

Thus, my question to Carter was, "Throughout your speech, why did you keep calling Hamas members 'leaders' and not 'terrorists,' even though they indiscriminately target and kill innocent people consistently?"

Carter equivocated by saying that some Hamas leaders were guilty of "acts of terrorism," implying that their targeting of innocents are not systemic events but rather isolated instances. Clearly this is not true if one looks at the history of the organization's violence.

One is ill-prepared to solve a violent conflict unless he first confronts the reality of the forces which cause the violence. By refusing to label Hamas "leaders" as terrorists, Carter's remarkable evasion of the question reveals how some people are unable to face facts. This may be because they are unable to face them, or, as is more likely, they do not want to face them.

Do not be fooled: the Middle East peace process will never solve anything tangible if people like Carter do not recognize what is right in front of their own eyes.

One wonders whether Carter would have a change of heart and mind and begin to label Hamas members "terrorists" if his wife or son were the victim of one of their indiscriminate attacks on innocent populations.

Carter's thinking, and the thinking of many present at the AUC auditorium, directly contributes to the lack of international outrage over the targeting of innocents in Israel, which, in turn, puts innocent Palestinians in danger as well because of an inevitable Israeli military response.

Those who embrace Carter's ideology without expressing unequivocal outrage over Hamas undermine the peace process when they refuse to acknowledge that humanity collectively must renounce terrorism before any further steps for peace are taken.

If humanity is not united against terrorism, then violence in the Middle East will not stop. And regardless of its good faith intentions, Carter's thinking, and that of all those who support it, will engender exactly what happens when people do not face facts of good and evil: the continued deaths of innocent people, in this case both of Palestinians and Israelis.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

A sad fate for grads

Devon Courtney

I truly enjoy this time of year. Not only do we get rewarded for all our hard work by being sent a fat tax return in the mail, we're also able to individually analyze what our lives are worth on an annual basis.

There's a fantastic tool to help us do this, in the form of the April 13 "Tax Day" edition of Parade Magazine. Every year at this time, Parade releases an entertaining and informative general report featuring the yearly earnings of people from all walks of life.

If you should take a couple of minutes to skim it over, you will probably hope to see yourself in the future, the fruits of your hard work throughout college someday turning into a lucrative career.

Actually, your blatant inability to interface with reality in this case is just about the only thing that would keep you from placing your head in your hands, sobbing quietly, and saying, "What the hell am I doing with my life?"

For those of us who are graduating, we have been fully briefed on the fact that the job market has been deep-sixed into the proverbial toilet.

I say this because if you have a sensible dream of studying education and becoming either a high school or elementary teacher and getting about $30 grand a year for your hard work, your wages will be dwarfed by the likes of someone named Miley Cyrus, some 15-year-old singer/actress who makes 18 million bucks every time she bats an eyelash.

Perhaps computer science is your thing, and maybe you dream of becoming a software engineer like Renita Rhodes. At 31 years old, she was able to scrape together $72 thousand in the St. Louis job market.

That's not a bad haul, but it's peanuts compared to the $12 million that Leona Helmsley's dog "Trouble" got for doing NOTHING. Trouble doesn't even have a college degree, but I'll bet Renita Rhodes doesn't urinate on the furniture.

It really does little good to cry over the proverbial spilled milk, though. So more importantly, where are all the jobs?

Here's one more example. Yordana Rodriguez, a 25-year-old pharmacy technician from Tampa, Fla., earned a measly $23,000 last year.

Given our society's high regard for life-quality enhancing drugs, it's surprising how little Rodriguez earned. Mary-Kate Olsen, on the other hand, made $17 million for doing drugs.

Obviously, the problem isn't that there's no money in the economy right now. Jeff Foxworthy made $10 million last year for telling crappy jokes, and the near-goddess Oprah doesn't-need-a-last-name Winfrey made 260 million bucks for telling people what to read.

Operating budgets for people making about the average salary in this great country last year (which was about $36,000, says Parade) have been strained due to the fact that people are paying "five percent more for food, 8.6 percent more for hospital services, and a whopping 35 percent more for gasoline."

It really does little good to cry over the proverbial spilled milk, though. So more importantly, where are all the jobs? I was hoping to have this question answered by the end of this column, and for the love of God, hopefully before I graduate in May.

If you don't have the credentials to become Dr. Phil McGraw and bring in 90 million clams every time you make a poor analogy, you'd best keep in mind that some of the fastest-growing segments of the job market are in the health care field, which (unlike our friend Dr. Phil) you actually need a license to practice in.

Other fields that are sustainable in today's economy are in "education…security services, and information technology," according to Parade.

Health care jobs have soared "45 percent in the last 15 years," and nurse practitioners are making more money than ever. Archie McEvers, a nurse practitioner in Syracuse, N.Y., made $79,000 last year, a salary many of us would love to have coming out of our graduation.

As far as education, there will be "2.8 million new teaching-related jobs over the next eight years," according to the national Center for Education Statistics.

It's a fast-growing market, and naturally, more demand equals higher pay. That is except, of course, if you're 50 Cent, who brought in $33 million for mumbling incoherently into a microphone. I didn't realize there was any demand at all for that.

For all you dance and theatre majors out there, I've got some troubling news. The average performer would be lucky to earn $12 an hour. Jerese Kimbrough, a dancer in Brooklyn, N.Y., only put together $3,200 last year.

What single thing is even more depressing than that is that Brian Prigel, the prestigious mayor of Bingen, Wash., made barely more than that, at $3,600. I could probably do better after a year's worth of searching couch cushions.

Unless you have a pretty good idea of what you're going to be doing with your life after you graduate, this really will be a tough time for our generation.

We're expected to grow up and take our rightful places in the global economy, but every day it's looking more and more like we're going to have to really fight to earn them.

But what do I know; I didn't even get paid to write this column.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Resisting conformity in the political arena

Joshua H. Wilder

As bummed out as you may be right now, sitting in a stuffy classroom the day after a long weekend filled with sun and fun, look on the bright side. While students here in good old Massachusetts enjoyed yesterday off, our friends across the country were not so lucky.

College students usually don't need a reason to take a day off from classes, and the three-day weekend served as a quaint little break before the chaos of final exams takes over.

Since sleeping in late and seeing friends is a lot more fun than hitting the books, most of us in the Bay State don't ask any questions. But how many of you really know what Patriot's Day is about?

The civic holiday known as Patriot's Day is actually only observed here in Massachusetts and parts of Maine, and is a day set aside to honor the first battles of the Revolutionary War.

Taking place in Lexington and Concord respectively, these were the first of many crucial struggles for our independence from the British.

Today the holiday marks the day of the Boston Marathon and the long awaited arrival of warm weather. Yet originally Patriot's Day served to honor those who sacrificed their own welfare for the greater good of the commonwealth and the country.

For example, take John Parker, an American mechanic and soldier who led the Lexington militia at the Battle of Lexington. Parker's bravery and dedication to the colonies inspired others to get involved and help take down the redcoats to create the great country we live in today.

Without the work of patriots like Parker, who can say for sure that any of us would have the freedom to do what we are doing today? That is, would I have ability to write whatever I want in this column, and would you have the freedom to read the first few paragraphs and then skip over to the crosswords?

With the great patriots of years past being honored, it seems fitting to think about some contemporary Americans who symbolize what this holiday is all about. Interestingly enough, Patriotism seems to be on the tip of everyone's tongue lately, especially when it comes to this upcoming presidential election.

There is no correlation between wearing a flag and being qualified to run this country, despite what Sean Hannity might say.

In the last few weeks, an unbelievable amount of time and attention has been focused on one candidate in particular and a specific piece of his wardrobe, or one that he has left out. Of course I am talking about Barack Obama and the little American flag lapel.

This issue has been blown completely out of proportion, thanks in large part to the 24 hour news cycle and shows on Fox News such as The Beltway Boys and The O'Reilly Factor. Of all the criteria to judge a potential presidential candidate by, this one baffles this humble columnist the most.

A lot of questions have been raised lately regarding Obama's past and his own personal beliefs. From his refusal to say the pledge of allegiance to his affiliation with the kooky Reverend Wright, the potential Democratic nominee has given talk radio hosts and others a lot of ammunition.

It seems that most of these subjects are worth looking into, at least briefly, for no other reason than to get a better idea about who Obama is and what he believes. But this whole flag on the shirt business is ludicrous and asinine.

For a country which prides itself as being the land of the free, a place where people are free to be themselves and flourish as individuals, conformity sure seems in style.

While the flag lapels are nice and tacky, it seems strange that it has become one of the most important issues concerning a potential president.

It is understandable that some see the flag as a symbol of unity and pride but it shouldn't be the deciding factor in who we choose.

Wearing the lapel on one's shirt does not automatically lead to a good president; take George W. Bush, for example. Sure, he wears the flag every day, but is he doing the greatest job as president?

There is no correlation between wearing a flag and being qualified to run this country, despite what Sean Hannity might say. It seems that Americans would be better spent analyzing Obama's policies and plans for what to do if he ever gets into office rather than his wardrobe.

There are plenty of reasons to discredit Obama's candidacy, but the little flag pin is not one of them. To force everyone to wear the same thing in order to express their patriotism is a blatant violation of what this country is supposed to stand for in the first place. Refusing to consider a candidate because he fails to conform to some pointless preexisting standards reminds me of something – oh yes, fascism.

Instead of just telling people what to wear, why stop there? While we are at it, let's make everyone act and think the same way too. Such a notion would make the late great John Parker roll over in his patriotic grave.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

Great wall of Chinese thought

Imagine a college campus without political debate. A campus where attitudes towards the government's policies are not merely a passive acceptance without question but enthusiastic support. A campus where not only the Republican Club is a relevant institution, but so popular that you yourself are a member.

Chris Amorosi

You may find all these horrors on a Chinese campus, according to Matthew Forney of the International Herald Tribune. "Educated young Chinese, far from being embarrassed or upset by their government's human rights record, rank among the most patriotic, establishment-supporting people you'll meet," he said.

It's debatable to even say that these youth are "educated," given Forney's description of their education system, "which can accurately be described as indoctrination … Students learn the neat calculation that Chairman Mao's tyranny was '30 percent wrong,' then the subject is declared closed."

It disturbs me that the pro-PRC protestors on campus exhibit a similar love for Big Brother without such a syllabus. Not because my last name is McCarthy or that my precious bodily fluids may be infiltrated, but because such idiotic nationalists conflate economic progress with a successful society.

Forney quotes a Beijing human rights lawyer who said "Young Chinese have no sympathy for Tibet."

The People's Republic's phenomenal economic growth has often been at the expense of the people. Relatively primitive coal power provides 80 percent of China's electricity, belching pollution so severe that the International Olympic Committee voiced concern over the health risk to athletes in Beijing.

Power plants and factories in the area have been shut down in an attempt to clear the air, but only for the temporary benefit of their international guests.

The People's Republic's phenomenal economic growth has often been at the expense of the people.

Such are the consequences of a government run by the jingoistic morons their education system raises. At least the aging current generation of Chinese leadership has some awareness of Mao's worst excesses and the millions who died in consequence.

Those groomed to replace them have neither those experiences, nor much knowledge of the Tiananmen Square massacre and what that represented. One can hardly blame the Free Tibet movement's agitation for independence from an obviously doomed economic and political system except those in the Free Tibet movement who are morons themselves. Self- determination, along with various incarnations of Communism, created a generous portion of the previous century's misery and continues to plague us today.

When combined with the cliquish mentality of a nation state, self determination succeeded in thoroughly obliterating peace and security throughout much of Europe, Africa and Asia.

What intrinsic right do a people sharing a common language and mythology have to their own separate political system simply because they may represent a majority in certain areas?

And where has a region based such segmentations enjoyed less strife because of those divisions? It's surely not the Balkans, torn apart throughout the 1990s over ethnicity and religion.

And it's surely not in Africa, where millions have died and will continue to die for the foreseeable future as dictator's fuel their regimes with pogroms and war.

Tibet would fare no better. Comparable to the size of Alaska, Tibetans in China are limited to a mere few millions of people.

Due to settlement after the Communist Chinese invasion, Tibetan areas now have significant minorities of Han Chinese and other ethnicities with ties to the rest of China.

It is located in one of the most inhospitable places in the world and already isolated from the global community economically and culturally.

Perhaps the most repugnant idea of a Free Tibet is a Tibet under a theocracy. The Dalai Lama only allowed limited democratic elections for his government in exile in 2001, and still the government is headed by a religious figure not unlike the Pope in Rome.

The Italians, in the course of their unification wars, were wise enough to confine the Pope's temporal authority to a church and not his vast land holdings of previous centuries.

The best solution to Tibet starts with finding the truth. Even those haughty pseudo-intellectuals within China know very little about the true origins of Tibetan discontent.

To placate the younger generations, genuine concessions and limited autonomy may be necessary to stop the bloodshed. As for the older theocrats and monks, let them die off.

If China listens to Tibetans, Tibetans will stop listening to anachronisms. Tibetan dignity should not depend upon independence but upon the preservation of lives through peace and cooperation.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The highs of 4/20 weekend

Extravagant festivities held in the name of cannabis

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A slightly sweet, earthy smell could be detected throughout Amherst this weekend, as the community came together for the 17th annual Extravaganja and the second annual Spring Concert on the Hill. With clear blue skies and the sun finally shining warm, it was a perfect weekend for a celebration.

On Saturday, the University of Massachusetts' Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) sponsored Extravaganja, an event supporting the freedom of marijuana. Paying homage to the hippie culture, Extravaganja saw reggae, rap and rock bands setting the mood. Booths were lining the perimeter of the Amherst Common, selling handmade clothes, tie dye T-shirts and an array of blown-glass pieces.

These booths, however, are not what make Extravaganja a unique event. It's the people. Looking around the lawn, one could see individuals of every age and every style, those who were there in support of the issue, and those who were just along for the ride.

Howard Hanna, 31, has lived in Amherst just under a year. He was just planning on grabbing some food downtown when the stream of people heading toward the Common pulled him in. Though he wasn't sure at first, he quickly "got a feel for what [the festival] is endorsing," he said.

"I'm just looking around, taking it in," he continued. "It's a great community event."

While there were definitely a fair share of people like Hanna, the majority of the people attending Extravaganja seemed to be more than familiar with the issues.

Attendees donned whatever marijuana-related clothing they had, from one girl who wore a white pull over decorated with pink leaves, to one man who wore shorts, a backwards hat with a leaf decal and a cape.

Some people opted for no clothes at all. An older man with a long gray beard walked confidently around the festival with nothing on but brown rags and huge green pack on his back. Another girl, grooving to the live music provided by a string of bands booked by the CRC wore nothing on her chest but painted leaves.

Between the bands, speakers would talk about the issue of legalizing marijuana. One impassioned man urged people to vote, discussing the referendum that will be on the November ballot that will decriminalize marijuana.

"If the two parties don't appeal to you, there's always a third party," he yelled to the crowd.

Greg Depot and Art Laramee, both residents of the area, are familiar with Extravaganja, having come to the festival a few times before. When asked if they supported the cause, both men answered with a strong "yes."

"It's probably the least of all evils," said Laramee, continuing to say that it's no worse than drinking.

The culture and atmosphere of Extravaganja would have been right at home in the '60s. People with long, braided hair were dancing without a care in front of the stage, people were getting their faces painted and body painted dancers were hula-hooping around. Bob Marley would have been proud.

The next day, on 4/20 itself, the Central Area Government (CAG) put on their Concert on the Hill. Starting at noon and running until dusk, local bands played as Frisbees and footballs flew through the air. Student-run businesses on campus set up booths selling burgers and drinks. The CAG offered free waters and munchies.

The hill was a sea of different faces, peaking at close to 1,000 people. The event was a culmination of a lot of hard work by the CAG. According to junior Mike Megaro, the governor of CAG, they started planning last semester, after the similar fall concert Rocktoberfest.

A lot of the publicity was done via Facebook, which proved to be more than effective.

"It's awesome … we're expecting over a thousand," said Bilal Janjua, the lieutenant governor of CAG, early in the day.

CAG was able to provide food for this huge number by striking a deal with the Blue Wall. Audio Promedia provided the sound equipment and the UMass Arts Council gave the CAG a grant, both of which made the whole concert possible.

There were seven bands playing over the course of the day, all with very different sounds. There were funk jazz trios, '90s powerpop bands, among others. On the Rocks got the crowd on its feet with covers like "I love Shack."

At 4:15 p.m. the crowd stood like a wave and started to boo the cop car that had appeared at the top of the hill. According to eyewitnesses, a police officer searched someone's bags and then took the culprit in the car.

Less than five minutes later, the party mood returned, as the Boston-based jam band State Your Mind took the stage. Exactly at 4:20 p.m., cheers echoed around the hill and the band started to play. Throughout their performance, the members of State Your Mind would wish the hill a happy 4:20.

The community spirit was prevalent on the hill. People were grilling their own burgers and playing catch, just hanging out and having a good time.

Johanna Mayorga, a UMass sophomore, was enjoying herself, despite expressing the sentiment that the concert was a little hyped up.

"I've been having a good time – very chill. I missed [relaxing]," she said.

Senior Thomas "Stubbins" Hill agreed. Though he wasn't partaking in most of the festivities of the day, he was still enjoying the music and the sun, and, as he said, "I caught myself tapping my toes a little bit to State Your Mind."

The weekend seemed to be a success for both the CRC and CAG. It brought together a community on a beautiful spring weekend for a cause that resonates with a lot of UMass students and Amherst community members.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@student.umass.edu

Discovering buried local ties to the past

Retired professor displays WWI artifacts in DuBois Library

BY CAROL LAWLESS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It is not every day that University of Massachusetts students stumble upon parts of French weapons used in World War I while doing homework. But if students frequent the Learning Commons in the W.E.B. DuBois Library, they probably have been seeing these artifacts all month.

Since March 31, artifacts found in St. Mihiel Salient and the Argonne Forests in France by retired UMass Professor Ed Klekowski last May have been available for public viewing in the main study area of the Learning Commons.

It's currently illegal to dig for artifacts in old trenches of France, but these pieces were found on the surface by Klekowski, who taught genetics, and his wife, Libby. The pair, along with Betty Wilda, an OIT worker at UMass, is currently producing two documentaries about World War I, "Yankees Fight the Kaiser" and "Model T's to Glory." The artifacts will help tell the two stories.

Artifacts are not uncommon in the Hillside of the Argonne woods," explained Klekowski. "It's really not a big deal."

The exhibit includes a variety of pieces. There are old wine bottles with the necks cut off, a French 75 mm shrapnel shell with some lead balls, which "carpet areas of the Western front," barbed wire picket (which had been cut in half by shellfire), a German telephone insulator (the trenches were hard wired), a French mess kit cup, shell splinters, German and French rifle bullet cartridge cases, and a sword bayonet for a German rifle. Each item is accompanied by a description of how it was used or an interesting fact.

The display was first put out in the library to catch interest at a fundraising dinner for donors that Klekowski lectured at. He said that he and Emily Silverman, the director of library development and communication, spoke afterwards and decided to keep the exhibit out for people at the library to see all month.

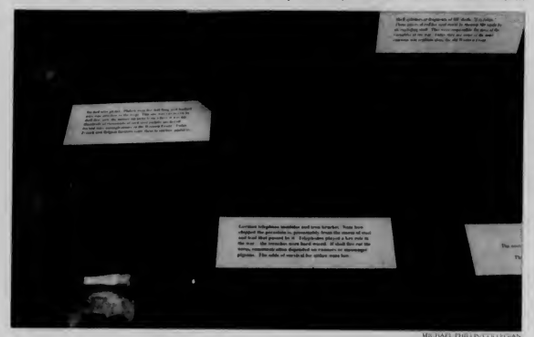
Publicity led a family in Amherst to contact Klekowski two weeks ago and donate a chest that belonged to Larry Walsh, a deceased UMass student who left school to volunteer as an ambulance driver in the American Field Service in 1917 in France, before American troops joined the war in the fall. He applied to be a flier but didn't pass the physical exam, so he became a Red Cross member, and later a captain in the Red Cross.

Paraphernalia from every place Walsh visited during the war was found in the chest, so "it was a really great find," said Klekowski. He donated it to the Special Collections and University Archives on the 25th floor of the library.

The American Field Service now provides scholarships to college undergraduates to go abroad.

The pamphlets on exhibit in the Learning Commons, including one published in 1918 for the soldiers of the American Expedition Force, were purchased by Klekowski at Valley Books. While researching for his documentaries, Klekowski prefers to read primary sources, such as the pamphlets.

One of his current projects, "Model T's to Glory," is about the American Field Service, who used Model T ambulances.



"Yankees Fight the Kaiser," his other project, recounts the Yankee Division of the first National Guard special units activated when former president Woodrow Wilson declared America was in the war. The Yankee Division consisted of men from New England, which included many from Amherst and Boston.

His most popular documentary was "Under Quabbin," which raised WGBY (Public Television for Western New England) around $150,000. He makes his documentaries for public TV, which is first shown on WGBY, and then on WGBH (Boston).

"UMass gets a lot of free publicity from the documentaries," said Klekowski. "I got a grant from alumni recently for the production of my two newest shows."

The exhibit will be available for public viewing until April 30. Where will the items go after that? "In a box in my cellar," chuckled Klekowski.

Carol Lawless can be reached at clawless@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

The collection features numerous WWI artifacts including shrapnel shells, mess kit, bullet cartridges and bayonets, accompanied by description and and facts. The artifacts are on display until April 30.

MICHAEL PHELPS/COLLEGIAN

These pamphlets, currently on display, have been used by retired professor Ed Klekowski for research for his upcoming documentaries.

Devine personality at Pearl St.

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A cozy crowd filled the clubroom at Pearl Street on Friday for a concert bill featuring headliner Kevin Devine and supporting acts Baker and Brian Bonz & the Dot Hogs. The mood was extremely laid back as the musicians played to a room of attentive fans.

To start the show, which began at around 9 p.m., Baker came on stage and played a group of songs with a style similar to the Artic Monkeys. They were extremely animated on the dimly lit stage as they attempted to engage the crowd through catchy clapping and tambourines.

Next, Brooklyn band Brian Bonz & the Dot Hogs played a set of infectious indie-rock. Frontman Bonz engaged the crowd by drawing them into moments of banter and friendly conversation. For the last song, Devine came on stage and helped the band close out their set by singing backup and dancing along to the beats.

Kevin Devine started his set with a little ditty that stressed how he "still runs the show." Then, he played "Big, Bad Man," a song from his upcoming release. The set also included "Your Damned Ol' Dad," "Wolf's Mouth," "Go Haunt Someone Else," "Whistling Dixie," and "Cotton Crush." He closed with "Heaven Bound and Glory Be," a song from his latest album "Put Your Ghost to Rest."

Devine played some songs solo and for others, like "Just Stay," he invited Brian Bonz and Mike Strandberg of the Dot Hogs on stage. These two musicians acted as Devine's Goddamn Band throughout the set. Strandberg played guitar and Bonz played the tambourine and an odd instrument that could only be described as a mini-keyboard with a plastic tube attached to it that sounded like a kazoo. They also provided the back-up harmonies found in many of Devine's more rock-band sounding tunes.

Throughout the show, Devine worked hard to engage the crowd. As he quietly tuned his guitar, he lifted up his head and asked the audience if there was anything they wanted to discuss. When someone yelled out "Baseball!" (possibly as a request for Devine to play his song "Ballgame"), he shot back with an answer like, "Yes, I like baseball."

The crowd appeared to be more interested in hearing Devine play than having a deep conversation with the musician. Devine recognized the apparent mood of the crowd and tuned his guitar to continue playing through his set, which topped out at around 17 songs.

He honored one audience request: the song "Jesus Christ" by Brand New. Devine is known for his pop-y version of the song; he played it last summer while on tour with Jesse Lacey of Brand New. Although Devine had reached what he called his "one cover per show maximum" with Elliott Smith's "The Biggest Lie," Devine gave in to the request and the crowd sang along to the fan favorite.

Most of the time, Devine was subdued and personable. He stepped away from the microphone to sing the "ooohs" without any amplification. In actuality, it appeared that he did not even require a microphone for most of the show; he was more comfortable just standing on stage, talking closely to his fans.

He did have some loud moments where he howled through lyrics, but most of the time he quietly strummed the notes on his guitar and sang the words with solid sincerity.

In the setting of Pearl Street, Devine excelled in showing how easy it is for a musician to be personable and accessible to fans. Even before he performed Devine hung around merchandise booth and talked to fans. He stood among fans during much of Brian Bonz and the Dot Hogs. For Devine, there appears to be little difference between fan and musician. There was not one ounce of pretense in the room, it was a perfect fit.

Allie Roth can be reached at allie.roth@gmail.com.

Student iron chef invades UMass

BY SOPHIA YAVORSKI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The tables were turned in Kitchen Stadium during the University of Massachusetts' own Student Iron Chef competition last Wednesday and Thursday, April 16 and 17.

The event took place in all the Dining Commons from 5 to 10 p.m., giving students a chance to show their culinary interest to the UMass community. Every DC had three teams of three students and after submitting their recipes, the teams were then chosen. The only rule was that each team's creation had to contain a protein, starch, vegetable, and a soup with chicken stalk base.

Unfortunately for Berkshire Dining Hall, only two of the three teams showed up, but this didn't change the mindset of the two remaining teams. "This is nerve-wracking … I just want to start," joked Team 1's Maria Knourenko.

Over on the other side, Team 3 was preparing for the battle.

"I feel fairly decent," said Zamaniqa Bankole "We aren't top chefs or anything, but we've made [these dishes] before so we feel comfortable. Winning this means the world … our parents are praying."

Team 1, consisting of chefs Jess Melfa, Maria Knourenko and Aaron Lyon, took a more traditional approach in this competition, making food such as basmati rice, julienne vegetables, chicken vegetable rice soup and apricot glazed chicken.

"We got the idea from a friend who makes pork tenderloin, but [instead] used chicken," said Lyon.

Over on Team 3's side, chefs Jasmine Gomes, Safia Albaiti, and Zamaniqa Bankole were cooking up dishes with a Middle Eastern feel, such as Indian curry, an eggplant and yogurt dish, coconut risotto and broccoli soup. They certainly looked as though they knew what they were doing, because they started without any hesitation.

The battle lasted two hours, and amid the Yankees game playing on the big screen in back of the competitors, fans of both sides were going crazy, cheering their friends on as time elapsed.

Around 9:30 p.m., teams stopped what they were doing and presented their dishes to judges Tim Lane, Alex Bullers and Keith Toffling. Both were presented beautifully, with flakes of fruit and vegetables garnishing the large serving plates.

Team 1 served their creations to the judges, with plate after plate looking more and more like a dish served on Food Network's "Iron Chef America."

"The overall presentation [of Team 1] was done well. It was colorful, but lacked originality … the soup was standard," said Bullers. "If the veggies were fresh instead of steamed, it would have added a crunch to the dish."

Next, Team 2 presented their dishes. Completely different than Team 1's in taste and appearance, it was something to get used to for people who have never tried Indian food.

"They were creative and I appreciate their creativity," said Toffling. "[But] it was hard for me to be objective because I had no prior experience with Indian food."

In the end, the judges decided that it was Team 1's home-style cooking over Team 3's spicy ethnic dishes that would compete against winners of the other DCs in the Taste of UMass later this month.

"We [hope to] show the taste of real good food," said Melfa.

Sophia Yavorski can be reached at syavorski@student.umass.edu.

KEITH TOFFLING/COLLEGIAN

Jess Melfa, Maria Knourenko and Aaron Lyon were the victors of the Berkshire Dining Hall Iron Chef challange last week. They will take on the winners from the other DCs at the Taste of UMass festival on Thursday.

NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich/daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Clegg rusty in start vs. 49ers hit parade. But we got better pitching and found a way to stop them [Sunday]."

BASEBALL from page 10

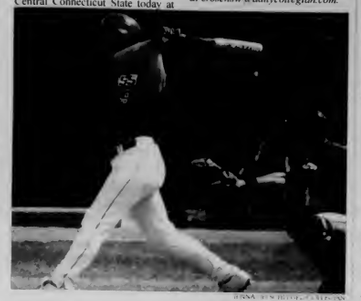
On Friday UMass starter Mitchell Clegg was roughed up early, allowing seven runs in the first two innings. He finished with 10 runs allowed (eight earned) in 4 1/3 innings. Charlotte starter Joe Yermal went all nine innings for the complete game.



Much like they did on Saturday, nine different 49ers had at least two hits on Friday.

UMass returns to action for a non-conference game against Central Connecticut State today at home. The Minutemen are 20-7 in the career series, including an 11-7 victory last season.

GAME NOTES

Charlotte finished the series with 50 runs, 65 hits and 96 total baserunners in 27 innings. … The 49ers had 25 extra-base hits, including nine home runs, 14 doubles and two triples. … Charlotte scored runs in 16 different innings, including three or more in half of them. … Saturday's 24-6 loss could have been even worse for UMass, as the 49ers left 18 men on base – an average of two per inning.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

DONNA BYRNE/COLLEGIAN

Kyle Multner and the Minutemen host Central Connecticut State at Earl Lorden Field this afternoon.

Fairfield will provide test

M. LACROSSE from page 10

scoring at a higher rate than the Minutemen.

While UMass has won three of its last four games, the Stags arrive in Amherst on an eight-game losing streak. Fairfield won its first three games before losing its first game on March 11 and dropping four matches against conference foes.

The Stags nearly upset Georgetown on April 5, but the team fell short in the second half, losing 10-8.

Though Fairfield ranks near the middle of the conference in scoring per game, the team derives much of its offense from

BRIAN TITUS/COLLEGIAN

Peter McNichols and the rest of the UMass offense will try to get the team back in the winning column when they host Fairfield today at Garber Field.

careful shot making. The team ranks last in shots per (30.27), but scores at nearly a 23 percent efficiency.

Fairfield lacks a defined group of goal scorers that has created a balanced scoring attack. Only two Stags have scored at least 12 goals, while eight players have tallied four or more.

Though balanced scoring can be an asset, it can negatively affect a team when it's having difficulty finding the net. The Stags lost four games by three goals or less partially because of its ability to score timely goals.

Last season the Minutemen defeated the Stags by three goals behind its domination of face-offs and successful creation of scoring chances (41 shots). Two years ago, Fairfield came close to winning the first game of the all-time series, but UMass scored three goals in the final 63 seconds to steal the victory.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Dixon pleased with overall season

TENNIS from page 10

believed she could have been the best freshman there, but her consistency of play was lacking," Dixon said.

All of the other players failed to win a singles match against Xavier. Dixon felt that some of the players, in particular the freshman, were a bit overwhelmed by the tournament atmosphere.

"The moment kind of got to the freshman; they didn't put their best foot forward," Dixon said.

Still, Dixon is not displeased with the season as a whole and remains proud of the team.

"I would say we had a very solid season – not an outstanding one but very solid," Dixon said.

She is optimistic about next season and feels that the character they showed this year will serve them well in the future.

"This was a very resilient team with a lot of fight in it. I never had to get on them to work hard and they were always focused for every match they played in. I have high expectations for next season now that our freshmen have a year of experience," Dixon said.

The Minutewomen made it to the semifinals by virtue of a first-round bye and a tougher than expected victory against eighth-seeded St. Louis.

The meet was tied 3-3 going into the final match between Danai and Rachel McCullagh. All the pressure was on Danai's shoulders but she gutted out a 7-6(4), 7-5 win, advancing the Minutewomen into the semifinals.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Balschmiter becoming truly dominant win over Dayton: five innings pitched, no hits, no runs, no walks, 12 strikeouts. She faced 15 batters total in a game that lasted little more than an hour, and struck out 80 percent of them. And her demeanor on the mound, while extremely focused, hints at the fact that she knows there are bigger things ahead.

BALSCHMITER from page 1

"I think she's really matured a lot," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said "She's really become a gamer. She's grown up. She's a different Brandice than the previous two years. You want the ball in her hands because she does a great job of it."

Balschmiter has noticed the change, too.

"I've definitely matured a lot this year," she said. "I'm trying to be a leader out there to take us where we want to go."

She also admits that failing to get out of the Regionals last year stung and her sophomore year was not her best, at least by her standards.

"I went through the sophomore slump, if you will," Balschmiter said. "We didn't get back to Supers, and we're really driven to get there this year."

Her ERA rose from 0.97 her freshman year to 1.39 as a sophomore. Her strikeout total dipped by almost 30, and she allowed 30 more hits.

So what has she done to make sure that doesn't happen again? To start, she's throwing more than just her blistering fastball these days. As a sophomore, she introduced a rise-ball and a drop-ball to her pitch arsenal, as well as a deceiving change-up. This year, she has full command of them.

"She just has a better attitude about it," Serio said. "She has a better presence on the mound. She's just attacking people right now. It's really great to see. It pumps all of us up and just really keeps us going."

DONNA BYRNE/COLLEGIAN

After losing to Oklahoma in the NCAA Tournament last season, Brandice Balschmiter returned for her junior season with the mindset of advancing further this season.

Now Balschmiter has options when it comes to getting batters out, and the rise-ball is quickly becoming her favorite out-pitch.

"My fastball will always be my bread-and-butter pitch," Balschmiter said. "But the rise-ball is definitely up there with it as well."

"We've added more pitches throughout the year, and she just keeps getting more control over every one of those pitches," Serio said.

The most recent addition to Balschmiter's arsenal is a curveball. Sortino signals the pitch selection in to Serio before each pitch, and she has been experimented with the curveball Sunday.

"We've been spotting it here and there where we're ahead in the count, just seeing what it does, and I thought it was pretty effective," Sortino said.

Even when she doesn't hit her mark, Balschmiter remains in control in the circle. No longer is she shaken when an opposing batter connects with her fastball. She knows as much about why her pitches don't hit their spot as when they hit Serio's glove for strike three.

"I think she's able to recover. I think she knows what to do," Sortino said. "She owns that pitch and why it got hit. She's able to deliver better pitches and learn from her mistakes within the confines of the game."

With two weeks left in the regular season, the Minutewomen are relying on their ace in the circle. Balschmiter knows that better now than she ever did, and she welcomes it.

"The cliché is 'defense wins championships,'" Sortino said. "In our game it's centered 99.9 percent on the mound. The fact that she's determined and she's as talented as she's become, I'm glad we have her on our side."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jerice@student.umass.edu.

Offense productive in wins over Dukes

SOFTBALL from page 1

and a double to drive in another five runs.

"It was middle in [and] that's my go to pitch. Once I saw it I just knew I wanted to get a good piece," Normandin said about her grand slam.

In Game One Balschmiter (20-6) dominated with 12 strikeouts and only faced 15 batters through five innings.

The Minutewomen started the rout in the second inning when Dayton pitcher Erin LaFayette walked the bases loaded. Sophomore second baseman Carly Morin singled to score one run. Normandin then knocked a grand slam over the right field wall to make it 5-0.

In the third inning sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves hit a solo home run to make it 6-0, it was her sixth homerun of the season. The Minutewomen added six more runs in the fourth inning. Normandin started the inning with a solo home run.

After sophomore Whitney Williams scored on a wild pitch from third, sophomore catcher Jessica Serio walked to load the bases. Freshman designated hitter Lindsay Maroney came to the plate with two outs. Maroney brought everyone to the plate with a grand slam. It was one of six home runs on the day for UMass and the first of Maroney's career.

"It would be really great to keep us going the way we're going," Sortino said about the hitting. "I think we're strong from the bottom to the top."

Balschmiter closed her perfect performance by striking out the last eight batters of the game. On the mound she understood that she was going for a perfect game, but it didn't change her mindset or approach. One key to Balschmiter's perfect game was not only her ability to pitch well, but just to relax before the game.

"I basically had a day and half of rest, got to relax [and] catch up on some sleep after a long two weeks," she said.

In Game Two LaFayette had another chance against the UMass offense. LaFayette made it through 1 2/3 innings without giving up a run. With runners on first and second LaFayette looked to be out of the jam but Morin reach on an error by Dayton shortstop Emily Stegeman. Instead of the inning ending, LaFayette had to face Normandin again with the bases loaded. Normandin singled in two runs to take the 2-1 lead. Williams then knocked in two more runs with a double to left center.

UMass added four more runs in the third inning to take an 8-1 lead. The support was more than enough for Sanders, who struck out six batters and gave up three walks.

"She's doing really well, she's working hard and we're going to need both of us out there strong," Balschmiter said about Sanders.

In the fourth inning junior Samantha Salato hit a towering two-run homer over the left field scoreboard. The next batter, Reeves, made it back-to-back with a shot went out of the Softball Complex and near the parking lot. Normandin added two more runs to the total with an RBI double to push the game out of reach at 13-2.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com

Take out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Student Veteran and Military Service SOCIAL
&
INFORMATION FAIR
April 23 @ 7 p.m. room 168C in the Campus Center
Sponsored by
The Military Community Resource Center
&
The Center for Student Development
Enjoy free refreshments, meeting new people and participating in a free raffle. There will be featured guests with resources to share. There will also be an opportunity for women veterans/service members to caucus.
Faculty and staff welcomed.
Veterans Career Advice
Educational Benefits
Quabbin Veterants Mediation Project
Spiritual Representatives
Writing workshop information
UMass Ombuds Office, and more...

UMass enjoys success in N.J.

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, the Massachusetts men and women's track and field teams competed at Princeton University in the Larry Ellis Invitational. UMass was led by a record-breaking performance from Lisa Wilson on the women's side and Andrew McCann on the men's side.

Wilson, a sophomore, recorded the second-best throw in UMass history in three separate events. She opened the weekend by finishing third in the hammer throw with an impressive distance of 168 feet, 11 inches, a distance that qualified her for the New England and ECAC championships. She then went on to finish second in the discuss throw and third in the shot put. Before Saturday, Wilson had the third-longest distance throws in UMass history in the shot put and discuss events.

Senior Christina DeRosa also had a very strong weekend for the Minutewomen, finishing third in the 5K run with a time of 16:41.49. Her time was quick enough to qualify her provisionally for the NCAA Championships. She now also owns the second-fastest time in UMass history for the run and qualified for the New England and ECAC championships.

The other top scorers for the women were Kristen Bakanowski, Holly Heinricher, Ros Murphy and Alisha Tatham, who made up the 4X100 relay team. They ran it in 47.49 seconds, which qualified them for the ECAC Championships. In addition, Kristen Bakanowski, Brittany Bakanowski, Gina Perno and Tatham finished second in the 4x400 with a time of 3:52.51.

Andrew McCann had the top performance of the weekend for the Minutemen, as he finished third in the 5K run with a time of 14:21.40. With the strong outing he qualified for the New England Championships and the IC4A Championships.

During the Ellis Invitational, there were eight other UMass athletes and one relay team that qualified for postseason tournaments. The individual performers are led by senior Ryan Durkin and followed by Josh Boone, Sean Duncan, Shiyi Zan, Brittany Bakanowski, Jonathan Pierce, Nicolai Naranjo and Nils Fischer. The 4x100 relay team that finished eighth and qualified for the New England Championships includes Nathan Barksdale, Ian Hackney, Brian Miller and Samuel Laorenza.

Next weekend both teams will travel to New Hampshire to face off in the UNH Pre-Conference Meet. All of the teams competing will be looking to use this event as a final tune-up for the Atlantic 10 Championships in two weeks at UMass from May 3-4.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

Brittany Bakanowski is one of many UMass runners that qualified for one of the postseason tournaments. The Atlantic 10 and ECAC Championships still lie ahead.

Seniors display consistency

Four senior captains lead team towards A-10 Tournament

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

On one of the hottest weekends of the season, the seniors of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team were the model of consistency. A number of seniors had multiple-goal games for the Minutewomen.

Sunday's match-up against Duquesne was a shootout that saw the Dukes get the win on a late goal by Kathleen McNish. UMass (6-10, 4-3 A-10) went goal-for-goal with DU throughout the entire game. The 5-2 save edge that Duquesne held over the Minutewomen in the second half played into the loss.

The Maroon and White grew tired in the second half, picking up only one ground ball out of a possible six.

However the underlying story was the effort of seniors Jeannette Villapiano and Melynda Zwick.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos acknowledged that it was a tough loss but praised the effort of her seniors.

"[The seniors] have played the last four years with their pride on their sleeve," Venechanos said. "They came out hard and the girls really wanted to put one away for the seniors but we're very fortunate that we have two more home games and I'm very confident that we're going to come to play next Friday."

Villapiano has been a valuable asset to the team throughout her four years of play, switching between midfield and defense as needed. Yet she's never credited for her scoring ability. In her final regular season home game, Villapiano scored three goals and one assist on offense. On the other side of the ball, she caused a turnover and scooped up two ground balls.

Zwick also contributed greatly for the Minutewomen this past weekend. She scored a goal and had two assists, one to Villapiano, who fed Zwick for a goal in the game as well. Zwick's better game came on Friday against St. Bonaventure. In that game, Zwick tied fellow senior attack Kathleen Typadis for the game-lead in goals, with three.

Senior goalkeeper Krissy Anderson is also a big part of why this UMass team has done so well towards the end of this season. Against SBU, Anderson allowed only seven goals and saved four shots. Anderson also picked up two ground balls.

Her persistent effort during practice gave Anderson the nod over freshman Colleen Speth in the past few games and this change has resulted in four UMass wins since the switch. Anderson credits her teammates for the team's wins while she is in between the pipes.

"The defense is working a lot better, Anderson said. "Everything is coming together at the right time and we're clicking."

Senior defender Julie Papaleo has long been the defensive leader of the team. She is tied with former Minutewoman Kelli Kurtz for fifth all-time in UMass history in caused turnovers, knocking the ball loose 64 teams in her career. Her 95 ground balls ranks 18th all-time in the UMass record books.

Papaleo was a key player for the defense this weekend against the Bonnies, grabbing four ground balls and causing two turnovers.

In each game this weekend, Typadis showed her various skills on the field. She scored three goals and controlled two draws against SBU. With one free-position goal in that game, Typadis increased her career free-position goals record, with 40. With five draw-controls on the weekend she increased that career record to 111.

Each senior will be needed next week in the A-10 Conference Championships, held at McGuirk Stadium from April 25-27.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

UMass defeats SBU at home

W. LACROSSE from page 10

and Duquesne scored a game-tying goal with 2:04 remaining.

After a timeout for the Minutewomen the Dukes won the draw and controlled the ball until there were 13 seconds left on the clock. They then scored the game-winning goal to finish third in the A-10.

"I think in the first half that we both tried to feel each other out and we were trying to do some things defensively and they were trying to do some things as well," Venechanos said. "I think both teams responded well and going into this game I knew it was going to be close. I'm very proud of how we played and I'm looking forward to having another game on Friday."

Once the game was over, UMass honored its seniors, Anderson, Julie Papaleo, Kathleen Typadis, Villapiano and Melynda Zwick.

On Friday afternoon UMass clinched its position in the Atlantic-10 Championship with a 12-7 win over St. Bonaventure (4-10, 2-5 A-10). It was the Minutewomen's third consecutive win.

"I was really impressed with our defense keeping this team at bay. They have two strong scoring threats and between both of them they only had on goal and one assist," Venechanos said. "I was really impressed especially with Jackie Rosenzweig and Papaleo."

Zwick led the Minutewomen with a game-high five points, three goals and two assists. Typadis also contributed largely to the win with four goals.

The game was very physical with 26 fouls called against UMass and 37 fouls called against the Bonnies. The Minutewomen had 11 free position opportunities, scoring on five of them which largely contributed to the win.

The Maroon and White entered the second half with a 5-3 lead and kept the lead going scoring the first five goals. Zwick ignited the streak after she scored two of her three goals in the first six minutes of the half. With 21:43 remaining the Minutewomen were up, 10-3.

The Minutewomen's goals didn't come completely unanswered; St. Bonaventure scored three goals in the final 12:08 of the game for a final score of 12-7.

Melissa Tiartinen can be reached at mtartine@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGE OF HUMANITIES AND FINE ARTS PRESENTS:

CHFA Career Connections:

A Networking Reception

THURSDAY, APRIL 24

3 P.M. - 6 P.M.

Fine Arts Center, Lobby

Alumni/ae from CHFA departments will be available to discuss their current professions and how their education in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts relates to their careers.

Professions represented include:

- Physician
- High School Teacher
- Programmer
- Analyst
- Executive Director
- Theater Production
- Legal Clerk
- Investigator
- Fundraising
- Archivist
- Social Services
- Youth Worker
- Peace Corps Volunteer Leader
- Publishing
- Higher Education
- And more!

Refreshments provided and a raffle for an iPod Touch!

Only CHFA majors eligible to win*

Co-sponsored by: The UMass Alumni Association and Career Services

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

Golden Booty Tanning Resort

(formerly known as Southern Sun-stations)

Same great price, same customer service.

413.549.8826 6 University Drive Amherst, MA 01002

- Just like Sunbathing at the Beach
- High Pressure Mattress Beds
- 9 minutes on your back then... turn over for the remaining 9 minutes
- Appointments only on the hour
- Best Student Membership: can be frozen for the summer and return in the fall to resume tanning membership

Come in and see our other great beds!

CAPTION CONTEST!

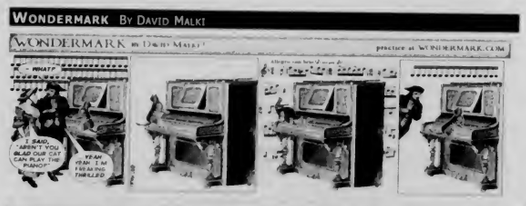
Submit captions and see the picture in color at:

www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Old mother rubbered.

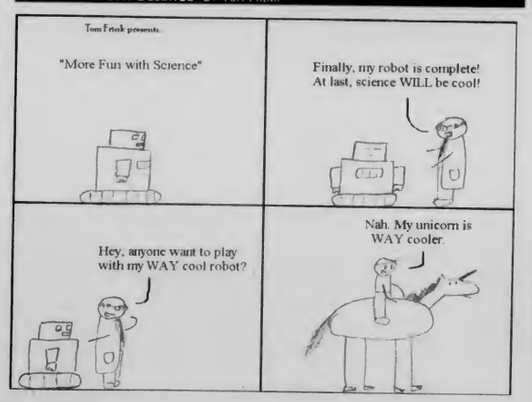
		7	4			9	5
				1
6		2	8			7	3
	2		3			9		4
9		4			2		7
	1	9			6	5		7
				7
3	7				5	2

QUOTE OF THE DAY



"Ghetto Fab's all over the place, oops there goes my kids all over your face."

— Fabolous



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

WONDERMARK By David Malki

MORE FUN WITH SCIENCE By Tom Frink

ACROSS
1 Self-satisfied
5 Makes a move
9 Teens' big nights
14 Small speck
15 Coagulate
16 Delight
17 Wipe out
19 Greek letter
20 Fond du ___, WI
21 Impede
22 Type of eel
23 Hiker's path
25 Aftershock
27 Insignificant
29 Exterior
33 Quibble
36 Unit of work
38 Poet Alan
39 Pie ___ mode
40 Basketball stat
42 John Lennon's love
43 Tranquil
45 Society page word
48 Crafts' partner
47 Cheer
49 Scottish Gaelic
51 Cash in
53 Neptune's realm
57 Leading
60 Poe's middle name
62 Back then
63 Triangular formation
64 Follows too closely
66 Balance sheet item
67 Somme summers
68 Hawaiian bird
69 Sufficient room
70 Nephew of Claudius
71 Tiny army?

DOWN
1 Small silvery fish
2 Grinding tooth
3 New York city
4 Precious one
5 Breakout of a sort
6 Loud sounds
7 Schlepper
8 Multi-speaker sound system
9 Raises in rank
10 Contrition
11 Concluded
12 Bucks beginning
13 Dispatch
Biblical style
18 Inactive
24 Diminutive devil
26 Gathering, as of troops
28 Start a new lawn
30 Borodin's prince
31 Concavity
32 Love god
33 Pocket change
34 Out of the weather
35 ___ avis
37 Tonic's partner
40 Precede
41 More comely
44 Inconsistent
46 NRC forerunner
48 Make tidy
50 Dance partner?
52 Gladden
54 Consumed
55 Go-between 56 Honkers
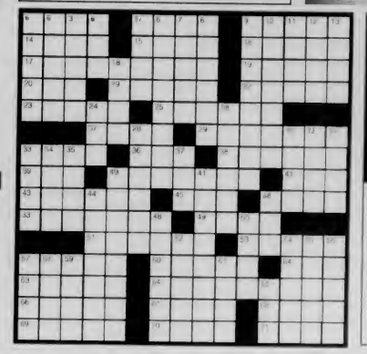
57 States further
58 Dickens' Uriah
59 Site of Napoleon's exile
61 In addition
65 Gasteyer of "Mean Girls"



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Like you have something better to do?

Pick up an application in The Collegian office located in the basement of the Campus Center, or email inquiries to comics@dailycollegian.com

Applications due back by the end of the week.

Submit your Junk!

comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your fun-file is formatted all wrong. Get a converter and turn that .sad into a .imsohappycouldcrapmyselfandnotevencare.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Hippies thrive in the warm atmosphere of spring. Beware of stray frisbees and BO.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You will find yourself in a stinky mire of swamp a$$. Prepare yourself with an extra pair of underthings.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Take a page from the Passover Haggadah and add some decorations to your front door.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The bigger the bet, the greater the regret.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Become an academic mercenary by turning your paper writing skills into profits.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
From a psychological standpoint, this might as well be your last day of classes.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Lower back tattoos of fairies fluttering in the moonlight are TOTALLY AWESOME!

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
An apple a day keeps the doctor away assuming the apple enters your body via your mouth and not any other hole.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Computer viruses are really stupid, but people who aren't careful where they get their porn are the stupidest of all.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your roommate is annoying and you really need money. Try selling him or her on Ebay.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Raise money to support your recent rise in legal fees by hosting a Bill Cosby-themed pudding wrestling match.

PLACE HEAD HERE FOR A COMFY PILLOW DURING CLASS...

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1, 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom, 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+ 4 Bedrooms $1500+

APT FOR RENT

6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email. gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Marketing Coordinator Paid Internship: College Pro Painters

Now interviewing for Spring/Summer. Ideal candidates will be: Communications, Business or Marketing Majors. Highly organized. Goal oriented. Duties: Candidates will organize and implement a multi-pronged marketing program, organize at least one PR event, and focus on generating new customer leads and establishing a strong brand presence in a region. Positions available throughout New England. Contact: Email resume to: Jhughes@collegepro.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

OUR NEWEST REP EARNED $7,000 THIS MONTH. OUTSIDE B2B SALES, LOOKING FOR HUNGRY GO GETTERS. WWW.CAPITALBANKCARD.COM 888-231-1448

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details.

EMPLOYMENT

Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 22, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass can't handle Hoyas

Potent offense leads GU to home victory

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Fred Federico and the Minutemen struggled to keep Georgetown off the scoring board despite 20 saves from goalkeeper Doc Schneider.

Though the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team successfully neutralized Hobart's high-scoring offense in its previous game, little could have prepared the Minutemen for the onslaught of shots they faced Saturday.

Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made a career-high 20 saves for UMass, but Georgetown overwhelmed the Minuteman defense en route to a 12-8 loss in Washington, D.C. The Hoyas dominated the time of possession as the ECAC's best offense managed 61 total shots and controlled 15-of-23 face-offs.

With a short turnaround between games, UMass (5-6, 3-2 ECAC) faces conference-rival Fairfield this afternoon at Garber Field. Though the Maroon and White are out of contention for the ECAC regular season championship, the team can position itself for a potential second-place finish by winning its final two conference games.

Saturday's loss to Georgetown (8-3, 4-1 ECAC) extends the Minutemen's losing streak against the Hoyas to three games. UMass has not won at Georgetown since the 2002 season.

The Minutemen continued its well-balanced offensive attack against the Hoyas, as five different players registered goals. Attackmen Tim Balise and Zach Rodgers each registered a pair of goals.

Georgetown	12
UMass	8

However, UMass ultimately failed to create scoring chances. From its 28 total shots, 13 were on net as Georgetown made only five saves. That performance comes in sharp contrast to the 39 shots the Minutemen took in its win over Hobart on April 12.

Despite the Maroon and White's recent offensive success, the key for the Minutemen was shutting down Georgetown's attack and preventing its midfield from taking a substantial scoring role. Entering the game, UMass coach Greg Cannella knew that a low-scoring contest would be in his team's favor.

But the versatility of the Hoyas and their significant depth proved too much for the UMass defense. Two of the conference's leading goal scorers, Andrew Haird and Brendan Cannon, scored seven total goals, while five other players added five for Georgetown.

Against a team that is dangerous offensively in transition, UMass struggled to maintain possession in part from winning only eight face-off attempts. Junior midfielder Joe Reale fared poorly in the face-off circle, losing 4-of-15 attempts. Sophomore midfielder Bobby Hayes enjoyed the most success for UMass, winning four of his six chances.

Even when the team lacked possession, UMass struggled to create turnovers. Georgetown cleared the ball 15-of-17 times, which lead to several Hoya transition goals.

UMass took a 2-1 lead in the second quarter before allowing the Hoyas to score the game's next five goals. The Minutemen then cut deficit to one behind a goal from sophomore midfielder Christian Hain early in the fourth to cap a four-goal run.

Georgetown scored four of the game's final five goals to permanently put the match out of reach for UMass.

The Minutemen have a chance to get back on track today and improve its conference standing. Though UMass has never lost to Fairfield (3-8, 1-4 ECAC), the Stags sport an offense that is

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

49er bats lead team to pair of road wins

Stone and Co. salvage a win with victory on Sunday

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In two embarrassing losses to Charlotte this weekend the Massachusetts baseball team allowed 51 hits, 17 walks and committed nine errors in an 18-3 defeat on Friday and 24-6 thumping on Saturday.

Charlotte should have saved some of those runs for Sunday.

The 49ers scored eight runs on 14 hits in the series finale but it wasn't enough, as UMass helped salvage the series with a 12-8 victory at Earl Lorden Field powered by two home runs by Andy Tuetken and solid pitching by Mike Dicato.

UMass	12
Charlotte	8
Charlotte	24
UMass	6
Charlotte	18
UMass	3

Considering the damage that Rob Lyerly and Chris Taylor (they combined for 18 hits, seven home runs and 16 RBI) and the rest of the 49ers did over the weekend, the Minutemen were pleased with the way they bounced back to capture a game in the series.

"We had to erase those games from our memory, because we still had a chance to come away with a win and that's very important in a three-game series," senior captain Bryan Garrity said. "When you come away 1-2 [in the series] not everything's lost."

"I told them we needed to show a lot of character and we did that," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We bounced back and we won and hopefully we can start getting back on the winning track again."

Dicato, who pitched the Minutemen (12-17, 5-10 Atlantic 10) to a Beanpot Championship with a stellar performance last week, picked up where he left off and shut down the 49ers for the first five innings, giving UMass a 9-0 lead.

But Charlotte (29-9, 11-4 A-10) got to him in the sixth, as Lyerly and Taylor hit back-to-back home runs en route to a four-run inning. Mitchell Eilenberg relieved him in the sixth inning and went the rest of the way as Tuetken, Ryan Franczek (home run and three RBI) and the Minutemen had too much offense for the 49ers.

It was Charlotte that supplied virtually all the offense in the first two games of the series. The 49ers scored 24 runs on 29 hits, 10 walks and six UMass errors in a 24-6 victory on Saturday. But all Charlotte really needed was Lyerly, who had one of the best games you'll ever see: 6-for-6, three home runs, six RBI, two doubles, a triple and a walk.

UMass starter Bryan Leigh allowed seven runs (four earned) in 3 1/3 innings, but it was reliever Charlie Benson (nine runs in 1 2/3 innings) who took the majority of the damage.

Charlotte led 9-0 after the top of the fourth inning. UMass answered with five runs in the bottom of the inning (all unearned), but the 49ers scored six runs in both the sixth and ninth innings to completely pull away. Nine different players for Charlotte had at least two hits, including five with three or more.

"That is a very good offensive team; they capitalized on all the mistakes our pitchers made this weekend," Garrity said after Sunday's game. "It was tough to stop them; once they got going it was like a

See BASEBALL on page 7

Atlantic 10 Tournament lies aheads

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a 1-1 weekend the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team secured a position in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. The Minutewomen secured their position on Friday with a win against St. Bonaventure and are the fourth seed after a loss against Duquesne on Sunday.

The Minutewomen will take on top-ranked Richmond on Friday at home.

"We knew going into this weekend that it was going to be a tough weekend. I'm really proud [of] how the team played on Friday. We took care of business and in this game [Sunday] we really just wanted to play together," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

Sunday's game against Duquesne (6-8, 5-2 Atlantic 10) was the deciding factor on which team would be ranked third going into the A-10 Tournament. Duquesne edged out the Minutewomen with a goal in the final 13 seconds for an 11-10 win.

"This game came down to a couple possessions and we had a couple opportunities to win the game and we didn't do it, but I think that going forward, we're going to learn a lot from this game," Venechanos said. "We haven't been really in a one-goal game, back and forth. It's usually been two or three goals [that we've been in the situation where we're] coming back or ahead. I definitely think that we're going to learn a lot from this game."

Melynda Zwick and the Minutewomen head into the A-10 Tournament as the fourth and final seed.

Duquesne	11
UMass	10
UMass	12
SBU	7

In the game senior Jeannette Villapiano and sophomore Kaytlin McCormick led the Minutewomen with three goals apiece. Villapiano also had an assist in the game for a career-high four points. She also added a draw control to total 77 for her career, which ranks sixth all-time at UMass.

Senior Krissy Anderson was in the cage, and after winning the last three games straight, she made seven saves against the Dukes.

The Minutewomen out-shot Duquesne, 27-22, and had more draw controls, 13-11.

The game began with back-and-forth goals to make it 4-4 going into the second half. UMass started the second half's scoring spree with a goal from Jackie Lyons. Both teams again traded goals for most of the second half. With 9 minutes, 45 seconds left on the clock Duquesne was leading, 8-7.

As play continued Villapiano and freshman Kelsey Schriener scored back-to-back goals, giving the Minutewomen the lead once again, but not long after the Dukes tied the score at nine with 6:16 left to play.

McCormick scored to make it 10-9 with 5:54 to play and the Minutewomen held onto the ball running three minutes off the clock. UMass turned the ball over

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Garrett Glashoff and UMass were trounced by Charlotte twice before rebounding for a victory on Sunday.

URI wins rowing distinction

BY JEFF R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After winning 12 straight Atlantic 10 Conference titles, the Massachusetts rowing team's streak ended this weekend, as they placed second in the conference championships.

Rhode Island overcame the Minutewomen this year in the A-10 Championship, after losing last year by one point. The Rams beat the Minutewomen this year by 16 points, 135-119.

The two crews both won three events, but UMass only placed in seven events opposed to URI placing in eight. Two of the Rams' eight wins were varsity events, the Varsity 8 and the Varsity 4, while UMass only took one varsity event, the Second Varsity 8. The Minutewomen also won the Novice Four event and the Quad, while the Rams also took the Lightweight Four.

Saint Joseph's (113) took third overall, six points behind UMass, followed by Dayton (81) in fourth, Duquesne (78) in fifth, George Washington (72) in sixth, Temple (61) was seventh, Fordham (47) finished eighth and La Salle (18) was ninth.

UMass took third in the first event of the day, the Varsity 8, with a time of 7 minutes, 12.3 seconds. The time was four-tenths of a second off of second place St. Joe's and just over three seconds more then first place URI.

In the Second Varsity 8 the Minutewomen outraced the Rams by 3.6 seconds, finishing with a time of 7:11.7. St. Joe's finished third with a time of 7:20.2. URI and UMass also finished first and second in the Varsity Four final, with URI taking first with a time of 8:24.2. UMass followed with a time of 8:45.3.

The Minutewomen took the Novice Four in 8:25.9 and got their third gold medal on the day when they finished the Quad in 7:47.7. 25.7 seconds faster than second-place Duquesne. UMass also finished second in the Novice 8 with a time of 7:24.4, behind St. Joe's.

The three gold medal performance was an improvement from last year, where the Minutewomen only brought home one gold medal, in the Quad event. Even with the improvement in gold medals, UMass lost overall.

With the loss, the record for most consecutive A-10 Championships for any team in any sport ended. The streak began when the conference first sponsored women's rowing in 1996. Until this past weekend, UMass had won every championship.

Despite the end of the streak, the Minutewomen still felt pleased with their performance on Saturday.

"Overall, we are satisfied," said senior captain Sara Marsan. "Many of the boats performed well and stepped up."

Although the loss may seem to be one that would devastate a team, according to Marsan, it has done just the opposite.

"It's good pressure. It has made us hungrier," said Marsan. "We'll see URI again."

The two rival schools will meet again in two weeks at the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships. UMass will race Saturday in Boston before they meet up with its conference rival again.

Saturday's regatta will face the Minutewomen against the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and UMass coach Jim Dietz's alma mater, Northeastern.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Minutewomen come in fourth

After beating SLU, drop pair to Musketeers and Richmond

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's tennis team has had a successful season by nearly every measurement. It showed heart, overcame a brutal early schedule and a 3-7 start to finish with a .500 record, won every regular-season conference match and captured the top seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

However, the Minutewomen's title aspirations came to an end Saturday with a 5-2 loss to fifth-seeded Xavier in the tournament semifinals. They finished fourth in the conference, losing the third place match to Richmond, 4-0, on Sunday.

Against Richmond (11-12 4-2 A-10), UMass decided to halt play as soon as one team earned four points. The Spiders took the doubles point and then earned three singles points from their bottom three players to win the meet. Tanisha Hodgson lost 6-4, 6-3. Maude Lecluyse was defeated 6-3, 7-5 and Laura Danai fell 6-4, 6-3.

The Minutewomen (12-12, 5-2 A-10) got off to a strong start in their match against the Musketeers, winning the doubles point. The team of Kaitlin Carpenter and Hodgson and the team of Danai and Lecluyse each won by a score of 8-4.

In 20 of 22 matches the Minutewomen had played, the team that won the doubles point had gone on to win the meet. After a victory in the doubles portion, the Minutewomen were confident going into the singles matches.

The Maroon and White did not have the singles success they hoped for. Senior captain Masha Pozar lost her match to Kara Courtney 7-6(4), 4-6, 6-2. She had beaten Courtney the last two times they had met, but according to UMass coach Judy Dixon that only added to the challenge.

"When you play someone for the third time after beating them twice, all the pressure falls on the person who won before," Dixon said. "Courtney has spent the last two years focusing on trying to beat Masha and it really showed in their match; she played extremely well."

Pozar retires with 66 career singles wins, one shy of the all-time record held by Michele Spiess.

Candynce Boney rebounded from a disappointing performance against Saint Louis in the quarterfinals (she lost that match 6-1, 6-2), by beating the Musketeers' No. 2 player, Tifanie Treece, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1. It was Boney's highlight in what was an underwhelming weekend for her.

"Candynce did okay, but she didn't have the kind of tournament I expected her to have. I

See TENNIS on page 7

INSIDE: HANSON TO PLAY IN NOHO FRIDAY | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 84 LO: 64 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2008

Chancellor hopeful shares vision of UM

BY KATIE HUSTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Robert C. Holub applied to be chancellor of the University of Massachusetts because he saw it as "a campus that wants to move forward."

It was the advertisement for the position, he said, that attracted him to the job.

"In the first paragraph, it said that the University of Massachusetts Amherst wants to be one of the premier universities in the country," he told students at a meeting yesterday morning. "I want to be at a campus that wants to improve and wants to gain more prominence nationally as a public university."

Since 2006, Holub has been the provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs of the University of Tennessee in Knoxville. Prior to his position in Knoxville, he was the dean of the undergraduate division of the college of letters and sciences at the University of California-Berkeley. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin-Madison in German Literature.

Yesterday, Holub spent the day meeting with various stakeholders on campus, including students, faculty, staff, administrators, alumni and community leaders.

At an open meeting in the afternoon, he stressed his faith in and commitment to public higher education, highlighting his time in Berkeley and Madison at two of the nation's top public universities.

"We have to get out the message that an investment in public education is an investment in the state," he said.

Development would be an important part of his role on campus, he said, occupying "somewhere north of 30 percent" of his time.

"We have to be more effective in contacting the alumni for the help that is needed. We don't perform as well as other universities that are flagship universities in their state," Holub said.

He also emphasized his faith in using "best practices" to raise the caliber of the University, examining what works at other institutions.

"One of the challenges I've had in Tennessee is an entrenched way of doing things that doesn't look at national standards and best practices," he said.

Holub said he doesn't believe in top-down initiatives

See HOLUB on page 3

UMass gets its 'Minute' man

Kellogg to be named men's basketball coach

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After Travis Ford said he was locked up as the Massachusetts men's basketball coach for "many years to come," he unexpectedly left for more money at Oklahoma State, leaving the position open.

That job opening will officially be closed at 6 p.m. tonight, when University of Massachusetts athletic director John McCutcheon introduces Memphis assistant coach – and former UMass player – Derek Kellogg as the next head men's basketball coach.

The press conference is open to the public and will be held at the Curry Hicks Cage on campus.

The story first broke Tuesday afternoon, as ESPN's Andy Katz reported that Kellogg would be introduced on Wednesday. No official announcement was made confirming that by McCutcheon, but a source close to the athletic department told The Daily Collegian that the report was "not wrong."

Kellogg, 34, joined John Calipari's staff at Memphis for the 2000-01 season and has been there ever since. Before his time there, Kellogg was an assistant at George Mason for two seasons and at Youngstown State for one. He has never been a head coach.

Although he lacks the head coaching experience that Ford had, the Kellogg signing should excite a fan base that is upset with Ford's sudden departure and that is looking for a candidate with UMass ties that wants to stay for the long haul.

Kellogg played high school basketball at Springfield Central High School and starred for the Minutemen in his four seasons playing under Calipari from 1991-95. He was a two-time captain point guard, and UMass made the NCAA Tournament in all four of his seasons – three of which came with him as the starter.

Kellogg is noted for his strong recruiting skills, and helped bring star Derrick Rose and prep phenom Tyreke Evans to Memphis. Rose, a freshman point guard, is expected to be a top-2 selection in the upcoming NBA Draft.

Other candidates thought to be a possibility for the position were Davidson's Bob McKillop, Ohio's Jim O'Shea, University of Connecticut assistant coach Pat Sellers and Jim Maloney, who was the associate head coach for the last three years under Ford. Maloney was a finalist at Jacksonville State, but recently missed out on the job. He could potentially follow Ford to OSU or stay on board under Kellogg.

Ford left for OSU late last week, signing a seven-year, $9.1 million contract. The restructured contract he worked out with UMass after turning down the Providence job was never signed, just verbally agreed to.

Kellogg will be the 21st head coach in the history of the UMass men's basketball program.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Cape Verdean event hosted

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Cape Verdean Student Alliance celebrated their 25th annual Cape Verdean Awareness night, "Telling our Story," allowing the organizers to share the history, development and culture of Cape Verde.

The event took place Saturday in the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts. Attendees arrived early for dinner, which was immediately followed by performances.

As students waited for the program, their attention was directed to the art exhibit on display by UMass student Ildo Correia. The exhibit was titled "Cabo Verde Sta Bibu," which translates to "Cape Verde is alive."

Correia said it was the first exhibition where his 18 paintings were displayed. His work was inspired by the music that originates from Cape

See CVSA on page 3

UMass Medical Center opens new center for rheumatology

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Memorial Medical Center has opened a new rheumatology center at its Memorial Campus.

The new center will combine UMass Memorial's existing rheumatology services into one location, situated in Worcester, Mass., on the West Ground.

Rheumatology, which is a part of the Musculoskeletal Center, is the practice that deals with the diagnosis and treatment of arthritis and other diseases of the joints, muscles and bones.

The center covers the entire spectrum of these rheumatic diseases. Areas of expertise range from mixed connective tissue disease to rheumatoid arthritis.

Ellen Gravallese, doctor and chief of the rheumatology division, hopes that by having a new location with staff designated only to rheumatology, the center will "increase patient satisfaction, encompass high patient care, maintain collaboration between rheumatology and orthopedics and build a real presence in the UMass community."

With the new center, there are also expectations to increase clinical care and research, as well as basic science research mechanisms of rheumatic diseases.

UMass Memorial offers three Centers of Excellence: the Musculoskeletal Center, the Cancer Center and The Heart and Vascular Center.

Gravallese feels it is very important for there to be collaboration between all three centers, and with rheumatology recently entering UMass Memorial, that is possible.

Along with rheumatology, UMass Memorial specializes in other areas of expertise. These include cardiology, orthopedics, cancer, emergency medicine, surgery, women's health and children's medical services.

The UMass Memorial Medical Center contains three campuses: the University campus, Memorial campus and Hahnemann campus, all located in Worcester. The UMass Medical School and hospitals Clinton, Health Alliance, Marlborough and Wing Memorial have taken partnership with the center as well.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

Campus celebrates Earth Day

Students at the University of Massachusetts raised awareness on the Student Union Lawn yesterday for the Earth Week Green Festival, which will be held every day this week from 11 a.m. until 3 p.m. Promoters of the event hope to celebrate achievements and innovations toward a more sustainable campus and local community.

Local tanning salon participates in D-Feat Breast Cancer

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Golden Booty Tanning Resort in Amherst is participating in the D-Feat Breast Cancer campaign by asking patrons to donate between one and five dollars to support research, claiming that an increase in vitamin D can result in lower levels of breast cancer.

The salon, formerly known as Southern Sun-Stations Tanning, is participating in the campaign for the entire month of May, beginning May 1. All proceeds will go toward funding research projects involving vitamin D and breast cancer prevention.

"I think a lot of people would be willing to donate a few dollars to this campaign because it's such a great cause," said Nicole Bowker-Kelly, a Golden Booty customer. "The Golden Booty always seems to generate a lot of business, so they should be able to contribute a good amount of money toward the effort."

Extensive studies have shown that such a link exists. In 2002, an essay published in the Journal of Occupational and Environmental Medicine claimed that women were less likely to die from breast cancer if they were exposed to the sun on a regular basis. In 2006, Anticancer Research published a paper reporting that women with elevated levels of vitamin D are 50-70 percent less likely to develop breast cancer.

Vitamin D can be found in foods such as seafood, eggs and dairy products, but the best source of vitamin D is produced within the body with the help of sunlight. Therefore, the possible impact that vitamin D could have on the body through more exposure to direct sunlight is now a major area of development in science.

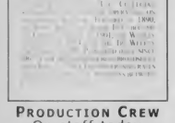
According to the campaign statement, research has shown that vitamin D can play a role in preventing or slowing the growth of multiple types of cancer. Since breast cancer is the number one cause of cancer death in women of North America, it seemed appropriate to formulate this campaign around breast cancer opposed to another form of cancer. Studies predict that in 2008, 45,000 women from the United States and Canada will die from breast cancer – approximately 45 times more than the number who will die due to non-melanoma skin cancer.

According to the D-Feat Breast Cancer campaign chairman, Joseph Levy, their goal is not to look into whether there is a direct link between lower breast cancer rates and vitamin D, but to support the research that has been made public so far.

"We want to increase awareness of the sold research that's already been done, and fund it to its conclusion," said Levy in a statement. "Because the main source of vitamin D is sunlight, and because sunshine is free, there haven't been many sources of funding for this kind of work. Because the potential impact is so profound, we are stepping up."

The campaign is the first ever vitamin D breast cancer fundraiser, and many tanning salons in Smart Tan Network, an educational trade association for indoor tanning facilities, are getting involved across North America. It is designed to increase awareness in customers and the community about the importance of vitamin D research.

Tanning salons find multiple advantages to promoting this campaign, including furthering research to possibly make the claim in the future that "Tanning will decrease your risk of breast cancer up to 70 percent," according to the campaign statement.



The co-owners of The Golden Booty, Kim Wimbish and her daughter Eden Clark, got involved in the campaign because they are a Smart Tan salon. Wimbish has also had a number of family members who have been affected by breast cancer, and feels the campaign reached her on a personal level.

"The public deserves fully funded vitamin D research, and we are doing our part," said Clark and Wimbish in a statement.

Kristen Healy can be reached at khealy@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 125
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.T. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymiak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntire
ASST ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matheos
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Scaburs
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ASST. WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbascano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Lol Wolcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Across the Nation Around the World

Bill aims to increase limits on student loans

BY COLIN O'CONNOR
DAILY BRUIN (UCLA)

(U-WIRE) LOS ANGELES — A bill aimed at safeguarding federal student loan access was passed by the House of Representatives on April 17, with backers hailing it as a necessary step toward protecting the education economy amid the current credit crisis.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, sponsored the Ensuring Continued Access to Student Loans Act, HR 5715, which passed the House of Representatives in a resounding 383-27 vote.

"The purpose of the legislation is to ensure that students and parents can continue to have access to the federal student aid they rely on, regardless of what's happening in the nation's financial markets," said Rachel Racusen, deputy communications director for the committee.

First, the bill would increase student loan limits by increasing the annual cap by $2,000, which would result in a new aggregate limit of $31,000 for dependent undergraduates and $57,500 for independent undergraduates.

Brittny McCarthy, director of federal relations for the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, said her organization believes the loan limit changes are unnecessary but the bill's other provisions have merit.

"We do not support increases to the aggregate federal loan limit. There are other good precautionary measures in the bill that we do support, though," she said.

Director of the UCLA Financial Aid Office Ronald Johnson said increasing the loan limits "would mean students would not be compelled to borrow from private loan sources."

Johnson added that the increased limits would help non-resident students at the University of California, who have to pay a higher cost and may therefore need more flexibility in getting loans to fund their education.

The bill would also grant the U.S. Department of Education the ability to back up the federal loan market in the event that lenders cannot meet demand.

The federal loan market consists of two programs of distribution. The Direct Loan Program registers a school with the federal government to allow students to receive loans directly from the Department of Education. The Federal Family Education Loan Program sets up a system in which banks pay students taking loans but get backed up by the federal government in the case of a loan default.

Many University of California at Los Angeles students get loans from Federal Family Education Loan Program-approved banks and companies, said Nicholas Novello, a supervisor at UCLA Student Loan Services.

"The Direct Loan Program is currently only 20 percent of total student loan volume. The DOE is saying they can handle one-third of the (Federal Family Education Loan) volume," which would accommodate an additional 3 million borrowers, McCarthy said.

McCarthy added that her organization would like to see such a provision activated "only if the economy is slow to return to a state of normalcy."

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., proposed companion legislation in the Senate. His bill, the Strengthening Student Aid for All Act, contains many comparable provisions for keeping federal loans stable in an unstable market.

Penn. students: some don't vote, but follow campaign

BY ALYSSA SCHWENK
DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN (U. PENN)

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA — Although nearly two-thirds of Penn students are registered to vote in Pennsylvania, members of the third who won't go to the polls Tuesday say they don't mind the political frenzy that has overtaken the state over the last seven weeks.

"It's actually really exhilarating," said college freshman Jenna Stahl, who voted in Ohio's Democratic primary. "It's cool to see that Penn's in the spotlight."

Nursing senior Lauren Schleicher agreed, saying, "I think it's awesome that [candidates] are having those events and the candidates are making the effort [to court the youth vote]."

Although Schleicher, a Massachusetts resident, was unable to vote on Super Tuesday because she didn't get an absentee ballot in time, the attention on both Penn and Pennsylvania has "made me more aware of the elections." She added that she appreciates how much the candidates are campaigning.

Of Penn students polled in a Daily Pennsylvanian/CBS News poll last week, 64.3 percent of Penn students are registered in Pennsylvania, while another 26.3 are registered in their home states. Less than 10 percent of Penn students aren't registered to vote.

Of the students registered out of state, about 40 percent said they have already voted in a primary or participated in a caucus, and most of those students used absentee ballots to vote at home.

Even though she is registered to vote at home in Massachusetts, engineering sophomore Monica Thomas said watching the Pennsylvania primary unfold has engaged her a little bit more.

"I think it's great. I'm sort of surprised that there have been so many candidates that have such a great presence on campus," she said.

Wharton sophomore Casey Klyszeiko, who voted in Vermont, echoed Thomas' observations.

"It's really crazy. Everyone's here, and it seems like everyone's debating all the time," he said. He added that he was surprised by the level of student involvement in the election.

Stahl said her awareness of politics has been heightened in recent weeks.

Schleicher said the candidates' attention on Penn made an impression even on students not voting. She cited Clinton's get-out-the-vote efforts and appearances around campus, noting that personal appearances can clarify voters' opinions and mobilize more people to vote.

The attention focused on the primary has kept out-of-state voters aware of the issues and the general election.

Thomas is registered as an independent in Massachusetts. "[The upcoming election has] definitely reminded me I need to get back on track [with the issues]," she said.

We are ALWAYS looking for new(s) writers:
news@dailycollegian.com

COLLEGE OF HUMANITIES AND FINE ARTS PRESENTS:

CHFA Career Connections:

A Networking Reception

THURSDAY, APRIL 24

3 P.M. - 6 P.M.

Fine Arts Center, Lobby

Alumni/ae from CHFA departments will be available to discuss their current professions and how their education in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts relates to their careers.

Professions represented include:

- Physician
- High School Teacher
- Programmer
- Analyst
- Executive Director
- Theater Production
- Legal Clerk
- Investigator
- Fundraising
- Archivist
- Social Services
- Youth Worker
- Peace Corps Volunteer Leader
- Publishing
- Higher Education
- And more!

Refreshments provided and a raffle for an iPod Touch!

Only CHFA majors eligible to win*

Co-sponsored by: The UMass Alumni Association and Career Services

Free Food - Free Music
Free Shop - Free Education

FEATURING:
-The Yoga Zone
-Wild Crafting
Chris Morano

April 22nd-26th
Library Front Lawn

FEATURING:
-Plant Sale
-Food not Bombs

Free Yourself
EARTHWEEK
Free the Earth
2008

Wednesday:
11:00 - Cold Frame construction
12:00 - Live Music
1:00 - Chicken Tractor construction
2:30 - Tanning Workshop

Thursday:
11:00 Homebrewing: easier then you think!
12:00 - Canning Workshop
1:30 - Campus Plant Identification Workshop Featuring Chris Morano
6:00 - Showing of Black Gold: Coffee in Ethiopia. Campus Center room 811
7:00 - Art is Nothing without Nature (Student Union Art Gallery)

Friday:
12:00 - Live Music
1:00 - Herbal foraging
3:00 -Do-It-Yourself Herbal Extracts
4:15 Roundtable Discussion: Local solutions, Intentional living Emily Dickinson Homestead

Saturday
2:00 - Roundtable Discussion: Activism & Art, Science and the Soul Memorial Hall Umass
5:00 - Reading: Derrick Jensen, author of A Language Older then Words Memorial Hall Umass

Brought To You By the EcoCoalition

Holub looks to improve UM with focus on student quality

HOLUB from page 1

when it comes to distributing resources.

"I don't come in and say, 'I think we need more nanotechnology,'" he said. "Very seldom does a campus work well if the central leadership dictates what is going to happen."

Instead, he would rely on faculty initiative, creativity and enthusiasm.

"I think my job, quite frankly, is to enable faculty," he said.

To raise the profile of the university, Holub also said it is important for UMass to attract top-notch students, and to ensure high retention rates through support programs.

"We want students that are going to be high-achieving, ambitious students," he said, adding that outstanding students come from "all segments of the population."

"I don't see overall excellence as being in conflict with issues of diversity and issues of access. There are too many examples I know of where the two go hand-in-hand," he said.

To attract the best students, UMass needs active recruiting programs, especially targeting rural and inner-city areas, he said.

"Campuses have to make themselves attractive to a diverse population, and sometimes that isn't easy," he said. "You can't just hang out your shingle and say, 'Come on in.' You have to go where you're going to find that diverse population."

Holub also responded to student concerns about affordability. He is not against raising fees, he said, but believes it's important to make sure money gets back to students in the form of financial aid.

"You have to look at what your financial aid structure is, because you don't want to exclude students who have promise, and certainly you don't want to exclude students who have been disadvantaged and can't perform," he said.

Holub said that he would need to learn more about UMass's situation before presuming to know the answers to several questions posed.

"I want to try to meet a lot of the faculty and the staff and the students, because I don't know this campus," he said. In Tennessee, he invites every new faculty member to a small group luncheon, holds regular meetings with the student government, and eats into the dining halls once a month to hear about student experiences and feelings.

Shaun Jamieson, the associate director of the Center for Student Development, said he liked Holub, but he would have liked to hear more specific responses.

"I felt like he was very down-to-earth, very natural," he said. "I wish he had either been more able or willing to directly answer some of the questions … His talk of consensus building and bottom-up approaches is hopeful."

Malcolm Chu, next year's Student Government Association president, said Holub's long background in public higher education was attractive.

"He has a lot of experience in public education, and I liked what he said about encouraging the state to invest in public higher education," Chu said. "I think overall, it sounds like there's a wealth of information and a wealth of resources that would benefit campus."

However, Chu was unsure of how Holub's philosophies would play out in the campus context.

"There was a lot of 'I would have to evaluate this, I would have to evaluate that when I get here,'" he said. "I was slightly unclear on campus what direction he would be interested in taking the campus."

Holub is the last of four candidates to visit the UMass Amherst campus. The others are Martin Hall, deputy vice chancellor of the University of Cape Town in South Africa; Harris Pastides, vice president for research and health sciences at the University of South Carolina and executive director of the University of South Carolina Research Foundation; and Satish K. Tripathi, provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Following the finalist visits, UMass President Jack Wilson will make his recommendation to the Board of Trustees, which will make the final decision.

Campus and community members may submit feedback on the chancellor candidates to skelly@umassp.edu until Friday, April 25.

Katie Huston can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com

Study: frequent masturbation could prevent prostate cancer

Frequent masturbation may help men cut their risk of contracting prostate cancer, Australian researchers have found. It is believed that carcinogens may build up in the prostate if men do not ejaculate regularly, BBC News reported on Wednesday.

The researchers surveyed more than 1,000 men who had developed prostate cancer, and 1,250 men who had not. They found that men who had ejaculated the most between the ages of 20 and 50 were the least likely to get cancer. Men who ejaculated more than five times each week were a third less likely to develop prostate cancer.

Sexual intercourse may not have the same effect because of the higher risk of contracting a sexually transmitted disease, which could in turn raise the risk of cancer.

"Had we been able to remove ejaculations associated with sexual intercourse, there should have been an even stronger protective effect of ejaculations," Graham Giles of the Cancer Council Victoria, who led the researchers, said in the article.

The prostate produces a fluid that is incorporated into ejaculation, which activates sperm and prevents them from sticking together. Studies on animals have shown that carcinogens like 3-methylchloranthrene can be harbored in the prostate. Frequent ejaculation encourages the cancer-inducing fluids to "flush out."

—Associated Press

Dancers, speakers contribute to Cape Verdean Awareness Night

CVSA from page 1

Verde and the "homesickness" he feels for his native country.

"I try to focus on daily life of Cape Verde, what people do in Cape Verde," Correia said.

Headline speaker of the night Augusto Martins, a UMass alumnus, spoke to the attendees about the importance of having a registered student organization that shares and reflects the Cape Verdean experience on campus.

"Estrelas de Cabo Verde" was performed, giving a theatrical history of Cape Verde. On the stage, a sail boat was constructed by the organizer to be used as a prop during the performance.

Anthony Bingham, a sophomore, was the narrator of the night. He began by retelling the story of Cape Verde as a children's story book.

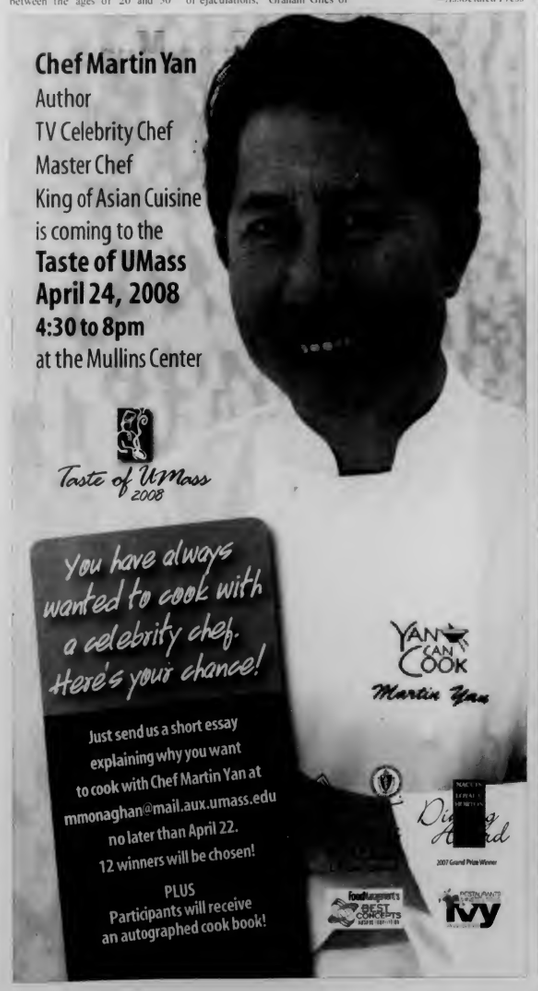
"My children, let me tell you the story of Cape Verde 'Nos Terra,'" he said. "It was a long time ago that the Portuguese landed in Cape Verde. Ever since, a lot has happened; slavery, famine, wars and immigration are the realities of what every generation of Cape Verdeans have faced," Bingham said.

The performers highlighted the Cape Verdean ethnicity, as they reenacted a scene of a slave master and African slave coming together on center stage. When the slave woman walks back on stage she is pregnant, symbolizing the birth of the Cape Verdean ethnicity.

"From our African brothers and sisters, who were brought from Africa, to the Portuguese who came from Portugal, Cape Verde became a fusion of both cultures," Bingham said.

The skits and dances showcased the first immigration of Cape Verdeans to the United States during the height of the whaling industry.

"The Cape Verdeans were great fishermen, and this was quickly realized by the American whaling industry," said Bingham. "These brave [Cape Verdean men] who ventured themselves in the whale ships of New Bedford and Nantucket."



The establishment of Cape Verde's independence from Portugal was performed by acting out a war between the Cape Verdeans and Portuguese. The narrator told the audience of the influence Amilcar Cabral had on the events that led to Cape Verdeans gaining their independence in 1975.

After the program, the attendees danced until 2 a.m. as "Nights Out DeeJays" played possada, funana, reggae, hip-hop and more.

"I thought CV Night was great," said Cassandra Da Silva, the external secretary of CVSA. "There have been bumps in the road, some coming from the University and their new rules or policies, and increases in cost of many different things, but we worked together and got some support from many sponsors like the ALANA Caucus, RLA and Coca-Cola. I just hope that RSOs, especially CVSA, stay motivated and organized so that when I get older and have a family I can bring them to these cultural events."

Grisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

Check out blogs, podcasts and multimedia features at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Web site www.dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. 'Free speech' is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A new script for the stump

Dan Nicastro

Many deserving television shows fail to make it to a full season. The Comedy Central series "Stella" lasted only 10 episodes. Cult favorite "Freaks and Geeks" lasted 18 episodes. "Firefly," one of the best television shows in the last 15 years, filmed only 14 episodes, with only a handful of those airing.

Last Wednesday's Democratic debate was the 21st of this primary season. As moderators Charlie Gibson and George Stephanopoulous grilled Senators Obama and Clinton about important matters like the use of the word "bitter," or the lack of sniper fire on a tarmac in Bosnia, it became clear to everyone watching: the presidential primary season has jumped the shark.

"Jumping the shark" is a term that originated with the television show "Happy Days." In a 1977 episode, the Fonz literally jumped over a caged shark while water skiing, signaling the beginning of the end for "Happy Days." In honor of the show's downturn, the term "jumping the shark" has entered the pop culture lexicon as the "defining moment when you know that your favorite television program has reached its peak."

So, after 21 debates during the primary season, the Democrats have officially jumped the shark. It seemed like such a fresh idea 15 months ago: a large cast of interracial, multi-gendered politicians vying for the presidency. The American people would laugh, cry and have by February (or March at the latest) a Democratic nominee for president. Unfortunately, someone refused to stick to the script.

In the beginning, some watched for the comedic stylings of Mike Gravel. Others took a liking to the pint-sized politician from Cleveland named Dennis Kucinich. In the end, however, America was captivated by the history-making battle between the wife former First Lady in current Senator Hillary Clinton and the youthful, exuberant newcomer from Illinois, Senator Barack Obama.

At first we were excited that the primary season actually mattered again. States like Pennsylvania and Ohio finally meant something other than cheese-steaks and Buckeyes. However, as with anything that lasts 15 months, the routine got old and Americans have now grown weary at the prospect of a summer filled with more "spirited bickering" between the two front runners.

It seemed like such a fresh idea 15 months ago: a large cast of interracial, multi-gendered politicians vying for the presidency.

Generally, when a television series "jumps the shark," writers panic and start trying to reclaim the show's past glory with harebrained schemes and ridiculous situations. It's time for the Democratic presidential candidates to do the same.

A big problem facing Democrats may be that the race is down to two people and we're just sick of repeating personal narratives. How much more can really be said about Barack Obama's life as a child? I think I could recite his upbringing from memory at this point.

That being said, it may be a good time to introduce a batch of fresh characters to jump-start the campaign. The Clinton camp has tried to do this by showcasing the Reverend Jeremiah Wright, but the public responded with mixed signals.

Instead, drastic measures need to be taken. In the tradition of many shows trying to stay afloat amid waning popularity, we could convince the candidates to adopt a baby together. Imagine the candidates trying to keep the child satisfied during debates by shaking a set of plastic keys while outlining their policy stance on the nation's health care system. Or how about the inevitable mid-campaign diaper change stop in a Denny's bathroom while trying to "relate" to working-class Americans? After three weeks, answering a phone at three in the morning will seem like a walk in the park compared to caring for an infant on the trail.

If they don't agree to taking care of a human child to boost their popularity, maybe the candidates can agree to something a little less severe. Everyone likes celebrities, so why not have a "very special guest star" appear during one of the debates? Imagine this: the candidates are in the middle of a debate when out walks none other than... "House's" Hugh Laurie. As he walks out in character with a slight limp, grimacing with every step, America's collective heart will melt at the pain this man has endured four the last four seasons. When he starts to "diagnose" the candidates' policy views on Iraq, the crowd will go absolutely nuts.

There are my humble suggestions. With the writer's strike now over, I'm sure the Democratic party can find some way to boost their sagging ratings. Of course, they could always resort to a tried and true method of revitalizing a story line, where one character gracefully bows out and moves to a different city. Sadly, that only happens on television.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu

A phenomenal responsibility

S.P. Sullivan

There is a trend toward commoditization in our society, and you don't have to be a STPEC major to be bothered by it. Water can be bought retail or wholesale, since the tap would be "slumming it." You can buy friends for your Facebook, "consultants" for your resume and a privatized education if you've got the bread to afford it.

For the economically uninitiated, there are uncomfortable alternatives. You can drink the water you pay for in that bill that shows up once a month, you can find your own friends and build your own credentials – and most importantly, you can always afford public higher education, right?

Not quite.

Last week, the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) brought busloads of students to the capitol in Boston with a simple, unifying message:

We're broke.

With thousands of postcards in tow, PHENOM members and UMass students expressed support for Governor Deval Patrick's proposed capital bond bill. The Daily Collegian reported on April 17. The measure calls for a hefty $2 billion to fund basic operating budgets and infrastructure improvements at 29 public schools, with $17 million allocated to the state's basic financial aid program, MASSGrant.

PHENOM is the culmination of a growing feeling among college students and educators that cost is becoming a barrier to entry at institutions of higher learning – or, at best, a financial handicap that rears its ugly head almost immediately after graduation.

Students accrue more and more debt as they graduate, leaving them indentured to credit card companies, lenders and even the occasional Mafia loan shark.

This March, The Collegian reported a general student fee increase across the board for the University of Massachusetts system for the 2008-09 year. The increase was lauded by Chairman of the Board of Trustees Robert J. Manning as being below the rate of inflation for the fifth consecutive year.

We'll have to see if the candidate chosen will put his money where his mouth is, or better yet, back in the pockets of cash-strapped students.

It's good to see the system administration making efforts to keep costs down, but a fee increase below the rate of inflation isn't exactly a victory. It's making the spread, not winning the game. We ought not to be looking to our troubled economy for cues when it comes to an affordable education.

One of the general themes of the ongoing chancellor search is the need for funding. Among the "final four," there is talk of increasing endowments, making tuition more affordable and providing increased financial aid programs – all well and good, of course. We'll have to see if the candidate chosen will put his money where his mouth is, or better yet, back in the pockets of cash-strapped students.

Issues of diversity, of student space and activities and virtually every other grievance addressed by last semester's strike all come down to money. While an endowment might improve campus infrastructure and activities, we won't have a diverse campus – that is, a truly diverse campus: racially, economically and ideologically diverse – until the state of Massachusetts can provide quality, affordable public education.

That being said, it is not a fundamental right to attend college – not a single amendment addresses it. But a bachelor's degree is today what a high school diploma was thirty years ago: integral to obtaining jobs that contribute to the economy and provide the United States with a competitive edge in a world market.

Thus, UMass students, and students at every public or state school in the country, are not just piggybacking on taxpayers for an education. We are their investment – the doctors who will care for them, the politicians that will govern them and the journalists who will keep them all honest.

Governments the world over, from the Third World to global power players, are realizing the value of an educated citizenry, and are investing in their schools. It's about time that our nation followed suit.

The specter of socialism always seems to loom heavy when people talk about publicly funded operations. Socialized medicine is a pretty hot-button issue this election season – but that's another column entirely.

Yet just because something is publicly funded doesn't automatically make it fare for pejorative socialist name-calling. We've been funding our elementary schools for generations, and high schools for almost as long. So in a highly industrialized, information-based society, public higher education makes sense, both morally and economically.

Of course, if our legislators and taxpayers don't want to bear the uncomfortable burden of increasing support of higher education for the economic benefit of all, there is always the option popular among corporations in the private sector:

Outsource.

I'm not talking study abroad, either. If we want an affordable education, and that becomes increasingly less feasible in this country, I don't think I'd mind having a diploma that reads "Made in India."

S.P Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at spsulliv@collegian.com

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"

AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19 AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

STAY TUNED TO UVC AND THE EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE

A long, boring summer of Olympic TV

Nicholas O'Malley

Every four years, residents of every country rally around their flags and boast their national pride as the summer Olympics approach, heralding the beginning of the world's great international competition. It's during this time that every country sends their best athletes to compete in a competition filled with more events than you can count in order to earn the most medals and, in turn, eternal glory.

On second thought, they get nothing.

The political aspect of the games is a little overrated. Sweden, a talented country by most accounts, earned the same number of medals as Ethiopia and one less than Kazakhstan (Borat would be proud).

Whether or not you follow the Olympics, and regardless of who wins each event, you still probably take a quick glance at the medal count to see whether or not the leader is the good ol' United States (which it has been for the past three summer games).

The truth is, nowadays, the Olympics are hyped up to be this major political event where each country is measured up against the others in events that most of us have never tried, unless you're an avid hammer toss enthusiast. This struggle for international athletic dominance, however, tends to disappoint in terms of entertainment and viewership.

After ratings for the Sydney games that were below expectations, NBC decided to bring the games to America with 24/7 coverage, which accumulated to 1,210 hours of coverage in 2004. But when it comes down to it, the American people can only watch the same swimming events so many times.

In its prime-time slot, the Olympics were no match for TV juggernauts like American Idol, which may not seem so bad after all. It starts to get bad, however, when the Winter Olympics begin losing the ratings battle to Lost, Survivor and CSI re-runs. The biggest defeat came when the 2006 closing ceremonies attracted only half of the audience of the finale of Dancing with the Stars.

When it comes down to it, the American people can only watch the same swimming events so many times.

The draw for the Olympics is interesting. There's too much intense competition going on for casual viewers, but the events aren't exactly the type of stuff that's attracting sports fans. The biggest reason for watching the Olympics is for the bald eagles. Uncle Sam and apple pie (we'll be damned if we let those Russians beat us in the floor exercise).

Since the American public doesn't actually enjoy the games, the networks employ two strategies. First and foremost is the sob story. While you may not exactly be enthralled by the women's 200-meter butterfly, there might be some incentive to pull for the girl from Nebraska who donated her kidney to her sister because she's "her inspiration."

Second best is the strategy of hyping up the games you think people actually want to see. Most guys may not be into watching some guy from Trinidad and Tobago run the 400 meters, but keep telling them that basketball's up soon, and they might just stick it out.

Regarding American sports in the Olympics, don't expect much anymore. Remember baseball, our national pastime and everything? It's getting the axe right after the Beijing games – it was all college kids anyway. Basketball, on the other hand, is thriving internationally, far too well for our own good. Basketball used to be a free gold for the U.S. – we invented the game. The days of the Dream Team dunking on poor Lithuanians, unfortunately, are long gone. The U.S. team came in third in 2004 behind Argentina and Italy. The International Olympic Committee, however, ensured that the United States would retain its dominance in the Winter Games by instating snowboarding and other crazy sports that we, once again, invented.

Luckily, for those who have already made up their minds about the games, the networks will probably stick to their typical advertisement plans. Unfortunately, this a means a massive helping of stars and stripes shoved right down your throat. So strap yourself in this summer and prepare yourself for nine hours of people swimming laps.

Unless, of course, you hate America.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

ED/OP.

NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR ALL POSITIONS OPENING FALL '08.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hanson mature from pop-stars to activists

Trio to perform at NoHo's Calvin Theatre Friday night

By Skye McIntyre and Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

Go ahead and write Hanson off as a one-hit wonder. 27-year-old Isaac Hanson, the eldest member of the trio that took the pop music world by storm over 11 years ago, frankly doesn't care.

"The past is just that, it's the past," he said matter-of-factly. "It's what gets you to where you are. It allowed us to have an incredible group of fans and it's what's allowing us to evolve and change with the times."

Fans and new faces alike will pack Northampton's Calvin Theatre Friday night for a near sold-out show featuring the towheads from Tulsa, with openers Kate Voegele and locally-based Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers.

"If you are only familiar with 'MmmBop' or 'Where's the Love?,' or something from our first record, or are only familiar with the concept of Hanson as in you really don't even know the music, all you remember is a couple of videos with a couple of guys with long hair. Come to a show," Isaac said. "If you walk up to me after a show and you say, 'I never came to a show and I really didn't like it,' fine."

His statements are fair enough. The band's name alone evokes a wide range of comments, the majority of which are negative. Though it may not always apply, the expression that "first impressions are everything" certainly rings true in the case of Hanson.

Hanson
Calvin Theatre
Friday, April 25
7 p.m.
$28.50

It's difficult for most to get past the image to which Isaac refers – one they established when their youngest member, drummer Zac, was only 12 years of age.

Now married with four children and one on the way between them, the brothers have come a long way from the days when the Spice Girls were invading the states suggestively asking Americans if they wanted to be their lovers, and the Backstreet Boys had not yet graduated from playing theme parks and high school auditoriums.

The difference between Isaac, Taylor and Zac Hanson and their contemporaries, however, is deeply-rooted passion, a force that drove them first to command respect from labels that consistently slammed the door in their faces, and later to fight for themselves against record executives who insisted they churn out bubblegum hits for the sole sake of selling records.

After several years of coming to terms with the changing music industry, one in which mega-corporations own nearly every radio station and dictate the small selection of songs that reach the airwaves, Hanson decided to take a risk when they began their own independent label, 3CG Records, in 2004.

The band's gamble proved to be worth the high stakes. That same year, their sixth studio album, "Underneath," reached number one on the United States Independent music chart.

Since then, their music and message have taken them all over the globe. Their current tour, "The Walk," in support of last year's release by the same name, is what brings them to the Calvin.

When asked to what he attributes the group's longevity, there is little hesitation.

"Kickass fans," Isaac said firmly. "Honestly, I think we are lucky. Not only do the three of us really love what we do and want to continue to do it for a very long time, but we also have a really unique situation which is the fan base that we reached right at the beginning of our career has been a very loyal group of people, a very passionate group of people, who has continued to come to show after show and has continued to buy records."

The group of people he speaks of will be equally audible Friday evening well before the Calvin's doors are opened, as Hanson's partnership with TOMS Shoes will take them on a barefoot mile walk around the area to promote awareness for children in need.

The band's work with TOMS, along with their continuing effort to create awareness for the HIV/AIDS epidemic in Africa, both go beyond supporting worthy causes by connecting them to their peers, an age group the band believes has power that extends beyond their own recognition.

"They can figure out things they can do themselves that ultimately are a heck of a lot more effective than giant organizations...you cannot underestimate the value of people," says Isaac.

Another group of people not to underestimate are Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers, a Northampton-based band whose members share more than just a love for music. They all call UMass their alma mater. In fact, they recently visited campus to sing the national anthem at a men's basketball game.

Their sound is unique in its sheer honesty and simplicity. The music, said frontman Kellogg, is intended to "break your heart and make you laugh."

As for how he thinks the band will be received at Friday's performance, he said, "If you have a pulse, you will have an amazing time." Regarding their homecoming, he said he's "so damn excited my toenails are going to fall off."

Why did Hanson choose the Sixers to accompany them on "The Walk?"

"We like Stephen a lot. We have been really impressed by him as a musician and a songwriter. He's got a great voice and a good sound and he's a fun guy," said Isaac.

And Kate Voegele?

"You got an artist who is just at the beginning of her career and is looking to build, and has a good opportunity to get on the road and potentially bring some of her fans to our shows and so on and so forth. I think it's a mutually positive thing," Isaac said.

Whether the show as a whole makes your toenails fall off or leaves you with all appendages still intact, it'll likely leave fans with a deeper respect and those unfamiliar with their music with a new appreciation. Doors open at 7 p.m., show starts at 8.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyr@student.umass.edu

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu

Above: Isaac Hanson, the eldest member of Hanson, is excited for the band's upcoming performance at the Calvin Theatre in Northampton Friday night. Below: Years removed from their initial pop success, Hanson have focused their efforts on supporting charitable organizations and independent music.

Reed brings the blues

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

Thurston Moore, the Sonic Youth frontman who opened for Lou Reed at The Calvin Theatre on April 20, met mixed reactions from the standing-room-only crowd. Not everyone in attendance appreciated the experimental, sometimes dissonant sound produced by Moore and his fellow musicians.

The uninitiated might've also mistaken the chanted "Lou's" for boos, but as soon as Reed took the stage Sunday, the crowd was his.

Without any introductory remarks, the former Velvet Underground frontman got the night started with "Mad," from "Ecstasy," his 2000 concept album about his experience with relationships. Reed's throaty, conversationalist singing voice hasn't been curbed by age. Reed, aged 66, was dressed casual-cool in jeans, sneakers and a sleeveless black T-shirt, curly dark hair just barely going gray.

And while his eclectic body of work has incorporated a lot of sound switching, the night's performance was very blues-based, guitar-driven rock.

He followed "Mad" with a rendition of the Velvet Underground classic "Sweet Jane" from the 1970 album "Loaded." During the intro, Reed left his post at the microphone to address the crowd, still chanting their "Lou's" before breaking into the opening lyric, "Standing on the corner / suitcase in my hand."

"Sweet Jane" was coupled with another Underground classic, "I'm Set Free," complimented with accordion by his keyboard player, musician Kevin Hearn of Barenaked Ladies fame.

Reed returned to his more recent work with an equally accordion-infused version of "Ecstasy" from the eponymous album, the guitars jangling and his drummer, Tony "Thunder" Smith switching between his drum set and a pair of bongos.

Mid song, Reed let his guitar hang as he recited, gesticulating more like a performance poet than a rock star, "I see a child through a window with a bib / And I think of us and what we almost did / The Hudson rocketing with light / The ships pass the Statue of Liberty at night."

Returning his hands to show off his chops, Reed let the notes of his guitar solo hang before allowing Smith, a world-renowned drummer and producer, to follow

See LOU REED on page 6

COURTESY SCAMP.COM

Former Velvet Underground frontman Lou Reed entertained a standing-room-only crowd at Northampton's Calvin Theatre Sunday night.

London fuses jazz, religion

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Accomplished trumpeter Frank London brought his record "Hazonos" to life at the Fine Arts Centers' Bezanson Recital Hall Thursday night.

The performanced was the third and final installment of WMUA's 19th season of the Magic Triangle Jazz Series, mixing modern jazz tendencies with ancient Yiddish culture through the religious art of cantorial music.

A relaxed London waited for showtime with the rest of the concertgoers outside, trumpet in hand, chatting comfortably with friends. When the time came, he entered the Hall, kicking around onstage, joking and laughing with old colleagues.

London employed renowned cantor Hazzan Jacob Mendelson to accompany many of his modern reworkings of traditional Jewish prayers, bringing a powerful, operatic vocal to a set full of delicate yet dense compositions. Following an area showing the previous night of "A Cantor's Tale," a documentary on cantorial music featuring Mendelson, the impressive cantor eut a large frame, serene with yarmulke perched atop his silvery hair. His vocal resonated throughout the Hall, causing him to tremble, resulting in booming Yiddish which overpowered all instrumentation.

When Mendelson was not at center stage, however, London chose to shine. He appeared onstage and began the evening with a chorus of squeals from a pair of animal horns, a more natural substitution for the brass trumpet London has mastered. He eventually took hold of his instrument of choice, which proved decidedly more conducive to jazz than a ram's horn, and blew within a wide dynamic range, hushing to a whisper before wailing through higher registers. Seemingly improvising, London squealed over a frenetic backing of drums, upright bass, piano and harmonium – an Indian pedal organ.

Many of the compositions were exceptionally haunting, the eerie harmonium tones vibrating and melting into and out of the dense mixes. The pianist added to the nearly extra-terrestrial feel of some numbers, ranging his sound from a faint, commonplace tinkling of the keys to reaching into the open grand piano and plucking its innards to muffling the delicate tones by shoving towels into the depths of the instrument.

This deadening of the tones meant flat notes which, surprisingly, worked as a foil to London's trumpet squalls as he blew into the gaping piano, achieving a strange metallic echo.

When he wasn't taking his turn manning the harmonium, London was completely in the zone musically, and perhaps religiously. With eyes closed, his face red and contorted, his trumpet blared over the pulsing, bowed bass and muffled percussion backing, trading off phrases with Mendelson's overwhelming, operatic vocal.

The performance may have been a jazz performance, though the religious overtones dominated with a pure sentiment reserved for a temple. Music in general certainly has deep roots in religion, and for some, a secular musical experience can play just as spiritual a role as a sermon.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Trumpeter Frank London combined elements of religion and jazz during his performance at the Fine Arts Center's Bezanson Hall Thursday.

Reed delivers familiar tunes during Calvin performance with an impressive solo of his own, punctuating each symbol crash with a pump of his fist.

LOU REED from page 5

By the time he got comfortable, Reed lost his too-cool-for-small talk demeanor and began to speak to the crowd. Putting down his guitar and addressing the audience, Reed asked his lead guitarist, Steve Hunter, "This is the one out of that movie, right?"

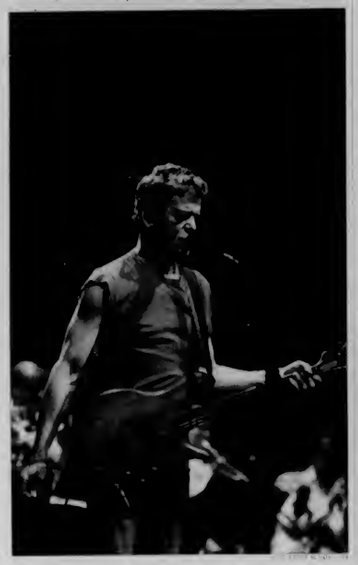
Hunter answered, "Yes, this is the one out of that movie."

The crowd cheered and Reed let out a "Yay for Juno" and a crack about foreign movies outsourcing American jobs before breaking into the Velvet Underground's "I'm Sticking With You," featured recently on the "Juno" soundtrack, with vocal accompaniment from drummer Smith.

Accompanied by organ, Reed announced, "So this is a poem by Edgar Allen Poe," before delving into a piece from "The Raven," Reed's 2003 musical treatment of the works of the famed poet.

After the song, Reed reflected on the piece to the audience: "The irresistible impulse to do that which you know is wrong for you," he recited. He smiled, cocked his head: "What an idea that is – wish somebody would've told me that a while ago."

Reed introduced his "Halloween Parade" quite unsentimentally with some background: "Around Halloween, there's this parade in New York. This is a song about so many people who died of AIDS, so there's not as many people in the Halloween parade."



Reed closed his set with "Guardian Angel," also off his Poe tribute "The Raven," but the crowd wasn't having it.

Clapping hands and stomping feet after the final bows, the attendees coaxed Reed into what he was probably planning all along: an encore.

Reed and bandmates retook the stage for "Pale Blue Eyes," from the Underground's 1969 eponymous album, leaving the audience once again begging for more.

It was a conservative show for Reed, who has a penchant for the avant-garde, but stuck mostly to familiar tunes from his recent albums and Velvet Underground cache. Knowing Reed, though, who has made a career out of reinvention, it's just a temporary thing.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

Reed performed a relatively conservative set, fusing some of his newer material with a number of Velvet Underground songs.

Success comes as easy as '1234'

Singer-songwriter Feist talks newfound fame, critical praise

BY THOR CHRISTENSEN
THE DALLAS MORNING NEWS

"Oh my God," says Feist. "No! I'm not getting up there. I won't fit!"

The singer is trying to do an interview via cell phone, but she's also busy playing cram-the-band-into-a-taxi so she can get to that night's show in Detroit.

"There's four of us wedged into the back seat and everyone's talking within one centimeter of me," she says, apologizing. "I'm just a little distracted."

Welcome to the frenzied world of Feist.

Since September, when "1234" showed up in TV ads for the iPod Nano, she's gone from obscure singer-songwriter to hipster sensation. "The Reminder" has sold more than 1 million copies worldwide, earned her four Grammy nods and won the admiration of Barack Obama, who asked her for her autograph.

Where did she meet the possible future U.S. president?

"Just hanging out at Denny's," she deadpans. "No, we were backstage at 'Saturday Night Live,' and he asked me for my autograph, so I asked him for his."

It's no big deal, really. As a Canadian, she can't vote for Obama anyway.

Born in 1976 in Nova Scotia, Leslie Feist moved as a child to Calgary, where she sang in various teen punk bands and once opened for the Ramones.

Later she moved to Toronto, shared an apartment with sex-obsessed cult diva Peaches, and joined the indie-rock collective Broken Social Scene. In 2004, she released her first proper solo album, "Let It Die."

But that electronic-tinged CD only hinted at the kaleidoscope approach of "The Reminder": One of 2007's best albums, it journeys all over the map from torch jazz to folk-funk to intricate chamber pop.

"'Let It Die' was a perfect vacuum-packed studio record," she says. "But with 'The Reminder,' the songs were allowed to breathe and find their own charm."

The one tune that wound up charming everyone was "1234," a tale of lost love and hope that was written by Australian singer Sally Seltmann.

Feist added new lyrics and fleshed out the nursery rhyme refrain with banjos, trumpets and strings. From the moment the iPod ad aired, the song spread like a virus, hitting the top 10 and winning a Grammy for female pop vocal performance.

The reaction surprised Feist as much as anyone.

"It's hard to pinpoint why so many people responded to it," she says. "I'm the least qualified to explain it."

Today, she's got mixed feelings about the song that made her a star.

"'1234' is a bit of a double-edged sword. It brings people's attention to you, but all they know is that one thing," she says.

"It can be a little frustrating. But you can't look a gift horse in the mouth: We're on tour and people come to see what we do."

On the road, she performs with help from Clea Miniker, a shadow puppeteer whose work is projected above the band as they play. But this isn't Feist's first brush with puppetry.

She used to rap while doing a sock-puppet routine in Peaches' show. And now, if her career gets too hectic, she'll unveil her master puppet backup plan.

"I could franchise myself as a puppet version," she says, laughing.

"I'll let the puppet do the talking. I'll let the puppet go out on the limb."

Leslie Feist has sold over a million copies of her album "The Reminder" after she was featured on a popular iPod commercial last September.

Experience enlisted for war film

BY ROBERT MORAN
THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

Elliot Ruiz was hanging with his friends on the streets of North Philadelphia, "not knowing what to do with my life."

Staying "on the block," as he called his neighborhood, was not an option, and he saw in his father – a former Marine who served in Vietnam – an example to follow.

On April 14, 2003, Ruiz – who had become a Marine himself and was part of the American invasion of Iraq – suffered a leg wound so bad he could reach inside and touch bone.

He survived, and the injury turned out to be a blessing of sorts. Instead of enduring a second or third tour in the war, possibly to die, he went on to become an actor.

As fate would have it, he is now the star of a controversial new movie that depicts a massacre of Iraqi civilians by Marines in 2005.

Ruiz, who graduated from Edison High School, is the lead actor in British filmmaker Nick Broomfield's "Battle for Haditha," which will premiere in the United States in May.

The movie is a fictionalized account of the Nov. 19, 2005, case in which a Marine patrol, after having lost a fellow Marine to a roadside bomb, went on to kill 24 Iraqi men, women and children.

In real life, eight Marines were charged. Charges against five have been dropped; they remain pending against the others.

For Ruiz, now 23 and living in Sherman Oaks, Calif., the movie is more about conveying the reality of being in the middle of the war.

"We're not trying to sugarcoat anything," he said. "We're not picking sides. We're just putting it out there."

As for what the audiences should believe about the Haditha killings, Ruiz said: "We're giving them a glimpse of what may have happened that day."

Ruiz pursued acting, an interest that had developed in middle school, after taking up residence in California. He appeared as an extra in rap music videos and used the opportunity to promote his cousin's clothing line, Hustlers Union. He also appeared in several commercials – his beaming smile was perfect for a Crest ad.

His big break came at a casting call for "Battle for Haditha." Broomfield was looking for ex-military personnel to give his movie authenticity. Ruiz eventually landed the lead role of Ramirez, the platoon leader.

Broomfield asked the actors to improvise their lines and actions based on their war experience and an outline of the story. A Variety magazine film critic said of Ruiz, "the line between performance and experience is blurred to a fascinating degree with emotionally galvanizing results."

This has all been serious and heady stuff for a North Philly guy, who described himself like this to more than 200 students at Edison High School in Philadelphia:

"I was one of y'all couple years ago, just sitting in the auditorium. Matter of fact, I'm going to keep it funky with y'all. I wasn't even allowed in the auditorium. I was kicked out of every assembly, period. To be honest, I didn't really know what I was going to do with my life."

In the interview, Ruiz said he finally chose the military as an escape from the many dead ends that surrounded him. And he chose the Marines to make his father proud.

At first, his father, George Burgos, who was awarded two Purple Hearts in Vietnam, thought Ruiz's decision to enlist was a mistake. Ruiz's mother, Eugenia Burgos, was completely opposed. But the teen was determined. Three days after graduating from Edison in 2002, Ruiz, then 17, was shipped off to Parris Island for boot camp.

Ruiz's war ended when an Iraqi vehicle ran a checkpoint he was guarding and wrapped concertina wire around his leg, nearly ripping it apart. That was the beginning of a painful recovery that has included 14 surgeries. Nonetheless, Ruiz called joining the Marines "probably the best decision I made in my life."

Before accepting the Haditha role, he called fellow Marines he served with and told them about the movie. Their opinions mattered the most, he said.

"I almost asked them for permission to do the film," he said, and "they were all OK with the film."

Making the movie meant returning to the Middle East and spending several months in Jordan, where he worked with Iraqi refugees. Instead of being an armed combatant, he was interacting with Iraqis in a peaceful setting.

"This time, I actually got to meet the people and their culture and taste their food and learn their language," he said.

That, he said, was the best part of making the movie. "I actually got to put closure on that chapter of my life."

Following his stint in the United States Marines, Elliot Ruiz has turned to acting after a severe combat-related injury cut short his duty overseas. Ruiz stars in "Battle for Haditha," a new film that depicts the American invasion and subsequent occupation of Iraq.

The Office of Jewish Affairs,
Center for Student Development, and
Student Affairs & Campus Life

extend our warmest Passover greetings
to the campus Jewish community...

Happy Passover!

May this joyous festival be a time
of renewal for you and your families

UMASS AMHERST
The Office of Jewish Affairs is part of the Center for Student Development. Visit us online at www.umass.edu/jewish or call 545-9642

CALL NOW TO SECURE YOUR POSITION (508) 27[illegible]
www.collegepro.com

PAINTING SUMMER MONEY FUN

ATTENTION STUDENTS: It's not too late to score a great summer job! We are College Pro Painters and we are currently hiring for the summer.

You could earn $3000 to $7000 Plus!
NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

- We are currently hiring for Painter and Job Site Manager positions. Many positions are available throughout your state.
- We offer an awesome bonus structure for those who want to earn even more money.
- You can work outside with other students and make new friends.
- You can learn useful skills such as planning, organization, and customer relations.

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

Crossbar dooms Minutemen

LACROSSE from page 10

goal on the same possession. Ryan Mulford dodged redshirt sophomore defenseman Diogo Godoi and beat junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider (11 saves) low to give the Stags a one-goal lead with 36 seconds left.

After leading 3-1 early, the Minutemen had to work their way back into the game for most of the second half. The Stags led by as many as four at one point in the second half.

"I thought we fought at the wrong times today. We fought when we were down, and we didn't fight when we were up," Cannella said. "We went up, 2-0, and everybody was saying, 'This is going to be easy.' It wasn't easy. We played way too much defense in the third quarter. We can't ask [the defenders] to do that."

The Stags won five of the six face-offs in the third quarter. Three different UMass midfielders took draws in the period, but none established any rhythm or consistently won possession for the Minutemen. Fairfield senior Andrew Urqhart's 5-foot-10, 245-pound frame proved difficult for junior Joe Reale – 5-foot-8, 175 pounds – to match up against. Hayes enjoyed greater success, going 8-for-10 in the game, but most of his wins came in the fourth quarter when UMass was trying dent the Stag advantage.

"We couldn't get possession," Cannella said of the third quarter. "That's what happens when [your opponent] has a good face-off guy, and they got every groundball in that time. Two times when we cleared the ball in transition, we took a shot, they made a save and cleared it right back. I looked at the clock the first time we had a possession in the [third] quarter, and it was with about three minutes remaining.

"I take that on my shoulders, too, because we probably should have made a change in the face-offs earlier in that sequence."

Hayes took over the responsibilities in the fourth quarter, taking six of the nine draws in the period and winning five of them.

Despite Hayes's success on face-offs in the final period, Cilente preserved his team's lead with three fourth-quarter saves in both transition opportunities and on extended UMass possessions. With the Stags up one with 6:38 left in the game, Zorkers scooped up a groundball off a Hayes faceoff and raced toward the net. He fired low on Cilente, who effortlessly made an outlet pass, setting up the Stags's ninth goal.

GAME NOTES

UMass collected more groundballs than the Stags, 25-24. Schneider, Zorkers and senior defender Brian Danvers led UMass with four each … Despite a four-point game, Rodgers led the Minutemen with three turnovers … Balise now leads UMass with 30 goals on the season after the five he scored yesterday … After the Stags outscored the Minutemen, 5-1, in the third quarter yesterday, the Minutemen have now been outscored, 32-15, in the third period.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni a gmail.com

AMANDA ATLAS/COLLEGIAN

Senior defender Brian Danvers picks up a groundball in traffic yesterday in UMass's 10–9 loss to Fairfield at Garber Field. Tim Balise (second from left) scored five goals during the fourth quarter in the defeat.

CCSU bests UM in extra-innings

BASEBALL from page 10

Ryan Franczek, who was 3-for-4 in his previous at-bats, registered his third RBI of the day on a double that plated Multner.

Co-captain Adam Tempesta followed with a strikeout and Jim Macdonald followed with a grounder to short.

Macdonald runs well, and the Blue Devils' Anthony Scialdone was forced to rush the throw. It went past the first baseman Pat Epps, allowing Franczek to score from second and tie the game at seven.

No other runs scored until Intravaia's RBI single in the 12th, but UMass had a golden opportunity to escape with a victory in the bottom of the 10th inning.

Franczek came to the plate with Baudinet on second and two outs but got under a Chris Chagnon pitch and popped the ball up to shortstop to end the inning.

Despite the ninth-inning comeback, UMass coach Mike Stone wasn't pleased with his team's performance.

"We had chances to win it and we had guys trying to hit the ball out of the ballpark – we're not home-run hitters," he said. "Nobody's really a home-run hitter, it's just a matter of hitting line drives. That's what we want to do."

Despite the drought in the middle of the game and through extras, the Minutemen had no trouble getting on the board in the first inning.

Baudinet and Franczek both scored after stealing bases. After a 1-2-3 second inning, UMass scored another run in the third, and in the process, ended CCSU's Brett Chachko's night early.

Nick Serino pitched relatively well through the first four innings (two runs on two hits) but encountered trouble in the fifth. Eight batters came to the plate and the freshman was lucky to escape with two runs in the inning after the Blue Devils' Casey Walko flew out deep to right field with the bases loaded to limit the damage.

Following the bottom of the inning, Jared Freni relieved Serino and his struggles of 2008 continued.

The sophomore right hander allowed three runs, four hits and a pair of walks in 1 1/3 innings.

After coming in the ninth, Smith struck out five of the first seven batters he faced but began the final inning by hitting the first batter he faced, which started the rally that won the game.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Momentum on Fairfield's side in loss

MOMENTUM from page 10

Godoi intercepted a Fairfield pass in front of the net, but the long-stick defender lost control of the ball as he turned to run up-field. Fairfield's Todd Baxter then secured the groundball and easily slipped the ball past Schneider.

As the Minutemen started to reduce the Fairfield lead in the fourth quarter, the Stags began to unabashedly slow down the game. On several possessions, a Fairfield player held the ball close to the end line without making a concerted effort to find an open teammate or create a scoring chance.

"I thought they slowed it down the entire game," Cannella said. "That's been our plan this year. to slow the game down and keep our opponents off offense."

Once the Minutemen found themselves down by four goals late in the third, the team finally showed its resolve. UMass executed a run of its own to close the deficit to one before the teams exchanged goals over the final six minutes.

After the Minutemen ended the Fairfield streak in the fourth with a goal from freshman attack Zach Rodgers, the team capitalized on the momentum with three consecutive face-off wins. The UMass offense proved that, with ample opportunity, it could consistently score goals against the Stags.

Michael King can be reached at mking a dailycollegian.com

UMass men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella was frustrated after yesterday's loss, saving his team didn't battle for the entire game.

Offense powering perfect A-10 record

SOFTBALL from page 10

player) are either freshmen or sophomores. Among them, they hold the top one or two spots statistically in home runs, RBIs, batting average, doubles, triples, slugging percentage and on-base percentage.

Freshmen Maroney and Normandin and sophomores Jessica Serio, Whitney Williams and Sarah Reeves are leading UMass's offensive attack this season.

Maroney, who does not play in the field, has made full use of her playing time at the plate. She leads the team with a .361 batting average, hitting mostly out of the seven-spot. Serio is second in average at .330 and led the team for most of the season. Serio also has a team-high 434 on-base percentage and 11 doubles this season.

Normandin's breakout day against Dayton on Sunday (5-for-5, two homers, 10 RBIs, three runs) moved her ahead of Samantha Salato with a team-high 30 RBIs in 2008, hitting in the 9-hole. She also leads the team in slugging percentage at .579.

Williams has taken over the role of leadoff hitter this season replacing the graduated Candice Molinari. She is second on the team in runs scored (23) and doubles (10). She has been hit by an astounding eight pitches this season. No one else on the team has been hit more than twice.

MORE ON NORMANDIN

To understand how strong the UMass lineup is you have to look at the fact that its No. 9 batter can win A-10 Player of the Week. Normandin received her first A-10 honor after going 8-for-14 with 14 RBI's. Five of those hits were for extra bases, including two home runs, one of which was a grand slam.

Normandin's bat has come alive recently; however, one part of her game that has always been there is her defense. During the beginning of the season when the team was on the road, Sortino described some of the catches Normandin made as ESPN top-play worthy. During the Dayton game she fired a ball in from the outfield holding the runner at third. If other coaches were there scouting UMass, they might note not to tag from third with a shallow fly ball hit to center.

"When we recruited her we thought that she was a fabulous athlete that we could turn into a fabulous softball player," Sortino said about her second year centerfielder. "In terms of a total player right now, she's probably one of our best. She's got both parts of her game going and it all goes back to her athleticism."

TINKERING THE BATTING ORDER

Since A-10 play started for UMass, Sortino didn't make any major changes to the batting order. Are there major changes to come? Maybe.

"We're coming down the stretch and we might do a couple of different things see how they work out," Sortino said about the batting order.

Normandin started the season at the leadoff spot, but has since moved to the No. 9 spot in the order. Sortino says she feels that Normandin is more comfortable in the ninth spot and by her recent performance it is hard to disagree. Normandin also likes that spot because she is able to watch and take note of the pitcher.

"You get to see the pitcher more, you see what she is throwing to the other batters [and] you kind of know what she is going to throw at you," she said.

NATIONAL RECOGNITION

UMass is ranked No. 24 in the ESPN.com/USA Softball Collegiate Top 25 Poll released Tuesday for the first time since Feb. 13, 2007, when it was ranked No. 23. In the USA Today/NFCA Division I poll, UMass is just outside the Top 25, receiving 37 points.

Jeremy Rice and Steve Games can be reached at sports a dailycollegian.com.

SLU, Temple fighting it out for spot

A-10 SOFTBALL from page 10

Trailing sixth-place SLU by two games may seem like an obstacle they can overcome, but it seems a lot less possible when their only conference games left are against third-place Charlotte and fourth-place Fordham.

La Salle has been a team that has been off recently in conference play. With the exception of their series with Massachusetts, the Explorers split their first four conference series. But in their last three series, St. Bonaventure, Temple and St. Joe's, respectively, they have managed a 2-4 record.

The two wins came in the series against Temple (13-19, 3-12 A-10), the last-place team in the conference. Against second-place St. Bonaventure (16-18, 8-4 A-10), the Explorers lost 1-0 and 2-0, respectively, in a doubleheader, proving that they can put up a fight with the elite in the A-10.

The Explorers need to produce more offensively, while pitching like they did against the Bonnies a few weeks ago. With one of their losses this weekend against the Hawks coming as a shutout, the Explorers had been shutout in three out of their last four conference games.

Offense will be a major key to La Salle making it into the playoffs. Over the course of the season the Explorers have scored over four runs per game but have lacked that production against the elite teams in the A-10.

FORDHAM ON A ROLL

Fordham has played very well over the past month as it prepares for the A-10 Championships less than two weeks away.

The Rams (25-21, 7-5 A-10) won five of their six games last week and have rattled off a 17-5 record since March 22.

In the month-long stretch, Fordham has come out with a very balanced attack. Over its 17-5 run, Fordham has averaged six runs per game and given up only 2.77 runs per contest. The offensive output is almost an entire run over its season average of 5.02 runs per game.

The pitching has also been improved over the stretch. Over the course of the season the Ram's pitching gave up 4.1 runs per game, almost a run and a half higher than over their recent run.

The run comes at a perfect time and gives Fordham plenty of momentum to carry with them into the playoffs. The Rams currently sit in fourth place, but have the second-best overall winning percentage in the conference, behind only UMass.

The most recent wins for the Rams came on Sunday in a doubleheader against third-place Charlotte. Both games saw dominant pitching by Fordham as it held the 49ers (27-24, 9-5 A-10) to just one run in each game.

The Rams still have eight conference games left, two each against St. Joe's, La Salle, George Washington and Temple. The Rams trail Charlotte by only one game but have played two fewer games. Charlotte has the same remaining conference schedule, with the exception of the George Washington games.

The two schools are fighting with St. Bonaventure for second place in the conference and a bye on the first day of competition in the A-10 Championships. The Bonnies are tied with Charlotte for second place, but the SBU has a tougher remaining schedule, with its season closing out against UMass.

With only one game separating the three schools for the No. 2 seed, the last two weeks of conference play will see some of each school's best as they try and capture second place.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard a student.umass.edu.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Campus to Career
Dress to Impress
Dress for the Job You Want, Not the Job You Have!
[illegible] Memorial Hall
Believe it or not, appearance does matter in the "real world." Proper dress can make or break an interview, an important business deal or presentation. Join us for this valuable workshop before you head off for summer jobs and internships or your first job as a college graduate.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
FREE ADMISSION
FREE PIZZA
FREE REFRESHMENTS
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
To register for this FREE event, visit UMassAlumni.com/students.
MODELS WANTED!
We are looking for a handful of students to participate and show proper dress and not so proper dress. If interested, please contact the Student Alumni Association at 545-2317 or saa@stuaf.umass.edu

Important Announcement
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2008
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Thursday, April 24 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 207
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE? STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O's
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996

Seriously, eat more paint chips.

7	5			3		9
			6	7	1
							7
9					6	2	1	5
	6						9
3	2	1	5					8
	7
			2	1	9
		2		4			6	3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Scrapbook
6 Bonkers
10 Old
14 Frankie or Cleo
15 Goofs
16 Adoration
17 Squirrel's snack
18 Jacob's first wife
19 Hot chamber
20 Do an usher's job
22 Stuck-up pictures
24 Dispersers
27 Sandwich bread
28 Germs
31 School near Windsor
33 Schooner contents
34 Seattle pro
36 Osaka heavyweights
39 Color
41 Blabs
43 Collection biz
44 Overfed
46 Bridge position
48 Score of zero
49 Son of Seth
51 Sent on a detour
53 Damage
55 Something left out
57 Gave a choice
59 Magician's word
63 Unruffled
64 Star-rote
67 Get around
68 Ship part
69 Tibetan monk
70 Opening word
71 "The West Wing" actor
72 Knock off
73 Villain's expression

DOWN
1 Banned spray
2 Delicate fabric
3 Flicks about people
4 Turmoil
5 Threatens
6 Toothpaste choice
7 Is plural?
8 Jelly choice
9 Out of the ocean
10 Tons and tons
11 Party in power
12 Complete
13 Thick
21 Card for a seer
23 Mach toppers
25 Fork features
26 Suit makers
28 Dugout stack
29 Inter (among other things)
30 Pinup from a magazine
32 Possessive pronoun
35 Aids for Sherlock
37 Mayberry youngster
38 Auctioned off
40 Decimal base
42 Type of mail or lease
45 Gateway
47 Triumphant shouts
50 Odors
52 Inconstant
53 Shade of brown
54 On the wrong side (of)
56 Perfect
58 Actress Raines
60 Lone
61 Mosaic piece
62 Stench
65 MDs' org.
66 Calendar unit

Founders Day is Tuesday, April 29, marking our 145th birthday. Come to a free morning performance of music and dance in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Enjoy birthday lunch in the tents outside the Fine Arts Center. BBQ, entertainers, free cake. swipes accepted
UMASS AMHERST Since 1863
And You Thought Your Work Study Job was Tough...
Play the UMass Amherst trivia game and try to win a free lunch at Founders Day. www.CampusLive.com
Founders Day
Tuesday, April 29
Info at www.umass.edu/foundersday

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If a cluttered desk is the sign of a cluttered mind, what is the significance of a clean desk?"

— Laurence J. Peter

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

BROTHERS WATT By William Wilson

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Like the random jars of jelly they are now selling in the Blue Wall, something in your life is out of place.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The flesh parade has begun! Spring has sprung, among other things...

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The only people lazier than the students on this campus are the professors.

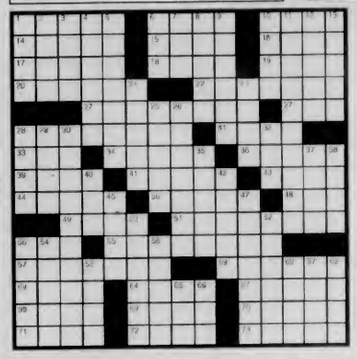
taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It appears as though your secret power is the ability to watch hours upon hours of Sex and the City without standing up.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Thank goodness Earth Day is over, now you can go back to disappointing Mother Earth.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you know what the initials "a/s/l" mean, there's a solid chance that you once tried to have cyber-sex with a stranger.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Silence may be golden, but there is something to be said for the value of a good fart.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Clean out the clutter from the desk drawers of your life. Maybe you'll find an awesome pencil with dolphins on it.



libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
All work and no Facebook makes an office employee way more productive.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your problem is that you don't listen to enough B*witched. Oh well, c'est la vie.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There's more to life than oversized throwbacks and steezy hats.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stay away from people with long creepy spider hands.

Pick up an application for Comics Editor in the Daily Collegian office in the Campus Center in the little mailbox marked "Comics Editor Applications."
It's not nearly as hard as it sounds and it will be a fun adventure.
comics@dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 200
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 1
Session II July 14 - Aug 2
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom, 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+

APT FOR RENT

4 Bedrooms $1500+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND

EMPLOYMENT

SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Marketing Coordinator Paid Internship: College Pro Painters
Now interviewing for Spring/Summer.
Ideal candidates will be: Communications, Business or Marketing Majors.
Highly organized.
Goal oriented.
Duties: Candidates will organize and implement a multi-pronged marketing program, organize at least one PR event, and focus on generating new customer leads and establishing a strong brand presence in a region. Positions available through out New England.
Contact: Email resume to: Jhughes@collegepro.com
Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail. 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

EMPLOYMENT

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Crossbar dooms Minutemen

LACROSSE from page 10

goal on the same possession. Ryan Mulford dodged redshirt sophomore defenseman Diogo Godoi and beat junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider (11 saves) low to give the Stags a one-goal lead with 36 seconds left.

After leading 3-1 early, the Minutemen had to work their way back into the game for most of the second half. The Stags led by as many as four at one point in the second half.

"I thought we fought at the wrong times today. We fought when we were down, and we didn't fight when we were up," Cannella said. "We went up, 2-0, and everybody was saying, 'This is going to be easy.' It wasn't easy. We played way too much defense in the third quarter. We can't ask [the defenders] to do that."

The Stags won five of the six face-offs in the third quarter. Three different UMass midfielders took draws in the period, but none established any rhythm or consistently won possession for the Minutemen. Fairfield senior Andrew Urqhart's 5-foot-10, 245-pound frame proved difficult for junior Joe Reale – 5-foot-8, 175 pounds – to match up against. Hayes enjoyed greater success, going 8-for-10 in the game, but most of his wins came in the fourth quarter when UMass was trying dent the Stag advantage.

"We couldn't get possession," Cannella said of the third quarter. "That's what happens when [your opponent] has a good face-off guy, and they got every groundball in that time. Two times when we cleared the ball in transition, we took a shot, they made a save and cleared it right back. I looked at the clock the first time we had a possession in the [third] quarter, and it was with about three minutes remaining.

"I take that on my shoulders, too, because we probably should have made a change in the face-offs earlier in that sequence."

Hayes took over the responsibilities in the fourth quarter, taking six of the nine draws in the period and winning five of them.

AMANDA ATTY/COLLEGIAN

Senior defender Brian Danvers picks up a groundball in traffic yesterday in UMass's 10-9 loss to Fairfield at Garber Field. Tim Balise (second from left) scored five goals during the fourth quarter in the defeat.

Despite Hayes's success on face-offs in the final period, Cilente preserved his team's lead with three fourth-quarter saves in both transition opportunities and on extended UMass possessions. With the Stags up one with 6:38 left in the game, Zorkers scooped up a groundball off a Hayes faceoff and raced toward the net. He fired low on Cliente, who effortlessly made an outlet pass, setting up the Stags's ninth goal.

GAME NOTES

UMass collected more groundballs than the Stags, 25-24. Schneider, Zorkers and senior defender Brian Danvers led UMass with four each … Despite a four-point game, Rodgers led the Minutemen with three turnovers … Balise now leads UMass with 30 goals on the season after the five he scored yesterday … After the Stags outscored the Minutemen, 5-1, in the third quarter yesterday, the Minutemen have now been outscored, 32-15, in the third period.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

CCSU bests UM in extra-innings

BASEBALL from page 10

Ryan Franczek, who was 3-for-4 in his previous at-bats, registered his third RBI of the day on a double that plated Multner.

Co-captain Adam Tempesta followed with a strikeout and Jim Macdonald followed with a grounder to short.

Macdonald runs well, and the Blue Devils' Anthony Scialdone was forced to rush the throw. It went past the first baseman Pat Epps, allowing Franczek to score from second and tie the game at seven.

No other runs scored until Intravaia's RBI single in the 12th, but UMass had a golden opportunity to escape with a victory in the bottom of the 10th inning.

Franczek came to the plate with Baudinet on second and two outs but got under a Chris Chagnon pitch and popped the ball up to shortstop to end the inning.

Despite the ninth-inning comeback, UMass coach Mike Stone wasn't pleased with his team's performance.

"We had chances to win it and we had guys trying to hit the ball out of the ballpark – we're not home-run hitters," he said. "Nobody's really a home-run hitter, it's just a matter of hitting line drives. That's what we want to do."

Despite the drought in the middle of the game and through extras, the Minutemen had no trouble getting on the board in the first inning.

Baudinet and Franczek both scored after stealing bases. After a 1-2-3 second inning, UMass scored another run in the third, and in the process, ended CCSU's Brett Chachko's night early.

Nick Serino pitched relatively well through the first four innings (two runs on two hits) but encountered trouble in the fifth. Eight batters came to the plate and the freshman was lucky to escape with two runs in the inning after the Blue Devils' Casey Walko flew out deep to right field with the bases loaded to limit the damage.

Following the bottom of the inning, Jared Freni relieved Serino and his struggles of 2008 continued.

The sophomore right hander allowed three runs, four hits and a pair of walks in 1 1/3 innings.

After coming in the ninth, Smith struck out five of the first seven batters he faced but began the final inning by hitting the first batter he faced, which started the rally that won the game.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Momentum on Fairfield's side in loss

MOMENTUM from page 10

Godoi intercepted a Fairfield pass in front of the net, but the long-stick defender lost control of the ball as he turned to run up-field. Fairfield's Todd Baxter then secured the groundball and easily slipped the ball past Schneider.

As the Minutemen started to reduce the Fairfield lead in the fourth quarter, the Stags began to unabashedly slow down the game. On several possessions, a Fairfield player held the ball close to the end line without making a concerted effort to find an open teammate or create a scoring chance.

"I thought they slowed it down the entire game," Cannella said. "That's been our plan this year: to slow the game down and keep our opponents off offense."

Once the Minutemen found themselves down by four goals late in the third, the team finally showed its resolve. UMass executed a run of its own to close the deficit to one before the teams exchanged goals over the final six minutes.

After the Minutemen ended the Fairfield streak in the fourth with a goal from freshman attack Zach Rodgers, the team capitalized on the momentum with three consecutive face-off wins. The UMass offense proved that, with ample opportunity, it could consistently score goals against the Stags.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

UMass men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella was frustrated after yesterday's loss, saving his team didn't battle for the entire game.

Offense powering perfect A-10 record

SOFTBALL from page 10

player) are either freshmen or sophomores. Among them, they hold the top one or two spots statistically in home runs, RBIs, batting average, doubles, triples, slugging percentage and on-base percentage.

Freshmen Maroney and Normandin and sophomores Jessica Serio, Whitney Williams and Sarah Reeves are leading UMass's offensive attack this season.

Maroney, who does not play in the field, has made full use of her playing time at the plate. She leads the team with a .361 batting average, hitting mostly out of the seven-spot. Serio is second in average at .330 and led the team for most of the season. Serio also has a team-high .434 on-base percentage and 11 doubles this season.

Normandin's breakout day against Dayton on Sunday (5-for-5, two homers, 10 RBIs, three runs) moved her ahead of Samantha Salato with a team-high 30 RBIs in 2008, hitting in the 9-hole. She also leads the team in slugging percentage at .579.

Williams has taken over the role of leadoff hitter this season replacing the graduated Candice Molinari. She is second on the team in runs scored (23) and doubles (10). She has been hit by an astounding eight pitches this season. No one else on the team has been hit more than twice.

MORE ON NORMANDIN

To understand how strong the UMass lineup is you have to look at the fact that its No. 9 batter can win A-10 Player of the Week. Normandin received her first A-10 honor after going 8-for-14 with 14 RBI's. Five of those hits were for extra bases, including two home runs, one of which was a grand slam.

Normandin's bat has come alive recently; however, one part of her game that has always been there is her defense. During the beginning of the season when the team was on the road, Sortino described some of the catches Normandin made as ESPN top-play worthy. During the Dayton game she fired a ball in from the outfield holding the runner at third. If other coaches were there scouting UMass, they might note not to tag from third with a shallow fly ball hit to center.

"When we recruited her we thought that she was a fabulous athlete that we could turn into a fabulous softball player," Sortino said about her second year centerfielder. "In terms of a total player right now, she's probably one of our best. She's got both parts of her game going and it all goes back to her athleticism."

TINKERING THE BATTING ORDER

Since A-10 play started for UMass, Sortino didn't make any major changes to the batting order. Are there major changes to come? Maybe.

"We're coming down the stretch and we might do a couple of different things see how they work out," Sortino said about the batting order.

Normandin started the season at the leadoff spot, but has since moved to the No. 9 spot in the order. Sortino says she feels that Normandin is more comfortable in the ninth spot and by her recent performance it is hard to disagree. Normandin also likes that spot because she is able to watch and take note of the pitcher.

"You get to see the pitcher more, you see what she is throwing to the other batters [and] you kind of know what she is going to throw at you," she said.

NATIONAL RECOGNITION

UMass is ranked No. 24 in the ESPN.com/USA Softball Collegiate Top 25 Poll released Tuesday for the first time since Feb. 13, 2007, when it was ranked No. 23. In the USA Today/NFCA Division 1 poll, UMass is just outside the Top 25, receiving 37 points.

Jeremy Rice and Steve Games can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

SLU, Temple fighting it out for spot

A-10 SOFTBALL from page 10

Trailing sixth-place SLU by two games may seem like an obstacle they can overcome, but it seems a lot less possible when their only conference games left are against third-place Charlotte and fourth-place Fordham.

La Salle has been a team that has been off recently in conference play. With the exception of their series with Massachusetts, the Explorers split their first four conference series. But in their last three series, St. Bonaventure, Temple and St. Joe's, respectively, they have managed a 2-4 record.

The two wins came in the series against Temple (13-19, 3-12 A-10), the last-place team in the conference. Against second-place St. Bonaventure (16-18, 8-4 A-10), the Explorers lost 1-0 and 2-0, respectively, in a doubleheader, proving that they can put up a fight with the elite in the A-10.

The Explorers need to produce more offensively, while pitching like they did against the Bonnies a few weeks ago. With one of their losses this weekend against the Hawks coming as a shutout, the Explorers had been shutout in three out of their last four conference games.

Offense will be a major key to La Salle making it into the playoffs. Over the course of the season the Explorers have scored over four runs per game but have lacked that production against the elite teams in the A-10.

FORDHAM ON A ROLL

Fordham has played very well over the past month as it prepares for the A-10 Championships less than two weeks away.

The Rams (25-21, 7-5 A-10) won five of their six games last week and have rattled off a 17-5 record since March 22.

In the month-long stretch, Fordham has come out with a very balanced attack. Over its 17-5 run, Fordham has averaged six runs per game and given up only 2.77 runs per contest. The offensive output is almost an entire run over its season average of 5.02 runs per game.

The pitching has also been improved over the stretch. Over the course of the season the Ram's pitching gave up 4.1 runs per game, almost a run and a half higher than over their recent run.

The run comes at a perfect time and gives Fordham plenty of momentum to carry with them into the playoffs. The Rams currently sit in fourth place, but have the second-best overall winning percentage in the conference, behind only UMass.

The most recent wins for the Rams came on Sunday in a doubleheader against third-place Charlotte. Both games saw dominant pitching by Fordham as it held the 49ers (27-24, 9-5 A-10) to just one run in each game.

The Rams still have eight conference games left, two each against St. Joe's, La Salle, George Washington and Temple. The Rams trail Charlotte by only one game but have played two fewer games. Charlotte has the same remaining conference schedule, with the exception of the George Washington games.

The two schools are fighting with St. Bonaventure for second place in the conference and a bye on the first day of competition in the A-10 Championships. The Bonnies are tied with Charlotte for second place, but the SBU has a tougher remaining schedule, with its season closing out against UMass.

With only one game separating the three schools for the No. 2 seed, the last two weeks of conference play will see some of each school's best as they try and capture second place.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Campus to Career
Dress to Impress
Dress for the Job You Want, Not the Job You Have!
Memorial Hall
Believe it or not, appearance does matter in the "real world." Proper dress can make or break an interview, an important business deal or presentation. Join us for this valuable workshop before you head off for summer jobs and internships or your first job as a college graduate.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
FREE ADMISSION
FREE PIZZA
FREE REFRESHMENTS
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
To register for this FREE event, visit UMassAlumni.com/students.
MODELS WANTED!
We are looking for a handful of students to participate and show proper dress and not so proper dress. If interested, please contact the Student Alumni Association at 545-2317 or saa@stuaf.umass.edu

Important Announcement
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2008
The Writing Program Placement Test
will be offered on:
Thursday, April 24 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 207
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE? STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O's
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996

Seriously, eat more paint chips.

7	5			3		9
			6	7	1
							7
9					6	2	1	5
	6						9
3	2	1	5					8
	7
			2	1	9
		2		4			6	3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Scrapbook
6 Bonkers
10 Old
14 Frankie or Cleo
15 Goofs
16 Adoration
17 Squirrel's snack
18 Jacob's first wife
19 Hot chamber
20 Do an usher's job
22 Stuck-up pictures
24 Disperses
27 Sandwich bread
28 Germs
31 School near Windsor
33 Schooner contents
34 Seattle pro
36 Osaka heavyweights
39 Color
41 Blabs
43 Collection biz
44 Overlied
46 Bridge position
48 Score of zero
49 Son of Seth
51 Sent on a detour
53 Damage
55 Something left out
57 Gave a choice
59 Magician's word
63 Unruffled
64 Star role
67 Get around
68 Ship part
69 Tibetan monk
70 Opening word
71 "The West Wing" actor
72 Knock off
73 Villain's expression

DOWN
1 Banned spray
2 Delicate fabric
3 Flicks about people
4 Turmoil
5 Threatens
6 Toothpaste choice
7 Is plural?
8 Jelly choice
9 Out of the ocean
10 Tons and tons
11 Party in power
12 Campsite
13 Thick
21 Card for a seer
23 Mach toppers
25 Fork features
26 Suit makers
28 Dugout stack
29 Inter ___ (among other things)
30 Pinup from a magazine
32 Possessive pronoun
35 Aids for Sherlock
37 Mayberry youngster
38 Auctioned off
40 Decimal base
42 Type of mall or lease
45 Gateway
47 Triumphant shouts
50 Odors
52 Inconstant
53 Shade of brown
54 On the wrong side (of)
56 Perfect
58 Actress Raines
60 Lone
61 Mosaic piece
62 Stench
65 MDs' org
66 Calendar unit

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

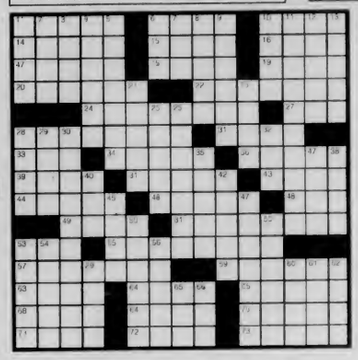
Founders Day is Tuesday, April 29, marking our 145th birthday. Come to a free morning performance of music and dance in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Free birthday lunch in the tents outside the Fine Arts Center. BBQ, entertainers, free cake, swipes accepted
UMASS AMHERST Since 1863
And You Thought Your Work Study Job was Tough...
Play the UMass Amherst trivia game and try to win a Free Ascott at Founders Day. www.CampusLive.com
Founders Day
Tuesday, April 29
Info at www.umass.edu/foundersday

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If a cluttered desk is the sign of a cluttered mind, what is the significance of a clean desk?"

— Laurence J. Peter

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay



BROTHERS WATT By William Wilson

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

Continuing & Professional Education
Summer Session 200
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 2
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Like the random jars of jelly they are now selling in the Blue Wall, something in your life is out of place.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The flesh parade has begun! Spring has sprung, among other things...

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The only people lazier than the students on this campus are the professors.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It appears as though your secret power is the ability to watch hours upon hours of Sex and the City without standing up.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Thank goodness Earth Day is over, now you can go back to disappointing Mother Earth.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you know what the initials "a/s/l" mean, there's a solid chance that you once tried to have cyber-sex with a stranger.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Silence may be golden, but there is something to be said for the value of a good fart.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Clean out the clutter from the desk drawers of your life. Maybe you'll find an awesome pencil with dolphins on it.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
All work and no Facebook makes an office employee way more productive.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your problem is that you don't listen to enough B*witched. Oh well, c'est la vie

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There's more to life than oversized throwbacks and steezy hats.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Stay away from people with long creepy spider hands.

Pick up an application for Comics Editor in the Daily Collegian office in the Campus Center in the little mailbox marked "Comics Editor Applications."
It's not nearly as hard as it sounds and it will be a fun adventure.
comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms, NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month, contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+

APT FOR RENT

4 Bedrooms $1500+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND

EMPLOYMENT

SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Marketing Coordinator Paid Internship: College Pro Painters
Now interviewing for Spring/Summer. Ideal candidates will be: Communications, Business or Marketing Majors.
Highly organized.
Goal oriented.
Duties: Candidates will organize and implement a multi-pronged marketing program, organize at least one PR event, and focus on generating new customer leads and establishing a strong brand presence in a region. Positions available through out New England.

EMPLOYMENT

Contact: Email resume to: Jhughes@collegepro.com Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail. 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

EMPLOYMENT

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A matter of inches...

Blum's shot in final seconds misses in loss

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Evan Blum did everything right.

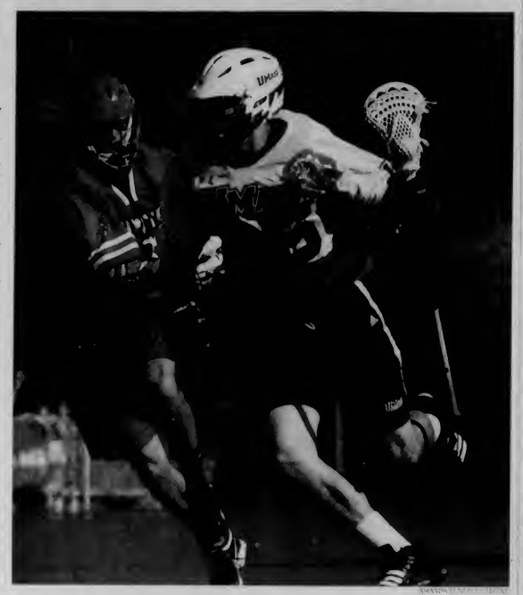
Fairfield led the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, 10-9, with 15.8 seconds left in regulation when Blum shifted the ball into his left-hand cradle and headed for the goal mouth. He beat the defender off the dodge, circled the net and snapped a quick shot on Stag goalkeeper Jeff Cilente.

The shot sailed over Cilente's stick, but rather than a chorus of cheers, the Minutemen heard nothing but a resounding clang followed by a series of groans. The ball hit the crossbar and deflected into the wing before rolling out of bounds, clinching a 10-9 win for the Stags (4-8, 2-4 ECAC).

Fairfield	10
UMass	9

Moments before Blum worked his game-tying attempt off a reset, sophomore midfielder Bobby Hayes created an equally dangerous scoring chance. Hayes wheeled from behind the net, looked for a pass briefly before firing a shot toward Cilente. The attempt beat the net-minder, but did the same to the net. UMass regained possession as the ball glided over the crossbar, setting up Blum's opportunity.

"We had two good looks, they just didn't go," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "A couple weeks ago [against Hobart] they went, today they didn't. That was the difference in the game."



The victory was Fairfield's first ever over the Minutemen in seven all-time meetings.

UMass (5-7, 3-3 ECAC) has now lost two consecutive games after splitting its previous six. No. 2 Syracuse awaits UMass this Saturday at the Carrier Dome; opening faceoff is scheduled for 2 p.m.

Junior attack Tim Balise scored five second-half goals, bringing UMass within one on two occasions and tying the game, 9-9, with 1 minute, 41 seconds left in the game.

Freshman Stephen Zorkers lost the ensuing faceoff, however, and the Stags scored the game-winning

See LACROSSE on page 8

Redshirt junior attacker Evan Blum's shot with under 20 seconds remaining would have tied the game with Fairfield, but the ball hit the crossbar as the Stags defeated UMass, 10-9, yesterday at Garber Field.

UMass drops extra-inning game at home

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As Central Connecticut State's Scott Intravaia stood at the plate in the top of the 12th inning, a member of the Blue Devil bench told him to take Aaron Smith's pitch to the opposite field into right.

Intravaia didn't hear the message, but delivered nonetheless.

The sophomore blooped Smith's pitch over the head of second baseman Adam Tempesta and in front of right fielder Garrett Glashoff to give the Blue Devils an 8-7 lead.

CCSU	9
UMass	7

Sean Allaire followed with a double to give CCSU (15-15, 9-3 Northeast Conference) an insurance run, but Intravaia's single proved to be the game-winner as CCSU defeated the Minutemen, 9-7.

"In that count, it was 2-2 at that time," Allaire said after the game. "I'm just looking to take that ball to the opposite field, you know let it travel as deep as possible and just smack it the other way."

The Blue Devil second baseman went 4-for-5 from the plate, drove in two of his team's runs and also scored a pair. In fact, an early injury to starter Sean Miller-Jones was the sole reason Intravaia got the chance to play.

"Who was the idiot that didn't start him?" CCSU coach Charlie Hickey joked after the game.

Though the day belonged to Intravaia, the Minutemen (12-18, 5-10 Atlantic 10) nearly stole the game away in the bottom of the ninth inning.

After cutting the lead to 7-4 on a Jim Macdonald solo home run in the eighth, Kyle Multner and Brian Baudinet had back-to-back singles with one out in the ninth to get a rally started.

See BASEBALL on page 8

Pitcher Nick Serino pitched five innings in yesterday's 9-7 extra-inning loss to Central Connecticut State at Earl Lorden Field.

Cannella frustrated with team's effort

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With defined possessions, lacrosse is a sport defined by momentum. Several well-played possessions can quickly compound itself into an insurmountable deficit or a comfortable lead in a matter of minutes in any game.

Against Fairfield yesterday afternoon, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team was undone by its inability to halt a Fairfield run, as the Stags scored five consecutive goals during the third quarter to build a permanent lead.

The Minutemen made their own run and eventually tied the score with less than two minutes remaining. But UMass coach Greg Cannella acknowledged that his team's inability to play inspired lacrosse with its first-half lead allowed the Stags to steal the momentum in the third, which was the difference in the game.

"We fought at the wrong times today. We only fought when we were down and not when we were up," Cannella said. "We took a 2-0 lead and everyone thought it was going to be easy – it wasn't easy."

During its six-goal run through the end of the first half and third quarter, Fairfield won 5 of 6 faceoffs. The Stags gradually wore down the UMass defense as the team's attack waited helplessly beyond the midfield line.

"We played almost the entire third quarter on defense," Cannella said. "You can't ask your guys to do that. Fairfield just kept scoring and that's how you win games on the road."

Once the Stags gained possession, it was a seemingly impossible task for UMass to retake control without junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider stopping a shot on goal. Even when a UMass player made the extra effort to create a turnover, the effort was marred by misfortune.

With six minutes left in the fourth quarter, redshirt sophomore Diogo

See MOMENTUM on page 8

SLU searching for final tourney spot

BY JEFF R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the Atlantic 10 Softball Championship just two weeks away, the fight for the sixth and final playoff spot is on.

Saint Louis currently sits in sixth place with Dayton and La Salle both trailing by two games. The Billikens (17-29-1, 7-7 A-10) have played two fewer games then both the Flyers (19-26, 6-10 A-10) and the Explorers (16-22, 6-10 A-10), but still hold sixth place because of their better winning percentage in conference play.

A–10 Softball

The Billikens have struggled this season in non-conference games, holding only a .372 overall winning percentage, but have played well against conference opponents.

This past Saturday SLU squared off against second-place St. Bonaventure in a doubleheader. Although only scoring two runs in the two games, the Billikens split the series.

The 1-0 victory in the second game stopped a four-game slide just in time for the Billikens. Six of their final eight games are conference games and could put them in the playoffs or leave them out.

The weekend holds a four game home-stand with a game against first-place Massachusetts on Friday and Saturday and a doubleheader on Sunday with Rhode Island.

The doubleheader against URI (14-30, 4-12 A-10) will come as a relief after facing the Minutewomen (30-11, 16-0 A-10), who boast a perfect conference record so far this season. The final conference series for SLU comes against Dayton who is also vying for the last playoff spot.

Offense will be one of the keys to the Billikens holding onto the sixth and final playoff spot. In their previous four games, the Billikens have scored only three runs, while going 1-3. In SLU's previous 10 games, it has averaged 2.3 runs per game and won only two of those 10.

In all but five of SLU's 17 victories, they scored five or more runs and only lost two games all season when it reached the five-run threshold. Overall as a team, SLU hits .225 and averages fewer than three runs per contest.

The Billikens only have one member of the team, Rachel Heet, who hits above .300. She currently hits .329 and leads the team in most offensive categories. Production will have to come from other parts of the lineup in the coming weeks.

LA SALLE'S PLAYOFF HOPES STILL ALIVE

Coming off a weekend series sweep at the hands of Saint Joseph's, one that ended a four-game winning streak, the Explorers find themselves trailing by two games for the final playoff spot in the A-10 tournament.

Tied with Dayton for seventh place in the conference, La Salle will have the most difficult road to get into the playoffs.

See A–10 SOFTBALL on page 8

Minutewomen crack into Top 25 poll

BY JEREMY RICE & STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Not only did the Massachusetts softball team sweep Dayton over the weekend – it swept the Atlantic 10 weekly awards as well.

After the team went 5-0 this week (wins over Dayton, Boston University and Rhode Island), three players were awarded A-10 honors. Brandice Balschmiter received A-10 Pitcher of the Week. It's her sixth straight Pitcher of the Week award and the school-record 20th of her career. This week she went 5-0 and gave up no runs and only four hits, while striking out 31 batters.

UMass Softball

Balschmiter also threw her second perfect game of the season in five innings against Dayton on Sunday.

Lindsay Maroney received Rookie of the Week honors after batting .545 this week with a grand slam and two doubles, totaling eight RBIs. Carly Normandin also received A-10 Player of the Week honors.

CULLINGTON OUT UNTIL MAY

Stacy Cullington has missed the last 10 games with a broken wrist, suffered on April 4 at George Washington. Her hand and forearm are currently in a hard cast, which is scheduled to come off on April 29. It is unknown when she will return to the field, but it is unlikely she will return before the weekend of the NCAA Regionals.

"It would be great to get Stacy back," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I don't know [when she can play again]. It all depends on what happens next week when they pull that cast off."

The Minutewomen (30-11, 18-0 A-10) have been one of the host schools for the regional round of the NCAA Tournament the last two years (both as a No. 2 seed), so there is a chance Cullington has not played her final game at the UMass Softball Complex if the Maroon and White can return to the NCAA tourney.

YOUTH MOVEMENT

Five of the Minutewomen's starting 10 (including the designated

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Junior outfielder Samantha Salato and the Minutewomen have a 16–0 record this season in Atlantic 10 Conference play. After a 5–0 week, UMass cracked the Top 25 poll for the first time this season.

INSIDE: TASTE OF UMASS COMES TO MULLINS | PAGE 7

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

WINDY : HI: 77 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 2008

Homecoming for Kellogg

Former Minuteman standout introduced as new head coach

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Former Massachusetts basketball star Derek Kellogg was named the new head men's basketball coach at his alma mater last night, succeeding Travis Ford.

Kellogg, 34, spent the last eight years as an assistant coach at Memphis under John Calipari, and is known for his strong recruiting skills. Apparently Kellogg isn't wasting any time getting to work and living up to that reputation.

"On the sonogram they said it looks like he can really shoot free throws, has a 40-inch vertical and has long range from 3," Kellogg joked of his expectant son Max, generating laughter from the Minuteman fans attending the introductory press conference and rally.

Kellogg played from 1991-95 and was a two-time captain point guard under Calipari when the UMass program was most successful. Kellogg may prove to be the perfect fit and face for a program looking for stability after Ford jumped ship to Oklahoma State. The financial terms of Kellogg's first head coaching contract were not disclosed, but the Springfield native has agreed in principle to a six-year contract.

"I've worked my whole coaching career to some day be standing here in front of you as the head coach at my alma mater," he announced to the crowd. "This is my dream job."

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon introduced Kellogg to the crowd to a big applause.

"Tonight we turn the spotlight on a very special young man. He's been a part of UMass basketball history and now he's going to be a part of UMass basketball future," McCutcheon said. "His passion and love for the University of Massachusetts, for Massachusetts, and the UMass basketball team are unequaled."

Kellogg spoke at length about how this was their team and how important it is to return the excitement to the Mullins Center that has fell down since his playing days.

See KELLOGG on page 5

Derek Kellogg was officially introduced as men's basketball coach yesterday afternoon. The Springfield native played point guard for UMass from 1991–95 under John Calipari.

Fans forget Ford, focus on future prospects

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When John Calipari was hired as the Massachusetts men's basketball coach in 1988, the young exuberant coach said that he wanted to create a "love affair" between the team and the community.

With six consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances during the early 1990s and a perpetually sold-out Mullins Center, Calipari achieved an unprecedented level of passion between the UMass fan base and the Minutemen.

During his first remarks as the program's new coach, Derek Kellogg borrowed Calipari's phrasing exactly 20 years after his mentor and former coach took over the UMass program.

"I want to create a love affair with the student body, the faculty and people in the community," Kellogg said. "We want to reach out to people in Western Mass., go statewide, then from there – nationwide."

UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon introduced Kellogg yesterday evening to the delight of several hundred passionate and excited UMass fans at the Curry Hicks Cage.

After Travis Ford's hasty departure to Oklahoma State last week, most of the fans in attendance came to see a coach that valued the UMass job as the pinnacle of his career.

"UMass needs a Massachusetts man to run this team – not someone from Kentucky," said Glenn Brown, a local UMass fan who has witnessed five UMass coaching changes.

See FANS on page 5

The site of last weekend's 'Extravaganja' event, the Amherst Common will feature the community's annual Arbor Day celebration Saturday. The festivities will involve the planting of 250 trees on the Common in honor of the town's anniversary, in addition to several public speakers.

Arbor Day festivities come to Amherst

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though Tuesday was officially Earth Day and tomorrow is officially Arbor Day, the town of Amherst will be celebrating the annual observances this Saturday.

Some of the events that are set to take place include the planting of 250 anniversary trees on the Amherst Town Common from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. The event, sponsored by the Amherst Public Shade Tree Committee, will include a tree identification game, a climbing demonstration, planting workshop, free seedlings, a meet and greet with Amherst's new tree warden, and a tree planting in honor of its retired warden. Representative Ellen Story, Rotary Club President Steve Kravetz, and Town Manager Larry Schaffer are also scheduled to speak.

According to Hope Crolius, chair of the Amherst Public Shade Tree Committee, the tree planting will begin Saturday and continue through the year, to celebrate the town's 250th anniversary in 2009. The planting also plans to compensate for the loss of an average of 70 to 100 trees due to construction, disease and other reasons for removal every year since the 1970s.

"Arbor Day is a chance to put the spotlight on the important role trees play in creating healthy communities by highlighting many of the ecosystem services they provide, including air and water purification, cooling, public health benefits, etc.," said community action forester Alan Snow of Amherst's Urban & Community Forestry Program.

"Trees are so ubiquitous people often don't realize what they represent to a community until they are gone, so if we hope to keep our community tree canopy whole,

See ARBOR DAY on page 4

BC football player accused of rape

A Boston College defensive lineman was arraigned on Tuesday in Brighton Municipal Court on rape charges stemming from an incident early Saturday morning.

According to assistant Suffolk district attorney Megan O'Rourke, Brady Smith, 20, allegedly entered the victim's apartment through an unlocked sliding door. He first entered the victim's roommate's and his former girlfriend's room, but left upon seeing her brother in the room. He then allegedly proceeded to the second room and sexually assaulted the victim. According to a written statement given to BC police, the victim woke up "to someone standing over [her] in inappropriate ways."

"Once I was able to come to/wake up, I noticed that it was Brady Smith and I realized that his hand was down my pants," she wrote in the statement.

The victim shouted at Smith and her roommate called the police, who arrested Smith shortly after in a BC parking lot. He was allegedly intoxicated.

Smith is due back in court May 19 for a probable cause hearing, and is currently facing a $50,000 cash bail. He was ordered to stay away from Boston College and the accuser if he does post bail. BC spokesperson Jack Dunn stated that Smith had been suspended from the school pending the decision and has been indefinitely suspended from the football team.

Smith, of Finksburg, Md., was a three-sport star athlete in high school, talented in lacrosse and wrestling as well as football. He hoped to play professional football and planned to spend at least three years playing in college before declaring for the NFL draft.

Smith is not the first member of the 2007 Eagles to face trouble with the law. Offensive lineman Gosder Cherilus and defensive back DeJuan Tribble were charged with two counts of assault last July after a brawl in a Boston bar. Due in court in June, both are expected to be selected in this weekend's NFL draft.

—Frank Vitale

SGA senate debates over RSO budgets

Khanna calls for additional evaluations of larger budgets

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Questions and debate accompanied the presentation of the upcoming budget at last night's senate meeting of the Student Government Association.

Chair of the Ways and Means Committee, Yonnick Brook and other members of the committee presented the budget for the senate to evaluate. The budget reflected the recent fee increase to avoid the senate needing to delve into their long-term reserves.

Ninety-five RSOs applied for budgets, and as Brooks stated, several whose budget packets weren't filled out well received less money to reflect the new priorities of the committee.

There was disagreement in the senate over the issues of transparency and oversight for larger budgets, such as those for agencies like Student Bridges. Senator Derek Khanna and several senators voiced a desire for the senate to evaluate such budgets.

"I understand where Senator Khanna is coming from, wanting to evaluate the budgets," Brooks said. "However, being realistic, this would require a lot of paperwork. In addition, all meetings of the ways and means committee are open to the public for questions."

"This displays the impact of a one-party state," Khanna said. "When there is no oversight from the body responsible for it, and those requesting oversight get heckled. It is absolutely ridiculous that student bridges received a 400.67 percent employee compensation raise and that this is not considered a problem. There should be an ability to vote on individual programs."

The senate continued to debate over the feasibility of evaluating larger student group budgets, with several senators posing the use of the Internet to help spread information.

Debate centered mostly on the Student Bridges budget. Senator Kevin Boldue, chair of the administrative affairs committee, questioned the increase of around $17,000 to $60,371 of the undergraduate pay for the agency.

Vanessa Snow, a senator and the undergraduate coordinator for Student Bridges, stated that the increase was needed to reflect the organization's new attention on retaining the students that the agency conducts outreach towards.

Another issue of contention was the defunding of the director of the Center for Education Policy Advocacy and the allocation of these available funds, among others, to the Student Bridges budget.

"As a director, she hasn't done much," Brooks said. "She claims that all she has been doing over the past year is laying groundwork as opposed to other agencies which have delivered reports."

However, Alan Brainerd, the Director of Finance and Business Services for the Center for Student Development said in regards to the defunding and the possible amendment of the CEPA charter, "These might become issues for the administration to evaluate to see how University policy would be affected and that SGA exists in a recommending role."

Speaker of the SGA Senate and member of the CEPA advisory board Carla Dominguez mentioned that, "CEPA is an SGA-funded agency, which gives the SGA authority over it."

Additionally, the senate's resolutions on pot holes were rejected by the administration.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Yonnick Brooks, chair of the SGA's Ways and Means committee, presented the organization's budget at last night's senate meeting.

verizonwireless

Be the enV of your friends.

Get the enV and see what it can do!

enV™ by LG

$79.99 after rebate

LG VX9900: $129.99 2-yr. price – $50 mail-in rebate. With new 2-yr. activation.

connect in more ways:
txt, pix, video, email & IM

know what's going on:
download new music & video on the go, get the game score and keep an eye on social networking sites

Win a hybrid!

Sign up for service at a participating Verizon Wireless Communications Store and ask how you could win a brand new hybrid car! Your friends — and the planet — will love you!

Switch to America's Most Reliable Wireless Network®

For sweepstakes details and store locations go to vzwcar.com.

No Purchase Necessary. Visit a Verizon Wireless Communications store (excl. RAZR and Estival Lily not included) and activate a new line of service on a calling plan $39.99 monthly access or higher or 2-yr. Agmt. Rem register online by May 31st to enter. New line of service must be active for at least 30 days to remain eligible. Go here to enter for free. See Official Rules at vzwcar.com. Sweepstakes begins on 4/16/08 and ends on 5/31/08. Must be 18 yrs. of age with valid driver's license and legal U.S. resident. Void where prohibited. Limit one entry per person.

Activation fee/min. $35 ($25 for secondary Family SharePlan® line or 2-yr. Agmt).
IMPORTANT CONSUMER INFORMATION: Subject to Customer Agmt. Calling Plan, rebate form & credit approval. Up to $175 early termination fee/min & other charges & $1.99/MB used. Mobile Web sites. Offers and coverage, varying by service, not available everywhere. V CAST Music: per song charges may apply; airtime may apply for music downloads. Rebates take up to 8 weeks. Limited time offers. While supplies last. Network details and coverage maps at verizonwireless.com.

© 2008 Verizon Wireless.
55054

Study to analyze flax seed and cancer

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

The Department of Public Health at the University of Massachusetts is conducting a two-month study measuring the effects of flax seed on women's health in relation to breast cancer.

Flax seed comes from the common flax plant, also known as linseed. Research done in May of 2005 by the American Association of Cancer Research concluded that "dietary flaxseed has the potential to reduce tumor growth in patients with breast cancer."

Professor Sturgeon said there have been studies suggesting that flax seed is a biomechanism that can inhibit aromatase, an enzyme found in fat tissue. Aromatase works by converting androgens to estrogen.

"In postmenopausal women, estrogen exists primarily because of this enzyme," said associate professor of public health Susan Sturgeon, who is leading the study.

If aromatase is inhibited, then less estrogen would be produced, "which might lead to less of a chance of breast cancer," according to Sturgeon.

Sturgeon is seeking local postmenopausal women who meet certain physical and health requirements and are willing to put in two months of work for the study.

Participants in the study will be required to take one tablespoon of flax seed a day for six weeks. The women also must visit the UMass campus for an introduction to the study and must provide breast fluid twice through the course of the study. Participants have a choice to self-collect or have a nurse from University Health Services collect the fluid.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Investigating 'Guitar Hero'

Brown professor examines video game's emotional effects

By Mitra Anoushiravani
Brown Daily Herald

(U-WIRE) PROVIDENCE, R.I. — When Kylee Hench '11 plays "Guitar Hero," his eyes glaze over and he hunches down, assuming game-play position. Every time he misses a note, which rarely happens, he lets out an angry sigh before continuing his ferocious finger movements.

Hench, who is one of the best players in the world according to ScoreHero.com – he's ranked 13th – takes "Guitar Hero" very seriously. And now, Brown University's Assistant Professor of Music Kiri Miller is taking the popular video game seriously, too.

Miller, an ethnomusicologist, is researching the emotions Guitar Hero players feel when they match the notes on screen with buttons on their plastic guitars. Her research, along with casual conversations among students, brings to light some of life's essential questions: What makes people feel creative? How do we experience music? Which is better: "Rock Band" or "Guitar Hero?"

An online survey Miller is conducting has found 70 percent of "Guitar Hero" players do not feel creative when their fingers are frolicking across the plastic guitar. Miller said she wants to know more about those who do feel creative. "I'm really interested in that 30 percent," she said.

Miller is planning to ask students to play "Guitar Hero" in her office so she can observe them and ask questions about the experience.

Many of that creative-feeling 30 percent wrote that playing the game "teaches them to be more creative listeners and inspired them to write their own songs," she said. "The movements involved in playing are also creative."

Hench holds the more popular opinion about "Guitar Hero." "There is not much room for creativity," he said. "It is a lot of fun, and it has certainly gotten me into a lot of different types of music than I used to listen to, but I usually play for the score. I go on ScoreHero.com and see a song I'm behind on and work on that song."

Jason Lee '09 doesn't play the game to satisfy creative needs, but rather for what he called its "technical challenge," He added, "I'm not making any original music, but I'm having fun."

Ben Flaherty '09 said he often plays because he enjoys the competition. "But you are still simulating playing music, so you feel part of the song. Imagine if it was just lights on a screen without the music. People probably wouldn't be as interested."

Syracuse sudents threatened

By Lauren Bertolini
Daily Orange

(U-WIRE) SYRACUSE, N.Y. — During a barbeque in the 1100 block of Madison Street, two students were threatened with what appeared to be a black handgun, according to a Syracuse Police Department report.

On Sunday at 1:50 p.m., two Syracuse University students – a junior and a senior – were in their friend's backyard when they were approached by a student from the State University of New York College of Environmental Science and Forestry.

They had met the student in the past and discussed their interest in Subaru vehicles for nearly 45 minutes, according to the report. When the ESF student approached them on Sunday, the three got into a disagreement regarding Subarus. The student then reached into his waistband and pulled out what appeared to be a black handgun and said, "I will f*cking end your life," as he pointed the gun at the two SU students, according to the report.

After the ESF student left the area, a friend called the police, according to the SPD report. When they arrived, the two victims recognized a man standing on a porch a few houses away. As police approached the house, they saw the ESF student place a black object underneath a bench. The student was ordered to stand up and take his hands out of his pockets, after which, the SPD recovered two 6mm pellet guns that resemble handguns.

The sophomore landscape architecture major was arrested after he was identified by the two victims and charged with two counts of menacing in the second degree and one count of criminal possession of a weapon.

Two Syracuse residents were issued tickets for possession of an open container in the 100 block of Clarendon Street at 11:55 p.m. Saturday. They were walking down the block carrying cans of Keystone Light Beer, according to a report from the SPD.

An hour later, a senior SU student was issued a ticket for playing his music too loud in the same block of Clardendon Street. The noise could be heard over property lines and from a distance of more than 100 feet away from the building.

Two SU juniors were arrested Friday at 4:30 a.m. for petit larceny, attempted petit larceny and criminal mischief. According to a report from the SPD, the two were impaired by alcohol at the time of their arrest.

A man was arrested for masturbating in his car in the 900 block of Walnut Avenue on April 1 at 10:30 a.m. The 31-year-old Syracuse resident said that he parked his car after becoming aroused while looking at pictures of "sorority girls sexually interacting with each other," according to a report from the SPD. He said that he had not had sex with his wife in a month and a half.

The man had already been interrupted twice before encountering the SPD. He stopped once as a man walked by the car and again when his wife called, according to the report. He said he was almost ready to drive away when he noticed the police behind him.

E-mail phishing scams have been circulating through the MyMail server, according to an e-mail sent out Saturday by Information Technology and Services. The e-mails appear to come from a "syr.edu" account and request students' e-mail account name, NetID, password and other personal information.

Lecturer discusses apartheid activism

By Michelle Firestone
The Daily Campus

(U-WIRE) STORRS, Conn. — Survivor. Political prisoner. Inspirational leader. Thulani Mubaso identifies with all of these labels.

Mubaso, a native of South Africa, spoke at the University of Connecticut Dodd Center on Monday about his experiences as an activist and victim of the apartheid movement in his country. The apartheid movement, which separated the white minority from the black majority, ended in 1990.

During the uprising of 1976, Mubaso and other schoolchildren threw stones at police, harassing them.

"That was our way of fighting back," he said.

This incident was the beginning of a lifetime of activism for Mubaso. At the age of 19, he led a group of South African revolutionaries throughout the country. The first stop on their tour was Swaziland, where they were confronted by military officers who questioned them about their intentions. Mubaso who had received official military training, including how to use explosives, had every intention to fight back.

"He asked what we wanted, and I said we wanted guns to kill the white people," he said.

Their next stop was Johannesburg. One Wednesday, Mubaso and his army entered a building carrying a shoebox full of explosives. They made efforts to notify people of the bombing, which killed 57 people.

After three months of activism, Mubaso was arrested and administered to the Supreme Court to be placed on death row in 1964.

The human rights lawyers who defended his case managed to get him off death row, getting him an 18-year prison sentence instead.

In his speech, Mubaso described the horrific details of his treatment at the hands of the South African police.

At the John Foster Square police station, the police made him take off his pants and proceeded to squeeze his genitals. They also chained him, covered his mouth with a handkerchief and plaster, and put his feces in his mouth.

"They didn't stop interrogating and beating me," he said. "I was screaming all the time."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 126

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAuliff
Comics Editor Adam Stagin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Drew Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marwa Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Melcim
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenzweike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Gaines

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. Its offices are located at 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003. Its phone number is 413-545-3500. Its fax number is 413-545-3699. Its e-mail address is collegian@collegian.com. Its Web address is www.dailycollegian.com.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkers

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbasciano

CALL NOW TO SECURE YOUR POSITION (888) 277-0787
www.collegepro.com

PAINTING SUMMER MONEY FUN

ATTENTION STUDENTS: It's not too late to score a great summer job! We are College Pro Painters and we are currently hiring for the summer.

You could earn $3000 to $7000 Plus!
NO EXPERIENCE NECESSARY

- We are currently hiring for Painter and Job Site Manager positions. Many positions are available throughout your state.
- We offer an awesome bonus structure for those who want to earn even more money.
- You can work outside with other students and make new friends.
- You can learn useful skills such as planning, organization, and customer relations.

Earth Week

Free Food - Free Music - Free Shop - Free Education

April 22nd-26th

Thursday:
11:00 Homebrewing: easier then you think!
12:00 - Canning Workshop
1:30 - Campus Plant Identification Workshop Featuring Chris Morano
2:30 - Chicken tractor construction
6:00 - Showing of Black Gold: Coffee in Ethiopia. Campus Center room 811
7:00 - Art is Nothing without Nature (Student Union Art Gallery)

Friday:
11:30 - Tree Weedings
12:00 - Live Music
1:00 - Herbal foraging
3:00 -Do-it-Yourself Herbal Extracts
4:15 - Roundtable Discussion: Local solutions, Intentional living Emily Dickinson Homestead

Saturday
2:00 - Roundtable Discussion: Activism & Art, Science and the Soul Memorial Hall Umass
5:00 - Reading: Derrick Jensen, author of A Language Older then Words Memorial Hall Umass

Brought To You By The Umass Eco-Coalition

Taste of UMass 2008

THURSDAY APRIL 24, from 4:30 to 8:00 PM

The nation's largest campus food service event

Food
75 booths with healthy options

Competition
• Official sanctioned Nathan's Famous Hot Dog Eating Contest
• UMass Idol – Singing Contest
• Student Iron Chef Competition

Prizes
• Two tickets via American Airlines in North America or Canada
• iPhone drawing every half hour
• Many fabulous prizes

Fun
• Cooking and Demonstration with Celebrity Chef Martin Yan

APPEARANCES
• Student Dance Group
• Minuteman Mascot
• UMass Cheerleaders & Dance Team

ENTERTAINMENT
• Magic Show
• Battle of the Bands

KNOWLEDGE
• Sustainability

Free
For students on the Meal Plan or $11 cash

Worcester & Berkshire DC will be open at 9:00 pm for late night snacks.

umass.edu/diningservices

AT THE MULLINS CENTER

DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst
Ivy

All DCs will be closed at 3:00 pm and special buses to the Mullins Center will leave at 4:00.

Doors Open at 4:00

Town to celebrate Arbor Day

ARBOR DAY from page 1

we need to remind people to plant new trees to replace the old guard planted by past generations so future generations won't live in a hot, dusty, polluted community," he added.

Participants can sign up to order a tree up to six-feet tall, with species ranging from oaks to tulip trees, for a contribution of $50 or more. Orders will be taken throughout the next year, and buyers will pick up their trees a year from now. Funds will go toward the Shade Tree Fund for the ongoing planting and care of trees throughout town, with a careful watch to make sure newly planted trees get plenty of water, mulch and trimming.

On North Pleasant Street, south of Amity Street in Amherst, events to commemorate Earth Day will take place. Festivities include a "Go-Green" downtown scavenger hunt with prizes, a petroleum and pesticide-free landscaping presentation at the Jones Library, information and demonstrations of Hybrid cars, and other adoptable green actions.

Another event that will take place Saturday is "Wheat Seed Planting," which will take place at Simple Gifts Farm on Pine Street in North Amherst. At this event, hosted by Wheatberry Bakery and Café, participants will be able to plant their own wheat seeds at 2:30 p.m., and "look forward to knowing that you will 'be a hero' when your seeds become delicious baked goods that are locally grown," said Adrie Lester of Wheatberry Bakery and Café.

"This is the first year for this event, and we hope to attract about 50 people, maybe more; people are really excited about bringing local grain back," said Lester.

According to Lester, one of the main issues that will be addressed Saturday is the worldwide grain shortage. She said that every year, the ability to meet the demand for grain becomes more challenging due to increasing population, consumption, fuel shortages and a priority to create eco-friendly fuel sources.

The Wheatberry Bakery and Café will also be hosting a reusable-bag sewing event starting at 11 a.m. on Saturday at their location, 321 Main Street in Amherst. Materials will be supplied, as these bags can be purchased at the Café as a substitute for paper bags.

A list of Saturday's events and their scheduled times can be found at http://www.amherstma.gov.

Holly Scabury can be reached at hscabury@dailycollegian.com.

AMANDA TUCKER/COLLEGIAN

The Amherst Common will be the site of Arbor Day festivities Saturday, one week after hosting 'Extravaganja.' Another Amherst-area event will highlight the worldwide grain shortage.

Porn perceptions discussed at UNH

By Angela Diveglia
The New Hampshire

(U-WIRE) DURHAM, N.H. — After conducting a slide show on "Pornography: The Denial of Humanity" last Thursday, the University of New Hampshire Women's Union held an open discussion titled "Navigating Porn Culture" the day after. The discussion's focus was to explore options to solve pornographic manipulation of people's behaviors. Pornography's part in society's objectification of women was discussed as well as the behavior of men who have been conditioned in "porn culture."

The discussion, held at the Waysmeet Center, was not intended to recap the previous night's slide show, but rather to expand on how to regain a healthy sexuality in a society where the minds of individuals are saturated with pornographic images from the media, advertising and pornographic videos.

"I know that I'm sitting in this room with people who have used porn and who agree with it, and I'm just saying I'm scared," said Cait Vaughan, a senior and member of the Women's Union.

Vaughan feels as though people who surround her are objectifying her as a woman due to society's pornographic culture.

"True," echoed some of the 40 participators of the discussion to show their understanding of how porn culture has morphed views of healthy sexuality.

"My first introduction to sexual relationships was through pornography," said Sean Saunders, a senior history major. "And my first sexual experiences were emulating what I understood as sex."

The discussion focused on how communication is a serious issue in having a healthy sexual and emotional relationship and how there is no communication in pornography.

"'Can I touch you there?' Or 'does that feel good?'" said Vaughan while encouraging people to communicate and ask these questions to the ones they choose to be intimate with. "I think those are sexy questions. They're important questions that should be taken seriously and have serious responses, positive or negative."

Vaughan said having consensual sex does not mean "anything goes." A lot of individuals are uncomfortable with some sexual activity. Simply asking could cause a much better experience rather than a "guess and check" method.

Graduate program remains competitive

Difficult road to Harvard Business School for seniors

By Pratebk Kumar
Harvard Crimson

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — High school seniors weren't the only ones waiting by their computers and telephones over spring break for their admissions results: the undergraduates who applied to Harvard Business School's second-round admissions found themselves in the same situation.

The Business School received approximately 8,500 applications in total for all three rounds this year, according to HBS admissions director Deirdre C. Leopold-roughly a 14.5 percent increase over last year's total of 7,424 applicants.

Of those 8,500 applicants, 320 of them were current undergraduates applying to become members of the MBA Class of 2010.

Though Leopold declined to give numbers specific to the College, several of those undergraduates submitted their application forms from the Cambridge side of the Charles River.

After meeting stringent admissions standards, the lucky crop of admits faces a difficult choice-studying in Baker Library next year or spending time in other fields before coming to Cambridge.

The road to HBS is hard enough for the average applicant, but for a college senior, it becomes far more difficult.

In gauging applicants, the Business School focuses strongly on the sense of "organizational context" that a student can offer his or her classmates, according to Leopold.

"What kinds of organizations have they worked with? Have they been with organizations over a sustained period of time, so they've had the opportunity to struggle and succeed?" she said.

In this setting, people seeking admission from the business world have an advantage over applicants from college campuses, many of whom have been exposed to business only through a summer internship.

Even after HBS decides a candidate is deserving of matriculation, the school can choose from several different types of offers.

If the admissions office feels that the applicant will be strong enough to attend after some time in the workforce, the applicant can be granted "deferred admission"-saving the student a spot in the class two years ahead while helping him or her plan a set of work experiences for the interim.

According to Leopold, deferred admission is part of the normal admission process and does not include applicants to the "2+2" program announced last September.

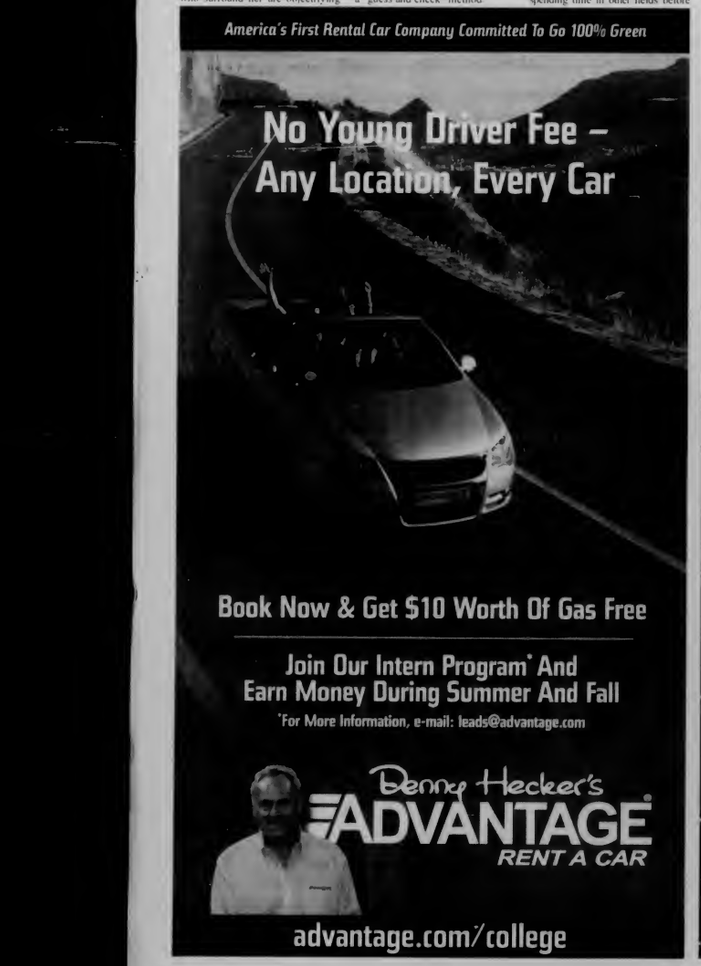
If the person brings enough experience to bear on their MBA application, Leopold said, "We can admit them directly to the Business School, meaning that they could arrive in Cambridge that September. However, we would have a follow-up call where the senior could defer if they wanted to, based on wanting work experience or participating in a joint program with another graduate school."

Getting to that point has recently become even harder. The number of applicants this year is the highest since 2004, while class size has remained roughly constant at around 900 students.

Harvard isn't the only MBA program seeing a boom in applicants. On the application-editing Web site Accepted.com, Jennifer B. Barba, the assistant director of MBA Admissions at MIT Sloan, said that the school's applications had increased by about 30 percent.

Sanford Kreisberg, an independent consultant who runs the business school admissions blog HBSGURU.com, speculated that the increase may be tied to falling financial markets.

"Applications are up this year because of the worsening economy," Kreisberg said, "but they'll be up even more next year as the economy continues to weaken."



Harvard MBA figures seem to support Kreisberg's statements. Applications peaked at 10,382 for the class of 2004; candidates for that class submitted their forms around late 2001, when the U.S. economy suffered two quarters of negative GDP growth.

So what makes college seniors who apply to HBS stand out from the rest of the pack?

"We look for very strong academic performance, but there's more than that. What do these applicants bring to the case-method classroom if they choose to come right away?" Leopold said. "We want...to measure maturity, agility, and the ability to think on your feet."

Kreisberg and Leopold both noted the importance of diverse interests in an MBA applicant.

"The admissions committee is looking for students that have an impact beyond themselves," Kreisberg said." Many successful applicants participate in political and ethnic-identity clubs. Helping your own ethnic group [and] political campaigning are well-regarded activities. Health-related organizations are also popular-organize breast cancer walks, or help bring awareness to some specific disease."

Kellogg introduced as new head coach

KELLOGG from page 1

"Not to be nostalgic, but there was no better feeling than walking through the tunnel at the Mullins Center with 10,000 people screaming, the band playing and the crowd into the game," he said.

"For those of you who that were a part of that and for those of you that weren't – I want everyone in this room and I want everybody across this state and in the area to feel what I did as a player."

Kellogg made four NCAA tournaments as a player at UMass, including an Elite Eight appearance during the 1994-95 season. Prior to his time at Memphis, Kellogg spent two seasons as an assistant at George Mason and at Youngstown State for one.

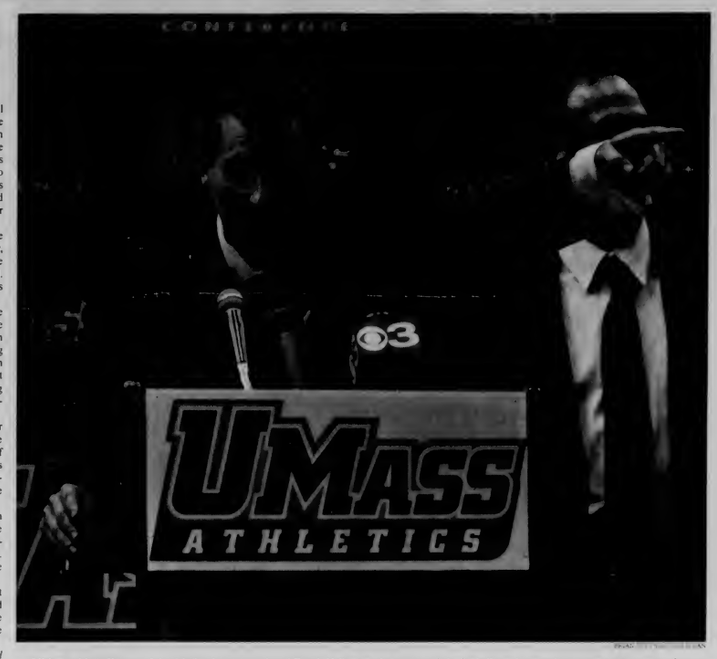
"I have a track record as a player and a coach as a winner," Kellogg said. "Under John Calipari at Memphis we had 11 NCAA tournament wins. We were 10 seconds away from being national champions.

"I believe I have what it takes to take this program to the next level, which is to get to the NCAA tournament," he added.

UMass has a 10-year drought in the NCAA tournament, having last qualified in 1998. Ford came close to breaking through in each of the last two seasons, but early exits in the Atlantic 10 Tournament likely relegated the Minutemen into the National Invitation Tournament. UMass followed its second-round exit last year in the NIT with a trip to the championship game, which it lost to Ohio State.

Similar to Ford, Kellogg will institute a highly up-tempo offense designed to take advantage of team speed and conditioning, while fatiguing. The difference with his "dribble-drive motion" offense to Ford's "run-and-gun" approach is that the offense is more predicated on dribbling and penetration, rather than screening.

"It's an attacking, aggressive style that the players want to play, the fans want to watch and the recruits want to come to," he said. "We're going to attack on both ends of the floor and be the aggressor."



Kellogg is rumored to have already hired former Pepperdine head coach Vance Walberg to join his staff as an assistant. Walberg invented the dribble-drive motion offense. However, Kellogg said that nobody is officially on his coaching staff and that he will shortly conduct interviews for the openings.

In response to Ford leaving for more money and a higher-profile job at OSU, Kellogg was asked if he would similarly use the UMass job as a stepping stone to something "bigger" if he was offered the opportunity.

"UMass has a special place in my heart. I love the people in the area, the campus and I love everything about Amherst," he said. "And I envision myself being here for a long, long time.

"We're going to be the hardest working, most fun, passionate and energetic team in the country," he added. "We're gonna win, we're gonna win."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

UMass Athletic Director John McCutcheon introduced Derek Kellogg as the new men's basketball coach yesterday evening at a press conference in the Curry Hicks Cage. Kellogg played for the Minutemen from 1991-95 and attended Springfield Central High School.

Fans excited about future

FANS from page 1

Kellogg was quick to appease the UMass faithful, as he characterized the UMass position as his dream job and reminisced about his experiences of playing for the Maroon and White.

"I don't think this program needs to settle for a coach always wanting to go to the next level," Brown added. "I think the next level can be achieved here. You can win at Kentucky. You can win at Kansas. You can win at Massachusetts."

Even with the thought of Ford reneging on his plans to stay at UMass, many of the fans in attendance believed in the sincerity of Kellogg's words. Most cited his connection to the area as a Springfield native, and a UMass alumnus as the essence of his credibility.

"It seems that Kellogg wants to be here for a long time and that's what I'm really excited about," said senior psychology major Omar Mohiuddin.

Many of the fans who have followed the program over the past two decades were quick to cite comparisons to Calipari.

"Calipari was hired in 1988 with very similar credentials," Brown said. "It's not fair to say that he is John Calipari, but I think he's a good hire."

"John Calipari did a fantastic job mentoring him," said Carol Barr, Associate Dean for Undergraduate Programs at the Isenberg School of Management. "Derek understands what it takes to be a head coach at this level."

Others equate the success that Memphis enjoyed with Kellogg as a harbinger of the coach's ability in his first opportunity in running his own program.

"I was excited when I heard that one of Calipari's assistants was taking over the program," senior communications major Julius Bradley said. "I'm excited to see what the team's offense will look like next year with [Kellogg's] dribble-drive motion system."

Several fans acknowledged that Kellogg brings intangible qualities that Ford lacked: charisma and the ability to engage the community. It remains to be seen if Kellogg can foster a high level of fan support if his team struggles, especially in the early going.

Other fans admitted that the only way for Kellogg to recreate that Calipari-esque love affair will be to put a winning team on the Mullins Center floor.

"The key to get the students to come is to win games," said long-time UMass fan Alice Bishko. "Not just the students, but the fans will respond to a coach that builds a winning team."

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Obama campaigns in Philly

By Julio C. Nunez
Temple News

(U-WIRE) PHILADELPHIA - Just four days before the April 22 primary in Pennsylvania, Democratic presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama made another campaign stop in Philadelphia. This time, the turnout was higher than expected.

Frank Friel, director of security at the Independence Visitor Center, estimated that 35,000 people attended a rally for the senator Friday night. This turnout has been the biggest one so far in Obama's presidential campaign. The estimate increased from an initial prediction of 10,000 before the rally began, another official said.

In a joint effort, the Secret Service, local law enforcement agents and park rangers continuously scoped the area around Independence Hall for hours before the senator arrived.

The lines of people waiting for a chance to see Obama wrapped around Independence Hall and continued for several adjacent blocks. The crowd took its place around 6 p.m. and stuck around for more than three hours.

Obama began his speech by reminding people of the history of Independence Hall.

"It was over 200 years ago that a group of patriots gathered in this city to do something that no one in the world believed they could do – to declare their independence from the tyranny of the British throne," he said.

His ongoing messages of hope and change were also present in his speech. Before a cheering crowd, Obama vowed to change the way politics is conducted in America.

"It is time to declare our independence from the broken politics of Washington - the type of politics that's all about tearing each other down instead of lifting the country up," Obama said.

Important Announcement
REGISTRATION FOR Fall 2008

The Writing Program Placement Test

will be offered on:

Thursday, April 24 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 207

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Check us out on Facebook!

Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.

Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.

Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.

If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.

We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.

Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com

TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The big question

Chin up, UMass students. There's an important chancellor search going on right underneath your noses.

On Friday, April 11, four finalists were chosen from a pool of over 100 applicants to fill the spot of Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, who has been in his position since John V. Lombardi's departure last fall.

The candidates are Martin Hall, deputy vice chancellor of the University of Cape Town in South Africa; Harris Pastides, vice president for research and health sciences at the University of South Carolina and executive director of the University of South Carolina Research Foundation; Robert C. Holub, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville; and Satish K. Tripathi, provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Each of the four candidates visited the campus over the past 10 days, speaking with administrators, faculty, students and community members in extensive question and answer sessions.

Martin Hall presented himself as a leader focused on affordability, frank dialogue and attention to detail. His commitment to social justice and diversity is not just lip service; in an earlier position at the University of Cape Town, he led innovative efforts to overcome prejudice among faculty members and transform the student body to be more reflective of the South African population.

Satish Tripathi, currently provost and executive vice president for academic affairs at the State University of New York at Buffalo, foresees a well-rounded university. He said a truly educational undergraduate experience should combine formal curriculum and extracurricular activities.

Harris Pastides spoke mostly of the University's need to pursue funding through three major vectors – philanthropy, public-private partnerships and government endowments. A former administrator in the School of Public Health, Pastides said that "the stack of cards this University has is people," citing UMass's active student body, able faculty and involved community members.

Robert C. Holub said he was attracted to "a campus that wants to move forward," and hopes to improve UMass's reputation and prestige by increasing state and donor funding and attracting "high-achieving, ambitious students." He has a long background in public higher education, including more than two decades at the elite University of California, Berkeley, and he stressed the need to learn more about UMass by engaging with students and faculty.

Many are unsure exactly what a chancellor does, other than attend events and play "Man in the High Castle up on the Hilltop," the chancellor's house. It is important that UMass students be involved in the process, though, if for no other reason than the hefty sum you'll be paying for his salary.

Former chancellor Lombardi, who left last fall because of ideological differences between him and UMass system President Jack Wilson, earned a $347,500 base salary and a $24,325 annuity in 2007.

Are you listening now?

Chancellors serve as the figurehead of a university, guiding general policy decisions, handling unsightly public relations crises and representing a university to prospective donors and research partners. Only the most ardent micromanager could effect change in each department of a public institution dramatically. It is the chancellor's job, however, to set the priorities of a university – economically, culturally and academically.

Students who have observed the candidates or followed The Collegian's coverage of the selection process should e-mail thoughts and suggestions to skelly@umassp.edu.

Make yourself heard. This is a $400,000 question.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Bob Barker and reckless pet sex

Dustin Devlin

Bob Barker might be a robot, but he is definitely nuts. He has to be. Imagine the abuse: 30 years of orally-fixated assault from overweight housewives whose only meaning in life comes from spinning the giant wheel. Did he love it? I couldn't imagine so. He had to do it for a reason, a cause. The cause he reaffirmed day after monotonous day: "Help control the pet population. Get your pets spayed or neutered today!"

There are the facts: Anywhere between 10-20 million unwanted dogs in the world today. 50,000 pets are born each day. In six years, a bitch (c'mon people, in the dog sense) and her offspring can be the source of 67,000 puppies. But, I'm not going to give you the "facts".

No "facts" are needed to understand the inevitable consequence for all this reckless pet sex: world take over.

It all starts with a bad decision.

Your neighbor tells you about "Claude the Destroyer," a brutish, womanizing pit bull that lives on a nearby street. He says Claude has been known to jump on anything with four legs and good scent of urine and it looks like your pooch Dottie is certainly in his inseminating aim. But, you've been waiting to get ol' Dottie spayed, haven't you? Your girlfriend always thought it would be cute to have puppies. Cute.

Your girlfriend, who's obviously not ready for motherhood, starts to cross the days off the "My sweet puppy" novelty calendar she bought from Wal-Mart. Then, one day you come home from work and guess who's slimy dog uterus is all over your new couch? Dottie's. She's popped out 6 mutant mutts who are now pissing and puking all over your apartment. Cute, right?

You have to get rid of these things.

Your dumb girlfriend tells you to put up flyers, but the every telephone on the street is covered with the same freaking poster: "Free puppies! Free kittens! Free turtle babies! Free ferrets!"

The pets are multiplying. What are you going to do now?

Pet sex has given rise to the new apocalypse, and it's all because of your dumb girlfriend's obsession of cute little puppies.

You'll wait a few weeks. You may drive around on a Sunday desperately trying to give the mutant offspring away, but nobody wants Claude the Destroyer's bastard puppies. Your girlfriend is on your case because she found a dog turd in one her stilettos. That's when redemption comes in the form of a phone call from an interested pet owner.

Over the phone he sounds like Ace Ventura running an underground petting zoo. But, who cares, right? He's coming tomorrow to take the mutant puppies out of your life. The End.

Or, is it?

Six years go by. Remember that stat? I didn't just make it up. The once peaceful neighborhood has turned into a Disney movie on crack. "All Dogs Go to Heaven," my ass. This is Hell.

The pets have taken over. But, they aren't just pets anymore – more like zombies – the descendents of Claude and Dottie's little mishap. They're everywhere – cats, dogs, turtles, marmots, bears. Each day you wear a bionic suit to defend from rabies. You've mounted a plow on your car just to get to and from work. New breeds are beginning to arise like the fabled two-headed "CatDog" (yeah, it's possible). Pet sex has given rise to the new apocalypse, and it's all because of your dumb girlfriend's obsession with cute little puppies.

The worst news of all comes over the radio. The once immortal Bob Barker has died at 130 years of age. The former game show host and animal rights activist suffered a fatal attack by a flying cat. The creature latched on to Barker's neck, severing his jugular vein. He bled to death, cold and alone.

This is a sad and terribly ironic day, especially when you consider that Bob Barker mindless advice could have saved the human race from its perilous doom.

And to think you just thought he was a crazy old man … shame on you.

So, before that day of judgment arrives, do the world a favor. Help control the pet population. Get your pets spayed or neutered today.

Dustin Devlin is the producer of UMass Yak Back! on UVC-TV 19.

Pass the Manishewitz

Brad Leibowitz

Being a former Jew, this weekend I went home to help my parents (still Jewish) to celebrate Passover. I mostly went home for the company and the Manishewitz wine. For those of you out there who aren't Jewish or formerly Jewish, Manishewitz wine is what happens when Jews run a vineyard. The wine tastes more like grape juice than it does wine, which works perfectly because it rids your mouth of the bland food we Jews have to eat on Passover.

While home for the holiday, I began thinking about holidays in general. Aside from the reason why people celebrate holidays – which I am convinced is to drink like fishes and eat like gluttons – I began thinking about the true reason behind each holiday, i.e. the reason why we celebrate them. When you sit down for a Christmas dinner or a Passover Seder (again, for non-Jews, Seder is our way of saying, "eat till we burst"), do you really know what it is your celebrating?

While home for the holiday, I began thinking about holidays in general.

Take, for example, Christmas. Christmas, as most people believe, is the celebration of the birth of Jesus Christ. Every year on Dec. 25, Christians around the world give thanks for his birth; however, Christmas historically has absolutely nothing to do with the birth of Jesus. Here's the story: Before Jesus and his followers were the go-to religion, ancient Romans worshipped many gods. As it would go, on Dec. 25, the ancient Romans held a holiday which celebrated what the ancient Romans thought was the winter solstice. This holiday was called "Dies Natalis Solis Invicti" or "The Birthday of the Undefeated Sun."

The holiday itself worshipped a variety of different gods, those being the Syrian Sun God Elah-Gabal, Sol, and the God of Roman Emperor Aurelian and Mithras, a Persian God of the soldiers. The formal holiday was introduced sometime between 215-225 A.D. by Emperor Elagabalus, reaching its height in popularity some 50 odd years after under Emperor Aurelian. It wasn't until Sextus Julius Africanus that Dec. 25 started to become associated with the birth of Christ.

A Christian historian, Sextus Julius Africanus wrote a five part series called "Chronografiai" or "A History of the World." In it, besides from determining that Christ was born on Dec. 25, he also calculated that the Earth, at the time of Jesus' birth, was only 5,500 years old. He calculated that Christ was born on the Dec. 25 by determining, I suppose from scripture, that Incarnation Day took place nine months before his birth on March 25.

Incarnation Day, for those of you who don't know, was the day Mary was told that she was having a child.

Another key thing to note here is that shown in the biblical scripture, from the clothes the Magi were said to be wearing (traditional Persian dress of trousers and Phrygian hats) it would make sense that Jesus was born sometime in the summer months. For anyone who has ever been to Israel in the winter time you know that you need more then just dress pant suit with a hat to walk around comfortably.

With this being said, it is quite obvious what happened. When push came to shove, early Christians needed to find a way for Christianity to flourish; they did this by adopting the policy of, if ya can't beat um, join um. To rid ancient Rome of its anti-Christian religions, the Church adopted the idea that its saviors birth would coincide with the Dies Natalis Solis Invicti so to win over anti-Christians.

So I am sorry to say, but for everyone who celebrates Christmas to commemorate Christ's birth, you are really continuing the celebration of the sun and its many gods.

This misinformation is common in the celebration of a large amount of holidays. Chanukah, the Jewish holiday that runs side by side with Christmas, is said to be the celebration of the re-dedication of the Holy Temple in Jerusalem after its destruction by Antiochus IV and the miracle of the oil which followed. Yet, this is not true.

The truth behind this holiday is that little Jewish kids, seeing all their Christian friends receiving presents on Dec. 25, began pouting to their parents. After years of stomping their feet and throwing their Star of David necklaces in the garbage, the kids finally won and began receiving presents. However, so to be sure that they outdid their Christ-loving counterparts, the Jewish kids demanded eight days of presents instead of one.

Note to reader: The previous paragraph is completely true.

In the end, just remember that the holiday you are celebrating is probably a big crock built around a web of lies, perpetrated by some guy looking for power.

So you see, the holidays we celebrate aren't always clear cut. While one person celebrates because they want to honor the birth or death of a deity, another person might celebrate it because of the people it brings him or her close to. Personally, I do it for the wine. Man oh man, is that Manishewitz good.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

NOT QUITE FASCISM

Dear Editor:

Re: "Resisting Conformity in the Political Arena," Joshua Wilder, Ed/Op, April 22, 2008

There I was, peacefully reading about Obama's ordeal with his flag lapel pin. I was almost finished with Joshua Wilder's passionate exploration of "true patriotism," and I had only grumbled a couple of times. Mostly, I was wondering if Wilder will be as forgiving of the next white person whom the press pillories for allegedly racist comments as he was to Rev. Jeremiah Wright in calling him merely "kooky."

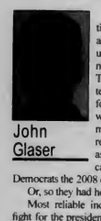
I was almost to the end, and then Wilder went and dropped the "F" bomb on me. In his defense, he did say that Obama's flag pin nightmare only reminded him of fascism, and not that it is actual fascism, but the way he left it hanging there at the end of a paragraph, and almost at the end of the whole column, made it clear that he was only trying to sound reasonable.

Clearly, he would like to accuse everyone who does not vote for Obama because of his refusal to wear a flag lapel pin of being an actual fascist. However, as with Obama's inspirational campaign rhetoric, if Wilder is going to write a column based on shaming people with words, you had better make sure that you use the correct words in the proper way.

In fact, Obama's caustic response to why he does not wear a flag lapel pin is more of an issue for me than the flag lapel pin itself. Recall that he accused all those who wear the pin of artificial patriotism when he explained why he doesn't wear the flag lapel pin "that became a substitute for I think true patriotism, which is speaking out on issues that are of importance to our national security, I decided I won't wear that pin on my chest."

Unfortunately for Wilder, his characterization is totally inaccurate. Fascism is when someone forces you to do something that you should be free to decide for yourself. I don't recall seeing any breaking news about government goons tackling Obama and carting him off to jail for not wearing a flag lapel pin.

Fascist nations, and socialist dictatorships like Bolivia and Cuba, are where they hold an election but have only one candidate on the ballot. What we have here in this country is a democratic republic with two major parties, plus Ralph Nader and Ron Paul, giving us a choice of who to vote for. We may not often like the choices we have, but there is always a choice, nonetheless.



To ensure the sanctity of that choice, we have a secret balloting process in America in order to protect our right to use whatever criteria we wish in casting our votes. I certainly support Wilder's right to disregard the flag lapel pin issue, or the Rev. Wright issue, or the William Ayres issue, or the "bitter and clinging to guns and religion" comments issue, or any other issues when he votes for Obama in November.

Yet it seems by the tone of his screed that he would wish to deny me my right to consider all of those things and others when I decide for myself who to vote for. Now what does that remind me of, it is on the tip of my tongue – oh yes, fascism.

Ben Rudnick
UMass student

Ed/Op is hiring columnists for this semester and has editing positions opening for the fall.
Inquire at editorial@dailycollegian.com

The do-nothing Democrats versus old man McCain

John Glaser

To paint the presumptive Republican nominee as unsatisfactory may be an understatement, but that's not my biggest concern. The last two presidential terms, being so full of folly as they were, along with waves of clueless primary voters that somehow regarded John McCain as the most impressive candidate, have handed Democrats the 2008 election.

Or, so they had hoped.

Most reliable indicators suggest that this fight for the presidency, whoever may oppose John McCain will indeed be neck and neck for at least a while. This is the pathetic reality that some Democrats gasp at in disbelief, but most deny it completely. Yet, the Democratic Party, an impotent company if there ever was one, can't seem to take advantage of today's political realities.

First, let us consider aesthetics alone. The famous Kennedy-Nixon debates (first ever televised) taught us that looks matter in general elections. The taller, more handsome, more charismatic candidate is always more likely to take the cake.

Problem: McCain is rotting. He's 71 years old, short, white as snow and has trouble with articulation despite help from teleprompters. Up against Clinton, who is one of the most practiced, professional politicians around, and Obama, arguably the most electrifying candidate in recent memory, the contest is laughable. Right?

The economy has soared to the number one issue Americans consider, and John McCain remains the only candidate to openly admit that he "still need[s] to be educated" on the workings of the economy. He said "The issue of economics is not something I've understood as well as I should." Has this torn away his support among voters? Well, no.

No Republican nominee, that I can remember, has been as vehemently rejected by conservative pundits as has John McCain. Rush Limbaugh said his election would mean the end of the party. Ann Coulter said she'd vote for Hillary before McCain. His Senatorial record led Patrick Ruffini to sum him up in this way: "a tax-loving, free speech-crushing, amnesty-awarding, big government Republican nominee." McCain has since recanted his position on taxes, but Republicans love to hate a flip flopper (see: Kerry, campaign 2004).

Finally, McCain is vying to preside over a nation of citizens who overwhelmingly reject his one pet issue – the Iraq War. A solid majority of Americans regard our presence in Iraq as either illegitimate or ineffective. 59 percent of adults want our troops out, in entirety, within one year. He is viewed by many as the best qualified to handle the war, but time after time, he showcases his ignorance on the matter. The guy doesn't know a Sunni from a Shiite, Iran from Iraq, and thinks everyone resisting occupation is al Qaeda. McCain, it turns out, is inept in the one area in which he claims expertise.

The state of discontent these Bush years have rendered should guarantee a Democratic victory, but they're not.

The McCain candidacy appears as feeble as his stride and as senile as his psyche. Still, his nationwide numbers remain competitive for the Democrats. Additionally, the state of discontent these Bush years have rendered should guarantee a Democratic victory, but they're not.

Talk of presumptive (my own presumption) Democratic nominee Barack Obama's unelectable candidacy isn't just conservative propaganda. Any way you cut it, his chances are as slim in the general election as McCain's would intuit.

National head-to-head polls show McCain beating Obama (and Hillary) 48 percent to 43 percent, while Real Clear Politics averages the head-to-head polls as more of a neck-and-neck battle. Rasmussen shows Democrats leading in states with 190 Electoral College votes while Republicans are favored in states with 189 votes. States with 121 votes are "leaners," and states with 38 votes are toss-ups. This is not the blowout expected by many who pained through the disastrous Bush years.

The two demographic groups that Obama holds dominance over are African Americans and young people. Unfortunately for him, these are two blocs that have historically voted in very light numbers. Time will tell whether the past seven years have incited enough of them to actually show up at the polls, but don't bet your mortgage on it.

The Bush administration has chosen to segue the 2008 election with a prolonged, unpopular war, an unstable economy, giant failed bureaucracies and more controversies than one can count on both hands, and the Democrats are still having a tough time getting votes? Bush failures and John McCain's nomination have effectively delivered the election to Democrats on a silver platter sprinkled with pixie dust, and they still have a good chance of losing?

Bravo, I say, to the liberal agenda.

As a libertarian, a Democratic presidency stimulates my gag reflex as much as a Republican one, but if the Democrats don't win this one, they will have proven me wrong in my contention that these two parties have gone as low as they can possibly go.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A taste of something different

Annual UMass dining services event to take over at Mullins

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

Tonight, when you head down to your local DC for your evening meal, don't besurprised if you are turned away. No, there isn't a strike. There hasn't been a kitchen fire. The University hasn't simply run out of food – quite the contrary, in fact. Tonight, University of Massachusetts Dining Services is pulling out all the stops, redirecting all their resources to the Mullins Center for an event they like to call, "Taste of UMass."

Anyone who has had a meal on campus in the past few weeks has probably seen the flyers for this event, but many students haven't given it much thought. Yes, it is a big event, but what motivation does the average student have to attend? Well, first off, all UMass Dining Commons will be closed from 3-9 p.m. Although Worcester and Berkshire will reopen at 9:00 p.m., those who cherish their regularly scheduled dinner time will have to hop on a bus to the Mullins Center. While that may be a good enough reason for many students, it does not have to be the only one.

"Taste of UMass" is an annual event put on by the University, and this year's theme is "Global Dining, Smart Eating." 75 different booths will be set up, featuring cuisine from Mexico, Spain, Vietnam and the Mediterranean, among other regions.

"The whole point of the event is to show off the power of the DCs to do something different, in a different venue," said Ken Toong, Executive Director of Dining services at UMass. "There's lots of healthy eating options, with small portions so you can try them all."

Not all of the stations will be run by the school, however. Many local farmers and health food companies will have booths at the event, spreading the good word about local foods.

"One of our goals is to promote local eating," said Toong. "Fresh flavors are very important." Major distributors such as Tyson will also be in attendance, testing out new products on the UMass students. Being a guinea pig has never been so delicious.

For those who are not terribly enthusiastic about sampling food, the event will also be packed with entertainment. Many of the featured acts are centered on the culinary arts, such as demonstrations by celebrity chef Martin Yan on the science of stir-fry. Others, however, are purely for entertainment purposes.

The finals of UMass Idol will be held, as well as a battle of the bands, featuring four different student rock bands competing for prizes. Iron Chef UMass will also hold it's finals at the event. While the Idol singing contest is a returning favorite this year, the Iron Chef competition is a newcomer, featuring four teams of three students, each team representing their respective dining hall. It will be moderated by "Iron Chef America" co-host Kevin Brauch, bringing a level of professionalism to the competition.

Also professionally-hosted will be the hot dog eating contest, sponsored by Nathan's Famous Hot Dogs. Judged by an official Nathan's MC, the contest will give its 12 participants 12 minutes to devour as many grilled wieners as possible. Any student brave enough to take down 16 or more will be eligible to go to Coney Island for the world's largest professional eating competition.

The UMass Dining Services recently won the Restaurants and Institutions Magazine's Ivy Award, given to institutions that demonstrate the highest standards of food service.

"We try hard to keep everyone happy" said Toong. "If you eat the same thing every night, you get bored, so we always try new things." And they have certainly made strides towards that goal. Next year they plan to expand their chef exchange program to include a dozen universities from across the country, Mexico and Canada.

Taste of UMass is the single largest campus foodservice event in the nation and this year they expect to serve upwards of 8,000 people. The doors open at 4 p.m., and special busses will be transporting students to the Mullins center all evening. It is by far the largest dining event of the year on campus, and, in the words of Ken Toong, "it'll be exciting. It'll be fun."

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheri1@student.umass.edu

The annual Taste of UMass will be held tonight at the Mullins Center, complete with a variety of food and entertainment, including UMass Idol and a hot dog eating contest.

Superfood to the rescue for diet season

So-called "superfoods" allow you to trim your waistline without resorting to expensive specialized diets.

With summer on the way, self-consciousness is on the rise. For some people, it is now "crunch time" – time to hit the gym and sculpt the quintessential beach bod. Those old diets that failed before are given another try with new hopes of greater willpower. People everywhere are counting points and calories, and wolfing down grapefruit and celery (mmm… negative calories).

Barbara Booras

As an avid non-believer in diets, I feel that there are other ways to maintain a healthy lifestyle, while at the same time, enjoying great food.

According to Cheryl Forberg, R.D., a registered dietician and chef, there are a number of what are referred to as "superfoods" that, when worked into your diet along with regular exercise, will give your immune system a much-needed boost and send you on your way to living a healthier lifestyle.

Forberg is not the only one raving about the super foods. Dr. Stephen Pratt wrote his bestselling book, "SuperFoods Rx: Fourteen Foods That Will Change Your Life," entirely on the subject.

The original list consisted of only 14 items, but it is continuously growing with now approximately 25 different foods, ranging from oils to fruits, vegetables and spices too. Some of the superfoods are beans, blueberries, garlic, broccoli, oats, pomegranates, cinnamon, pumpkin, salmon, soy, spinach, tea (green or black), tomatoes, garlic, turkey, walnuts and yogurt.

According to the SuperFoods Rx official Web site, "these foods were chosen because they contain high concentrations of crucial nutrients, as well as the fact that many of them are low in calories."

Here, I've broken down exactly what benefits and nutrients some of the 25 superfoods provide:

Beans are a low-fat alternate source of protein and iron to red meat. Red meat, when consumed in excess, is likely to raise your LDLs, or bad cholesterol level. Beans additionally provide a great source of fiber, B vitamins, folate, potassium, magnesium and multiple phytonutrients. They're also perfect for a college student's budget. You can buy canned or dried beans for the fraction of the cost of even a low-grade steak.

Blueberries are filled with vitamin C and potassium. Also, these little gems are packed with antioxidants which fight against cell-damaging free radicals and in turn prevent the development of cancer causing agents. When you can't get them in season, frozen berries are still a good source of nutrients and usually more affordable than fresh.

One of my personal favorite vegetables, broccoli, made this list. Now there are even more reasons to love this veggie, with its strong inverse association with colon and other cancers. Particularly for smokers "younger than 65 with a history of smoking," according to the Web site, broccoli significantly lowers your risk of cancer. As little as a half an ounce a day of raw broccoli will not only fight off cancer, but

See SUPERFOODS on page 8

Symposium to discuss public art issues

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

The island in the campus pond is an oft-traveled student shortcut, allowing one to bypass the concrete behind the University of Massachusetts' Fine Arts Center in favor of a more natural path from class to class, though many students may not see the island for what it actually is – a work of public art.

Proposed in 1980, the island project got underway in 1981 thanks to renowned New York City-based public artist, George Trakas.

"A lot of people just use it, not knowing it's art," Trakas said. He doesn't have a problem with this, and revels in the uses the island provides, claiming, "I really like people to stop on their daily routine to just think a little bit."

With the installation of bridges to and from the island, it was made a public place, an iconic center of campus which acts as a meeting place, a duck-feeding point, and at the very least, a logistical convenience.

This week marks the completion of restorations of the island and its offerings, with Trakas completing replacement of benches, refinishing railings, and even planting a new tree. These touch ups come in celebration of the University Gallery-sponsored symposium "Art in the Public Sphere: Singular Works, Plural Possibilities," running all day Friday from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, with a University Gallery opening and reception will take place in the University Gallery from 5:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. Friday evening. Nearly 200 works were submitted from around the world, with a UMass panel of professors narrowing the exhibit down to the 44 most powerful pieces.

The symposium will cover the many difficulties in public art, namely legalities, funding and temporality. In today's heated political climate, political art and activism can come at great cost. If a public artist does not communicate with the community in which his work will exist, backlash can occur and private, individual action can take place in the form of vandalism and destruction.

Politically charged art can create divisions within its audience. To avoid this, an artist must engage with his or her community in order to feel out what would fly and what would not. Other potential dangers for public art include environmental as well as general safety, for one does not want to be held accountable for damaging an ecosystem or putting one's young child in the hospital after a fall from a dangerous structure.

These fears are based in reality, as Trakas' campus pond island was the center of a stint of activism back in 1982, where a heated political demonstration took place against gender-specific dorms. His iconic island was the platform for their outcries, and he even recollected slides he saw of the students hanging all over the Fine Arts Center and the island, demonstrating their right to speak out while using his work of art as their point of reference.

While public art is more federally funded in urban areas, middle-sized towns like Amherst or Northampton struggle with commissions and funding in this area. In an urban area such as New York City, countless people are going to pass by any given public work of art daily, where it may not have the same effect in a smaller town.

One of the factors disallowing students and the public to understand that Trakas' island is piece of public art is its lack of acknowledgement.

"There's no plaque in the wall," explains Trakas. Aside from maybe a note about where funding came from, a modest Trakas needs not be praised for his work.

Yarlow's main goals for this weekends symposium are short and sweet - "to find a way to connect art with communities through the symposium" and to "bring people, art and landscape together." Like many other fledgling fields, public art has yet to work its way into the UMass classroom, though Yarlow mentioned UMass art history professor and symposium moderator Mario Onviteros' hopes for public art to become part of the arts department's future curriculum.

"We want to change the mindset and role of art," Yarlow explains, alluding to art's importance as an activist entity and a force to bring ideas and, most importantly, people together.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

The landmark bridge over the campus pond, used as a short-cut for many students, is actually a work of art created by George Trakas, who will be a panelist at this weekend's art symposium.

Healthy foods help trim waist

SUPERFOODS from page 7

also boost your immune system, prevent cardio-vascular disease, cataracts and to top it all of it will keep your bones strong. Broccoli is the perfect vegetable for multiple cooking techniques. To incorporate more in your diet throw some on top of your salad raw, mix some into a pasta dish, or use it as a topping on pizza. Steaming is the best alternative to raw broccoli, as it leaves its nutrients intact.

Recent studies have proven that consumption of one half of a clove of garlic daily will help fight cancer, promote cardiovascular health and decrease your LDL levels and increase your HDL (you guessed it, good cholesterol) levels. Moreover, in studies involving mice and various strains of pathogens, garlic has been proven effective in its use as an anti-biotic. If you're in need of an immune system boost, you can pop some garlic pills which are available at most pharmacies, or you can head over to your local Italian restaurant and load up on one of the oldest cultivated plants in the world.

Finally are two superfoods that compliment each other's flavors perfectly - honey and cinnamon. Honey, which is loaded with anti-oxidants, fights cancer and keeps your blood sugar at an optimal level longer, as opposed to artificial or cane based sugars. Discoveries of the benefits of cinnamon for people who suffer from type II diabetes have been tremendous. A control group was given half a teaspoon of fresh ground cinnamon daily and it resulted in a decrease in the overall group's cholesterol, LDLs, triglycerides and, most importantly in this case, glucose levels.

Lastly, I've included a tasty recipe that uses simple ingredients and two of the superfoods. Not only is this recipe a steady source of energy and good for you, but the ingredients are all readily available and can even be found in the dining commons. It is what is referred to as the Jerry Seinfeld. This signature snack, according to the well-known comedian, helped him survive his first few years as a new comedian.

Peanut Butter & Co. is a unique restaurant in Greenwich Village, N.Y., serving up an entirely peanut butter based menu. The Jerry Seinfeld is a staple on this New York City hangout's menu. Although peanut butter did not make the cut on the superfoods list, it does have an excellent nutritional properties and it has an exceptional source of protein and niacin, which increases your HDLs. The Jerry Seinfeld consists of a toasted New York Bagel (wheat if possible), a couple of tablespoons of peanut butter, a drizzle of honey and a final dusting of cinnamon.

As you can see, good nutrition doesn't have to be flavorless, restrictive or boring. Simply by incorporating some of Dr. Stephen Pratt's superfoods in your diet, you will already be well on your way to a healthier lifestyle with just a few easy-to-make food choices.

Barbara Booras can be reached at Bbooras@gmail.com.

Diverse media, inspirations make for interesting exhibit

By Sophia Pastore
Collegian Correspondent

Art should be insightful and thought provoking. If it isn't, then it should at least be beautiful. The work currently being housed in Southwest's Hampden Gallery is the rare combination of all three.

Laura "Lola" Baltzell describes herself on her Web site as "a self-taught painter, yoga teacher and bilingual clinical social worker, living and working in the Boston area." She labels her work "primitive pop," a name derived from her lack of classical training and use of color.

Her recent collection, "Bright Promises," can be viewed inside the Incubator Project Space at the Hampden Gallery. All of the pieces are mixed-media collages inspired by her childhood in small-town Iowa and the time she spent in the rural town of Leyden, Mass., near the Vermont border.

Each collage demands close inspection and a keen eye. Glimpses of maps, sheet music, pages from the Bible, and sewing patterns can be seen amid cutouts of flowers, original drawings and meandering streaks of paint.

The layering effect of her work pulls the viewer into what seems to be a sweet nostalgic time warp, full of old postcards and pages torn from books. Baltzell, in her artist's statement, describes these pieces as a representation of "the way my parents and the larger culture attempted to raise a generation with the expectation of a predictable, safe future."

Another artist showcased is Alicia Adams Hunsicker, a graduate of the University of Massachusetts, who "strive(s) to create a visual language that evokes deep feelings of the divine feminine/masculine and the spirit of the natural world," according to her Web site. She is an accomplished artist and photographer who boasts an extensive resume as well as the largest current exhibit in the Hampden Gallery.

Hunsicker's collection, titled "Between the Darkness and the Light" is a series of paintings that contain a reoccurring theme of imagery – eggs, nests, human bones and fleeting images of the female form. The work is done mostly in soft shades of blue, brown, yellow and white.

The ethereal nature of the pieces hint at fertility and a union between humanity and the Earth. A physical manifestation of the paintings stands in the middle of the room: branches suspended from the ceiling and strings holding an egg over an abstract nest formation. Little nests full of eggs sit in corners of the room and ledges on the wall.

"I have been inspired by the powerful aesthetic and creative whimsy of indigenous artisans around the world for many decades," says Deborah Garner, another artist on display, on her Web site. She is not only an artist, but has also worked "as a collector and dealer of tribal and folk art for over 30 years," the site says.

Garner's "Astral Journeys, Inner Worlds" is a display of what she calls "postcards form the Edge of Consciousness." She describes herself in her artist's statement as "a dreamer by nature and disposition" and seeks to express the nature of her dreams through her art.

The result of this exploration is haunting and whimsical. Images of women shrouded and huddling under trees are paired with blurred figures of people swimming through dreamy, unfixed landscapes of monoprint art. References to India are clear – pictures of snake charmers and parades of cows are mixed with other media to form surreal images of red skies and shifting landscapes.

The work of these women, though staggeringly different, is all worth seeing. The art itself can be purchased, but for a price that far exceeds the means of the average college student.

The three exhibits will remain in the Hampden Gallery until Tuesday, April 29. Hours are Monday through Thursday from noon to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN/SOPHIA PASTORE

The Hampden Gallery at UMass is showcasing the diverse work of three women. The artists used different media and drew from different experiences in their lives to create the exhibits.

Students enjoy home-made Ghanaian peanut butter soup

By Andrew Sheridan
Collegian Staff

In a small cramped kitchen, on a scorching hot Saturday afternoon, Fred Obeng-Ampofo stands over a hot stove, grinning from ear to ear. He dices onions, blends tomatoes and cubes chicken, shouting "miracles happen" in regards to finding a pot big enough to hold it all. He is smiling not only because he is on camera, but because of his almost palpable enthusiasm for cooking his favorite dish: African peanut butter soup.

The camera is there because he is filming a cooking special for UVC19 Amherst cable entitled "UMass Loves Peanut Butter Soup." The pot needs to be big because Fred has invited close to 30 of his friends, in an effort to share his culture.

Fred, or "Freddy-Fred" to his friends, was born in the African nation of Ghana. In September of 2001, he left his family and moved to the United States, in search of opportunity.

"It was the week after 9/11, so you can imagine how that was," he said. Despite immigration difficulties, Fred has grown to love his adopted country. Holding a permanent residence in Worcester, Mass., he is currently in his senior year here at the University of Massachusetts, where he is double majoring in social thought and political economy and journalism.

As for the dish itself, peanut butter soup is unlike anything typically found in the States. It consists of a puree of tomato and red onion, along with diced meat of the cook's choice (when asked of his choice of meat, Obeng-Ampofo replied "chicken, because America loves chicken"). The peanut butter itself is dissolved into water to make a sort of bisque, and added to the aforementioned ingredients.

Watching his cable special, it is easy to see how enthusiastic the cook was about his native dish.

"It's very simple, and you're gonna love it," Obeng-Ampofo spouts over and over again. He pays special attention to cleanliness and measures every ingredient out according to the recipe, which he has distributed to all assembled. "A little bit of Africa right here at UMass," he said.

After an hour of cooking, lecturing and chatting with his friends, Obeng-Ampofo finally declares the soup to be finished. Right off the stove, the piping hot concoction is served over white rice, turning the thin mixture into more of a stew than anything else. Seasoned with Ghanaian spices and hot chili peppers, the dish packs a good bit of spice on top of natural heat, and the peanut-butter flavor does not overwhelm. It has a taste all its own, a creamy sensation which is hard to pin down and even harder to forget.

This past Saturday was not the first time Obeng-Ampofo has made this dish for his friends. Three years ago, upon noticing that no African dishes were ever served in the dining commons, Fred spoke to director of dining services Ken Toong, saying "I'm going to make peanut butter soup." Toong informed him that there was no room in the Dining Services menu for his beloved dish, but Fred, undeterred, took matters into his own hands, organizing his own event and feeding upwards of 40 people.

The decision to repeat this event was based on the importance he puts on diversity.

"I decided to do it because our cluster is very diverse, not just ethnically but in the sense that we have different interests," he said. "Difference is something that we are comfortable with, and I wanted to share my culture."

Through his cooking, Obeng-Ampofo accomplished his goal of spreading diversity and cultural awareness.

"I just wanted to bring a taste of Africa to the students. It's a very simple dish and I thought Americans would love it," he said. And while he is a first-rate cook in his own right, if variety is the spice of life, consider Obeng-Ampofo the next Emeril Lagasse.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asher1@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN/KELSEY DEMELLO

On Saturday afternoon, Ghana native Fred Obeng-Ampofo made peanut butter soup for his friends and neighbors, a traditional Ghanaian dish.

FREE THE PANCHEN LAMA NOW!

FREE TIBET RALLY AND WALK

Steps of Student Union to Northampton

Friday, April 25, 2008 at 11:30am

Come show your support for Tibet

Sponsored by Umass Students For a Free Tibet & Local Tibetan Community

Change in net pays dividends

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

A strong, late push is better than sputtering out into nothing. The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team made such a push nine games ago, securing the No. 3 spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Several changes made during the season allowed the Minutewomen (6-10, 4-3 A-10) to make a late-season run. The removal of freshman Colleen Speth from goal in favor of senior Krissy Anderson paid immediate dividends; UMass went 3-1 after the change between the pipes.

Not to say that Speth hasn't been effective. Speth is a very vocal goalkeeper and an active defender, grabbing 14 ground balls and causing three turnovers. Speth, a freshman, was thrown into the fire early this season and faced 52 more shots in 10 games than Anderson saw in nine.

The Maroon and White feed off of each other's energy and convert it to effective play. The Minutewomen aren't an up-tempo team, however. UMass coach Alexis Venechanos favors setting up the offense behind the goal and finding the open player for the score.

When the Minutewomen display proper execution of the fundamentals, they fare much better in games. In its 10 losses, they turned the ball over 155 times and committed 206 fouls. However, in six wins, UMass turned the ball over just 90 times and committed 167 fouls.

Sophomore attack Stephanie Hopkins played in 12 regular season games, 10 coming off of the bench. She's cut down last year's total of 18 turnovers in 15 games to just eight in 12 games this year. Hopkins' starting time is less than that of last year, but her role-playing ability has been invaluable for the Minutewomen this season.

Defensive x-factor

The trio of Jeanette Villapiano, Jackie Rosenzweig and Julie Papaleo anchor the UMass defensive front. Both Rosenzweig and Papaleo started all 16 games of the regular season. The pair have the highest individual ground ball totals on the team – Rosenzweig with 32 and Papaleo with 27, respectively.

Papaleo has an extra year's worth of experience over Rosenzweig, a junior, though Rosenzweig's stats are almost identical to that of Papaleo, except for her 15 turnovers and 37 fouls. Papaleo has eight turnovers and 18 fouls.

Even with her success this season, Papaleo has a chip on her shoulder going into the A-10 Tournament against the Richmond Spiders (9-8, 6-1 A-10).

"I think that we have a lot to prove coming off of kind of a big weekend that we just had [against Saint Bonaventure and Duquesne]," Papaleo said. "So I think that we're ready to go back at it with Richmond."

Midfielder/defender Villapiano saw her share of offensive action during the regular season. She finished the regular season with 13 goals, 17 ground balls and a tie with freshman attack Kelsey Schreiner for the team lead in draw controls, with 30.

Rosenzweig is a scrappy defender who is just as much of a ball-hawk as Papaleo. One of the only glaring differences between the two is that Rosenzweig is notably more physical and because of this, commits more fouls.

Making an impact

Schreiner's five goals against Saint Joseph's (7-9, 2-5 A-10) and La Salle (1-15, 0-7 A-10) earned her the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award on April 14th. Her four goals against the Explorers is a career high. Schreiner finished the weekend with five draw controls, two ground balls and one caused turnover. Her accuracy was lethal – she took just six shots on the weekend.

She is one of Venechanos' pleasant surprises this year. She and fellow attack Jackie Lyons are the only freshmen to start all 16 games for the Minutewomen. They also tie each other for fifth on the team with eight points (eight goals, three assists).

Lyons has contributed significantly for the team as well. Her two goals against Holy Cross, team-lead for the week in ground balls, and caused turnovers in week one of the season lead to her first rookie of the week award. Her second came last week after outstanding games against the Dukes and Bonnies. Lyons notched a goal, two assists and five draw controls to earn the distinction.

Lyons is the first player since senior attack Kathleen Typadis to earn multiple rookie awards.

She finished the season with 20 ground balls, 17 draw controls and nine caused turnovers.

UMass and Richmond are the only A-10 programs to have four freshmen earn Rookie of the Week honors ... Senior attack Melynda Zwick needs one point to have 100 for her career. Her 17 assists this season is a career best and moves her into eighth place all-time in career assists with 39. She needs six more to move her to fifth place ... The Minutewomen are tied with Duquesne for the second best all-time record in league play at 39-26. Richmond is tops at 56-9

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN STEVENS/COLLEGIAN

Goalkeeper Krissy Anderson has helped the Minutewomen make a late-season run, going 3-1 in their final four games.

Minutewomen look to upset Spiders had three multiple-goal scorers and we're really excited to have the opportunity to play them again. We're learning a lot from our last month and we're very confident going into the game."

W LAX from page 12

With the Spiders having multiple serious goal-scoring threats, Venechanos will have to go to her bench often. She will especially need help from junior midfielder Meghan Reddy (seven goals) and junior attack Julie Pasquantonio (six goals), neither of which have started a game this season but have seen significant playing time in each game that they've played in.

Another must for UMass is the increased comfort level of senior Krissy Anderson in goal. In order for Anderson to be at her best, her defenders have to be effective in front of her and get ground balls, cause turnovers and be as effective on clears as they have been all season.

Considering that the Minutewomen allowed two Spiders to score five goals and still had a chance to win in the second half, it's imperative that they do the little things correctly, i.e. controlling draws, converting clears and cutting down on turnovers.

The Minutewomen converted 26 of 52 free position shots in their last nine games and the game against Richmond was no different. UMass converted five-of-seven eight-meter shots and held the Spiders to just four-of-10.

The Maroon and White played a very physical game in Virginia, earning 33 fouls to Richmond's 15. Junior defender Jackie Rosenzweig earned 10 of those fouls and red-shirt sophomore attack Kaytlin McCormick tallied five.

Both McCormick and Rosenzweig are very physical players at their respective positions. Rosenzweig leads the team in fouls, with 27 and the two players are tied for the highest yellow card total on the team, with 6.

The team leaders in fouls on each team are both impact players. Rosenzweig's 20 caused turnovers and 32 ground balls lead the team in both categories. Along with McCormick and sophomore attack Merritt Cosgrove, she has started every game of her career.

For Richmond, junior attack Mandy Friend is a player to watch out for. Her 34 fouls and 86 points lead the team and she is second in team scoring with 51 goals. She is also lethal on the other side of the ball, notching a team-leading 38 caused turnovers. She is a threat from 8-meters (17 free position goals) as well, but the Minutewomen rendered her scoreless in that category last time out.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Drown playing multiple roles

DROWN from page 12

adjusted."

So far this season, Drown has nine points (seven goals, two assists) and 11 draw controls. Even as a defender the junior has been able to help with the scoring success of the Minutewomen.

Her experience as an attacker has contributed significantly to her success as a defender. Drown, the second leading scorer from 2007, is able to predict where the other team's attacker is going to go.

"She reads things really well," Venechanos said. "It comes from her being a natural goal scorer. She knows where the other attacking players want to be. She communicates really well and she has a presence on the field. She'll do anything for the team to win."

Drown has meshed well with the rest of the defensive unit to add to their late season victories and increase their chances of success in this weekend's Atlantic 10 Tournament.

"Having her playing defense with me has really made our defense a lot stronger," Papaleo said. "The communication is there and we really gel together well when she's back there. We play really well as a unit."

Not only has Drown become one of the top players on the team, she is seen as one of its leaders.

"I think a lot of people look up to her because of the transitions she's had to make, being a midfielder and then coming back and playing defense," Papaleo said. "I think she's really someone to look up to because it's a really hard transition to make when you are a junior."

Drown is seen as the ultimate team player who would do anything to help the Minutewomen win.

"Drown is willing to learn new concepts and new defensive things that we do that coach puts out there," Papaleo said. "She's really open-minded and a great leader and talker. I think overall she's really great to have back there."

Her versatility has added to the success of the Minutewomen in the second half of their season and this weekend should prove no differently. Drown plays different positions on the same shift, and she is known to have one of the best sticks on the team.

"She goes and plays and scores some goals too. It's great to have another weapon back there," Venechanos said. "If she has an alley to go, she has the green light to score and she can do it. It gives us another lethal piece to our defense."

Drown and the rest of the Minutewomen will take on top-seeded Richmond on Friday at 1 p.m. to start their run at an Atlantic 10 Championship.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

Holly Drown has seven goals and two assists on the year, as well as nine ground balls and 11 draw controls.

Dukes, Owls set for showdown

DUQUESNE from page 12

or top-20 teams," Scerbo said.

Meanwhile, the Owls breezed through the conference schedule with a six-game winning streak, suffering their only loss to Richmond in double overtime, 11-10. The Spiders earned themselves the tie-breaker for the A-10 regular season championship with the win over Temple.

Temple's offense is top-heavy with its three seniors. Canigla (2.33 goals per game), Whitney Richards (2.60) and Berkley Summerlin (2.27) have a combined 108 goals this season. All three are in the top 10 for goals per game in the A-10.

Richards was named A-10 Player of the Week three times this season with her play on the offensive end.

On March 30, she scored two goals in the second half against Duquesne to ice the game for the Owls. Richards also recorded the game-winning goal with just over a minute remaining in the second overtime to secure the victory, 10-9, over Rutgers on April 16.

If the Lady Dukes are going to win this game, they must stop the Owls' offense from getting on the board early in the game. Of Temple's 174 goals this season, 103 came in the first half. However, Duquesne's defense doesn't look nearly as formidable against the Owls, forcing 6.44 turnovers per game.

"Temple is an outstanding team and for us to beat Temple, we have to focus on the complete game," Scerbo said. "We're going to need to focus on every aspect of the game. We should be able to make a game out of this."

McNish has been the offensive spark for the Lady Dukes, leading the team in goals (31) and assists (43). The attack broke the tie against UMass with 13 seconds left Sunday to extend their winning streak. She is currently on a 15-game scoring streak.

In the final week of the regular season, McNish earned her second Co-Player of the Week Honor with 12 points on five goals and seven assists.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmil0@student.umass.edu

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD

Special Student Rate

Local-National Placement

Includes Certification

1-800-357-3210

BostonBartender.com

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Home for the summer?

Take a course.

Enroll in a summer course at MWCC and transfer it back to your college or university this fall.

MWCC credits transfer to most colleges across the country. It's easily done, usually through your college's registrar's office. Check there first to ensure the course meets their requirements. Once you complete your MWCC course, request a transcript from the MWCC Enrollment Center to transfer the credit to your home institution.

You can complete a course in five to ten weeks!

ENG101	English Composition I
ENG102	English Composition II
ECO101	Macroeconomics
ECO102	Microeconomics
PSY105	Introduction to Psychology
SOC103	Introduction to Sociology
BIO109	Biology I
CHE107	General Chemistry I
HIS201	History of the United States
HUM260	The Art of Being Human
MAT160	College Mathematics I
MAT161	College Mathematics II
and more!

Classes start MWCC classes this summer! ...ore schedule, visit on "Class Schedules"

...ster, visit the Enrollment Center (978) 630-9110; ...email admissions@mwcc.mass.edu

Mount Wachusett Community College

www.mwcc.edu

AA/EEO Institution

Owls, 49ers hold on atop Atlantic 10

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

Temple moved back into a first-place tie with Charlotte on Sunday as it swept Duquesne in the weekend series. Both leaders now own 11-4 records in the Atlantic 10.

The Owls (20-17) were forced to find production from alternate sources on Sunday after senior infielder Mike Kelch fouled a pitch off his face, resulting in a season-ending injury. He becomes the third starter on the Owls' squad to miss significant time due to injury this season.

Temple was led by three freshmen in the sweeping game, most notably outfielder Byron McKoy, who had four hits and three runs scored. He leads the team in batting with a .341 average and nine doubles.

Later in the game, with Temple's lead down to one, shortstop Rafael Cordero lined a two-run double to left to record his first collegiate hit. This extended the lead to 6-3, and put the game out of reach for the Dukes, who dropped to 10-5 in the conference and 15-20 overall. They sit at third in the standings.

Freshman Ben White made his first conference start, going 6.1 innings and improving his record to 2-2. He allowed only four hits and three earned runs while striking out five Dukes. Senior Eric Fritz closed the game with a scoreless ninth for his second save of the week.

The Owls will enter the stretch drive of the season in a fight for the conference title with the 49ers. This comes as a surprise, as Charlotte has been in the national spotlight all season, ranked as high as 18th in the country, while the Owls are yet to get a vote.

Rams rally

In the last inning of both games it played on Saturday, Rhode Island scored four runs to beat Richmond, 16-12, in the first game, and tie them 8-8 in the nightcap. The second game had to be called due to darkness.

The Rams led 4-0 in the top of the first inning but gave up eight runs in the bottom half of the third to lose their lead, which they regained in the eighth inning.

Senior Mike O'Malley hit the first of his two home runs on the day in the eighth to put the Rams on top, 12-11. An error in the bottom half of the frame led to an unearned run and a tied game until the dramatic 12th inning.

Senior catcher Zach Zaneski set up the win for the Rams with his bases-clearing three-run double in the 12th to put the Rams up, 15-12. He would later score in the inning to extend the lead to four. Relief pitcher Tim Boyce retired three of the last four batters to secure the eighth-straight win for the Rams.

The Rams improved to 8-6-1 in conference play and remain in the top half of the standings, trailing the 49ers and the Owls by 2 1/2 games for the league lead. The Spiders dropped to 6-8-1 in the conference, giving them a half-game lead on the eighth seed, over Fordham, George Washington and Saint Joseph's.

Spiders crush Owls

Last Tuesday the Spiders opened their series against Temple by scoring 23 runs on 21 hits. It was the second time this season that the Spiders scored 23 runs on 21 hits; the first time came in their season opener against UNC-Wilmington when they won 23-16.

Sophomore lefty Matt Zielinski threw the first six innings, allowing no runs on five hits and striking out four Owls en route to his third victory of the season. Joe White, Ivan Stehle and Hank Coogan all hit home runs in the victory, and every starter had at least one hit. With the win, the Owls broke a school record for runs in a conference game by six. The previous record came in a 17-2 win over LaSalle in 2002.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

Loyola clinches ECAC crown

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

With only two weeks left in the season, two teams from the Eastern College Athletic Conference are ranked in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse.com Top 20 Poll. Both squads are looking forward to possible postseason play, while another ranked team might not be so lucky.

After a 13-4 victory over Fairfield last Saturday, the 14th-ranked Greyhounds won a share of the ECAC title, the program's first league championship since joining the conference in 2005. Along with the regular-season crown, the team received an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament, held May 24-26 at Gillette Stadium in Foxborough. This is the first time Loyola, (7-4, 6-0 ECAC) has recorded back-to-back at large bids since the 2000 and 2001 seasons.

Attackman Collin Finnerty scored two goals in two minutes for the visiting Greyhounds, who took a 6-0 lead at the end of the first quarter, keeping an opponent scoreless in the first frame for the fourth consecutive week.

The defensive play from Loyola was stingy, not allowing a goal in the second quarter. The offense was fast-paced, netting back-to-back goals seconds into the second stanza. Attackman Shane Koppens, who had his biggest game of the season a week prior, scoring both goals to give Loyola an 8-0 halftime lead.

The Greyhounds scored five more goals, and had nine different players record tallies.

Loyola owns the tiebreaker over No. 4 Georgetown, and will close out its regular season with an ECAC matchup against Hobart next week.

Loyola took control of the ECAC after defeating the Hoyason April 12th Koppens had five goals and two assists as the Greyhounds went on to win, 11-9.

Loyola put two goals away early in a very physical first quarter, but Georgetown was able to cut the deficit to two goals at halftime.

The third quarter featured back-and-forth scoring from both teams, but midfielder Paul Richards gave the Greyhounds an 8-7 lead with five seconds left in the third quarter.

The Hoyas were able to tie the game in the fourth quarter, but Koppens exploded for three of the final four goals to keep Loyola in the lead.

The senior only had 10 goals on the year entering the game against Georgetown, but finished with one-third of his season total when all was said and done, while owning the team led in points (35).

Freshman goalkeeper Jake Hagelin continued his productive rookie season in net, registering eleven saves, while defenseman P.T. Ricci secured a game-high nine groundballs.

Hoyas hoping for a bid

Georgetown will face two conference foes in the final two weeks of the season on the road, when it takes on Rutgers Saturday and Penn State and May 3. This will help in determining the Hoyas fate for the NCAA Tournament, but the team will look to other matchups in other conferences to get a better idea of where they stand.

No. 15 Brown and No. 11 Princeton are both currently undefeated in the Ivy League, with the Bears owning a better overall record at 10-2 and better RPI (.70). The Tigers have an RPI of 67, three spots above Georgetown (62).

Both teams will face off against one another in their season finales on May 3, while the Hoyas are playing the Nittany Lions.

Hopkins snubbed?

One year removed from its ninth national championship title, things have not gone the way the Blue Jays have wanted this season.

After a hot start to the 2008 campaign, No. 5 JHU suffered five straight losses. The first three defeats came in overtime, mainly because of inconsistency on the defensive side of the ball. Granted, all of the losses came against nationally ranked teams, including No. 3 Virginia, No. 2 North Carolina and No. 1 Duke.

The Blue Jays have gotten back on track as of late, recording back-to-back victories for the first time since March 4, both against ranked opponents.

The team defeated No.5 Maryland and No. 16 Navy, to get the Blue Jays back to .500 on the year.

JHU will finish off their season when it faces three in-state rivalries over the next three weeks. The Blue Jays have faced three teams from the state of Maryland this season, winning all three against UMD, Navy and No. 7 UMBC.

The team must win all three contests to remain in contention for a bid to the NCAA tournament.

The Blue Jays are 876-277-15 all-time against the Tigers (4-8, 3-3 CAA), who are having a disappointing season after making the tournament last year.

Towson and Mt. Saint Mary's should be easy wins for the Blue Jays, but the team closes out its season against Loyola, a team that has already secured an at-large bid. These next three weeks should be interesting, as Hopkins could be the first team to win a championship and not make the tournament the following year.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch a student.umass.edu.

Brendan Cannon and Georgetown will need help to reach the postseason after falling to first-place Loyola.

Balschmiter no-hits Huskies in Storrs leadoff single and junior third baseman Whitney Mollica advanced Williams to second with a single of her own. Junior right fielder Samantha Salato singled for her only hit of the day. Her hit up the middle scored Williams from second to give UMass the 1-0 advantage. Sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves knocked one back to the Sullivan and got Mollica out at the plate. Freshman designated hitter Lindsay Maroney lined out to end the inning and left the bases loaded.

SOFTBALL from page 12

In the second inning Normandin's bat stayed hot. She knocked a single for her sixth straight hit. She advanced to second on a wild pitch. Williams got her second hit of the day with a single to center, scoring Normandin from second, however Williams was thrown out trying to advance to second.

UMass broke the game open in the third inning by scoring four runs, all with two outs. Mollica started the inning by grounding out and Salato flied out to the third baseman. Then with back-to-back singles from Reeves and sophomore catcher Jessica Serio, Maroney had another opportunity to knock in a runner.

This time, she singled to score Reeves from second. A throwing error allowed Serio to advance to third, and Maroney moved to second. Sophomore second baseman Carly Morin bunted for a single, scoring Serio from third to make it 4-0. With runners on the corners, Normandin came to the plate looking for her seventh consecutive hit.

She doubled to left field scoring both runners to take a 6-0 lead. That double tied a UMass record for most consecutive hits. She is currently riding a four-game hit streak, and in those four games, she has had at least two hits or more.

Crossin pitched four shutout innings in relief, while only giving up three hits and striking out five. UConn pitchers struck out six batters. UMass batters have only struck out eight times in the last three games.

The Minutewomen will be back on the road for more A-10 action as they travel to Saint Louis for two games, one on Friday and one on Saturday. Saint Louis is currently in the sixth spot in the A-10 at 7-7 (17-29-1 overall) as it tries to contend for a spot in the A-10 Tournament.

Senior pitcher Lorena Floccari is sporting a 3.01 ERA, but is only 4-12 on the season. Floccari isn't getting much run support as opposing pitchers hold a 1.92 ERA against Saint Louis hitters. The Billiken defense isn't helping the cause either as they have committed 83 errors.

UMass pitchers are holding opponents to 1.04 ERA, while opposing pitchers have a 4.17 ERA against UMass hitters. As a team UMass is hitting .288, Reeves has the lowest average of any starter at .278, but leads the team in home runs with seven. She also has the third highest on base percentage at .400 and is slugging .530.

Serio will have to be on her toes if any Billiken runners are able to reach base. The Billikens have stolen 96 bases this season and are in range to break the record of 107 set last year. Freshman outfielder Kristin Nicoletti has 26 stolen bases (a school record) and set a school record with four steals in one game against Saint Joseph's. As a team UMass has 31 stolen bases this year.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames a dailycollegian.com.

COLLEGE OF HUMANITIES AND FINE ARTS PRESENTS:

CHFA Career Connections:

A Networking Reception

THURSDAY, APRIL 24

3 P.M. - 6 P.M.

Fine Arts Center, Lobby

Alumni/ae from CHFA departments will be available to discuss their current professions and how their education in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts relates to their careers.

Professions represented include:

- Physician
- High School Teacher
- Programmer
- Analyst
- Executive Director
- Theater Production
- Legal Clerk
- Investigator
- Fundraising
- Archivist
- Social Services
- Youth Worker
- Peace Corps Volunteer Leader
- Publishing
- Higher Education
- And more!

Refreshments provided and a raffle for an iPod Touch!

Only CHFA majors eligible to win*

Co-sponsored by: The UMass Alumni Association and Career Services

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $

how does it work?

You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money! (40% to be exact)

it's so easy!

No appointment necessary.

Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...

exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards

Urban Exchange

233 Main Street Northampton MA

413-585-8729

(walking distance from Smith College)

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY KARAOKE

* * * * * *

LIVE BANDS

THURSDAY, 4/24/08 TALK TO STRANGERS

FRIDAY, 4/25/08 LAKE SIDE DRIVE

SATURDAY, 4/26/08 SHUT UP & DANCE

LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE? STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O's

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?

CALL 413-530-6996

Route 116, 320 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788

3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN

Next To Cliffside Apts.

ROTFLAWY!

(rolling on the floor laughing and wetting yourself)

		2			7	1
	6					8
2			1		3	4
2			4	3	6
		9		1
	3	8	6			7
7	5		8			6
4					9
1	9			4

ACROSS
1 Aspersion
5 Puccini opera
10 Debatable
14 Crosby's partner, often
15 Words before sight and mind
16 Farm division
17 Flirtatious opening
19 Young adult
20 Just out
21 Bdwy. sign
22 Shopping centers
23 Money down the drain
26 Type of fat
28 One of HOMES
29 Nest-egg 3
31 Click beetle
32 Solder component
33 Invoice stamp
34 Misdeed
35 Shrew
36 Make amends
38 Pekoe and Earl Grey for two 41 Hawaiian dish
42 Jacob's twin
43 Mineral vein
44 Himalayan guide
47 Function
48 Rounds and clips
49 Mark under a C
51 Charity recipient
53 Bring up
54 Ask for a handout
56 Snoop
57 Palo ___ CA
58 At risk
62 Unskilled laborer
63 Kosher
64 ___ Scotia
65 Goofs up
66 Sassy
67 Hang around

DOWN
1 That girl
2 Actress Myrna
3 Overturning
4 Ebb
5 2,000 pounds
6 Surpass
7 Arcturus or Rigel
8 Après-ski drink
9 Ship back?
10 Mediterranean cape
11 Spotted wildcat
12 End of a threat
13 More on edge
18 Have a tab
22 Environs
23 Henley or Daniel
24 "Voce di donna o d'angelo," e.g.
25 Like some crystals
27 Madame of literature
30 Farewell, mon ami
33 Folk
37 Alncan javelins
38 Balderdash!
39 Ms. Bombeck
40 Very long time
41 Folsom and Leavenworth
44 Tight spot
45 Doctor
46 Newspaper horncho
48 Poplars
50 Baseball's Doubleday
52 Chinese food additive
55 Advantage
58 Brownie
59 Utmost
60 Actress Gabor
61 Night follower

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

amherst cinema

Fri, Apr 25 - Thu, May 1

BLADE RUNNER

2:30 4:45 7:15 9:45 No 2:30 Sun

A1 ACADIA The Towering Desert Friday 4/25 1:15

THE AMERICAN FILM Saturday 4/26 2:00

PIERROT LE FOU Sun 4/27 2:00 Thu 5/1 7:00

The Duchess of Langeais 3:30 6:30 9:15

THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 5:00 7:30 9:30 No 2:45 Fri or Sat No 7:30 Thu

28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst (413) 253-3547 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER

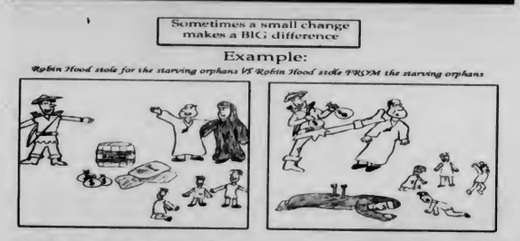
Fri, April 25 - Thu, May 1

UNDER THE SAME MOON 5:00 7:15 9:30 PLUS 12:30 & 2:45pm Sat & Sun & 10:15am Wed

YOUNG @ HEART 4:45 7:00 9:15 PLUS 12 & 2:30pm Sat & Sun & 10am Wed

27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstttheater.org (413) 584-5848

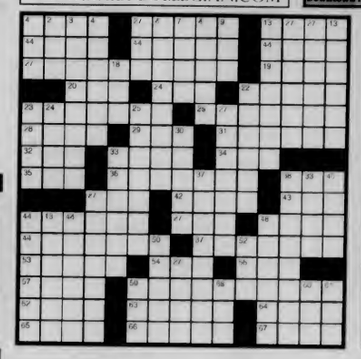
Quote of the Day



"I speak two languages, body and English."

— Mae West

Paul By Billy O'Keefe



Just An Observation By Ben Leonberg

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"Dear diary: Pillage, conquer, scheme, poison — same old thing. Plus, my new robe makes me look fat!"

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT PRESENTS

TWO SHOWS!

George Carlin

FRI. MAY 2 • 7 & 9:30 PM

DOORS OPEN 6:00 & 8:30 PM

CALVIN THEATRE AND NORTHAMPTON PERFORMING ARTS CENTER

19 KING ST. • NORTHAMPTON, MA

TO PURCHASE TICKETS ON FOR SAVE MORE FOR DETAILS OR CALL WWW.IHEG.COM 413-586-8686

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Quit digging yourself into a hole like an aardvark and face your challenges head on.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sometimes you can be a bit bossy. Better call for a casual day before your friends put in for a companionship transfer.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Although secretly every girl wants to be a princess, it seems that they don't like being called Princess.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Make like a white wine reduction sauce and simmer down.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Flavored water is unnatural and evil twist on nature's majesty. What's next, flavored babies?

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It is time for a new perfume. As a rule your odor should compliment this transformation between seasons.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
If you laugh as hard as you rock, you might just lay an egg.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You're a bonafide bovine in a world of cow tipping derelicts. Stay alert or you will be toppled into a pile of your own manure.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you don't have a care in the world then what planet do you keep your cares on?

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are not cool enough to talk like that. Cut it out right now you pseduo-hipster.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It's too hot for scruples. Jacket off.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Sometimes inspiration comes in the most fattening places. (Hint:Check the bottom of the ice cream carton.)

This sqare is a nicotine patch. Cut it out and stick it on your arm to aid in the process of weening yourself off death sticks.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, still guaranteeing for Fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom, 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+ 4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Marketing Coordinator Paid Internship: College Pro Painters
Now interviewing for Spring/Summer.
Ideal candidates will be: Communications, Business or Marketing Majors.
Highly organized.
Goal oriented.
Duties: Candidates will organize and implement a multi-pronged marketing program, organize at least one PR event, and focus on generating new customer leads and establishing a strong brand presence in a region. Positions available through out New England. Contact: Email resume to: Jhughes@collegepro.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details.

Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Can UMass play spoiler at home?

Minutewomen host A-10s as as four-seed

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend will be a difficult test for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. The Atlantic 10 Tournament will be held on Friday and Sunday at McGuirk Stadium.

The fourth-seeded Minutewomen will take on No. 1 Richmond Friday in the first round. This will be the second time that the two teams meet this season – the first at McGuirk.

This is the eighth time UMass (6-10, 4-3 A-10) has qualified for the A-10 Tournament. The two teams have met three times at the tournament. The Spiders (9-8, 6-1 A-10) lead the postseason series, 2-1. The last time the Minutewomen beat Richmond in the conference tournament was 2006.

Richmond leads the all-time series 8-2, winning the last six against the Maroon and White.

Last time out, the Spiders needed a 6-2 run in the final 13 minutes of play to defeat the Minutewomen, despite five goal efforts by Allison Furstenburg and Lexie Marrocco. Richmond assaulted freshman goalkeeper Colleen Speth with 40 shots, compared to the Minutewomen's 26. Speth made 10 saves in the losing effort.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos attributes the Spiders' win to their fast-paced ball movement and multiple scoring threats.

"The first time out, [Richmond] pushed the ball and got their attackers going," Venechanos said. "They

See W. LAX on page 9

BRIAN TELLERCOLLEGIAN

Kaitlyn McCormick (left) and the Minutewomen will take on the top-seeded Richmond Spiders Friday in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. UMass is the fourth seed, while No. 2 Temple and No. 3 Duquesne will play in the other first round game.

Drown doing it all for UM

Switch to D helped team reach playoffs

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Holly Drown started her third women's lacrosse season as strictly an attacker, but as the season progressed, Drown can be seen everywhere on the field except for in the cage.

Drown started playing defense during the middle of this season because the Minutewomen (6-10, 4-3 Atlantic 10) needed experience, communication and help getting the ball out of their defensive end.

"I wasn't really having a role [on the team]," Drown said. "I started on defense one day and I started playing there – the girls helped me feel really comfortable. Every game I got more comfortable, and now I really enjoy it."

"Holly is a perfect fit," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "The girls really rally around her and she's a great leader back there."

Drown started her UMass career in 2006 as one of the top midfielders on the team. In 2007, she was one of the major offensive threats, scoring 35 goals and leading the team with 44 draw controls. This didn't give Drown much prior experience playing defense, but both Venechanos and fellow defender Julie Papaleo agree that she adapted to her new position very quickly.

"I had played midfield defense, so I would play attack and then shoot in on defense, but starting on defense is a lot different," Drown said. "Defense is really just about communication, so I figured all I had to do was be really loud even if I didn't know what I was doing. I used the basics that I learned back in the day. It was hard at first, but I

See DROWN on page 9

BY ANNE-LISE KELLER

Holly Drown started the season as an attacker, but made the move to defense to add experience to the backfield. The result was a return to the postseason after missing out last year.

Normandin's bat stays hot in Connecticut

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team showed why it's the No. 24 team in the country yesterday, shutting out Connecticut, 6-0.

Sophomore centerfielder Carly Normandin tied a UMass record with seven consecutive hits. Normandin went 5-for-5 in a double-header against Dayton on Sunday and started the game 2-for-2 at UConn. In her third at bat, she struck out looking as she tried to break the school record.

UMass	6
UConn	0

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter no-hit the No. 2 team in the Big East. She allowed two base runners on the day. She hit one batter and sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams committed an error in the third inning. It is Balschmiter's third no hitter of the season, extending her scoreless innings streak to 51 innings. Balschmiter went seven innings, giving up no runs, no hits and fanned seven batters.

UMass (31-11, 16-0 Atlantic 10) holds the third longest win streak in the nation with 23 victories. UConn drops to 24-17 and snaps its six-game win streak. On the season, the Huskies were hitting .296 as a team, but through seven innings were unable to manage a hit off Balschmiter.

Huskies sophomore pitcher Tricia Sullivan struggled against the UMass offense as she allowed six runs and 10 hits through three innings. Junior pitcher Rachael Crossin came on in relief for the final four innings. Every batter for UMass got at least one hit.

Williams started the game with a

See SOFTBALL on page 10

BRIAN TELLERCOLLEGIAN

She made a name for herself with her glove, but Carly Normandin tied a UMass record with hits in seven straight at bats, including two yesterday.

Dukes challenge Owls in 1st round action

BY ANNE-LISE KELLER

Shannon Hadaway and the Dukes defeated UMass, 11-10, in the final game of the regular season to secure the third spot in the tourney.

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The outlook for the No. 3 seed Duquesne women's lacrosse team might have looked very different if it wasn't for junior Kathleen McNish's goal in overtime against St. Bonaventure on April 11.

Since then, the Lady Dukes (8-8, 5-2 Atlantic 10) have gone on a four-game winning streak to earn them a spot in the A-10 semifinals against No. 2 seed Temple on Friday. The winner advances to the championship to play either No. 1 seed Richmond or fourth-seeded Massachusetts on Sunday.

The Owls (12-3, 6-1 A-10) beat Duquesne, 12-9, in the last meeting between the two teams on March 30.

Temple senior Nicole Canigla's five goals were too much for the young Lady Dukes to overcome. The previous match with these two teams was last year on April 22. The Owls prevailed in the second half despite Duquesne's six-goal run that brought them within three. Temple took a 10-7 decision.

Since March 30, Duquesne beat five of its six conference opponents, including an 18-6 rout over La Salle on April 18.

"I think it's attributed to the confidence factor of our [players]," Duquesne coach Michael Scerbo said. "They're learning what it takes to win."

The Lady Dukes' started their season with four losses to top-20 teams, including a 21-6 drubbing by No. 1-ranked Northwestern on March 7. However, they saw those losses as preparation for the A-10 schedule.

"We learned what it was like to play championship-level lacrosse whether it's the A-10 Championships

See DUQUESNE on page 9

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:79 | SAT H:64 | SUN H:62 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 25, 2008

The annual "Taste of UMass" was brought to the Mullins Center last night. Thousands of students not only got a taste of different foods, but some participated in a hot dog eating contest and a large crowd gathered to watch the competitors stuff their faces.

INSIDE:

NEWS	FEATURES	ARTS & LIVING	SPORTS
Armenian campus group reflects on forgotten genocide	Meditation as education	Tokyo Police Club hits Pearl Street	UMass LAX takes on Syracuse
Page 2	Page 4	Page 8	Page 11

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 127

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
GRAPHICS SPECIALIST Elaine Barba
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTERS. THE COLLEGIAN IS NONPROFIT AND FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMOST LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1947, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 2002. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Leif Walcutt

Boston living healthy

Eco-friendly shop to hit Newbury St.

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Staff

The founders of one of the fastest-growing private companies in the United States are coming to Boston and bringing with them a slew of their own products, including a message to educate and motivate people to the importance of using healthy, planet-friendly products.

Method, an eco-friendly, home care company, is bringing its campaign "People Against Dirty," on a mission to detox Boston, to the Bay State.

A temporary "detox your home" shop will be set up at 329 Newbury Street and will house many of Method's people and planet-friendly products, along with sample product displays, experts, and some aroma and ingredient workstations.

At these stations there will be sampling, and any interested people will be able to test out Method's products.

"We have a brand, and fragrance is a big part of it, so we offer samples for people to take and try," said Eric Ryan, Method's co-founder.

According to Method's Web site, its products use biodegradable ingredients derived from natural materials, and have such fruit and flower inspired fragrances as cucumber and French lavender. There will also be a "toxic turn-in" at the Newberry Street shop where people can drop off their old cleaning products.

"We'll properly dispose of the chemicals that are brought in and in return we'll give each person a method product," Ryan said.

Part of Method's philosophy is that living in a healthy home is indicative of an overall healthy lifestyle.

"We see products that use poisons to make a house clean, and they cause pollution as well, it makes no sense," Ryan said.

Method's co-founder also commented on the lack of knowledge concerning the long term effects of using chemical cleaners in the home.

"Nobody knows 30, 40 years down the road what the chemicals will do, no matter what though, ongoing use is not healthy for the planet," he said.

On select evenings, the Boston shop will transform into a private party space where a series of events will be hosted centering on educating, and motivating people to live healthier lives. The co-founders will be in Boston until April 27 and any college student who has their school identification at the shop will receive a discount on products.

Ryan, the architect of Method, explained that the company is about advocacy and that the ultimate goal of bringing the campaign to Massachusetts is to reach out to their fans in a deeper more meaningful way.

"We believe that we would rather have a small, dedicated shop where we can talk to the brand's fans about living a healthier life," Ryan said. "We're not here just to sell products."

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

Body Politics to perform

The Women of Color Leadership Network (WOCLN) at UMass will showcase their fifth annual "Body Politics" production this weekend.

Located in Wilder hall, WOCLN, directed by Hind Mari, strives in its mission to strengthen self identity, cultivate support in academics and leadership development, and to provide a space in which women of color including Black/African American, African, Latina, South American, Chicana, Asian-Pacific Islander, South Asian, Native American, Middle Eastern, Arab/Arab American, Caribbean, biracial and multicultural and all indigenous women can have a voice to express their experiences and stories, according to the group.

The "Body Politics" production is a yearlong process that includes women of color applying to be part of the production. The cast must attend workshops that involve discussions, movements, exercises and writings. Selected writings are compiled and produced into a script by graduate student facilitators Iris Jacob and Keli Stewart.

The 2008 production aims to create itself into a medium, in which women of color can express their own narratives about their body image, exaltation, abuse, pleasure, confusion and pride in their identity.

The show dates are this Saturday at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom and Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium.

For more information contact the WOCLN at 413-545-1671 or visit its Web site at www.umass.edu/wocln.

- Gisel Saillant

Armenian Students Organization reflects on 1915 genocide, holds candelight vigil

By Jess Sacco
Collegian Staff

Yesterday, as the evening approached, students of the Armenian Students Organization (ASO) gathered on the steps of the Student Union to recognize the 1915 Armenian Genocide in a commemorative candlelight vigil.

Each year, Armenians, as well as others in the community, come together to pay their respect and remember those who were lost.

"The Armenian Genocide was conceived and carried out by the Ottoman Empire from 1915 to 1923, resulting in the deportation of nearly 2,000,000 Armenians, of whom 1,500,000 men, women, and children were killed, 500,000 survivors expelled from their homes, and which succeeded in the elimination of the over 2,500-year presence of Armenians in their historic homeland," according to the Armenian National Committee of America.

April 24, 1915 signifies the day that the Ottoman Empire, under the rule of Turkey, began the first genocide of the 20th century.

"We [Armenians] still believe the genocide is going on even though it happened 93 years ago," said junior and vice president of the ASO, Steve Keshishian. "The [Turkish] government denies it, so we can't even begin to move on because we're still fighting for the world to recognize that it happened."

As the ceremony continued, members of the ASO read stories of those who survived the genocide, as well as giving a brief history of the event. Students welcomed those who had gathered to listen to light a candle, symbolizing the commemoration of the genocide.

"It's important to remember the past," said freshman and member Charles Beyrouthy. "The past influences the future, and it influences political leaders and leaders who are in high stature. [The event] is a testament to those who were victimized in such a crime."

Another goal of yesterday's event was for people to acknowledge and appreciate their Armenian ancestors and backgrounds.

"Nobody knows Armenia was the first Christian Nation, that we have a very ancient culture," said Keshishian. "We commemorate this every year on this day all around the world, [taking] a moment of our lives to remember those who passed away and get word out about our legacy."

"My parents taught me to love and respect my heritage," said Beyrouthy. "I think it's a heritage that is very rich in culture and in general. It is a big part of my life."

The ASO, a new group on campus, plans to continue the event in the future and has hopes of advertising it more, and doing things on a much bigger level.

"Whether we had two people or 200 people [today], this was something that was going to be going on in my head. I did what I wanted to do, make my peace and move on with it," said Keshishian.

Jess Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Public Health Club holds April toiletries fundraiser

By Caitlin Quinn
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Public Health Club is collecting toiletry items for the month of April that will be donated to the Safe Passage shelter in Northampton. The club will help provide basic provisions to the shelter's residents.

According to Public Health Club President Amanda Mitchell, Safe Passage is "geared towards assisting women and children fleeing instances of domestic violence."

The club has a collection table among the rows lining the main walkway in the campus center every Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., including this coming Wednesday, April 30. The table displays examples of the items they are collecting, including toiletries, dental hygiene, diapers, and women's sanitary items.

With the drive concluding at the end of the month, the club officials say they are pleased with the amount of donations they received so far.

"There's about 500 pounds of toiletry items in the back of my car," said Mitchell. "So between 500 and 600 pounds so far."

The Public Health Club started the drive as its event for the semester when members found out residents of the shelter have a specific need for household items.

"I had called to see if we could do any work with them," said club member Alex Gross. "They said they have a high demand for basic needs because when women and children flee they don't have time to bring basic things."

Domestic violence is present in the Pioneer Valley. According to Safe Passage's Web site, it receives over 2,000 calls on its crisis hotline, houses 35 women and 55 children in its shelter and has 250 participants in its programs each year.

In addition to providing shelter for up to six families at a time, Safe Passage offers a 24-hour crisis hotline and individual counseling as well as support groups for both women and children. Their services are available in multiple languages, including Spanish.

The 30-year-old non-profit organization will hold the event, "Stories of Strength: An Evening with First Lady Diane Patrick to benefit Safe Passage," on the evening of May 1.

Mitchell feels that the drive works toward the club's overall goals.

"It links to the Public Health Club in terms of community building and assisting those in need ... enhancing community building throughout UMass and Amherst and Northampton," she said.

Part of getting UMass students involved in this type of community building, according to Mitchell, is due to UMass faculty.

"Dan Gerber got the 'My Body, My Health' class involved," she said. "He is the Public Health advisor for the club so he's always willing to help about."

The toiletry drive is the Public Health Club's second event as a Registered Student Organization, following their largely successful winter clothing drive last semester. The drive benefited the Amherst Survival Center and, according to Mitchell, hopes to repeat it in the upcoming fall semester, possibly making it an annual event.

Items that will be collected in the Campus Center on Wednesday, April 30th, the last day of the drive, include: shampoo, conditioner, bar soap, body wash, toothpaste, toothbrushes (youth and adult), women's deodorant, and diapers, feminine products.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

UMass lies in for gay rights

To raise awareness about gay rights, students lay on the grass in front of the Student Union yesterday, and one by one would stand and recite crimes committed against homosexuals.

MEGHAN MURPHY/COLLEGIAN

VOX held "Take Back the Night" last night, a discussion against sexual assault and rape.

VOX presents "Take Back the Night"

By Sara Arzai
Collegian Correspondent

The light spring breeze fluttered abortion rights posters on hangers suspended on a rope line outside of the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

"The Hanger Project" was created by VOX: Students for Choice, an organization that brings awareness to pro-choice activism by educating the UMass community on reproductive health and rights. VOX, Latin for "voice," is a UMass chapter of an international organization allied with Planned Parenthood.

Last Thursday, numerous students saw colorful posters with statements like "Giving birth is much more dangerous than having an abortion."

"Our entire generation has grown up with abortion rights and having that right taken away is not fair," said VOX president Irene Ushomirsky. "This is not just a 'women's issue' because the right to reproductive health affects everyone."

According to Ushomirsky, there is one abortion clinic in all of Mississippi. Due to the split between federal and state law, legal access to abortion continues to vary by state.

"I believe that abortion is the choice of the woman and it should be protected," said VOX member and sophomore Stephanie Luke. "The most effective way to protect this right is to keep fighting restrictions and spreading awareness about reproductive rights."

VOX tries to promote abortion rights through different events. These events are planned by the 15 or so regular members of VOX and the three executive board members, president Irene Ushomirsky, vice president Shannon Demas, and secretary, Kate Fontaine.

Yesterday evening, VOX sponsored "Take Back the Night," a live discussion speaking out against sexual assault, rape, and domestic violence at Memorial Hall from 7 to 10 p.m. After the discussion, a candle light vigil brought remembrance to victims of sexual and domestic violence.

Other sponsors of "Take Back the Night" included the Everywoman's Center, Graduate Women's Network, and Women's Health Project.

On Saturday April 26, VOX organized a "Live Action Camp" starting at 10 a.m. with a teach-in on emergency contraception on the 19th floor of Kennedy Tower in the Southwest Residential Area. Then there will be a presentation on a newly discovered way of stopping HIV transmission to women and demonstrations in Amherst.

"Live Action Camp" attendees will then go into the community and participate in a pharmacy sting, where local pharmacies will be checked for offering sufficient emergency contraception. Next is the Burma-Shave, where signs sporting single words are held up in a line to form an abortion rights sentence.

"The Burma-Shave lets both sides know that there is activism going on, and we usually get more of a positive response than negative," Ushomirsky said.

Lastly, people will go around Amherst to attain signatures for abortion rights lobbies.

VOX will further educate the UMass community on what it says is the importance of reproductive health on May 8 during "Sex on the Lawn." On the library lawn, VOX members will set up different tables with information and brochures from other organizations.

This past February, VOX hosted the Vagina Monologues, a performance celebrates the female body, power and sexuality. The majority of VOX's funding comes from this performance and earning $1160.50 was an improvement from the previous year.

"Considering we only performed for one night because of the snow storm, we did really well," Ushomirsky said.

As a registered student organization, VOX receives some funding from the Student Government Association.

VOX member and senior Sahar Barfchin have been attending the VOX meetings since her freshman year.

"I really like the activism," Barfchin said. "I think getting the word out and educating people about reproductive rights is really important."

FEATURES

Calling all intuitives

KRISTEN FORRELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A college education isn't the only type of schooling you can get in Western Massachusetts. A hot spot for "intuitives," you can also learn about your own spiritual self.

Donna "Spirit Talker" and Russell "Wild Horse" are two area-based intuitive guides working together with Belchertown Healthy Alternatives shop owner Betsy Gold to help assist everyday people on their path to spiritual enlightenment.

"There are so many people out there that if you put them in a one-on-one situation, where they can talk [about spirituality], they will start to open up," said Wild Horse.

"We serve as a conduit," continued Spirit Talker.

Both have been practicing in the area for years. Both have been aware of their heightened spiritually and intuitive abilities since very young ages.

When Spirit Talker was a child, she used to talk to her mother about flying and even healed her ailing grandmother. "When I was eight my grandmother had her leg amputated, and she was having trouble walking with her prosthesis. So I said, 'Here Nana put your [amputated limb] here and I'll heal it' and all of a sudden she was learning how to walk."

Spirit Talker uses a variety of techniques to help people obtain what she calls a "higher quality of living." This improved living includes meditation, encounters with spirits, behavior healing and touch healing.

"There are several different types of meditation. One is just to help you relax, get rid of garbage you're walking with, and achieve a better balance. Others are more Shamanistic that take you on a vision walk," she said.

Aromatic meditation uses essential oils that impart positive impulses to the brain to help people respond better to life, Spirit Talker said. "Like, when you wake up and it's raining, instead of getting depressed about it you can listen to it as rain music and think of it as cleansing."

Another form of meditation is stone meditation, where you either hold stones or encircle yourself with them. According to Spirit Talker, this uses "the Earth's energy for clarity and enlightenment."

Touch healing and behavior healing are used for problems such as obesity or anger issues when the person being healed knows they need to stop with their current trends or activities, she said.

Spirit Talker can also assist with ghost encounters. She will come to a location believed to be haunted, see if there is a ghost, see what type of spirit they walk with, take pictures, capture it on film, mark it up and send it back to whomever hired her.

Some services, like the Medicine Wheel, are offered weekly out of Healthy Alternatives by donation only. The Medicine Wheel is a gathering of locals, who, with the help of Spirit Talker, assist each other in lifting the "fog" from their lives by discussing their problems and spirituality.

KRISTEN FORRELLI / COLLEGIAN

Spirit Talker, Wild Horse and Betsy Gold (left to right) often work out of Healthy Alternatives, located in Belchertown.

Wild Horse specializes in guided meditation, in groups or on the individual level. "When I teach a meditation class, I draw on the gifts that come from my spirit that allow people to connect with their own spirit. When that happens it brings people to the point where they feel they can share freely, without judgment, because society has beaten down spirituality for so long," he said.

"Its been good, the three of us working together, because I actually have a physical location where people can meet and they have services and people are always coming here anyways, so it's great for the [Belchertown] community," said Gold.

"I've had a lot of different people come to me when they have been going to doctors, but they're just not getting any better… they know there's got to be a better way and they come here looking for information and I'll sometimes lead them to either Spirit Talker or Wild Horse," she continued.

These intuitives believe the attitudes expressed by students from the University of Massachusetts Amherst are positive, although they typically do not work with students.

"People are growing … our children are not our parents … if you look at the differences between the generations, there is less prejudice," said Spirit Talker.

"I would definitely go see a psychic, just because I'm curious, I would like to see what they would have to say," said UMass senior Yesenai Camareno. "I guess I'm unsure about the whole thing. That's why I would go. I'd like to see how they went about it."

Both Wild Horse and Spirit Talker prefer not to be called psychics because of the associations. "Psychic has gotten a bad rap. Nine times out of 10, the term is so generic, that 'psychics' can line people up and tell them anything they want to hear. It's an insult to people who have real gifts," said Spirit Talker.

Labels aside, Gold, Spirit Talker, and Wild Horse have all seen an increase in curiosity and spiritual awareness regarding their field. "The whole world is starting to come alive," said Wild Horse. "A lot of people are becoming aware. You can see it in shows like 'Ghost Hunters' and a lot of movies are coming out about spirituality … if you just pay attention you can see it."

Spirit Talker and Wild Horse believe the heightened awareness may be attributed to the coming of the year 2012, when a spiritual transformation is believed to take place.

This has been prophesized by the Mayan calendar, English Oracles, Nostradamus and books like 'The Orion Prophecy' and 'The Bible Code.'

Even Spirit Talker has seen an impending transformation. "I have seen visions of the great flood since I was very young," she said. "It's real. It's not just me who sees these things."

Despite Spirit Talker and Wild Horse's best efforts, some students remain skeptical. "I don't really believe in psychics, I would only go for fun," said Mike Coyle, a UMass junior. "I don't know why [intuitive] people gather here … All kinds of aloof people just gravitate here. Whether it's because they're already here or if there's a real spiritual energy, I don't know," he said.

Spirit Talker does not bother to refute or argue with those who doubt her abilities, "There's a strong intuitive community out here… I say nothing [to skeptics] because it's their own journey."

Kristen Forrelli can be reached at kforrell@student.umass.edu.

Growing up in foster care: one teen's story

DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

[Editor's note: Kathy's name has been changed to protect her identity]

Growing up in Hartford, Conn., Kathy's family was very close. When she lived at home with her mother, most of her aunts, uncles and cousins were only a few houses away and she saw them often.

These family ties changed when her uncle raped her. Kathy, who was 14 at the time, struggled to tell someone about what happened. When she gained the courage, nobody in her family believed her. She was often mocked and taunted about the incident.

While waiting for the school bus in the morning, Kathy said both of her aunts would yell names at her from their house across the street. "They said I was a whore and a home wrecker and I wanted [to be raped]." This situation made her wary to go to school and she often skipped.

The final straw to leave Hartford came when police and paramedics had to respond after Kathy's cousin assaulted her. Kathy said her aunt instructed and urged her cousin to beat her up. "It was a sad period … even though they (her family) were all around and never left, I still called it 'home,'" she said.

Kathy finally convinced her mother she had told the truth. Kathy, her mother, and younger sister and brother moved to Greenfield to rent an apartment from her grandfather.

In Greenfield, family relations stayed strained. "When I was 16, [the Department of Social Services] put my brother in a foster home and tried to get me to go to DIAL/SELF [a nonprofit youth program], but I wasn't really ready for it."

Kathy, who had lived in 15 different foster homes throughout her childhood, continued to attend school and work at a McDonalds while living with her mother. Although she didn't like her current living situation, she didn't think she would be able to live by herself or with a roommate. Also, her mother put pressure on her to stay.

"She didn't want me to leave," Kathy said. "She thought I would break [the family] up."

Soon, Kathy started to smoke and drink with new friends and eventually got fired from her job for hitting another employee. At that point, the mounting pressure from her mother built up and forced Kathy to find an alternative means of living.

"She kind of put the blame on me because I was the oldest. She had me [when she was] 17 and I was the reason she couldn't go to school and get a better job. In the end, it was always my fault." Kathy moved out of her house and into DIAL/SELF's Step Program during her senior year in high school, before her 18th birthday.

Although the Step Program has had many name changes throughout its 17-year existence, its goal still remains the same: to help adolescents and young adults transition into living independently. Whether the participants come from an environment like Kathy's or directly from the streets, DIAL/SELF's program is designed to teach them everyday living techniques while providing housing and support.

Adjusting to sharing an apartment has been hard on Kathy and, in the nine months she has been in the Step Program, she has been through three roommates, but she's learning how to live with another person one day at a time by setting boundaries and knowing limits.

Kathy says DIAL/SELF has taught her many things about herself. One of her biggest personal accomplishments was learning not to let things bother her and make her angry or upset. "I don't sweat the little stuff, and it's all little," she said. As for other influences, Kathy said her mother tops the list.

"My mother is my biggest influence… usually people influence you how to do stuff, she influenced me how not to do," she said.

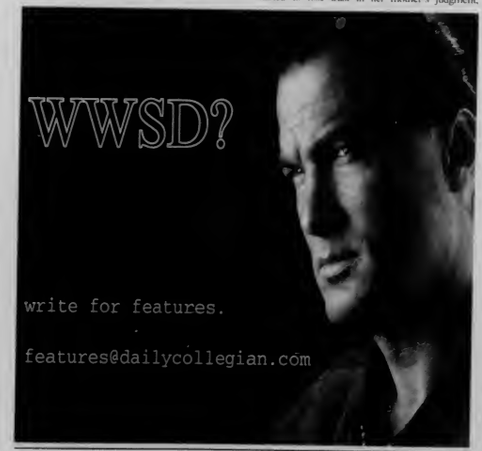
One such incident, in which Kathy said she started to lose trust in her mother's judgment, occurred when she was seven years old.

"[My mother] went to jail for her boyfriend … She kept bringing in this guy, he beat her and he beat us… You shouldn't bring a guy who beats you and your kids into your home," Kathy said.

Being part of the Step Program, Kathy's family relationships have remained strained; she hasn't spoken to her mother or sister in three months and her brother since he has been in foster care. "I wish it wasn't the way it is," she said, feeling like the lack of family communication is partially her fault. "I don't know how to apologize because I don't know what I did wrong."

Kathy's time in the Step Program ends in August and she is excited for the change. "DIAL/SELF is good but it's not my family… I want to start somewhere where nobody knows me, there's not a lot up here for me."

Currently a student at Greenfield Community College, Kathy hopes to finish her undergraduate degree in psychology at UMass then go on to a graduate program at Texas State and eventually work as a school psychologist.



Although she's not completely certain of what her future holds, she has had many challenging life experiences to help lead her in the right direction.

"I don't know what I want my life to be like; I just know what I don't want it to be like," she said.

Dave Humphreys can be reached at features@dailycollegian.com.

The DIAL/SELF house, based in Greenfield, serves as a helpful spot for troubled teens.

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley or Brendan Cherry @ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Multiply congress, restore democracy

Matthew M. Robare

Call me a geek with no life, but I often like to look through the government information in "The World Almanac." The most surprising thing for me, looking at info about state legislatures, is how utterly underrepresented most people are.

My home state of Vermont has a population of about 600,000 and 150 members of its House of Representatives, or one representative for every 4,000 citizens. Massachusetts has a population of around 6 million and has 160 representatives, one per every 137,500.

That doesn't seem very democratic to me. The most absurd situations occur in the western states: Hawaii has 51 reps, Colorado 65, Arizona 60, Nevada 42, Texas 150, etc. By far the worst is California. With a population of 36.5 million, she is the most populous state and the least democratic. Eighty people represent those millions in the people's house in Sacramento.

With so few representing so many, the actual issues that constituencies are concerned with get lost in the shuffle and only the big campaign funders are really listened to.

That is why lobbyists have so much sway in Washington — congressmen and senators from big, populous states are so removed from their constituents that they need image consultants, PR men, and crafty speechwriters just to convince their voters that they're even from the same state. There are exceptions, of course. For instance, former Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont was very responsive to the needs of voters.

If any legislature needs more members, it's the U.S. House of Representatives. We have 435 Congressmen representing approximately 350 million people.

American democracy is really oligarchy, with the elect maintaining power for decades.

With so many different viewpoints in a district of almost 700,000 people on average, once someone is elected, they'll probably stay elected, thanks to those image consultants. According to the Web site thirtythousand.org:

"The candidate who has a chameleon like ability to appear agreeable (or at least not disagreeable) to the dominate constituency groups is most likely to prevail in an election over candidates who take principled stands. As a result, the diverse views and values of the American people are not being faithfully represented in the federal House."

If this is true, then how can we call our system of government democracy? It works only if we use doublethink. American democracy is really oligarchy, with the elect maintaining power for decades. If oligarchy is the problem, what is the solution?

We need smaller districts. An amendment ought to be added to the Constitution stipulating that the population in a district shall not exceed 50,000. This would make the House massive, but allow for another beneficial effect: decentralization of the federal government itself.

Extra cities would have to be designated by Congress as meeting places for regional sections of representatives. Not only would this be good security (a bomb in Washington would not take out all of Congress), but it would get people away from the "Beltway effect," where congressmen elected on certain principles have an about-face on them.

For me, the best thing about breaking the oligarchy would be breaking two-party rule. With so many diverse and actually differing views able to be represented, the Republicans and Democrats will not be able to keep up their monopolistic control of politics.

Third parties and independents would have a greater chance at airing their views. We could have Greens, Communists, Libertarians, Constitutionals, and Reformists all in Congress. Real differences would finally exist in American politics.

But that's not all.

I wonder how many people on campus are still upset over the arbitrary way the Supreme Court gave George W. Bush the presidency in 2000. Well with more congressmen there would be a bigger electoral college, which would better reflect the popular vote. Hello President Gore.

Demanding a cap on the population of congressional districts is not new. When Congress proposed the set of 12 original amendments, 10 of which became the Bill of Rights, the first article (and the only one not to be ratified) limited congressional districts to a population of 50,000, though the Senate increased the number to 60,000.

But at the last minute a joint committee introduced a subtle modification limiting the size of the House to 200 after a certain population-level had been reached, according to thirtythousand.org.

I guess that even in the good old days when people partied like it was 1799, politicians were up to their usual tricks. But that does not excuse the fact that the people's house should be returned to the people.

As long as the House remains comparatively tiny, we will continue to be ruled by special interests and oligarchy. Six decades of foreign policy has ostensibly focused on spreading democracy around the world. Well, now it's time for democracy in America.

Matthew R. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Credibility of internet self-help sites questionable

Katherine Marr

Everything seems to be online these days. Log on to the Internet, and you can apply to schools, network and make new friends, watch television, pay bills and complete college courses. The idea is to make as many aspects of our lives as easy as possible.

That is one goal of stickK.com, a Web site meant to help people in their quests to lose weight, exercise more, quit smoking, or fulfill specific personal goals, such as to stop pirating music. But are motivational programs based in cyberspace only making it harder for people to self-improve?

stickK.com was the brainchild of two Yale professors. Equipped with the concepts of social psychology, they established a Web site that, by showcasing people's goals and progress in the public eye, might encourage people to fulfill those aspirations.

In a nutshell, you register online, publicly name your objective, and as a given incentive, can opt to sacrifice a prepaid sum of money to a charity in the case that you fail to meet your goal.

You report your own transgressions (there's quite a lot of faith put in the honor system), but, if you so choose, a self-appointed "referee" can also track your progress if you do not trust yourself to divulge your slip-ups.

Are motivational programs based in cyberspace only making it harder for people to self-improve?

I aced social psychology, so I understand how putting money on the line or being publicly judged drastically improves behavior. I am much more likely to follow through with something if I have already doled out the cash.

Like many people, I eat a whole lot less food when I'm dining with other people than when I am by myself; there is something about scarfing down ice cream sundae after ice cream sundae that embarrasses me when I am not alone.

But, when you are online, you might as well be alone. Your progress is monitored by a majority of people who don't know you from Adam. Thus, why care? The Web seems to be the last place where people treasure their reputations.

Why not stretch the truth? My Facebook hobbies include "running" and "working out;" the intent was always there, and I do exercise on rare occasions, but anybody who knows me would scoff at those hobbies. But hey, online you can write whatever you want, even if it is wishful thinking.

Why not rationalize that if you skip exercising today, you can exercise twice as much tomorrow, and call it even? Chances are that none of your fellow cyber self-improvers will see you either day.

Every January, I hear mention of gyms that refund money to users who actually follow through with their New Year's resolutions of exercising and losing weight.

That makes sense to me — you show up in person and visibly complete your goal, and hence receive your money back. Online, your money is returned for essentially alleging that you completed your goal.

Thus, to aid people who might be slightly less than truthful when evaluating themselves, the Web site suggests appointing a "referee" who monitors the participant's progress.

Supposedly, this is more efficient than simply making a pact with a good friend because he or she will often forgive your transgressions. But what difference does a referee make?

Unless you approach a near stranger and inquire "Will you be my referee?" you're probably going to appoint a friend or relative, which is even what stickK.com suggests.

And since we're not exactly talking about reporting mortal sin, if you say to your referee, "Hey, don't bother going online and telling everybody that I ate a pound of chocolate today," chances are that the referee might say, "Sure thing."

For many, taking a group approach to kicking a bad habit or improving some aspect of themselves can be a good idea. At the same time, online programs seem like a recipe for failure for a lot of people.

The anonymity may make it easier than attending Weight Watchers or Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, but the lack of accountability also may makes it easier to opt out of the quest.

Of course, there are those who can defy human nature and be entirely honest with themselves — but that type of person could most likely accomplish his/her goals without resorting to public evaluation and staking money.

Besides, there's something beneficial to belonging to a group of people whose faces you know and emotions you see, as you together confront problems or work toward achieving a goal. Innovative online programs are meant to help us in new ways, but maybe they just hinder people from actually achieving their goals.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

A marriage of convenience

Hannah Nelson

The impending marriage of Delta Air Lines and Northwest Airlines will make the uniform airline, which will unite under the name Delta, the biggest kid in the sandbox — or, rather, sky.

The merger will create a single airline that is estimated to bring in $35 billion per year. There are several motivations behind the merge, but the largest is without a doubt the ever rising price of oil.

Both Delta and Northwest have taken a lot of hits over the past several years. Delta and Northwest have been twins in their struggles, filing for bankruptcy only minutes apart in September of 2005.

And both emerged still standing from the financial struggle early in 2007. Delta in April and Northwest in May. Northwest emerged victorious from their bankruptcy with many analysts and experts predicting the airline to skyrocket in value and reputability.

In short, if the skies are looking cloudy now, then there must be a storm on the horizon.

During the period of Chapter 11 bankruptcy, Delta was courted continuously by US Airways for an $8 billion merge to save the rival Delta in late 2006.

The proposal alone boosted the shares for both airlines that were feeling the heat on the market. But Delta maintained a firm stance of coming out of bankruptcy without any other airline interference to prove they were a force to be reckoned with. US Airways continued to call though, offers increased to $11 billion until they finally abandoned wooing the fickle Delta.

Both Northwest and Delta saved themselves by going for the throat, or rather the backbone that is human capital. Significant cuts and contract renegotiations had to be made. Those cuts saved Northwest $2.5 billion and Delta $1 billion.

Delta had also faced a tricky matter of dropping their pre-bankruptcy shareholders with nothing after coming back. Shareholders of Northwest won't be left in the ditch with this one, with 1.25 Delta shares per every one Northwest share.

Incidentally, the airlines are listing one of the major causes for their merger as the same for their bankruptcy woes: pesky jet fuel prices.

It's probably the most common tie for people living in the United States (not to mention other industrial countries). Everyone is feeling the pinch in the purse when it comes to oil matters.

The merger still has to be finalized, but it's just a matter of technicalities before the world's biggest airline takes to the skies.

Even before the merger was announced, Delta was planning 2,000 job cuts, to follow the 6,000 during the bankruptcy stint. It is always the little guys who get the shove, but it isn't like the world hasn't seen this sort of thing before.

Experts say that it is very unlikely the unions can do anything to prevent the merger, but can still make hell for the merged airline's transition. Similar to what happened to previously merged airlines, one way or the other, if unions don't like what they see, they will make it known.

Delta employees started voting this week on whether or not to cause a stir by unionizing, with the flight attendants moving into action first. About 20 percent of Delta's employees are union affiliated, compared to 80 percent of Northwest. Word has it that Northwest unions have already been gathering on the subject.

There have been mergers in the airline sphere in the past, but the fact that Delta was so readily open to a Northwest deal now speaks for more than past stubbornness.

The fact is that this could very well start a trend as the airlines now more than ever are facing scrutiny of all kinds, from anti-terrorism safety procedures to flight delays.

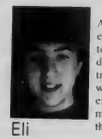
It just so happens that US Airways, perhaps too unwilling to get left out again, announced in the wake of the Delta-Northwest engagement that the airline is once again out to merge.

Though the reason why other airlines are so reluctant to take the bait may be due to all the problems that US Airways and America West Airlines faced in 2005 during their merger.

The pickings are beginning to look slim for US Airways as Continental and United are considering their own deal. Word has it that US Airways has been trying to steal away United for a deal.

The big question is how all of this shuffling will affect the passengers, aside from the flight delays and cancellations mash-ups. Richard Anderson, the current CEO of Delta, said Tuesday that all U.S. airline carriers need to seriously consider hiking up their ticket prices as much as 20 percent if they want to be able to fully cover costs.

Northwest's CEO, Doug Steenland stated that the airlines have honestly run out of options at this point in regards to the pricing of fares.



They are hinging the success rate of the merge solely on the variability of fuel prices. In short, if the skies are looking cloudy now, then there must be a storm on the horizon.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

"The dice of Zeus always fall luckily."

-Sophocles

No taxation without representation

Eli Gottlieb

At least in theory, the American republic is founded upon the right of citizens to vote in elections that decide who runs the country. In theory, that's what we've spent three months exercising in all these primaries. And everyone gets their fair vote, right?

Well, except more than one-fifth of the population. Apparently, unlike mental patients who don't belong to this minority group, they just don't have the mental capability necessary to vote. We let other people represent them, instead.

After all, everyone knows those kids under the age of 18 just don't have the maturity, experience, sheer intelligence, and a bunch of other overly general positive attributes necessary to make such simple decisions as "should I vote for the Republican or the Democrat?"

Rather than let "kids" make any decisions about their own life or even cast a single vote per person for their government, we let their parents vote for them.

They may not have much money, but we could give at least some young people the vote.

This, of course, causes a conflict of interest since the interests of a child can almost self-evidently conflict with those of their parents. We support tax rebates, or funding for education but we ignore that so as to not challenge our prejudices about young people.

I mean, everyone knows that 18 is the perfect magic age when you suddenly and immediately become able to handle your own life. Except that, wait, it turns out that we thought the magic age was 21 until the year 1971.

Bullcrap. It's long past time that we gave the vote to everyone in this country able to fill out a registration form and pull the levers, or at least push the age down well into the high school years. I've got facts to back that up, too.

Firstly, we already charge youth as young as 14 or 16 years old as adults whenever the heck we like. Originally our politicians told us these new powers would only be used to charge obviously disturbed youth with highly violent offenses.

But that doesn't explain why I found myself in front of an adult judge for a misdemeanor and violation charge at age 16 (long story, the judge threw out the charges and cleared me entirely).

Yet for some reason the youth who can be charged as adults for the slightest matter can't vote for the officials who decided to charge youth as adults. It's almost like that part of history when women couldn't vote for the lawmakers who decided that women couldn't vote.

Secondly, children and, especially, teenagers pay taxes, just like adults. They pay billions in sales tax every year, and always owe payroll and income taxes for anything they earn for actually behaving like mature, responsible citizens and taking a part-time job.

I sure as heck know that even though I didn't earn the minimum taxable income when I took a job in high school, I still had the taxes withheld from my paychecks and I was paying into Social Security even though George W. Bush could have privatized the whole program with no word from me.

Besides, youths constitute a specific and special interest group whose concerns deserve to be addressed. America consistently ranks near last in international measures of primary and secondary education.

I don't feel at all surprised seeing that the only group actually interested in bettering our schools, the students in them, wields precisely zero political power. They may not have much money, but we could give at least some young people the vote.

And to those who argue that youths lack the basic knowledge or competence necessary to vote, which god comes out the sky and teaches civics to adults?

In a nation where a significant portion of the population wants the outright unscientific theories of "intelligent design" taught in science classes — and a related group can't find the nations we're occupying on a labeled map, could we really make things worse by allowing young people who actually have to learn science and geography to vote? Somehow I think it would actually improve matters.

Allowing young people to begin voting before they leave for college will reduce the amount of unnecessary paperwork by lowering the amount of absentee registrations young people need to file.

OK, so maybe I've got a few people convinced. What should we make the new voting age? Personally, I have to go with 14. Nobody but me, even most of the members of the National Youth Rights Association, seems ready to see 5-year-olds with an official right to vote.

But depending on which state you live in, 14 is the age when youth become legally able to drive, work for pay, consent to sex, and/or be charged as adults for crimes.

Given that all of these are the normal rights of American citizens that we older folks take for granted, I think their onset constitutes a perfectly good time to grant citizens their right to a legal say over the destiny of their own country.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Tokyo Police embrace internet success

Canadian band Tokyo Police will make a stop at Pearl Street in Northampton this Saturday night to promote their recently-released album. Thanks to the online music community and various bloggers, the group made the transition from virtual anonymity to signing with Omaha-based Saddle Creek Records last year.

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While some are quick to dismiss the journalistic credibility of blogging, its undeniable influence over pop-culture seems to grow exponentially with each passing day. If there ever was a poster child for this newfound impact the Internet has in shaping the modern musical landscape, it would be Tokyo Police Club.

The youthful Canadian quartet started out in 2005, building a small following while generating buzz in their local Toronto area, catapulting them to play larger venues and local festivals, and ultimately signing a deal with the Canadian-based independent label Paper Bag Records to release their first studio recording.

In 2006, "A Lesson in Crime" was released to the public, a debut collection of frantic and quick-hitting tracks that seemingly defied genre typecasting. The band teased listeners with its potential and brevity by racing through the EP's eight tracks with reckless abandon, the finished product clocking in at fewer than 17 minutes.

While some mainstream music critics lauded this as a glaring flaw, the album was openly embraced for its frenetic pace and audacity by bloggers and online music communities. This freshly-generated publicity catapulted the band from localized obscurity into the mainstream musical climate.

"It was really surprising but awesome," said keyboardist Graham Wright of the online buzz that surrounded the band in a recent phone interview with The Daily Collegian. "But with any kind of hype you have to take it with a grain of salt really."

Modest in both experience and nature, Wright, as well as the rest of the band, is very conscious of the power online communities have on propelling relatively unknown bands into national prominence.

"I think Vampire Weekend is the prime example, their like what, the biggest band in the world now? The people creating the hype today are just regular people, not necessarily professionally-trained writers, just people with blogs," Wright said.

"These are everyday people, so they don't have to deal with the pressures or the politics of more traditional media. They have no loyalties so they can turn on you just as easy as they praised you and that hype can disappear really quickly."

In the wake of "Crime's" success and the bands growing online contingent of supporters the band signed to Omaha-based Saddle Creek Records in 2007, a partnership that left many fans perplexed given the two parties contrasting trademark sounds.

"Initially I was a bit skeptical of signing with Saddle Creek" Wright said of the partnership. "We really don't fit that 'Saddle Creek' sound they are so well known for. But looking back I truly believe it was the best choice, it has worked out better than I dared imagine."

While the band is admittedly overjoyed with how their affiliation with the label has turned out, the jump from a small independent label to Saddle Creek was hardly a rash decision.

"We talked to every record label we could think of both big and small," said Wright.

See TOKYO POLICE on page 10

Smith College remembers celebrated author Sylvia Plath

BY ALEX BUTLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For those who have "Lady Lazarus" memorized by heart and can explain every stanza of "Daddy," the opening of Smith College's Sylvia Plath 75th Year Symposium this weekend's event should be standard fare. For those unfamiliar with Smith College's famous alumna and her marks left on contemporary poetry and art, this weekend should prove quite an experience.

In October 2007, the University of Oxford held a two-day conference that centered on the work of Plath, a celebrated writer, and artists she inspired. The conference was immensely popular in England, and a follow-up was immediately organized.

This weekend marks the second component of this project, a two-day version of the Sylvia Plath Symposium at Smith College, where Plath, herself, taught.

The Boston native is most widely known for her contributions to the poetry world, though she was a painter and novelist as well.

She was born in Jamaica Plain and lived most of her life around New England, residing around Winthrop Beach for a decade. She has eight collections of poetry, along with three works of fiction, which include "The Bell Jar," and "Johnny Panic and the Bible of Dreams."

But while she was an avid writer, most of her poetry was released posthumously. As tragic as her characters are in her prose, Plath led one of the most tortured lives caught in print. On the night of Feb. 11, 1963, Plath took her own life in her kitchen. And while she left her children with their morning breakfast sitting outside of their room, she left a collection of poems on her dinner table to be published. The notorious collection, "Ariel," is perhaps one of her most recognized books of poems.

During her life, Plath worked hard to maintain the life of a female poet. She taught English courses at Smith, secretly stealing manuscript paper on which to write her novels and poems. She married Ted Hughes, another established poet, in 1956. Her works, even with their late release, have forever rocked modern poetry. In 1982, she became the first poet to receive the Pulitzer Prize.

This weekend would mark her 75th birthday. The events at Smith, which are all free and open to the public, include talks by fellow professors and friends of the late poet. Trinity, Marlboro, Williams and UMass-Dartmouth all will have representative speakers to give speeches throughout the day.

One feature this Symposium has over the Oxford Conference will be highlighted Saturday evening. Philip McCurdy, Elinor Klein and Marcia Stern, Plath's former boyfriend, friend, and roommate, will join a panel to discuss the poet from their first-hand encounters. Each will read a letter from Plath and answer questions from the audience, offering a glimpse at the poet in a brand-new light.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu

Marking what would have been her 75th birthday, Smith College will hold a two-day symposium over the weekend to celebrate Plath and her life's work.

Bookstore hosts 8th annual Writers of Color Reading

BY SOPHIA PASTORE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

On Wednesday, Food for Thought Books hosted the 8th annual Writers of Color Reading. All the readers were MFA or M.A./Ph.D. students from the University of Massachusetts. Most spoke of their ethnicity and heritage through childhood stories or representations of their childhood homes and experiences.

Poetry, fiction, and nonfiction were blended by the writers to form a detailed retelling of their varying cultural histories. Topics covered ranged from deeply emotional to purely amusing.

Ebony Rafus, an M.F.A. student in her final year of the program, introduced each of the readers with a short biography, then read from a novel she is working on in which a female protagonist must return home to see her dying father.

First to read was Kiren Vajjee, a student in his final year who playfully requested that a friend come to the podium and read a short collaborative poem, a retelling of one of his father's stories, entitled "Laughing Shoes," that he and a few others had written before he proceeded to read his own piece.

Colin Enriquez read poetry that referenced his early life in Brooklyn, N.Y. His reading of a piece that centered on malt liquor served at first to make the audience laugh, and then finally, to come away with a small taste of the struggle that many minorities in urban areas face.

Mark Koyama spoke about his parents moving in with his family and the pain and joy that came with that experience. His reading was peppered with frog-calls, which were echoed by a fellow student in the audience.

Ian Wang read poetry about the demolition of his house and the dynamic between a cab driver and passenger. He finished his performance with a plea for increased visits to his blog page and a promise that he would update more frequently if his requests were met.

Shannon Luders-Manuel read a piece about time spent with her father when she was a child and the experience of placing him in a nursing home. Threaded through her story were conflicted feelings about being biracial and a difficulty with choosing which race to identify with.

Denia Fraser presented colorful, imagery-ridden poetry that described nighttime and the insomnia, dreams, horrors and landscapes that can accompany it.

Ashwini Parameshwar read from her thesis project, an exploration of the life of the Hindu god Krishna. The specific piece detailed the life of Krishna as a baby with supernatural charm and strength, able to maneuver his way out of any tricky situation.

Possibly the most memorable of the readings was the final one. Gustavo Llarull read poetry about defecation and the importance of engaging in oral sex on the first date to ensure full compatibility with your future mate. He later read from a novel-in-progress that takes place in his native country of Argentina.

Though Ebony Rafus, the Writers of Color Reading's organizer will be graduating this year, he hopes the annual event will continue for years to come, as awareness of cultures and races is essential to a thriving community.

Food for Thought regularly holds events. A full listing of upcoming events can be found on their Web site.

Sophia Pastore can be reached at spastore@student.umass.edu

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, April 25

FILM

"Cloverfield," the 2008 horror movie, will be screened at 8 and 10 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union. This UPC event is free and open to the public. Beverages and popcorn will be served. There will be an encore of the film on Sunday at 8 p.m. at the same location.

MUSIC

Female musicians Feist and Ingrid Michaelson will perform at Smith College in John M. Greene Hall at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are $20 for Five College students and $25 for the general public. Doors open at 6:30 and tickets are available in room 106 of the Campus Center.

•

The Crafts Center will be holding an open mic night at 7:30 p.m. Sign-in will take place 30 minutes before the event is set to begin. All types of talent are welcome. The Craft Center is located in the basement of the Student Union.

•

Hanson, with opening acts Stephen Kellogg & the Sixers and Kate Voegele, will play at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. Tickets are $28.50.

Saturday, April 26

DANCE

"Alive With Dance – Senior Dance Repertoire" takes place at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. It will feature dance pieces choreographed by Allison Jenkins, Kathleen Horney, Rithy Ngy, Caroline Cohn, Alina Grzegorzewski, Kaitlin Patrick, Jessica Treubig, Eric Toedt and Emma Lovewell, all senior dance students. Tickets are $10 for the general public, $5 for 17-and-under, seniors and UMass students.

MUSIC

Canadian band Tokyo Police Club plays in the club-room at Pearl Street at 8:30 p.m. They will be joined by Seattle indie-pop band Smoosh and Who Shot Hollywood, an alternative-pop band of four 12- to 14-year-old musicians from Northampton and Amherst. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door

•

Sunday, April 27

UMass's Concert band, conducted by George Parks, performs at the Fine Arts Center at 2 p.m. They will play some of the band's favorite pieces. Tickets are $10 for the general public, $5 for 17 and under and seniors, and $3 for UMass students.

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

CINEMARK

The Best Seat In Town

CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL

367 Russell St. 413-587-4233

Schedule for Friday 4/25/2008 thru Thurs. 5/1/2008

Purchase Tickets @ cinemark.com

Baby Mama (PG-13)*
1:30 4:15 7:05 9:55

Deception (R)*
1:00 4:10 7:10 10:00

Harold & Kumar: Escape From Guantanamo Bay (R)*
1:50 4:25 7:35 10:20

88 Minutes (R)*
1:45 4:40 7:40 10:25

Forbidden Kingdom (PG-13)*
1:20 4:20 7:30 10:10

Forgetting Sarah Marshall (R)*
1:10 1:55 4:00 4:55 7:00 7:50 9:40 10:30

Young@Heart - CinéArts (PG)*
1:15 4:30 7:15 9:50

Prom Night (PG-13)
1:40 4:50 7:45 10:05

Smart People - CinéArts (R)
1:35 4:45 7:25 9:45

21 (PG-13)
1:05 4:05 7:20 10:15

Nim's Island (PG)
1:25 4:35 6:55 9:15

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS

TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Canadian quartet at Pearl St.

TOKYO POLICE from page 8

"When it finally came down to it Saddle Creek really just offered the best of both worlds for us by being small enough to get in personal contact with while still being large enough to transcend beyond the indie scene. They're really super great people too."

Last Tuesday, the bands first full-length offering from Saddle Creek, "Elephant Shell," was released in stores. While still possessing the band's unmistakable style of relatively brief and quick-paced songs, "Elephant Shell's" sound is decidedly less scattered than its predecessor and can be best described as a more centralized, cohesive effort than "A Lesson in Crime."

As with any shift in sound, there is always the chance of a backlash from fans, but according to Wright, this was a risk the band was willing to take as they strongly believe in the quality of their latest album.

"The reaction from fans has been mixed, which is honestly what I expected," Wright said in regards to fan feedback. "Some of our diehard fans, if I can really use the term die-hard, seemed a bit puzzled at first, but we have gotten some really positive responses as well. The album is defiantly different in some very key ways [from 'A Lesson in Crime,'] so it takes a little while to warm up to. I'm sure it'll grow on them though, it did for me."

One thing fans and critics universally can agree on is that even with the lengthier confines of a full-length album, the band still has a flair for creating songs that barely break the two-minute barrier. "My first thought was 'Oh great, we made another batch of two minute songs,' but we honestly never put any thought into how long a song is going to be" Wright said with a slight chuckle, adding, "We don't go back and add things in after the fact, we just write them the way we do. I guess you could say we have musical ADD."

With their current tour, the band hopes to win over more fans that may be on the fence about the new album and, according to Wright, this has been going exactly as planned.

"The tour has been going great and we've been playing some fantastic shows to some really responsive fans," Wright said. "We're all excited to come back to Northampton; Pearl Street is a really awesome venue."

Tokyo Police Club plays Saturday, April 26 with opening acts Smoosh and Who Shot Hollywood at the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton. Doors open for the event at 8:30 p.m. and tickets are $12.50 in advance, $15 at the door

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Last Tuesday, Tokyo Police Club released their first full-length album, "Elephant Shell," off of their label Saddle Creek. After introducing a new sound, the band aims to win over fans on this tour.

Challenge awaits UMass in Syracuse

Minutemen take on No. 2 Orange

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

In 2007, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team defeated Syracuse on April 28, to end the Orange's streak of 24 consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances. SU maintains no conference affiliation, leaving its fate to the selection committee every year.

This year, the Orange – ranked second nationally behind Duke – have locked up a spot in the 16-team field. UMass's consecutive losses to ECAC rivals Georgetown and Fairfield essentially eliminated the Minutemen from a chance at the NCAA Tournament. Loyola has clinched the conference championship, and the Minutemen are unlikely to receive an at-large bid with their seven losses.

UMass coach Greg Cannella, however, has no plans to give up on this season. With so many young players in key positions these final two games can set the tone for the direction of the program in the coming years. The Minutemen end their season at home with Rutgers on May 3.

The matchup with the Orange is especially interesting since they possess one of the nation's top offenses and a staunch defensive unit. Three Syracuse players have scored at least 20 goals on the season with Tewaaraton Trophy candidate Mike Leveille leading the way with 33.

UMass's experienced defensive unit struggled against Georgetown two weeks ago; the Orange pose an even greater risk with their talented front line. The Minutemen cannot focus solely on Leveille as the senior also leads the team with 22 assists.

Sean Krygier, UMass's top 1-on-1 defender, is essentially charged with cutting down Leveille's shooting lanes, while also preventing him from finding any of his teammates open in position to score. Kenny Nims and Steven Brooks are also viable options for the Orange in the offensive third. Seniors David Von Voigt, Brian Danvers and Paul Manesis have as difficult a task as Krygier despite not holding responsibility for Leveille's location.

UMass's man-down defense holds opponents to a 16.3 conversion rate. But with SU's dynamic offense, the Minutemen face their most difficult task. The Orange score 42 percent of the time they go a man up. At times, UMass's aggressive play leads to unnecessary stick fouls or simple mental errors, such as off sides. Providing the Orange with extra opportunities on offense will doom the Minutemen on Saturday.

The Carrier Dome also provides SU with another advantage: It averages more than 5,000 fans per game. UMass rarely plays in front of more than 1,000 on Garber Field or on the road. UMass also hasn't played a game indoors this season, and has never won in Syracuse. The story is different when the Orange come to Amherst, where UMass has won four games in a row. SU came to Garber Field on consecutive weeks in 2005 and lost to UMass both times. The first was the regular-season finale, a 14-13 UMass win that clinched home-field advantage for the Minutemen in the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

UMass drew the Orange in the first round, and downed them again by one goal – 16-15. The offensive inconsistencies of the 2008 Minutemen have Cannella hoping the score is slightly lower this time around.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

AMANDA LUNSETH/COLLEGIAN

Freshman midfield Ryan Hantverk has scored five goals and assisted on another for the Minutemen. He has started seven of the 11 games he has played in this season.

AMANDA LUNSETH/COLLEGIAN

Junior attack Tim Balise scored five consecutive UMass goals in its 10-9 loss to Fairfield Tuesday afternoon at Garber Field. Balise leads the Minutemen with 30 goals this season.

UMass takes on MIT and Northeastern in Boston

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team is looking to rebound this weekend from their second-place finish in the Atlantic 10 Championships last Saturday.

The Minutewomen travel to the Charles River in Boston, Mass., to face of against the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Northeastern, UMass head coach Jim Dietz's alma mater.

The heavyweights for UMass, the Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8, Varsity 4 and the Novice 8, will race against Northeastern. Against MIT, the Minutewomen will race just their Lightweight 4 boat.

The Huskies are coming off a strong showing this weekend against some of the top programs in the nation. Their Varsity 8 beat Texas, Syracuse and Gonzaga over Saturday and Sunday and came within five seconds of beating Notre Dame.

The Second Varsity 8 did not fare as well. They lost to Gonzaga, Texas and Notre Dame, but did outrace Syracuse. NU's Varsity 4 came within six-tenths of a second of beating Texas on Sunday.

With UMass's Second Varsity 8 recently being ranked fifth of all Junior Varsity boats in the New England Region, its coach feels pretty good about its chances against a tough NU squad.

"Those guys are moving really fast and they could have a shot at this Northeastern boat," Dietz said. "I wouldn't be surprised if our second boat could pull out a win."

As for the Varsity 8, anything close will be an encouragement for the boat.

"[The women] know how fast Northeastern is. For me it is encouraging that we're doing what we're doing with four freshmen in the first boat. For us to be even close to Northeastern is going to be a victory," Dietz said.

This weekend's regatta will give the Minutewomen an opportunity to try some new things.

"Sometimes going against somebody that's that much faster than you, you can be a little bit daring and try a little different race technique and see what might happen from that," Dietz said.

The crew will not taper its practices this week, and row straight through in preparation for the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships next week. The regatta gives UMass an opportunity for revenge against Rhode Island, who ended the Minutewomen's streak of 12 straight A-10 Championships, when they won its first ever.

For Dietz, his return to NU's boathouse will not resemble the one he was used to when he rowed for the school between 1968 and 1972. Back then, Northeastern's rowing program rowed out of the old riverside boathouse.

The "tin can," as Dietz calls it, which the Minutewomen are rowing out of, is quite different from what the crew will see this weekend at NU.

"I told the women, we're going to see how the better half lives," Dietz said. "These guys are rowing in a $6-million, beautiful facility with real floors and locker rooms."

This weekend's regatta begins Saturday at 9 a.m. The Varsity 8 boats will start the day's action with each race beginning 20 minutes after the previous race's start.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

UNH Invitational prepares Maroon and White for A-10s

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men and women's track and field teams travel to New Hampshire on Saturday for the third annual UNH Invitational. The meet will serve as a final tune-up for the squads as next week the postseason begins with the Atlantic 10 Championships taking place at the new Track and Field Facility at UMass.

UMass will look for many more big-time contributions from the participants on Saturday – contributions similar to the one they got from Lisa Wilson last weekend. The sophomore finished in the top three in three events at the Larry Ellis Invitational and now holds the second-farthest distance throws in the shot put, discuss and hammer throw. Had the meet used team scoring, she would have been UMass's top point scorer.

The Minutewomen, along with the Minutemen, have had a very strong spring season, highlighted by their second-place finish in the UMass Invitational held on April 12. The meet was also a bright spot for the Minutemen, who finished the event in third place.

There are seven Minutemen and 10 Minutewomen seniors competing in their last regular season meet this weekend..

Both teams are composed primarily of freshmen and sophomores, giving UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien and women's coach Julie LaFreniere plenty of depth and experience going into the winter indoor season.

In this meet, UMass will prepare for next weekend's meet – the A-10 Championships. This is a meet in which the Minutemen and Minutewomen not only get to showcase their talent against some of the top competition in the nation, but also get to introduce their new facility to the rest of the conference. The second home meet of the season, the A-10 Championship meet is also the last home competition for the teams this season.

The teams will travel in three weeks to compete in the meets that they qualify for beginning with the New England Championships at UNH. A week later, they will head back to Princeton University so the men can take part in the IC4A Championships, while the women will partake in the ECAC Championships. Should any UMass athletes qualify, they will compete in the NCAA Championships in Iowa on June 11-14.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossack@student.umass.edu.

Holly Heinricher and the Minutewomen head to Durham, N.H., this weekend for the UNH Invitational, the final race before the A-10 Championships next weekend in Amherst.

Write for Sports
sports@dailycollegian.com

NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic, and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich_daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

UMass takes on St. Joe's in play

Minutemen lead all-time series

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

History doesn't often mean much on the baseball field, but Massachusetts certainly hopes it does this weekend against Saint Joseph's.

The Minutemen have dominated the all-time series against the Hawks, compiling a 56-16 record dating back to 1974. The two teams didn't meet last season, but UMass won the series (2-1) the previous year in Amherst.

This season's series takes place in Philadelphia at Latshaw-McCarthy Field, where the Hawks (14-24, 6-9 Atlantic 10) have played much better baseball than they have on the road.

UMass (12-18, 5-10 A-10) currently ranks 12th in the conference, one spot behind the Saint Joe's, George Washington and Fordham. With only four conference series left, the Minutemen need to consistently win games to crack into the top six in the conference – which is required to reach the A-10 postseason tournament.

"We just need to execute better and more consistently. I think if we do that we'll be in good shape as we finish the last three weeks of the season," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

Bryan Leigh draws the start on Friday for the Minutemen, while Mike Dicato and Mitchell Clegg will follow the next two days. Don Werner (senior right-hander), Dominic Favazza (freshman right-hander) and sophomore left-hander Randy Mower are the likely starters for the Hawks.

UMass enters the series having lost four of its last five games, including two of three against Charlotte, where it was outscored 50-17 in the series. In their most recent game, the Minutemen lost to Central Connecticut State, 9-7, in extra innings at Earl Lorden Field.

The Hawks have dropped all but one of their five series in the conference, with the only series win against Fordham. They enter this series having lost five of their last six games.

Saint Joe's lost a lot of players to graduation after last season, and has mixed players in and out of the lineup this year. Fifteen different players have started at least 10 games this season for the Hawks.

"They are very young. I think they're only playing two guys from last year's team," Stone said. "They are in transition where they're trying to get a lot of guys experience."

Many of the pitchers on the UMass staff are new, as well. Clegg and Leigh – both juniors – transferred here this year from different programs. Both have had some terrific starts, but the results haven't consistently been there.

While the pitching has been a bit of a problem of late for the Minutemen, the offense is starting to take off as Ryan Franczek has broken out of his slump and Brian Baudnet has shown no signs of slowing down his torrid pace.

The main issue Stone is frustrated with is the team's consistency.

"We just need to play well. Our pitchers have to pitch consistently well, our hitters need to hit in the clutch and we need to play solid defense," he said. "We need to make things happen and compete like hell. That's what we're looking for."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Senior catcher Bryan Garrity is hitting .217 for the Minutemen with no home runs and 12 RBIs in his final season with the program.

Kyle Multner and the Minutemen head to Philadelphia this weekend for three games with A-10 rival Saint Joseph's. Multner is hitting .330 for UMass this season.

FINE DINING & SPIRITS
A Locally Grown Eatery and Catering Company
BUTTERNUTS
Be A Local Hero Buy Locally Grown

Butternuts congratulates seniors and welcomes the UMass community to join us for our creative New England cuisine.

Make your graduation plans now!

Hours: Tues - Thurs 11-9 | Fri - Sat 11-10 | Sun 11-9
Closed Mondays

See our full menu on our Website!

413-586-0234
195 Russell Street
www.butternutsonline.com

Butternuts Features:

The freshest & finest local products

Celiac Friendly/ Gluten Free Dining

Full Service Bar with Celiac & Organic Selections

Vegan/ Vegetarian Selections

Extensive Wine Menu with Organic Selections

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH WHAT YOU SAY BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

RAFT GUIDES

Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

CAMP TAKAJO.

Naples, Maine. Noted for picturesque lakefront location, exceptional facilities. Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, golf, flag football, roller hockey, field hockey, swimming, sailing, water skiing, gymnastics, dance, horseback riding, archery, weight training, newspaper, photography, video, woodworking, ceramics/pottery, crafts, fine arts, silver jewelry, copper enamel, nature study, radio/electronics, theater, costumer, piano accompanist, music instrumentalist, backpacking, rock climbing, canoeing/kayaking, ropes course, secretarial, nanny. Call Takajo at (866) 356-2267. Submit application online at takajo.com. Will be in the Campus Center Job Fair tomorrow.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postermg@art-spromo.org. Hiring ASAP

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE. CAMP PONTIAC Is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email stefanie@camppontiac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr. English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

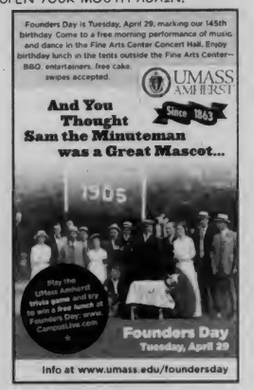
Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

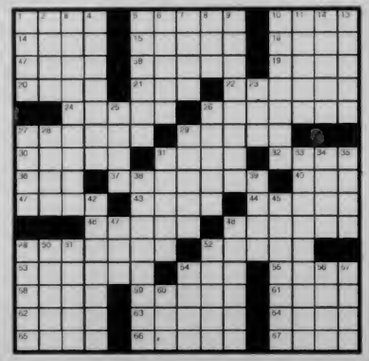
Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101.

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St, Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org



SERVICES



Spring Break from $199. Last price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away. 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki

This is the Canoodle box.

Draw stick figures getting their freak on.

Hell hath no fury like a women's scorn for sudoku.

			8	1
		5	7			6	8
		2				3	7
5				4	3			7
3								2
7			6	9				4
	3	8				1
	9	6			1	7
				6	4

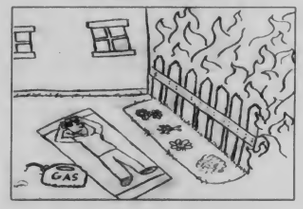
Quote of the Weekend

"But no matter who you are, you must remember this one thing: No matter what a stripper says there's no sex in the Champagne Room."

— Chris Rock

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Bobby Rickets



Next week's contest will start on Monday. See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

This is worse than the time I got hit by a golfball while nude snorkeling at Biff's Golf Emporium. I am so unfortunate.

What a Lady Wants By Dan Lucey

After years of being told the grass was always greener on the other side Frank decided to take matters into his own hands...

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
As long as you keep drinking chocolate milk, you will never have to worry about becoming an adult.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't kill 'em with kindness, kill 'em with cool.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Beneath the Earth, a small group of committed sweet potatoes are practicing Shakesperean theater: Yamlet.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It's not nice to slug people in the face. Gastropods should never be used for gratuitous acts of violence.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will star and direct in a pterodactyl themed pornographic movie.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Mourn for the child who followed you down the slide after you pooped yo' trousers that fateful day in preschool.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
One day Matt Damon will tell you that he wishes he could be more like you. Laugh at him and grope his wife.

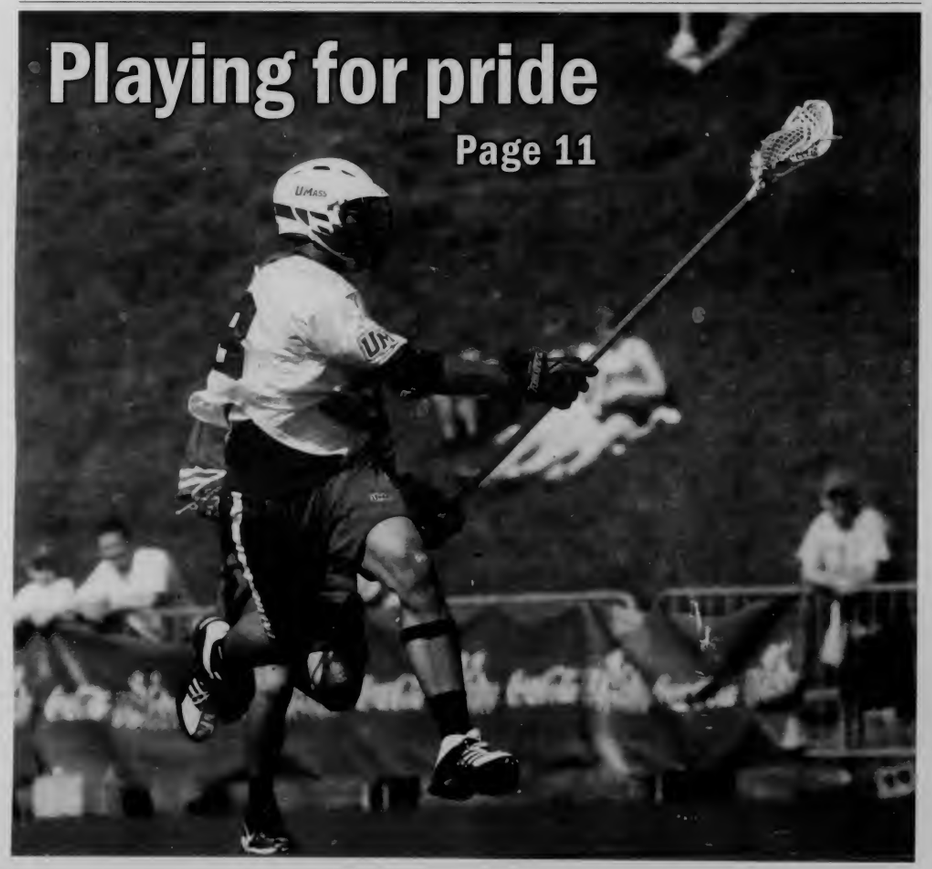
virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Henceforth you shall be stricken by a runny nose and itchy eyes. Some call it allergies, but it's really a pox on your home.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There are ninjas all around you, but don't bother looking for them. They're invisible.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Playing hard to get is not the same as getting hard playing.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
A liar is a person who says they are going pee and then vanishes to the bathroom for seven minutes.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Dare: See if you can gag yourself ten times with a popsicle stick without throwing up.



Townehouse of Amherst Condominums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Sports Weekend

Friday, April 25, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Playing for pride

Page 11

INSIDE: Minutewomen fall in A-10 finals | Page 8

The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
New England's Largest College Daily Est. 1890

RAIN : HI: 56 LO: 46 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 28, 2008

Marching to support Tibet

Locals raise awareness of China's human rights record

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

As the world prepares for the 2008 Summer Olympic Games in Beijing, China, all eyes have been on China. The international spotlight has renewed controversy over China's role in Tibet, with rallies and protests erupting along the Olympics' torch relay route. Last Friday afternoon, local activists marched nearly nine miles in support of Tibet.

Friday's rally was held to raise awareness for the Tibetan cause but also to demand the release of the Panchen Lama, who is considered the second most Tibetan spiritual authority, after the Dalai Lama. Friday was the Panchen Lama's 19th birthday. Tibetan activists say the boy was abducted at the age of six-years-old, making him the youngest political prisoner in the world.

"[The Panchen Lama] has not been seen or heard from since he was abducted by Chinese authority in 1995," said Dadon Ngodup, who spoke on behalf of the Students for a Free Tibet.

More than 50 protestors gathered on the steps of the Student Union for the rally, which kicked of at noon with the singing of the Tibetan national anthem. Lhakyi Lokyitsang, the master of ceremonies, then introduced a group of speakers.

"Behind the Himalayas with no foreign tourists, no independent press, we fear a massacre is going on in Tibet," Thondup Tsering said. Tsering called for an independent fact finding mission to be sent into Tibet, as well as calling for the release of all prisoners and an end to the killings.

Tsering also said that the Free Tibet movement "is not an anti-China or an anti-Chinese movement," but a movement against the Chinese government's policies in Tibet.

See TIBET on page 2

Students from the Five Colleges and local residents marched Friday afternoon to show their support for Tibet. Amherst resident Jordan Gyltsen (center), 12, flashes a peace sign to the crowd as he participates in the march that took demonstrators from Amherst to Northampton.

University increases computer, internet access

Laptops available for student use in library

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

The Reserve, Media and Microfilms department of the W.E.B. DuBois Library at the University of Massachusetts now has more than 50 laptop computers available to students.

The reserve department, located on the third floor of the library, offers laptops that can be rented for four hours at a time but can't be removed from the library. After four hours, if there are other laptops available, students can renew the laptops for another session.

The department used to have 24 machines but received funding to purchase additional units, according to Anne Moore, head of user services at the DuBois Library.

"This is just a lot of machines," Moore said of the laptops, which are available in case there are no free computers on the Learning Commons level of the library.

Wireless access in the building is being added to the fifth and 13th floors and is already available on the second and third floors.

Wireless is now also available in the Integrated Science and Engineering Library, which is located on the second floor of the Lederle Graduate Resource Center low rise building. The science library is open from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, 9 a.m. through 5 p.m. Saturday and from 1 p.m.to 9 p.m. Sunday.

"We will be getting wireless throughout the building," Moore said. She said the rest of the library may see wireless as soon as the fall semester.

Through an increase in funding, the DuBois Library now has approximately 50 laptops available for temporary rental by students. Wireless internet access will also be added to the fifth and 13th floors.

The reserve department is also extending its hours; it is now open all hours that the library is open; Sunday from 11 a.m. to Friday at 9 p.m., and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. In the past, the reserves section closed at midnight during the week.

Moore says the new services and hours were designed to be more convenient for students.

"We're trying to get it up and running quickly," she said.

The new hours went into affect on April 21. Two students were hired to cover the additional overnight hours.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

UMass study to examine health of bees

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

In the past few years, bee populations have been decimated by mites and viruses, most notably the mite called the "Varroa Destructor," which wiped out nearly all wild bee hives and has done significant damage to the populations of bee farms, as well.

University of Massachusetts microbiology professor and insect pathologist John Burand is studying why bees are getting sick.

Now bees are facing a new problem: Colony Collapse Disorder (CCD). CCD is a condition in which nearly all of the bees suddenly leave the hive. One day, the hive will be teeming with them. The next, there will only be a few left. Unlike the mite problem, nobody knows why this is happening.

"Bee Keepers expect to lose 14 percent to 17 percent or their hives every year, sort of a normal loss," said Burand, "and they learn to deal with that. Since 2006 those losses have gone up from some beekeepers to 50 to 90 percent. Probably to do with stress bees are under, something the bees have encountered, pesticide growers are using or other pathogens."

And nobody would care too much, besides the beekeepers, except for the fact that honeybees are the main pollinators for a wide range of plants, including the huge cranberry business in Massachusetts. Without pollination, the plants do not grow, which would have a significant impact on the farming industry.

See BEES on page 2

To create space for the new recreation center, the University recently demolished the Stucco Cow Barn located across from the Mullins Center. Preserve UMass is working to maintain other historic buildings on campus.

Maintaining campus history

Group advocates preservation of 26 University buildings

By Katherine Neubert
Collegian Staff

Preserve UMass (PUMA), a private unincorporated group started last spring at the University of Massachusetts, is involved in a number of negotiations led by the Massachusetts Historical Commission regarding the fate of several campus structures. The group is working in conjunction with the Town of Amherst Historical Commission, the University administration and the UMass Building Authority.

Such negotiations have led to an agreement by all parties involved, that the main section of the historic Stucco Cow Barn, Milkers Bungalow, and Calf Barn could neither be saved nor adapted to a modern use.

A few years ago, the UMass Alumni Association wanted to convert the structure into an alumni center, but a close examination revealed a lack of feasibility in the project. It is said to have been too costly to refurbish the structure because of its ceramic block and stucco construction.

"We and the Amherst Commission tried to have the two silos on the north end of the barn saved as the site for a permanent exhibit documenting the history of the barn complex and the importance of the research and teaching done there over the decades," said Joseph Larson, the corresponding secretary of Preserve UMass.

Negotiations now focus on a Memorandum of Agreement's (MOA) third draft by the Massachusetts Historical Commission and Preserve UMass, the Amherst Commission and the state Commission are ready to sign. Though, the administration and the UMass Building Authority haven't agreed yet.

The draft MOA contains a series of findings that document the events that led to the loss of the barn and give standing to Preserve UMass and the Amherst Commission to be parties to the agreement.

It also includes five stipulations regarding the preservation process. The University must produce written and photographic documentation of the stucco barn and several other historic buildings. UMass must also create a permanent exhibit documenting the important role the University has played in agricultural research.

More significantly, the agreement stipulates that UMass will conduct a campus cultural survey and master plan that will meet state and national standards with respect to the buildings that are eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. This includes

See HISTORIC on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 128

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN UNDERSHORT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Locals march for Tibet

TIBET from page 1

According to a flyer from Students for a Free Tibet, "Over 1.2 million Tibetans have died as a direct result of the occupation, over 6,000 monasteries have been destroyed, and thousands of Tibetans have been imprisoned and tortured for their beliefs," since China invaded Tibet in 1949. The Dalai Lama, the spiritual and political leader of Tibet, escaped to India with his government in 1959.

Many supporters of China argue that life has improved for most Tibetans since China took control of the government, and that the Western media is biased in Tibet's favor.

The group then marched almost two miles to the Amherst Town Common, where State Senator Ellen Storey and Amherst Town Manager Laurence Schaffer were waiting to speak. Police were stationed along the route, which took the marchers down East Pleasant St.

After Storey and Schaffer spoke, the marching continued.

"We feel like marching is the best way to raise awareness," said Five College for Free Tibet member Tenzin Bhuti.

Tenzin Dotsang, a Tibetan student and a member of Students for a Free Tibet said the routes for the march to Amherst and the later march to Northampton were chosen because they were the most public, going through the center of Amherst, Hadley and Northampton.

Sonam Lama traveled in a pick-up truck carrying the signs and refreshments for the marchers. He parked the truck in a parking lot on Route 9 as he waited for the rally to catch up.

"I see quite a bit of support from community members," Lama said. As he waited, passing cars regularly honked, waved or cheered their support. A group of children stuck their heads out of the windows of a school bus and cheered.

At many points along the route, people came out of their houses to stop and watch. Once the group reached the center of Northampton, people stopped along the sidewalks to watch, and many new people joined in.

Sky Halm was riding her bike when she heard the rally pass; she turned her bike around to follow the group.

"I think it's a very important global issue," she said.

Once they reached Memorial Hall in Northampton, the group stopped to rest before beginning the final portion of the event. After the break, about 20 activists shaved their heads as a symbol of solidarity.

"It's in solidarity with the monks and the nuns in Tibet who have been tortured," said Lobsang Ngodub, who shaved his head. Ngodub escaped from Tibet in 1959 to India. In 1992, his wife moved to the United States. In 1995, he followed.

Tsering, who also had his head shaved, added that the move was also a protest against the Olympic torch, which he described as "tainted with blood," being brought through Tibet and onto Mount Everest, which he said Tibetan people feel is sacred.

Lama said he did not shave his head because it is not Tibetan culture, but Indian culture. Instead, he did not wash his hair on Friday, which is Tibetan tradition.

Tshi Dolme, of Northampton, is a Tibetan woman who was born in India. She moved to the U.S. in 1992. She was the only woman who shaved her head. When it was over, she saved a ponytail of hair in a bag.

She said she did it "to show support for Tibetan people."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

As a part of Friday's march and rally, Amherst resident Ngawang Gyatso, 18, had his head shaved by Tsering Chodon in Northampton.

Group advocates preserving buildings

HISTORIC from page 1

planning for adaptive reuse of the historic structures to provide functions that are of current importance to the University.

Meanwhile, Preserve UMass seeks to gain respect among its peer organizations to bigger players in the building preservation process.

"Preserve UMass has about 105 members from Nantucket to Berkshire County, plus a number from out of state," Larson said. "They are alumni, active and retired UMass faculty and staff members, friends of the campus and professionals in historic preservation."

However, no structures have been preserved during the short time of the group's existence.

With four or five other locations on campus considered to fill the spot for the new recreation center, the Stucco Cow Barn, Milkers Bungalow and Calf Barn were the best site to meet several objectives.

While they were recently demolished, the Wooden Victorian Horse Barn, Blasdell House and Grinnell Arena remain.

"This material, plus other issues made it virtually impossible to convert to a modern use from a building code and safety issue. The two silos on the north end of the barn were made of reinforced poured concrete and offered an opportunity to preserve these as an exhibit site."

There are still about 26 campus buildings on the Massachusetts Historical Commission's Inventory of Historic and Archaeological Assets of the Commonwealth, according to the Feb. 9 PUMA Senate Report.

The list includes two buildings of historical significance: the 1884 Old Chapel, the iconic image of the state's land-grant university, and the 1728 Stockbridge House (University Club), the oldest house in Amherst.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu

JASON TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Preserve UMass, an organization that advocates the preservation of historic UMass buildings, is negotiating with the University to create an exhibit documenting the recently-demolished Stucco Cow Barn.

UMass study aims to improve bee health

BEES from page 1

"The project we're working is broader than CCD; what we're looking at is bee health, the factors that impact bee health and the microorganisms associated with bees as indicators as bee health," said Burand. "Just like humans and other animals who have microbes normally associated with their body, bees probably have these same microorganisms. One of the things we're going to try to do is identify microbes associated with healthy bee colonies that might be absent in bee colonies that are suffering some kind of disease."

The study involves taking sample bees from local as well as commercial bee keepers.

Burand notes it won't be an easy task though. Identifying what causes bees to be sick is highly involved and tedious.

"We want to find something, but it's very rare. So how do you find a needle in a haystack? You use a magnet, and we have the magnets. We have very powerful molecular tools to identify specific microorganisms that are associated with bees," Burand said.

Burand and the coalition of researchers who have formed the UMass Amherst Bee Consortium, along with the help of local and regional bee keepers, hope that their ongoing research, which has just received a $150,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, will result in better bee health across the board.

"We would like to be in a position as the UMass Bee Consortium where we can provide information to primarily local growers about what the situation is with their bees and what kinds of practices they can use, what kind of conditions they can set up that's really going to improve bee health," Burand said. "That's the long term goal, and that's why it has to be a consortium because it's going to take people with a lot of expertise with expertise in a lot of different areas. The beekeepers know a lot, but they're not scientists, and so we're trying to approach the problems from a scientific point of view."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

Online tours for prospective students

BY NIC CAMPOS
THE DAILY EVE PRESS

BOSTON (U-WIRE) – College tours usually consist of parents taking their children from one school to another, with statistics and stories spouted by a tour guide on the college quad, but a new Web site aims to offer a change of pace for pre-frosh across the country.

High school seniors can wander their prospective college campuses without leaving their hometowns by using online college fair Web site CollegeWeekLive.com, which offers interactive virtual tours and chats with college admissions officers and students.

For two days twice a year, the Web site gives incoming freshmen a chance to chat with admissions counselors, download application materials and visit virtual booths.

CollegeWeekLive.com Marketing Vice President Mike Lewis said the site began its services in November and said students can view presentations from college admissions experts across the country through a video feed. The site allows prospective students to conduct a one-to-one text or video chat with an admissions counselor with complete anonymity or quiz current students about campus life, he said.

"A higher level of interaction is possible than would be from a live fair," he said. "They don't have to be bashful about mentioning their GPA in the presence of other hopefuls."

Lewis said the free registration will help parents stay active in their children's college selection from home.

"They can even browse schools they think their kids would like and suggest them," he said.

CollegeWeekLive.com's services span from the East to the West coasts and include Boston-area schools like Emerson College, Northeastern University, Harvard University, Suffolk University and Simmons College.

Simmons College Office of Undergraduate Admissions Senior Associate Director Janet Ferrari said her school decided to join the site following its success in the fall.

Activists arrested for sit-in face jail time

BY JESSICA TURNBULL
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

STATE COLLEGE, Penn. (U-WIRE) – Penn State police filed charges against 31 anti-sweatshop activists Friday, police director Steve Shelow said.

Shelow said each person will be charged with a subsection of criminal trespass called defiant trespass – a third degree misdemeanor.

The charges, filed in Magisterial District Judge Jonathan Grine's office Friday, are the result of a sit-in protest by members of United Students Against Sweatshops and Student Labor Action Project in Old Main last Tuesday.

Grine will not view or sign the charges until early next week, a secretary at his office said. The students are not formally charged until Grine signs the criminal complaints, she said.

Protester Stephanie Chapman, who was arrested at the sit-in, said the charge could carry a $2,500 fine or a year in prison.

According to a university press release, the students "may have an opportunity to receive a fine and/or apply for Accelerated Rehabilitative Disposition, which is a pre-trial program designed to allow first-time, non-violent offenders to circumvent a trial and clear their records."

The Office of Judicial Affairs will also review the cases and decide if it merits judicial review, Penn State spokesman Geoff Rushton said.

Shelow said the decision to file charges was made by university police and the Centre County District Attorney's office.

The students were advocating that Penn State President Graham Spanier state support for the Designated Suppliers Program (DSP), a fair labor initiative.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE $1000
OFF ANY RENTAL FROM NOW THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1ST!
STOP BY FOR FREE PIZZA!
FRIDAY MAY 2ND 8:30AM-7PM
&
SATURDAY MAY 3RD 10AM-3PM
ONLY
CALL 253-7377 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE 420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

Ties to slavery left unexplored

BY BRITTANY M. LLEWELLYN
THE HARVARD CRIMSON

CAMBRIDGE (U-WIRE) — With initiatives like a new financial aid program, Harvard often start trends that ripple through higher education. But when it comes to investigating its institutional history, the university might do well to take a cue from its peers.

Like many venerable American universities, Harvard's past is tied to slavery: for decades, if not centuries, the university inculcated pro-slavery sentiment and benefited from funds that were the fruits of the slave trade or slave labor. But unlike many of its peers – such as Brown and Yale – Harvard has never conducted a formal examination of its past.

And though the university has no plans to launch such an investigation, many feel the time is right for Harvard to do so, given that university President Drew G. Faust – a leading Civil War historian and a self-professed "civil-rights advocate and activist" – is at the helm.

"Harvard is perhaps uniquely positioned to engage in an exploration of our country's history with slavery and its connection to the present," says Alfred L. Brophy, an expert on civil rights litigation at the University of Alabama School of Law. "Now is a good time for Harvard to do more in terms of an investigation, and Drew Faust, who is our nation's leading historian of the Old South, is an ideal person to lead this process."

But Faust said that despite her academic interests, she will not be calling for an institutional investigation of any kind, even while acknowledging that the question of Harvard's entanglements with slavery is "intriguing" for students and professors to explore.

"I'm not going to be doing this as a presidential project," she said.

While Harvard, by virtue of being in northern New England, was less entangled in slavery than its peers in the South, the university nevertheless was implicated to a degree in the slave trade.

Along with Brown, Harvard was mentioned in a series of class-action lawsuits beginning in 2002, in which descendants of slaves sought compensation for damages from private corporations that profited from slavery. The universities, while not sued directly, were cited as examples of schools whose fortunes rested historically on the institution of slavery.

Shortly after the lawsuits were filed, Harvard Law School professor Charles J. Ogletree, Jr. published an op-ed in The New York Times arguing that Harvard, Brown, and Yale were all "probable targets" of a lawsuit to be filed by his Reparations Coordinating Committee later that year.

While all of the class-action suits were dismissed and Ogletree's threatened lawsuit never materialized. The accusations prompted officials at Yale and Brown to examine the extent to which their institutions benefited from slavery.

In 2001, Yale graduate students published a lengthy report that examined the extent to which the school benefitted financially from slavery and perpetuated pro-slavery ideology. A number of Yale's residential colleges, for example, were named after slave owners, most notably Calhoun College, which is named for John C. Calhoun, the South Carolina senator and ardent defender of Southern rights.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
MONDAY, APRIL 28, 2008

"New knowledge is the most valuable commodity on earth. The more truth we have to work with, the richer we become." – Kurt Vonnegut

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Navigating the gen-ed jungle

Lauren Rockoff

When I was in high school, I can recall sitting through advanced placement classes thinking about how great it would be to have a couple of credits and intro courses already under my belt when I started college. I thought I was on the right track toward a rewarding four years of studying within my major. I also thought I could pursue my other interests, maybe take an art class, sociology or another language.

But that's not what college is. You get here, and you might arbitrarily pick a major or walk around undecided for a while. Everybody asks you what your major is, and then they always say that they didn't know what they were going to do for the longest time either and that eventually, you will figure it out too. And you listen, feeling like it's only a matter of time before you do figure out your sole interest in life.

Okay, the sole interest? Are you allowed at least two, maybe? Well, for most self-respecting students, a double major is out of the question. It means taking on extra credits wherever you can fit them and doubling or tripling up all of your general education requirements into one class, whether said class interests you or not.

So, what about your other interests? Shouldn't your "secondary" interests play a role in your education, too?

Finally, you pick something you think you can stomach for four straight years that may, but probably won't, determine the direction of your adult life or create your own major. So, you like drawing cartoons, studying heredity and analyzing poetry? BDIC it. There really aren't enough analytical Mendelian cartoonists out there. Why should you deny a side of yourself in order to fit into some predetermined major?

Let's discuss general education requirements. What makes physics-chemistry-biology more important than psychology-sociology-anthropology? Why are UMass students required to take two biological or physical sciences and only one psychology or sociology course?

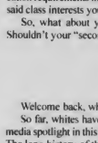
Well, for starters, psychology and sociology are lumped together in the same "social world" category as history and literature. Seems a bit off to me.

When given a choice – any choice – perhaps, from a list of eight open classes that fulfill one's historical studies requirement, students often find themselves flummoxed. "A choice?" they think to themselves. But what is this? I was told to take Psych100, Psych240, Psych350, etc. and now they all chosen (for the most part – parental threats aside) to continue our education for at least another four years. So here we are, voluntarily paying to learn, with the illusion of choice. But that's the problem: It's an illusion. If we could really choose, we could take so many more of the classes we want to take. Instead, we find ourselves in a class we can't stand with other students who are head-over-heels for everything the professor says. The motivation to learn begins to dissipate.

Next instance: It's the night before you have two exams. One for that gen-ed that you've found to be more challenging than you would've liked and the other for one of your favorite classes, one required for your major.

And the conundrum: Do you let your major class suffer a blow in exchange for a little extra review for your gen-ed class? You may feel a need for balance, a need that drives you to split the next four hours in two, giving both subjects a fair amount of time. After all, both classes weigh equally on your G.P.A.

This is your freshman year, a whole year of gen-eds during which your major classes get sidelined in order to make time for the six books you have to read for the only class that was open. You know, the class you took to fulfill your gen-ed that also happens to be a 300-level class, made up completely by avid majors looking to impress the professor in hopes of scoring a recommendation – and you.



When given a choice – any choice – perhaps, from a list of eight open classes that fulfill one's historical studies requirement, students often find themselves flummoxed.

The point isn't that English majors are all science-haters looking to spend the rest of their lives immersed completely in prose and literature or that math majors want nothing to do with letters unless they make up a word problem.

The point is that most students do have a wide array of interests that depart somewhat from their declared concentrations, but with so many classes already accounted for by gen-ed and major requirements, those interests get neglected.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

Defending the learned candidate

Michael Phillis

Welcome back, whitey.

So far, whites have been left out of the media spotlight in this presidential election. The long history of the all-powerful white voting block has been challenged ever since the attention of the public focused on the black man and white woman running for the White House.

Unfortunately, it is this longtime American majority group of white men that are the problem.

White men have long demonstrated that fear can govern the majority of their overwhelming voter block. There are clear examples of white fear in America's history governing the action of the country. From the civil rights movement to the creation of the suburbs that insured that de-facto segregation could live on, some stark historical examples of the kind of fear that can propel the white vote into a political arena can be seen.

White men have given much of their political efforts lately to the causes of fear that have been so problematic to American progress. During the Bush Administration, the very real threat of terrorism has been exploited to bring fear and party-line voting to the national political landscape.

Under-educated white voters play off of these ideas of fear and vote in unison with little understanding of the policies and issues that are being brought forward. For example, the white male vote in the 2004 presidential election was almost two-to-one in favor of Bush. The black male vote swung the opposite way in favor of Kerry, according to CNN polling.

This kind of political thinking, usually by the white voting block, has bred hostility toward a scholarly candidate in favor of one that they would "rather share a beer with."

The Bush campaign in 2000 ran intelligently, thrusting Bush's "good-old-boy" persona into 24-hour news cycles and giving white America its ideal candidate. When one looks deeper into Bush's upbringing and early political and business life, the picture of Bush as a man of the people flies quickly out the window.

Bush Sr. was the head of the Central Intelligence Agency; George W. was a legacy at Yale and lived in Connecticut for most of his life, running oil companies after his graduation. The public image of the Texas everyman is a false one.

So why is Obama attacked for his perceived disconnect from the American public? It is the misconception that a man with a devoted interest in education can not relate to the common American. This perception is fundamentally flawed.

Obama is the most recent example of a politician who is criticized for his interest in education and scholarship. Should the measure of a "good old boy" really be how whether he can take a shot of whiskey to woo the voters of Pennsylvania, or should scholarship be rewarded in an election?

Much of black America, a demographic group that does not fall under the same kind of categories as white Americans, has its own separate set of problems that are not addressed day in and day out by the Bush Administration. They do not have fear thrown towards them in the same way as whites. You won't see Bush go on television and warn of the immediate and horrifying issue of imprisoned fathers and violent neighborhoods of the inner city to scare black voters into voting for the Grand Old Party. No, the fear that is being espoused by this administration is meant to affect mainly lower class whites.

The apathy towards education in this country and this administrations distaste of facts has led the country down a narrow street. No longer is it an electable characteristic to be knowledgeable, scholarly and innovative. Today, getting elected to office has become about being the "good-old-boy" with more connections, then the intellectual and more money then you can possibly spend.

Obama is the most recent example of a politician who is criticized for his interest in education and scholarship.

During the drafting of the state constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, John Adams asserted from the very start that an educated public is key to a functional republic.

"Wisdom and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties," he wrote. "And as these depend on spreading the opportunities and advantages of education in various parts of the country, and among the different orders of the people, it shall be the duty of legislators and magistrates in all future periods of this commonwealth to cherish the interests of literature and the sciences."

The thinking of Adams and the insight into the value of scholarship were the virtues of the Constitution.

This important aspect of a politician and of the citizen has become lost in the latest political atmosphere of fear and party-line politics. Americans should no longer accept such distaste for education but understand that the only path to a prominent and moral country is through an educated and informed populace.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com

The Summitt of excellence

Brad DeFlumeri

Earlier this month in Tampa, Fla., Tennessee women's college basketball coach Pat Summitt won her women's collegiate-record eighth championship. Summitt trails only UCLA coach John Wooden, who won 10 titles as Bruins coach in the 1960's and 1970s.

Summitt, who amidst much public interest filed for divorce from her husband of 27 years shortly before this season, is widely-regarded as the best coach in the history of women's collegiate athletics.

She took on her position as coach of the Lady Vols in 1974, at age 22, and has held it since. Her career win-loss record as coach is 983-182, making her the all-time winningest coach in NCAA basketball history. She has 81 more victories than the next closest contender, all-time winningest men's coach Bobby Knight.

Summitt's Tennessee teams have won 104 of 123 NCAA tournament whereas former UMass men's basketball coach Travis Ford was offered a lucrative contract extension by the school without his team having made the tournament.

On the international stage, Summitt's leadership has also flourished: she led the USA Women's basketball team to its first-ever Olympic gold medal in the 1984 Los Angeles Summer Olympics.

Consistent with her accomplishments, Summitt has written two books: "Reach for the Summitt," and "Raise the Roof," both in 1999. The former is a motivational guide and was widely acclaimed by critics, including the New York Times.

Summitt's leadership is in fact so appreciated that she has made numerous motivational speeches for companies such as Proctor & Gamble and Kodak.

During the first Clinton presidency, Summitt, the mother of a now-grown son, was honored by First Lady Hillary Clinton as one of the "25 Most Influential Working Mothers." She is the spokesperson for numerous worthy causes, including the United Way.

By any measure, Pat Summitt has been a beacon of excellence in American sports for the last three decades. Her accomplishments should inspire a generation of independent, motivated and talented young girls pursuing careers in all fields.

Summitt is the type of woman who would excel in any field. As she pushes her championship-caliber players to both academic and athletic achievement that they never thought possible, she demands the same excellence of herself.

On the subject of achievement, Summitt has said: "During my childhood I went to school, attended the Methodist church, worked the fields, and played basketball in the hayloft with my brothers. In my family, good work was expected, not praised. Excuses weren't accepted and laziness wasn't tolerated. I don't mind being tough [on my players] because my dad was tough. I don't mind showing affection because my mother showed affection."

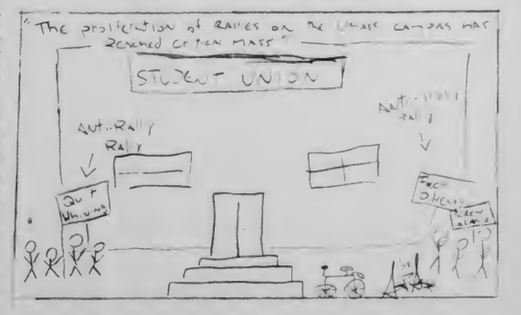
That someone as widely accomplished as Pat Summitt is not revered by a cross-section of our country is indeed a sad commentary on our society.

Summitt, unlike so many other money-chasing coaches, women-chasing and law-breaking athletes, and vote-chasing and unprincipled politicians, actually merits being called a leader and a role model. Both on and off the basketball court, she conducts herself in a manner that others would do well to emulate and that is unquestionably worthy of the respect, trust, and high regard in which she is held by so many.

And against this backdrop of one woman's uncelebrated but triumphant career, we are in the heat of a contentious presidential election in which the two Democratic candidates can't even agree on how to best disagree during debates. Each has slung a fair share of mud at the other, and many in the Obama camp have already insinuated racism on the part of Clinton's people.

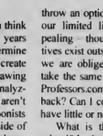
On the right, too, the worst of our humanity is expressed by conservative talk show hosts repeatedly race-baiting middle class white voters into voting for McCain simply because they think white voters ought to be uncomfortable with Obama's skin color and his fringe affiliations with alleged black extremists.

It is, in short, an American election season and we look forward to six more painstaking months in which the politics of hope will give way to the customary special-interest driven, ad hominem attacks.



Whichever candidate can more effectively slander his or her opponent will be our next president.

As we have become ever-more educated, technologically-nuanced, and politically-active, we have also become a media-crazed society that thrives on negativity, controversy, fear-mongering, race-baiting and the next inevitable catastrophe.



We ought to do better than this. Doing better would mean paying tribute to people like Pat Summitt and numerous other teachers, mentors and leaders across the country.

It is these unsung heroes – and not the latest political hotshot or cocaine-addicted British popstar – to whom our attention should be paid. They are the bedrock of our society, and we ought to appreciate and champion them much more than we do.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Campus activism recap

Matt Morin

Looking back on this past year, I feel my mind whirl with memories. We have experienced at UMass what can only be called a major student movement.

In our November strike, we saw a virtually-unprecedented unification of the student body – one that in only ten days of organizing, shut down the school and brought long-standing grievances to the official discourse of the campus.

Subsequently, we saw a gradual dispersion of this unity, not a relaxation of organizing, but its fragmentation into other campaigns. Struggles, such as Justice for Jason, PHENOM's making higher education free for everyone, the Queer Action Network, the UMass Eco-Coalition and Students for a Free Tibet, all attempted to run campaigns in a similar fashion to the strike but were undeniably less successful in capturing the official discourse of the campus.

We remain to this day a student body with a marginalized student voice.

Assessing the events of the past year is difficult, and this editorial is only meant to spark the dialogue that is necessary for a more collective assessment. Even saying whether the strike succeeded or not is difficult, because the knowledge of exactly what happened is disparate. The people who were negotiating with the administration are not the same people who were trying to mobilize the student body. At many points it would seem as though we were making gains in one area while losing ground in the other.

And we have succeeded in so many ways that it is hard to look at this past year with anything but astonishment. Yet here we are, at the end of the school year with much of our momentum dissipated, so let's assess.

The need for this movement is obvious. This school is paid for by the students and by the taxpayers of Massachusetts. Yet, it is only a small number of individuals making the decisions of how this money is allocated and how this school operates.

In many cases, the decisions of this minority have been against the interests of the student body. These administrators seek to balance the UMass budget through the sale of our public space to corporate advertisers (Stride gum anyone?), through the sale of student services to corporate entities and through the raising of fees and subsequent exclusion of lower income students. Clearly, we need to do more then just bemoan these policies; we need to find a way to change them.

In many cases, the decisions of this minority have been against the interests of the student body.

But as students, we have limited and inflexible time to devout to organizing. Student activism naturally lends itself much more easily to mass action than to mass organization.

It is unfair to say that the unity of the strike unraveled. But when we were done with a mass action, we tried to turn it into a mass organization and were only able to sustain an organization of moderate size, i.e. the United Student Action Coalition [USAC].

While we have found striking to be more realistic and plausible for student activism, we have also found that if we want to see mass action be of any relevance, it must also be organizationally supported.

Although we already have existing structures of student government that should be playing this function, there are important reasons why they are not. Primarily, they are not organized to do so. The purpose of the Student Government Association [SGA] is up to those involved, but their main task is to distribute the student activities trust fund to registered student organizations – a significant responsibility.

But they have not been able to simultaneously develop the capacity to represent the student body or present a counterweight to the power of the administration (not that they haven't tried their hardest to do so). Developing this capacity is an incredible challenge given that the student senate is small and operates off of the initiative of those involved.

Most people involved in the SGA want a more inclusive and representative body, but as senators or officers of whatever, they are not institutionally given that task. And it must be said, there is no tried and true way of mobilizing the student body. We need an organization to accomplish this task.

What I am arguing here is simple. First we need a mass organization because we have seen that it can be effective. If we look at the strike as almost a glimpse of such an organization, as nearly 2,000 students rallied for a new UMass, we can see that there is latent power in the student body.

Second, I'd argue that our inability to create such an organization is understandable, given that it would necessarily be a gargantuan task and near impossible for students who are also trying to get an education.

Thirdly, this is possible if the activist community focuses more on recruiting and outreach and less on decision making. We need to form a base that is so large that the administration would not dare contest it. Just as there are paid positions in the SGA, there need to be paid positions for the organization of a totally inclusive Student Union, so that this very important work is institutionally mandated – a mandate not for more decision making but for the mobilization of the larger student body.

Matt Morin is an SGA senator, Radical Student Union member and Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mmorin@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 128

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED FIRST SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Locals march for Tibet

TIBET from page 1

According to a flyer from Students for a Free Tibet, "Over 1.2 million Tibetans have died as a direct result of the occupation, over 6,000 monasteries have been destroyed, and thousands of Tibetans have been imprisoned and tortured for their beliefs," since China invaded Tibet in 1949. The Dalai Lama, the spiritual and political leader of Tibet, escaped to India with his government in 1959.

Many supporters of China argue that life has improved for most Tibetans since China took control of the government, and that the Western media is biased in Tibet's favor.

The group then marched almost two miles to the Amherst Town Common, where State Senator Ellen Storey and Amherst Town Manager Laurence Schaffer were waiting to speak. Police were stationed along the route, which took the marchers down East Pleasant St.

After Storey and Schaffer spoke, the marching continued.

"We feel like marching is the best way to raise awareness," said Five College for Free Tibet member Tenzin Bhuti.

Tenzin Dotsang, a Tibetan student and a member of Students for a Free Tibet said the routes for the march to Amherst and the later march to Northampton were chosen because they were the most public, going through the center of Amherst, Hadley and Northampton.

Sonam Lama traveled in a pick-up truck carrying the signs and refreshments for the marchers. He parked the truck in a parking lot on Route 9 as he waited for the rally to catch up.

"I see quite a bit of support from community members," Lama said. As he waited, passing cars regularly honked, waved or cheered their support. A group of children stuck their heads out of the windows of a school bus and cheered.

At many points along the route, people came out of their houses to stop and watch. Once the group reached the center of Northampton, people stopped along the sidewalks to watch, and many new people joined in.

Sky Halm was riding her bike when she heard the rally pass; she turned her bike around to follow the group.

"I think it's a very important global issue," she said.

Once they reached Memorial Hall in Northampton, the group stopped to rest before beginning the final portion of the event. After the break, about 20 activists shaved their heads as a symbol of solidarity.

"It's in solidarity with the monks and the nuns in Tibet who have been tortured," said Lobsang Ngodub, who shaved his head. Ngodub escaped from Tibet in 1959 to India. In 1992, his wife moved to the United States. In 1995, he followed.

Tsering, who also had his head shaved, added that the move was also a protest against the Olympic torch, which he described as "tainted with blood," being brought through Tibet and onto Mount Everest, which he said Tibetan people feel is sacred.

Lama said he did not shave his head because it is not Tibetan culture, but Indian culture. Instead, he did not wash his hair on Friday, which is Tibetan tradition.

Tshi Dolme, of Northampton, is a Tibetan woman who was born in India. She moved to the U.S. in 1992. She was the only woman who shaved her head. When it was over, she saved a ponytail of hair in a bag.

She said she did it "to show support for Tibetan people."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

As a part of Friday's march and rally, Amherst resident Ngawang Gyatso, 18, had his head shaved by Tsering Chodon in Northampton.

Group advocates preserving buildings

HISTORIC from page 1

planning for adaptive reuse of the historic structures to provide functions that are of current importance to the University.

Meanwhile, Preserve UMass seeks to gain respect among its peer organizations to bigger players in the building preservation process.

"Preserve UMass has about 105 members from Nantucket to Berkshire County, plus a number from out of state," Larson said. "They are alumni, active and retired UMass faculty and staff members, friends of the campus and professionals in historic preservation."

However, no structures have been preserved during the short time of the group's existence.

With four or five other locations on campus considered to fill the spot for the new recreation center, the Stucco Cow Barn, Milkers Bungalow and Calf Barn were the best site to meet several objectives.

While they were recently demolished, the Wooden Victorian Horse Barn, Blasdell House and Grinnell Arena remain.

"This material, plus other issues made it virtually impossible to convert to a modern use from a building code and safety issue. The two silos on the north end of the barn were made of reinforced poured concrete and offered an opportunity to preserve these as an exhibit site."

There are still about 26 campus buildings on the Massachusetts Historical Commission's Inventory of Historic and Archaeological Assets of the Commonwealth, according to the Feb. 9 PUMA Senate Report.

The list includes two buildings of historical significance: the 1884 Old Chapel, the iconic image of the state's land-grant university, and the 1728 Stockbridge House (University Club), the oldest house in Amherst.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu.

JAMES HALE/COLLEGIAN

Preserve UMass, an organization that advocates the preservation of historic UMass buildings, is negotiating with the University to create an exhibit documenting the recently-demolished Stucco Cow Barn.

UMass study aims to improve bee health

BEES from page 1

"The project we're working is broader than CCD; what we're looking at is bee health, the factors that impact bee health and the microorganisms associated with bees as indicators as bee health," said Burand. "Just like humans and other animals who have microbes normally associated with their body, bees probably have these same microorganisms. One of the things we're going to try to do is identify microbes associated with healthy bee colonies that might be absent in bee colonies that are suffering some kind of disease."

The study involves taking sample bees from local as well as commercial bee keepers.

Burand notes it won't be an easy task though. Identifying what causes bees to be sick is highly involved and tedious.

"We want to find something, but it's very rare. So how do you find a needle in a haystack? You use a magnet, and we have the magnets. We have very powerful molecular tools to identify specific microorganisms that are associated with bees," Burand said.

Burand and the coalition of researchers who have formed the UMass Amherst Bee Consortium, along with the help of local and regional bee keepers, hope that their ongoing research, which has just received a $150,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, will result in better bee health across the board.

"We would like to be in a position as the UMass Bee Consortium where we can provide information to primarily local growers about what the situation is with their bees and what kinds of practices they can use, what kind of conditions they can set up that's really going to improve bee health," Burand said. "That's the long term goal, and that's why it has to be a consortium because it's going to take people with a lot of expertise with expertise in a lot of different areas. The beekeepers know a lot, but they're not scientists, and so we're trying to approach the problems from a scientific point of view."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

Online tours for prospective students

BY NIC CAMPOS
THE DAILY FREE PRESS

BOSTON (U-WIRE) — College tours usually consist of parents taking their children from one school to another, with statistics and stories spouted by a tour guide on the college quad, but a new Web site aims to offer a change of pace for pre-frosh across the country.

High school seniors can wander their prospective college campuses without leaving their hometowns by using online college fair Web site CollegeWeekLive.com, which offers interactive virtual tours and chats with college admissions officers and students.

For two days twice a year, the Web site gives incoming freshmen a chance to chat with admissions counselors, download application materials and visit virtual booths.

CollegeWeekLive.com Marketing Vice President Mike Lewis said the site began its services in November and said students can view presentations from college admissions experts across the country through a video feed. The site allows prospective students to conduct a one-to-one text or video chat with an admissions counselor with complete anonymity or quiz current students about campus life, he said.

"A higher level of interaction is possible than would be from a live fair," he said. "They don't have to be bashful about mentioning their GPA in the presence of other hopefuls."

Lewis said the free registration will help parents stay active in their children's college selection from home.

"They can even browse schools they think their kids would like and suggest them," he said.

CollegeWeekLive.com's services span from the East to the West coasts and include Boston-area schools like Emerson College, Northeastern University, Harvard University, Suffolk University and Simmons College.

Simmons College Office of Undergraduate Admissions Senior Associate Director Janet Ferrari said her school decided to join the site following its success in the fall.

Activists arrested for sit-in face jail time

BY JESSICA TURNBULL
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

STATE COLLEGE, Penn. (U-WIRE) — Penn State police filed charges against 31 anti-sweatshop activists Friday, police director Steve Shelow said.

Shelow said each person will be charged with a subsection of criminal trespass called defiant trespass – a third degree misdemeanor.

The charges, filed in Magisterial District Judge Jonathan Grine's office Friday, are the result of a sit-in protest by members of United Students Against Sweatshops and Student Labor Action Project in Old Main last Tuesday.

Grine will not view or sign the charges until early next week, a secretary at his office said. The students are not formally charged until Grine signs the criminal complaints, she said.

Protester Stephanie Chapman, who was arrested at the sit-in, said the charge could carry a $2,500 fine or a year in prison.

According to a university press release, the students "may have an opportunity to receive a fine and/or apply for Accelerated Rehabilitative Disposition, which is a pre-trial program designed to allow first-time, non-violent offenders to circumvent a trial and clear their records."

The Office of Judicial Affairs will also review the cases and decide if it merits judicial review, Penn State spokesman Geoff Rushton said.

Shelow said the decision to file charges was made by university police and the Centre County District Attorney's office.

The students were advocating that Penn State President Graham Spanier state support for the Designated Suppliers Program (DSP), a fair labor initiative.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE $1000
OFF ANY RENTAL FROM NOW THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1ST!
STOP BY FOR FREE PIZZA!
FRIDAY MAY 2ND 8:30AM-7PM
&
SATURDAY MAY 3RD 10AM-3PM
ONLY
CALL 253-7377 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE 420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

Ties to slavery left unexplored

BY BRITTANY M. LEEWELLYN
THE HARVARD CRIMSON

CAMBRIDGE (U-WIRE) — With initiatives like a new financial aid program, Harvard often start trends that ripple through higher education. But when it comes to investigating its institutional history, the university might do well to take a cue from its peers.

Like many venerable American universities, Harvard's past is tied to slavery: for decades, if not centuries, the university inculcated pro-slavery sentiment and benefited from funds that were the fruits of the slave trade or slave labor. But unlike many of its peers – such as Brown and Yale – Harvard has never conducted a formal examination of its past.

And though the university has no plans to launch such an investigation, many feel the time is right for Harvard to do so, given that university President Drew G. Faust – a leading Civil War historian and a self-professed "civil-rights advocate and activist" – is at the helm.

"Harvard is perhaps uniquely positioned to engage in an exploration of our country's history with slavery and its connection to the present," says Alfred L. Brophy, an expert on civil rights litigation at the University of Alabama School of Law. "Now is a good time for Harvard to do more in terms of an investigation, and Drew Faust, who is our nation's leading historian of the Old South, is an ideal person to lead this process."

But Faust said that despite her academic interests, she will not be calling for an institutional investigation of any kind, even while acknowledging that the question of Harvard's entanglements with slavery is "intriguing" for students and professors to explore.

"I'm not going to be doing this as a presidential project," she said.

While Harvard, by virtue of being in northern New England, was less entangled in slavery than its peers in the South, the university nevertheless was implicated to a degree in the slave trade.

Along with Brown, Harvard was mentioned in a series of class-action lawsuits beginning in 2002, in which descendants of slaves sought compensation for damages from private corporations that profited from slavery. The universities, while not sued directly, were cited as examples of schools whose fortunes rested historically on the institution of slavery.

Shortly after the lawsuits were filed, Harvard Law School professor Charles J. Ogletree, Jr. published an op-ed in The New York Times arguing that Harvard, Brown, and Yale were all "probable targets" of a lawsuit to be filed by his Reparations Coordinating Committee later that year.

While all of the class-action suits were dismissed and Ogletree's threatened lawsuit never materialized. The accusations prompted officials at Yale and Brown to examine the extent to which their institutions benefited from slavery.

In 2001, Yale graduate students published a lengthy report that examined the extent to which the school benefitted financially from slavery and perpetuated pro-slavery ideology. A number of Yale's residential colleges, for example, were named after slave owners, most notably Calhoun College, which is named for John C. Calhoun, the South Carolina senator and ardent defender of Southern rights.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 2008

"New knowledge is the most valuable commodity on earth. The more truth we have to work with, the richer we become." Kurt Vonnegut

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Navigating the gen-ed jungle

Lauren Rockoff

When I was in high school, I can recall sitting through advanced placement classes thinking about how great it would be to have a couple of credits and intro courses already under my belt when I started college. I thought I was on the right track toward a rewarding four years of studying within my major. I also thought I could pursue my other interests, maybe take an art class, sociology or another language.

But that's not what college is. You get here, and you might arbitrarily pick a major or walk around undecided for a while. Everybody asks you what your major is, and then they always say that they didn't know what they were going to do for the longest time either and that eventually, you will figure it out too. And you listen, feeling like it's only a matter of time before you do figure out your sole interest in life.

Okay, the sole interest? Are you allowed at least two, maybe? Well, for most self-respecting students, a double major is out of the question. It means taking on extra credits wherever you can fit them and doubling or tripling up all of your general education requirements into one class, whether said class interests you or not.

So, what about your other interests? Shouldn't your "secondary" interests play a role in your education, too?

Finally, you pick something you think you can stomach for four straight years that may, but probably won't, determine the direction of your adult life or create your own major. So, you like drawing cartoons, studying heredity and analyzing poetry? BDIC it. There really aren't enough analytical Mendelian cartoonists out there. Why should you deny a side of yourself in order to fit into some predetermined major?

Let's discuss general education requirements. What makes physics-chemistry-biology more important than psychology-sociology-anthropology? Why are UMass students required to take two biological or physical sciences and only one psychology or sociology course?

When given a choice – any choice – perhaps, from a list of eight open classes that fulfill one's historical studies requirement, students often find themselves flummoxed.

Well, for starters, psychology and sociology are lumped together in the same "social world" category as history and literature. Seems a bit off to me.

When given a choice – any choice – perhaps, from a list of eight open classes that fulfill one's historical studies requirement, students often find themselves flummoxed. "A choice?" they think to themselves. But what is this? I was told to take Psych100, Psych240, Psych350, etc. and now they throw an option at me? So frustrated with our limited list of options – all unappealing – though a wide array of alternatives exist outside the gen-ed classification we are obliged to fulfill, many students take the same unfortunate road: Rate My Professors.com. Is he easy? Is she laid back? Can I coast through this class that I have little or no motivation to take?

What is this? Are we still in high school? I ask, because I thought our years of compulsory education ended that day we wore those funny hats and unflattering robes with all of the peers who we were desperate to get away from.

If this is college, then we must have all chosen (for the most part – parental threats aside) to continue our education for at least another four years. So here we are, voluntarily paying to learn, with the illusion of choice. But that's the problem: It's an illusion. If we could really choose, we could take so many more of the classes we want to take. Instead, we find ourselves in a class we can't stand with other students who are head-over-heels for everything the professor says. The motivation to learn begins to dissipate.

Next instance: It's the night before you have two exams. One for that gen-ed that you've found to be more challenging than you would've liked and the other for one of your favorite classes, one required for your major.

And the conundrum: Do you let your major class suffer a blow in exchange for a little extra review for your gen-ed class? You may feel a need for balance, a need that drives you to split the next four hours in two, giving both subjects a fair amount of time. After all, both classes weigh equally on your G.P.A.

This is your freshman year, a whole year of gen-eds during which your major classes get sidelined in order to make time for the six books you have to read for the only class that was open. You know, the class you took to fulfill your gen-ed that also happens to be a 300-level class, made up completely by avid majors looking to impress the professor in hopes of scoring a recommendation – and you.

The point isn't that English majors are all science-haters looking to spend the rest of their lives immersed completely in prose and literature or that math majors want nothing to do with letters unless they make up a word problem.

The point is that most students do have a wide array of interests that depart somewhat from their declared concentrations, but with so many classes already accounted for by gen-ed and major requirements, those interests get neglected.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

Defending the learned candidate

Michael Phillis

Welcome back, whitey.

So far, whites have been left out of the media spotlight in this presidential election. The long history of the all-powerful white voting block has been challenged ever since the attention of the public focused on the black man and white woman running for the White House.

Unfortunately, it is this longtime American majority group of white men that are the problem.

White men have long demonstrated that fear can govern the majority of their overwhelming voter block. There are clear examples of white fear in America's history governing the action of the country. From the civil rights movement to the creation of the suburbs that insured that de-facto segregation could live on, some stark historical examples of the kind of fear that can propel the white vote into a political arena can be seen.

White men have given much of their political efforts lately to the causes of fear that have been so problematic to American progress. During the Bush Administration, the very real threat of terrorism has been exploited to bring fear and party-line voting to the national political landscape.

Under-educated white voters play off of these ideas of fear and vote in unison with little understanding of the policies and issues that are being brought forward. For example, the white male vote in the 2004 presidential election was almost two-to-one in favor of Bush. The black male vote swung the opposite way in favor of Kerry, according to CNN polling.

This kind of political thinking, usually by the white voting block, has bred hostility toward a scholarly candidate in favor of one that they would "rather share a beer with."

The Bush campaign in 2000 ran intelligently, thrusting Bush's "good-old-boy" persona into 24-hour news cycles and giving white America its ideal candidate. When one looks deeper into Bush's upbringing and early political and business life, the picture of Bush as a man of the people flies quickly out the window.

Bush Sr. was the head of the Central Intelligence Agency; George W. was a legacy at Yale and lived in Connecticut for most of his life, running oil companies after his graduation. The public image of the Texas everyman is a false one.

So why is Obama attacked for his perceived disconnect from the American public? It is the misconception that a man with a devoted interest in education can not relate to the common American. This perception is fundamentally flawed.

Obama is the most recent example of a politician who is criticized for his interest in education and scholarship. Should the measure of a "good old boy" really be how whether he can take a shot of whiskey to woo the voters of Pennsylvania, or should scholarship be rewarded in an election?

Much of black America, a demographic group that does not fall under the same kind of categories as white Americans, has its own separate set of problems that are not addressed day in and day out by the Bush Administration. They do not have fear thrown towards them in the same way as whites. You won't see Bush go on television and warn of the immediate and horrifying issue of imprisoned fathers and violent neighborhoods of the inner city to scare black voters into voting for the Grand Old Party. No, the fear that is being espoused by this administration is meant to affect mainly lower class whites.

The apathy towards education in this country and this administrations distaste of facts has led the country down a narrow street. No longer is it an electable characteristic to be knowledgeable, scholarly and innovative. Today, getting elected to office has become about being the "good-old-boy" with more connections than the intellectual and more money then you can possibly spend.

Obama is the most recent example of a politician who is criticized for his interest in education and scholarship.

During the drafting of the state constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, John Adams asserted from the very start that an educated public is key to a functional republic.

"Wisdom and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties," he wrote. "And as these depend on spreading the opportunities and advantages of education in various parts of the country, and among the different orders of the people, it shall be the duty of legislators and magistrates in all future periods of this commonwealth to cherish the interests of literature and the sciences."

The thinking of Adams and the insight into the value of scholarship were the virtues of the Constitution.

This important aspect of a politician and of the citizen has become lost in the latest political atmosphere of fear and party-line politics. Americans should no longer accept such distaste for education but understand that the only path to a prominent and moral country is through an educated and informed populace.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com

The Summitt of excellence

Brad DeFlumeri

Earlier this month in Tampa, Fla., Tennessee women's college basketball coach Pat Summitt won her women's collegiate-record eighth championship. Summitt trails only UCLA coach John Wooden, who won 10 titles as Bruins coach in the 1960's and 1970s.

Summitt, who amidst much public interest filed for divorce from her husband of 27 years shortly before this season, is widely-regarded as the best coach in the history of women's collegiate athletics.

That someone as widely accomplished as Pat Summitt is not revered by a cross-section of our country is indeed a sad commentary on our society.

She took on her position as coach of the Lady Vols in 1974, at age 22, and has held it since. Her career win-loss record as coach is 983-182, making her the all-time winningest coach in NCAA basketball history. She has 81 more victories than the next closest contender, all-time winningest men's coach Bobby Knight.

Summitt's Tennessee teams have won 104 of 123 NCAA tournament whereas former UMass men's basketball coach Travis Ford was offered a lucrative contract extension by the school without his team having made the tournament.

On the international stage, Summitt's leadership has also flourished: she led the USA Women's basketball team to its first-ever Olympic gold medal in the 1984 Los Angeles Summer Olympics.

Consistent with her accomplishments, Summitt has written two books: "Reach for the Summitt," and "Raise the Roof," both in 1999. The former is a motivational guide and was widely acclaimed by critics, including the New York Times.

Summitt's leadership is in fact so appreciated that she has made numerous motivational speeches for companies such as Proctor & Gamble and Kodak.

During the first Clinton presidency, Summitt, the mother of a now-grown son, was honored by First Lady Hillary Clinton as one of the "25 Most Influential Working Mothers." She is the spokesperson for numerous worthy causes, including the United Way.

By any measure, Pat Summitt has been a beacon of excellence in American sports for the last three decades. Her accomplishments should inspire a generation of independent, motivated and talented young girls pursuing careers in all fields.

Summit is the type of woman who would excel in any field. As she pushes her championship-caliber players to both academic and athletic achievement that they never thought possible, she demands the same excellence of herself.

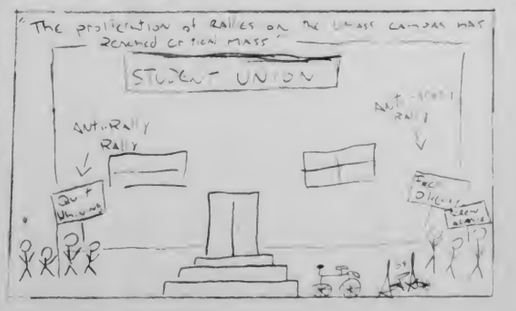
On the subject of achievement, Summitt has said: "During my childhood I went to school, attended the Methodist church, worked the fields, and played basketball in the hayloft with my brothers. In my family, good work was expected, not praised. Excuses weren't accepted and laziness wasn't tolerated. I don't mind being tough [on my players] because my dad was tough. I don't mind showing affection because my mother showed affection."

Summitt, unlike so many other money-chasing coaches, women-chasing and law-breaking athletes, and vote-chasing and unprincipled politicians, actually merits being called a leader and a role model. Both on and off the basketball court, she conducts herself in a manner that others would do well to emulate and that is unquestionably worthy of the respect, trust, and high regard in which she is held by so many.

And against this backdrop of one woman's uncelebrated but triumphant career, we are in the heat of a contentious presidential election in which the two Democratic candidates can't even agree on how to best disagree during debates. Each has slung a fair share of mud at the other, and many in the Obama camp have already insinuated racism on the part of Clinton's people.

On the right, too, the worst of our humanity is expressed by conservative talk show hosts repeatedly race-baiting middle class white voters into voting for McCain simply because they think white voters ought to be uncomfortable with Obama's skin color and his fringe affiliations with alleged black extremists.

It is, in short, an American election season and we look forward to six more painstaking months in which the politics of hope will give way to the customary special-interest driven, ad hominem attacks.



Whichever candidate can more effectively slander his or her opponent will be our next president.

As we have become ever-more educated, technologically-nuanced, and politically-active, we have also become a media-crazed society that thrives on negativity, controversy, fear-mongering, race-baiting and the next inevitable catastrophe.

We ought to do better than this. Doing better would mean paying tribute to people like Pat Summitt and numerous other teachers, mentors and leaders across the country.

It is these unsung heroes – and not the latest political hotshot or cocaine-addicted British popstar – to whom our attention should be paid. They are the bedrock of our society, and we ought to appreciate and champion them much more than we do.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Campus activism recap

Looking back on this past year, I feel my mind whirl with memories. We have experienced at UMass what can only be called a major student movement.

In our November strike, we saw a virtually-unprecedented unification of the student body – one that in only ten days of organizing, shut down the school and brought long-standing grievances to the official discourse of the campus.

Matt Morin

Subsequently, we saw a gradual dispersion of this unity, not a relaxation of organizing, but its fragmentation into other campaigns. Struggles, such as Justice for Jason, PHENOM's making higher education free for everyone, the Queer Action Network, the UMass Eco-Coalition and Students for a Free Tibet, all attempted to run campaigns in a similar fashion to the strike but were undeniably less successful in capturing the official discourse of the campus.

We remain to this day a student body with a marginalized student voice.

Assessing the events of the past year is difficult, and this editorial is only meant to spark the dialogue that is necessary for a more collective assessment. Even saying whether the strike succeeded or not is difficult, because the knowledge of exactly what happened is disparate. The people who were negotiating with the administration are not the same people who were trying to mobilize the student body. At many points it would seem as though we were making gains in one area while losing ground in the other.

And we have succeeded in so many ways that it is hard to look at this past year with anything but astonishment. Yet here we are, at the end of the school year with much of our momentum dissipated, so let's assess.

The need for this movement is obvious. This school is paid for by the students and by the taxpayers of Massachusetts. Yet, it is only a small number of individuals making the decisions of how this money is allocated and how this school operates.

In many cases, the decisions of this minority have been against the interests of the student body. These administrators seek to balance the UMass budget through the sale of our public space to corporate advertisers (Stride gum anyone?), through the sale of student services to corporate entities and through the raising of fees and subsequent exclusion of lower income students. Clearly, we need to do more then just bemoan these policies; we need to find a way to change them.

In many cases, the decisions of this minority have been against the interests of the student body.

But as students, we have limited and inflexible time to devout to organizing. Student activism naturally lends itself much more easily to mass action than to mass organization.

It is unfair to say that the unity of the strike unraveled. But when we were done with a mass action, we tried to turn it into a mass organization and were only able to sustain an organization of moderate size, i.e the United Student Action Coalition [USAC].

While we have found striking to be more realistic and plausible for student activism, we have also found that if we want to see mass action be of any relevance, it must also be organizationally supported.

Although we already have existing structures of student government that should be playing this function, there are important reasons why they are not. Primarily, they are not organized to do so. The purpose of the Student Government Association [SGA] is up to those involved, but their main task is to distribute the student activities trust fund to registered student organizations – a significant responsibility.

But they have not been able to simultaneously develop the capacity to represent the student body or present a counterweight to the power of the administration (not that they haven't tried their hardest to do so). Developing this capacity is an incredible challenge given that the student senate is small and operates off of the initiative of those involved.

Most people involved in the SGA want a more inclusive and representative body, but as senators or officers of whatever, they are not institutionally given that task. And it must be said, there is no tried and true way of mobilizing the student body. We need an organization to accomplish this task.

What I am arguing here is simple. First we need a mass organization because we have seen that it can be effective. If we look at the strike as almost a glimpse of such an organization, as nearly 2,000 students rallied for a new UMass, we can see that there is latent power in the student body.

Second, I'd argue that our inability to create such an organization is understandable, given that it would necessarily be a gargantuan task and near impossible for students who are also trying to get an education.

Thirdly, this is possible if the activist community focuses more on recruiting and outreach and less on decision making. We need to form a base that is so large that the administration would not dare contest it. Just as there are paid positions in the SGA, there need to be paid positions for the organization of a totally inclusive Student Union, so that this very important work is institutionally mandated – a mandate not for more decision making but for the mobilization of the larger student body.

Matt Morin is an SGA senator. Radical Student Union member and Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mmorin@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hanson keeps it light, keeps it real

BY TERESA REILLY AND SKYE MCINTYRE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On a hot Friday afternoon, Hanson led over 50 barefooted fans through the streets and neighborhoods of Northampton. The brothers, whose hit single "MmmBop" left them as '90s pop icons, were proving to the people of Western Massachusetts that walking barefoot hurts and children in Africa do it on a daily basis. They were walking with TOMS Shoes, a company that gives a child in Africa a pair of shoes for every pair sold. The walk was Hanson's 60th since they began touring last fall.

Before the band played to a nearly sold-out crowd in the Calvin Theater, Taylor and Zac Hanson were kind enough to sit down and answer a few questions about the walks, bullet scares and midget ninja pastry chefs.

Daily Collegian: Do you have any stand out memories from the tour so far?

Taylor Hanson: There have been a couple really intense things that have happened. We had a scare when we were in Royal Oak, outside of Detroit, where we thought we had somebody with a gun. There was a bullet that was discovered in the front row.

Zac Hanson: We had to find them and shoot them. [Laughing]

TH: That was pretty intense. Unfortunately, it's really sad to say; but on the last tour, the Walk Tour, in the fall and many other times we've had people call us with death threats and like when we were in Chicago last year we had somebody say "If you do the walk today you won't…"

ZH: "You won't survive."

TH: Yea, "you won't leave this town alive."

DC: You got phone calls or e-mails?

ZH: A little bit of everything.

TH: So we had to take that seriously in Detroit. But, that's not very positive. But when we found a .40 bullet in the front row, and somebody felt it drop on their foot, they immediately started searching to see if somebody had a gun. We had to rally and call extra police and also make it safe. We were worried about everybody, not just whether we're going to get shot. So, that was a little bit of scare, and everybody was cooperative, and we had cops there. It turned out that an off-duty cop's girlfriend was carrying bullets in her purse, and they had fallen out of her purse.

ZH: Did she explain?

TH: Don't ask. [Laughing] But then, like an idiot, some guy rushed the stage before we found out who had dropped the bullet, and he tried to get onstage.

DC: While you were performing?

TH: Right after we had walked offstage.

ZH: In between sets.

TH: These guys [the cops] were ready to stomp somebody, and so he got his butt tazed. He was thrown around, and he was taken to jail. Five cops just right on his ass.

ZH: Tackled, dragged outside, three knees in his back. [Cops yelling] "Stop resisting!" But that's what you get for rushing the stage after they announce that there is a security concern at the venue tonight, and there's two cops standing at the top of each side of the stage. There's double the security there was 12 minutes ago, and "I'm going to rush the stage because I'm drunk."

TH: Just really, really stupid. But actually, what I was going to say was that with all of that going on, it was a really great show.

ZH: Yeah, you got to leave your legacy if you're going out. "We're going out tonight guys, this is it. Best show of my life!"

TH: It turned out to be a great show; and also I've been really blown away by all the walks we've been doing and how many people have come out to support us. We've had some of the best walks we've had on the whole tour since last year. It's been really interesting. Some walks have been small, some walks have been huge, but it's great. You get to see each tour stop very differently based on doing the walks and doing the shows, and it adds a whole new dimension to your memory of each place. You get a sense of the crowd in each city.

DC: What's the most surprising item on your tour rider?

ZH: Um, ninja midget pastry chef. That's the most shocking one.

DC: What is that?

ZH: A ninja, midget, pastry chef.

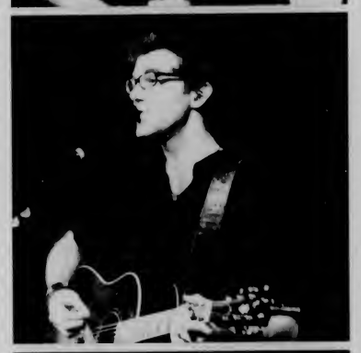
TH: We've been trying to get one on the rider.

ZH: No, that's on the rider.

TH: It's just really rare to get those delivered to every town. For instance, there are a lot of small people but not necessarily ones who are also ninjas and pastry chefs as well.

ZH: That is actually on our rider, and it has yet to be fulfilled.

TH: You need somebody who has both the power to kill and has a sensitive side and can also provide a service for the tour. But of course, you'd never see him, because he's very small and all of a sudden you just see a pastry coming.



ZH: You don't want to eat any of the pastries because he might have poisoned one or two of them, just for fun. That's what ninjas do.

DC: You're biggest guilty pleasure song?

ZH: Don't have them. The songs I like, I like.

See HANSON on page 5

Zac and Taylor Hanson (top, bottom) and Stephen Kellogg (middle) sat down with the Daily Collegian shortly before they took the stage Friday night.

Front-man, UMass alum friendly, frank

BY SKYE MCINTYRE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Family-oriented, sincere, genuine and grounded are not words that typically come to mind when speaking about musicians, particularly artists who classify themselves as rock 'n' roll. Stephen Kellogg, front man of the locally-based band Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers and University of Massachusetts graduate, however, is anything but typical.

I had the opportunity to sit down with Kellogg in a small, no-frills room in the basement of Northampton's Calvin Theater just before the doors opened for their homecoming show on Friday night.

With a few welcome interruptions from Isaac, Taylor and Zac Hanson, who, from the next room over, peppered the interview with several playful, good-humored interjections, Kellogg was more than happy to touch on subjects ranging from his time spent on campus to his opinion on reality television (he isn't a fan).

Daily Collegian: First of all, I know you're kind of based around this area. Are you doing anything special while you're in town?

Stephen Kellogg: I am actually. My family came and joined me for these two days. I've eaten at Bueno, Pizza Paradiso, Black Sheep. I've been here for like 24 hours. Every meal, I'm like, "Alright, which awesome place can I go eat at?" I've been going to all those places. I went back to a couple places I used to hang out in college, just like, there's this river spot in Hadley, I went there. I've definitely been making the rounds.

DC: Did you come right after the last show?

SK: Yea, after Burlington, I drove down here. Also my grandfather is buried here; so I had a picnic there today, which was awesome. It was such a nice day. So yea, we came from Burlington and had yesterday off.

DC: So the family's all here for the show? Friends too?

SK: The family's here for the show, some friends. A lot of my friends kind of moved out of the area, but some of them showed up for tonight.

DC: Your favorite UMass memory, because this is for the Daily Collegian.

SK: I love that I get to talk to the Collegian. It makes us feel good, it really does. It's nice, it makes us feel like – we're starting to feel like this is our hometown. My favorite UMass memory? I'm trying to think what that would be. I had so many great – I just have this haze of good feeling about the school. I'm trying to think if there was like a great gig or something like that. You know, I released one of my albums in Butterfield when I was like a junior. I released a double CD that I had been working on, and that was an amazing UMass memory. I sold tickets and printed them out; I hung up posters in all of the dorms, like, "Come see my band play!"

DC: Did you live in Butterfield?

SK: I did. And I lived in Northeast my first year, which was a hot bed of social excitement I guarantee you, and then I lived in Central. I lived in lower Central. I lived in Brooks which was, and I think still is, the armpit of central. And then like a week before I stopped eating at the [Dining Commons], I went over to Southwest and realized that the food is better over there, I think.

DC: What was your major?

SK: I majored in Communication.

DC: Most surprising item on your tour rider?

SK: Uh well, none of it's really here tonight. I gotta say, this is not what we usually ask for. [Points out a giant bag of Skittles and pack of Reeses Cups] This is way more candy and way less liquor than we usually ask for. The most surprising item would probably be – we ask for a book on CD, or a classic novel, or a classic piece of literature, or a history book, or a biography. We also ask for postcards at every venue. It costs promoters $1.50, and it's pretty much like we know if they give a shit about us. And it can't be the financial end of things that they chose not to give it to you; and to us, we take those home and send them home everywhere we go. So those are a couple of things on the rider.

DC: In our phone interview, you described your music as "rock 'n' roll with words." If you had to compare yourself with another artist or artists for those that are unfamiliar with your music, who would that be?

SK: I think we're kind of like a Guster meets Ryan Adams.

DC: Who would win in a fight? Bret Michaels or Flava Flav?

SK: [Laughing] Have you asked me this before?

DC: No, I wish I had.

SK: Flava flav.

To listen to the full interview, visit the online edition of the Daily Collegian.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyr@student.umass.edu.

Artistic minds collide at art symposium

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A meeting of creative minds working around the globe took place Friday in the Student Union Ballroom, as the symposium "Art in the Public Sphere: Singular Works, Plural Possibilities" showed a display of past works and current projects to bring forth the idea of public art to the University of Massachusetts.

The symposium ran all day from 9:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. with breaks only for lunch and refreshments. Seven panelists each conducted a twenty minute presentation addressing their personal work and experience in the public art field. Panelists included landscape artist George Trakas, Creative Time president and artistic director Anne Pasternak, German landscape architect Frank Sleegers and perhaps the most verbose of the bunch, celebrated designer/architect Vito Acconci.

Acconci has been interested in public art from the get go, taking it out of the gallery and straight to the masses. He brings this public mindset to the creation of his visions, choosing a collaborative path as opposed to strictly using his ideas. "If you intend something to be public," Acconci said, "then it can't start private."

Acconci showed slides of his innovative works, including conceived architecture, prototypical buildings and sites, projects for cities and personalized modern conveniences. He spoke on a Tokyo clothing store he designed, with the concept of creating as much surface area as possible in the smallest space possible. The walls and shelves were made of rear screen projection PVC material and pulled taut to hold the weight of the clothing. The store was lit by lights behind the screens, providing a soft, gauzy glow.

"I'm obsessed by the motion of a continuous space," Acconci mused, since the walls and shelving in the Tokyo boutique neither start nor stop. He also showed a park bench he designed, a concept derived from the Mobius Strip. The bench also neither starts nor ends, with its seating curling around itself in a twisted donut shape. Acconci works mainly with places where people can be, as opposed to objects which one can hold in their hand. However, he did design a sphere which rotates and dismantles and serves as a coffee/tea brewer with cream and sugar options.

Acconci has also designed for cities, at times bringing his oddball plans to a completely functional level. He has designed a translucent bus stop which surrounds a tree, creating the illusion of a vase as well as an arboreal aquarium. He was also asked to design streetlights for New York City, opting to provide thin poles, as opposed to thick beams, on which the lights would sit. When weight needed to be held up on the pole as signs and traffic lights were added, more streetlights could be added and braided around each other, creating a very aesthetic, tentacle-like effect.

Another key speaker was Anne Pasternak, current president and artistic director of Creative Time, a nonprofit public art commissioner. She works in New York City with the mindset that "artists should come out of the studio and should have the opportunity to experiment." She uses mass media spaces to convey her artistic vision, including billboards, bus posters, even theater marquees. Working in such an urban environment, her organization's works are exposed to a large volume and array of individuals.

Most recently, Pasternak has been involved with the Sleepwalkers project at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City. This public exhibit involves large-scale projections on sides of the MoMA depicting living, moving human portraits, an extension of Pasternak's view of "architecture as a living, flowing place."

The term public cannot be expressed fully without incorporating a global level, and German landscape architect Frank Sleegers brought word of his Hamburg, Germany "HAFENSAFARI" project to the symposium. Sleegers, a UMass lecturer, holds the director position of the project, which has been running annually since 2003. The project consists of a guided tour through the old industrial harbor sections of the city, with site-specific art installations at landmarks throughout the area. These temporary installations include sculpture, gardens, even music and DJs, all with a community-minded goal.

Old pieces include a series of sculptures of silhouetted dock workers supposedly on the job, ghosts of hardworking laborers of decades past. Many of the pieces reflect the city's industrial background, taking place on contaminated sites. One site was turned into a labyrinth of living plant materials woven with textiles as "a reference to the site's industrial past." Sleegers is also interested in finding new places in these industrial centers, whether it's a rooftop or a parking lot, for any public place is grounds for the HAFENSAFARI.

Even contaminated spaces are used, as in one installation where a residential area once existed, but was destroyed in favor of factories. In this zone, mailboxes were set up where one could write a letter to a former resident highlighting community ties. The entire project seemed like a sort of creative block party, with all-involved eating and drinking beer at the end of the day, relaxing and enjoying each others company, as well as the art. One of the most interesting past projects was a simple vending machine housing imported Chinese flowers. One could purchase a flower and plant it in a nearby plot of land.

Events like this are necessary to raise awareness, whether they're localized, regional or half way around the world in Hamburg. The concepts of collaboration and sharing prevailed, standing out from any specific work or speaker. Each panelist expressed his ties to this idea of working together and using multiple minds to create a single piece, most prominently Acconci. In one of the afternoon's question and answer sessions, Acconci stressed that his biggest inspiration is group work. He made it seem necessary for "a colliding of ideas" to take place in order to make a work plural as opposed to personal, a sentiment anyone can take to heart and reference in everyday life to succeed with a viable community product.

Ian Nelson can be reached at Inelson@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

An example of the work of renowned landscape artist and symposium panelist George Trakas' Beacon Point Landing project.

Two of trio talk

HANSON from page 4

DC: Really, none?

ZH: I like a song and will tell you it, or I don't like it. I'm not a pansy.

DC: There's part B to this question.

TH: In other words, if we like a song we're proud to say we like the song. For instance, I'm not a Celine Dion fan particularly, but she has an incredible voice and has sung a lot of great songs.

ZH: Although, I wouldn't say she has the best voice out of anyone in the world though, like she has claimed.

DC: Did she say that?

ZH: She said it in some interview at some point, "I am the greatest singer in the world."

TH: I think that's probably true for all of us; although Ike probably has guilty pleasures.

ZH: But he's not here right now.

TH: What's part B?

DC: Part B is, can you crank that Soulja Boy?

TH: Can we what?

ZH: Negative.

DC: Have you ever heard that song, "Crank That" by Soulja Boy?

ZH: I know exactly what you're talking about and no, that is not one of my guilty pleasures. Now, I might have missed something about it, because every time I hear it, it's like, "Oh, it's that song, click." So, I've never put any effort into trying to crank that. Someday maybe. We'll cover it. We'll make it different.

To read the full interview, visit the Daily Collegian Arts and Living blog.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyr@student.umass.edu.

Smith's spring concert welcomes Feist with open arms

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As Smith College wraps up its second semester, the school took a break from studying to put on its spring concert last Friday. Headliner Feist and special guest Ingrid Michaelson performed at John Greene Hall in what the Smith Recreation Council cited as the first sold-out show at Smith in seven years.

With the help of approximately 50 Smith students, the show was well-organized, non-chaotic and tranquil. The majority of the crowd arrived in time to see up-and-coming Michaelson's set. Her stage persona was as accurate reflection of the sound of her music, being both warm and playful. Her set design was far from extravagant. It was stripped down to bare essentials. Holding her guitar close, Michaelson also played the keyboard during her performance.

With Michelson's natural charisma and funny material, she was a hit. One surprising song choice was "Creep" by Radiohead. Alone with her guitar, she refrained from using the profanities in the original version because Michaelson asked if there were any children in the audience before the song, and there were.

Though Feist , also known as Canadian singer-songwriter Leslie Feist, is in the middle of touring the U.S., she usually doesn't have Michelson open her shows.

Typically, friend and contemporary Hayden, who made a surprise appearance later on in the evening, is the opening act.

The time between Michaelson and Feist's sets show was too long to handle for antsy Feist fanatics. Crowds hustled and bustled throughout the hall, waiting for the main attraction. Feist finally made her way onto the dimly lit stage, only her silhouette was visible due to a blinding, white light projected onto a sheet behind her. She opened up with a moody epithet that repeated, "Help is on its way." Powerful yet unfamiliar, all eyes were on the left corner of the stage where she was fixed.

After addressing that Smith is an all-girls school, Feist appropriately chose to open with the song "When I Was a Young Girl," a tune fit for the girl-dominated audience. Throughout, Feist would stray her microphone and give wry shouts filled with expression.

Next in her lineup was the bouncy number, "Mushaboom." The elements of dream and irrationality were accentuated through the childish stage backdrop and frilly papers that were sprinkled on the singer's head. Feist and her eclectic band kept the blood flowing throughout the jittery crowd by transitioning into the sensual and throbbing song "My Moon My Man."

The night shifted from dance party to an ambient walk when she broke into the wintry song "The Park." Prior to the song, Feist did an on-stage recording of human-made bird noises. Interestingly, the singer incorporated pre-recorded bird noises into the song to give it extra texture.

Blue lights were cast on Feist during the Bee Gees-sounding song "Limit to Your Love." Her short bursts of lyrics throughout the song often caused her to have improper diction, leaving fans unfamiliar with the song and clueless as to what she was actually singing about.

Feist then got the audience back on their feet when she asked, "Do you guys feel it? How much of it do you feel?" Roars and hollers to her questions were elevated, giving the room the energy it needed to launch into her current hit song, "I Feel it All." Fans sung along to the catchy hit from start to finish.

"You may still want to stand for this next song. This time you may just sway back and forth like you are on a boat," said Feist about the D.I.Y. song, "Honey, Honey." The song was complimented with a tantalizing creative set design. Clea Minacker, the main shadow designer, worked connectively with amber lightening for the stage, and featured live finger painting. The imagery between the lyrics and the set design were harmonious, as Feist was childishly making shadow puppets of eels.

Halfway into the show, Feist beckoned her regular opening act, Hayden, onto the stage. Hayden and Feist performed a duet where Feist showcased her new talent: playing the harmonica. Hayden eventually took the stage to play a song written about a time when the singer was robbed while in his home.

After the one song by Hayden, Feist revisited the stage with the band to break into her international hit, "1 2 3 4." The song was seasoned with a few lyric changes, and the alterations gave it a new twist.

Feist played conductor for the entire audience when she requested that everyone sing in unison. "If you can breathe, you can sing," she said. Under her restraint, the audience held out the notes just as she broke into the ballad, "So Sorry."

One of the last numbers of the evening was the seductive "Sealion." Feist's guitar was roaring tremendously as the bass was booming. She took abrasiveness and angst to a new level, shouting into her microphone and giving the song a garage-rock edge.

Feist's tour manager, Robbie Lackritz, said, "We just released a new concert date for Boston on July 8 at the Bank of America Pavillion."

If her next show in Massachusetts goes the same way as her Northampton show, tickets will sell quickly. After her American tour, Feist will be jet-setting to Europe for three weeks, then returning to her homeland Canada.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

Ingrid Michaelson took the place of Feist's usual opener, Hayden, at Smith's Spring Concert. Her performance was well-received by the largely-female crowd.

Cape Cod Lounge hosts third annual Film Festival

Students recognized for their cinematic achievements

BY CHRISTINA FONG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students behind the cameras were recognized again this year on campus. The Cape Cod Lounge played host to a different set of films last week rather than the usual blockbusters. Some of the top aspiring student filmmakers had their short films screened at the Third Annual UMass Film Festival on April 24.

Comedic as well as dramatic short films played to a crowd of its directors, writers and indie film fanatics. A total of 13 selections, chosen from several films submitted by students, were lined up for the festival hosted by the UMass student-run television station UVC-TV 19. The night was designed to celebrate film production, particularly student filmmakers on campus.

The festival showcased experimental and narrative films with only one animated short film and one documentary on the list. There were a number of honorable mentions in both categories, who received $10 gift certificates to the DV Den. "Smiles and the Electric Spirit," directed by Ryan Frazer, was a comical narrative about a couple and their robotic son. Shot in documentary format, it follows the troubled, yet humorous, relationship both parents have with their lifeless and unresponsive son.

"The Zombie Survival Guide," directed by Ben Leonberg, seemed to pay homage to the recently played Humans vs. Zombies on campus.

A combination of quality special effects, cinematography and commendable acting, the film was a successful interpretation of hypothetical zombie attacks.

At some point, the zombies and one human break out into a somewhat clichéd, but nonetheless amusing dance number to "Thriller." Leonberg acted as the narrator for the film.

The only documentary that made it to the festival was also the most intriguing film due to its personal aspect. "Roustabout" follows the life of Jesse "Sidewall" Russell, a traveling circus worker. A roustabout is a laborer who typically performs temporary, unskilled work. Russell mentioned having previously held 12 positions ranging from setting up circus tents to janitorial duties. The film focuses a great deal on the minimalist and rugged lifestyle he leads, and his absolute content with it. Directed by N.R. Brown, it was a compilation of three-years' worth of footage and a three-hour interview with Brown's co-worker, Russell.

The night took a more serious turn as the three winners of the festival were revealed, all of whom received a gift certificate and plaque. "Amonson Avenue," directed by Soren Nielson and Annie Keithline, won Best Experimental Film. It engaged the audience with a single man during a simple routine of washing up and getting dressed as words are vaguely murmured in the background. It took a more poetically somber approach than the other films.

"N.D.E.," directed by Tony Camilo, won Best Narrative Film. Although some technical difficulty during the screening prevented a certain amount of clarity to be revealed, the plot was still understood. It centered on the misadventures of a young man who just suffered a near death experience (N.D.E.) and the unusual world he's consequently pulled into. The science-fiction short film's cinematography was good while the acting was fair.

The Best Overall Film was "vis-à-vis," directed by and starring Benjamin Sidney. It was a well-shot film with a solid performance by Sidney. In it, he plays dual roles of a seemingly wealthy, well-dressed man, and an identical yet destitute, grubby looking man who both eventually come to an impasse after a set of puzzling events. With only the simple tune of background music, the film was shot without dialogue adding to its mystique.

A panel made up of students and faculty judged the submissions, including comparative literature Professor Don Levine and communication Professor Anne Clecko. The event was made possible with the support of the Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment Fund, SGA, DV Den and Cinemark.

Christina Fong can be reached at Cfong@student.umass.edu

Canadian born singer-songwriter Leslie Feist played for a moderately-sized crowd at Smith College this weekend. Feist encouraged fans to stand and sing-along throughout her set.

It's going to be awkward at your next interview when you're asked for a published writing sample that you don't have.

We can help with that.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EXPERIENCE FOR STUDENTS BY STUDENTS

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Maroon and White prep for A-10 finals

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams had their final tune up for the Atlantic 10 Championships on Saturday at the New Hampshire Pre-Conference Meet in Durham, N.H.

There were no new ECAC or ECAA Championship qualifiers this week, but the Maroon and White fared well in several events. All of the entries this week were in the same events that they will compete in next week.

Sophomore Tyler Cotto (15.82 seconds) took a closely-contested first place in the 110-meter hurdles over Connecticut freshman Kyle Rowbotham.

Senior Nathan Barksdale (22.31) took second in the 200-meter dash. Freshman Michael Perrotta (50.03) finished second in the 400.

The newcomer has shown great potenital already this season. He also took second at the UMass Invitational (49.26) on April 12-13.

Sophomore Chris Vercollone (53.34 meters) won the javelin throw. It was his farthest throw of the season.

The Minutewomen finished the regular season with several first and second-place finishes, which put them in a comfortable spot for next weekend.

One of them was senior Alisha Tatham (12.84), who won the 100-meter. Tatham typically races in the 200-meter but was replaced by sophomore Holly Heinricher since Tatham has already qualified for ECACs. Heinricher finished first in 26.12 seconds.

In the 800-meter run, freshman Gina Perno (2 minutes, 16 seconds) added to an already-successful season by taking first place. Senior Jennifer Curtin (2:21.66) finished sixth while sophomore Nicole Serapiglia (2:21.71) finished seventh.

Senior Christina DeRosa took second (4:44.41) in the 1,500-meter. She usually runs the 5,000-meter, but UMass coach Julie LaFreniere took a pass on having her run it, choosing to have her compete in the 1,500-meter instead to stay in shape for the A-10s.

DeRosa also participated in the 1,500 last year as preparation for the A-10s, where she finished third (4:47.10).

She qualified for ECACs in the 5,000-meter at the Larry Ellis Invite from April 18-19 (16:41.49) and the 10,000-meter at the Stanford Invite (34:36.95) on April 5.

Sophomore Lisa Wilson had solid performances in three field events. She took first in the shot put (12.46 meters) and hammer throw (49.26) along with finishing second (42.01) at the discus throw.

Wilson came off an already-dominant season, placing third in the discus at the UConn Invitational (44.23) from April 4-5 and second (46.33) at the Larry Ellis Invite. Her throw made her the second best all-time at UMass.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmil0@student.umass.edu.

Freshman Dan Schwartz finished fourth in the 400-meter hurdles this weekend at the New Hampshire Invitational. Harvard's Justin Grinstead won the event with a time of 53.02 seconds.

Owls dominate 2nd half in championship

W. LACROSSE from page 8

had to capitalize on them."

Temple took advantage of its free-position shots, scoring on 2-of-3 of them to add to its six-goal streak in the first half. Also in the first half, the Owls outshot the Minutewomen, 11-7 and had fewer turnovers, seven to UMass's 10.

The second half showed a little hope for the Minutewomen as they held Temple to only four goals and scored three themselves. Temple started the half scoring two goals on free-position shots making the score 8-0.

UMass scored its first goal off of the draw control after Temple's eighth goal. Freshman Kelsey Schreiner controlled the draw and ran down the left side of the field before firing past Temple goalkeeper Bridget McMullan.

The Minutewomen scored their second goal after redshirt senior Krissy Anderson saved a free-position shot from Temple's Chelsea Rosiek. UMass brought the ball down the field and controlled play behind the net to eventually find Jackie Lyons open in front to score.

The Minutewomen once again dominated on draw controls, 10-5, and tied Temple in shots with 18, but it wasn't enough to beat the Owls.

"I think we were trying to push things too much, especially when you are playing behind. And when you keep pushing something's got to give, and we got a little too tight. We kept on pushing too much," Venechanos said.

On Friday afternoon, UMass beat Richmond, 10-9, in overtime in the A-10 Semifinals thanks to Kathleen Typadis's game-tying and game-winning goals.

"Richmond is a phenomenal team, and we all kind of helped out and Krissy [Anderson] made some good saves," Venechanos said. "On attack, we put some goals away. In the first half, we had some shots, but we just didn't put them away."

Typadis scored on a free-position shot with three seconds remaining in regulation to send the game into overtime.

"I kind of just went blank and just thought, 'I'm at practice right now, with my girls, its fine' and I just kind of took a breath," Typadis said.

She scored her fourth goal of the game in overtime with two minutes remaining to defeat the Spiders. This was the first time the members of the Minutewomen had beaten Richmond.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at melissa.turtinen@gmail.com.

Temple goalkeeper Bridget McMullan stops an attempt from UMass senior attack Kathleen Typadis in the Owls's 10-3 win over the Minutewomen in the A-10 Championship game yesterday.

Winning streak now at 23

SOFTBALL from page 8

Proctor on a double steal with runners on the corners. Then a single by Sarah Reeves moved Whitney Mollica to third. A fielding error brought her across, and a single by Maroney scored Reeves to make the score 4-0.

With the bases loaded in the fourth, Reeves brought in another run on a single through the left side, moving everyone up a base, and Serio sent them all home with a base-clearing double to right center field.

Reeves's third RBI of the game came via a walk with the bases loaded to put UMass up, 9-0. Lorena Floccari, the Billikens' third pitcher of the game, came in to get the final out of the fifth and final inning (due to the run rule) and gave up a grand slam to Maroney, the first batter she faced before getting Carly Morin to ground out to end the game.

Game 2 was more of the same for the Minutewomen. After Sanders relieved Balschmiter in Game 1, Balschmiter started again, going four innings, giving up three hits and striking out six. Sanders closed a perfect fifth and struck out the side to end the game at 9-0.

Lauren Proctor had possibly her best game of the season, going 3-for-4 with an RBI and three runs scored. Serio and Maroney both stayed hot in Game 2, going 2-for-3. Maroney added three more RBIs to her day, totaling eight over the two games.

The Minutewomen return to Amherst for their final home game of the regular season on Tuesday against UConn at the UMass Softball complex at 5 p.m. The Huskies fell at home on April 23 to the Minutewomen, 6-0.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Temple controls tempo in win

POSSESSION from page 8

usually lead to easy goals for the Minutewomen. Free-position shots are one of the best advantages during a game. If the Minutewomen didn't give the Owls five goals off of free-position shots it would have been a much closer game.

UMass was called for four yellow cards; Temple was only called for three.

Melynda Zwick, Kaytlin McCormick, Rosenzweig and Hopkins all received yellow cards during the second half of the game. Getting a yellow card during the game puts the receiving player on the bench for two minutes. Not having two of the Minutewomen's leading scorers and a top defender missing two minutes of the game was a major disadvantage for them.

The Minutewomen struggled throughout the game to gain consistent control of the ball; their frustrations seemed to be reflected in the fouls that were called on them. The Owls's ability to keep controlling play even with the fouls that were called is why they came away with a win.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at melissa.turtinen@gmail.com.

UMass junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider allowed 14 goals in the Minutemen's 16-3 loss to No. 2 Syracuse on Saturday.

Disparity in shot total telling in loss matches in transition. Mike Leveille and Steven Brooks each registered hat tricks, while seven other players scored for the Orange.

M. LACROSSE from page 8

Perhaps the statistic that best symbolized the Syracuse victory for the 4,582 in attendance was the difference in shots attempted. The Orange managed 42 total shots, while the Minutemen took 21.

Despite spending the majority of the game on defense, the Minutemen won 13-of-22 saves, including a 75 winning percent from junior midfielder Joe Reale (9-of-12).

UMass struggled to clear the ball and to avoid costly turnovers, losing possession 22 times. The Orange, meanwhile, took care of the ball in the first half, as UMass created only two turnovers.

Syracuse had little trouble handling the Minutemen's slow-paced, deliberate offense. The key to keeping pace with the Orange offense entering the game for UMass was to score in transition – something the Minutemen lacked Saturday.

Even when the Maroon and White created scoring chances, freshman goalkeeper John Galloway was in position to make the save for the Orange. Galloway stopped seven shots in 45 minutes of work with one goal allowed.

UMass scored its first goal seven seconds into the second half, as junior attack Tim Balise tallied an unassisted goal immediately after the faceoff. Balise (two goals) increased his team-leading point total to 37 points in 2008 and further cemented his position as the ECAC's leading goal scorer (32).

Freshman attackman Mike Wilus, playing in his 10th game, registered his first-career goal as the only other Minuteman to score against SU.

The Orange quickly built a 5-0 lead through the first 12 minutes before UMass coach Greg Cannella called a timeout to regroup his squad. But the Minutemen failed to make the requisite adjustments to slow down the Syracuse offense after the Orange created a 12-1 shot disparity in the first quarter.

Last season, the Minutemen ended Syracuse's unprecedented streak of 24 consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances with its 9-7 win at Garber Field. UMass also halted the Orange's stretch of 22 straight NCAA semifinal appearances in 2005 after defeating SU in the tournament's first round.

Game Notes

UMass completes its regular season against Rutgers (5-7, 3-3 ECAC) next weekend at Garber Field … Freshman goalie Tim McCormack played 12 minutes for UMass and allowed two goals … Only eight players of Syracuse's 49-man roster did not see action … UMass was whistled for 10 penalties, leading to three SU extra-man goals.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Bryan Leigh gave up six earned runs and walked two batters over five innings in UMass's 11-4 loss against Saint Joseph's on Friday.

UMass wins pair in Philly

BASEBALL from page 8

On Saturday UMass jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the first, started by Baudinet who led off the inning with a single and a stolen base. Franczek drove him in with a double and Tempesta followed with a single for his first RBI of the game. Andrew Black finished off the scoring in the inning with a run-scoring single.

UMass added an unearned run in the second and three more in the third (St. Joe's committed two errors) but it could have been more as the Minutemen left the bases loaded. The Hawks (15-26, 7-11 A-10) scored two in the bottom of the inning and two more in the fifth off of starter Mike Dicato. But UMass scored three of its own in the fifth inning (Tempesta two-run single) to cruise to the 12-5 victory.

Dicato lasted all nine innings for the Minutemen, allowing 10 hits and five runs (four earned) for the first complete game of his career and fourth win of the season. He walked two and struck out three.

Friday's game was close until the bottom of the fifth inning, when the Hawks scored four times to take a 6-3 lead. UMass scored its final run of the game in the top of the sixth inning, but St. Joe's scored twice more in the bottom of the inning and three times in the eighth. Bryan Leigh (six earned runs in five innings) took the loss for UMass, while Randy Mower won his sixth game of the season with seven strong innings.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Arigato II
Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

One for the ages.

		5				2
	5	7				1
	2		9	5	6	3
		6	8		1
1						8
	8			3	6
9	1	4		6		8
2				9		7
6				5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Restaurant handouts
6 Foundry form
10 Submerged
14 Flooded
15 Actor Gross
16 Not at home
17 Actor Sal
18 Baseball team
19 Rolls of dough
20 Invasion
22 Condor's digs
23 Cairo man
24 Make lovable
25 LPs updated
26 Catch some rays
27 Develop a bite?
31 City south of Tampa
36 Calcutta country
37 Drunkard
38 Actress Black
39 Gave the green light
41 Flair
42 Mobster's rod
43 Cone-bearing evergreen
44 Christian or Helen 48 Sayles movie
53 Carried
54 Harry spider
55 Desktop image
56 Planted explosive
57 Column type
58 Aficionados
59 Finishes off
60 Sister's daughter
61 Skedaddle
62 Trial by fire
63 Building lots

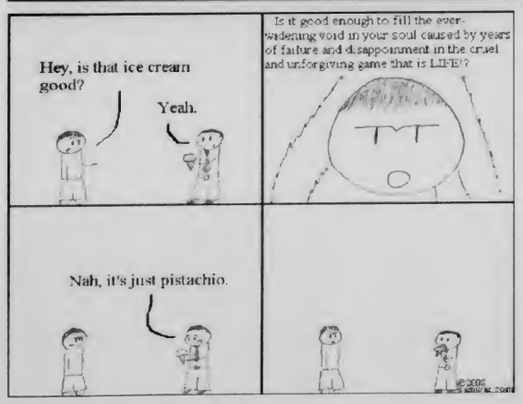
DOWN
1 First Lady of the 50s
2 Patrick of basketball
3 City in NE France
4 Deplete
5 Cheated financially
6 Crazies
7 Hunter of stars
8 Swann or Redgrave
9 Scottish river
10 Made logs
11 On the alert
12 Gymnast Comaneci
13 Band leader Kay
21 Big cut of beef
22 Tolstoy novel
24 "Over There" org.
26 Used a chair
27 Aragon aunt
28 Anne's twins?
29 Newspaper honchos, briefly
30 Dead heat
31 Turf
32 My Gal
33 Raw mineral
34 Bo's number
35 Barbecue buttinsky
37 Harden
40 Roofer's gunk
41 Editor Brown
43 Sherwood
44 Constrained
45 Restricted
46 Observe Yom Kippur
47 On edge
48 Puts down on the tarmac
49 Marcus Aurelius, e.g.
50 Piano adjuster
51 Ghostley or Faye
52 Makes haste
54 Pitchfork element
56 Got together

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

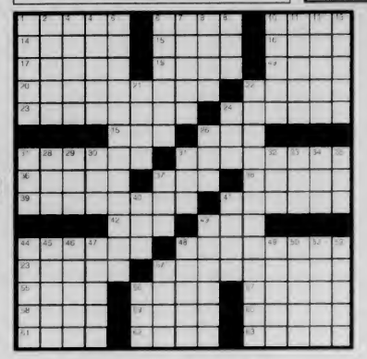
Founders Day is Tuesday, April 29, marking our 145th birthday. Come to a free morning performance of music and dance in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Enjoy birthday lunch in the tents outside the Fine Arts Center—BBQ, entertainers, free cake, swipes accepted.
UMass Amherst Since 1863
And You Thought Sam the Minuteman was a Great Mascot...
Play the UMass Amherst trivia game and try to win a free lunch at Founders Day. www.CampusLive.com
Founders Day
Tuesday, April 29
Info at www.umass.edu/foundersday

Quote of the Day

"When you arise in the morning, think of what a precious privilege it is to be alive - to breathe, to think, to enjoy, to love."
— Marcus Aurelius



Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek



Paul By Billy O'Keefe

Good Enough By Thomas Frink

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst/Outreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
How does completely shaving your head to not look bald make any sense?

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
The DC employees may not appreciate it when you make pictures out of food, but you really are a great artist.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Do not be fooled by the oasis of procrastination in the midst of the academic desert devoid of water and fun.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The seeds of love are growing inside you, and soon they will blossom into a cactus-like romance.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
No matter what your G.P.A. or major is, you are a moron if you can't remember to look both ways before crossing the street.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Wear blue ribbons in your hair to tell the world, "Not only am I cute, but I'm a winner."

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You, my little canine, are foxier than Vulpes vulpes.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Dancing is not art but rather an extremely inefficient way of getting from one side of a stage to the other.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Be aware that this place is swarming with cops. Dress skanky and you might get off with a written warning.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Elmo + Grover = Grelmo. Grelmo is purple and has an autoimmune disorder.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
YOU TOOK THE COOKIE FROM THE COOKIE JAR! YOU GLUTTON!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You skip more classes than Barbie's little sister. Maybe you can be a trophy wife just like her.

And in Comics, you shall find salvation.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT FOR RENT

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+ 4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

APT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments

EMPLOYMENT

$10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.

EMPLOYMENT

frank39@yahoo.com)

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,850 + www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900.

SERVICES

24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthnght.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 28, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Owls crowned at McGuirk

Minutewomen fall short in title game

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Temple dominated play to end the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's season on Sunday afternoon at McGuirk Stadium.

After the Minutewomen's dramatic win on Friday, denying top-seeded Richmond a chance for a fourth Atlantic 10 Championship, they lost, 10-3, to Temple to finish second in the A-10. Temple will move on to the NCAA Tournament after taking first place in the A-10 Tournament this past weekend.

Temple	10
UMass	3
UMass	10
Richmond	9

Temple started the game strong denying any chance the Minutewomen took had scoring a goal. In the Minutewomen's first three possessions, they had three turnovers. Temple's ability to move the ball gave UMass few chances to regain control of the game.

"When you are playing a disciplined team like Temple and when you are playing from behind, it's hard to come back," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We knew going in that if we were down it was going to be really hard to get the ball back."

The last time the Minutewomen played Temple they encountered the same problem. With seven minutes left in the game, UMass was down by three and Temple held onto the ball not allowing an opportunity for them to come back.

By halftime, Temple had scored six unanswered goals to give them a large lead. On almost every goal Temple, would bring the ball down the field and easily work it around the outside of the fan until they would see an open player run through the critical-scoring area. This technique worked multiple times to move past the UMass defenders.

"Six nothing at half time is a pretty big hole, especially after you played an overtime game 48 hours prior," Venechanos said. "Temple is a great team, and we didn't have that many chances, and we

See W. LACROSSE on page 6

BRIAN FLEDER/COLLEGIAN

Temple players celebrate their 10-3 victory over the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team yesterday in the Atlantic 10 Championship game. The Minutewomen advanced to the title game after overcoming an 8-4 halftime deficit against top-seeded Richmond Friday afternoon.

Temple's patience dictates pace of play

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Temple consistently controlled both the ball and the game's tempo during yesterday's 10-3 win over the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team in the Atlantic 10 Championship.

The Minutewomen may have just been playing aggressive. But in the end, the amount of fouls called against UMass cost it both possession and the A-10 Championship.

"We play pretty aggressive," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "You are always going to get a lot of whistles, but you've got to capitalize and be cool. You can't really control the referees."

Each foul called against UMass gave Temple control of the ball, starting them with an advantage. This helped the Owls dominate play.

In the first half, the Minutewomen were called for 14 fouls to the Owls's five. By the end of the game UMass racked up 23 more fouls for a season-high 37. On average, the Minutewomen got 21 fouls a game, the second highest in the A-10 behind Saint Bonaventure.

Jackie Rosenzweig led the Minutewomen in the number of fouls during the game with six, followed closely behind was Kathleen Typadis with five and Jeannette Villapiano and Stephanie Hopkins each had four.

Due to many fouls by the Minutewomen, Temple had seven free-position shots. The Owls scored on five of them. The Minutewomen were unsuccessful on their three free-position shots, which

See POSSESSION on page 6

Junior attack Tim Balise scored two goals in the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team's 16-3 loss to No. 2 Syracuse on Saturday.

Syracuse rolls over UMass

Tewaaraton candidate Leveille scores 3 in Orange victory

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite spoiling several impressive Syracuse streaks over the past few seasons, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team hasn't beaten the Orange on the road since 1976.

Syracuse	16
UMass	3

That streak continues.

No. 2 Syracuse (12-1) soundly defeated the Minutemen (5-8, 3-3 ECAC), 16-3, Saturday afternoon at the Carrier Dome. The Orange cruised through the first half with a nine-goal effort, while keeping UMass off the scoreboard during the first 30 minutes.

For Syracuse, playing UMass was as much about exacting revenge for last year's upset as it was about maintaining its position as the one of top-ranked teams in the nation. The victory over UMass was their sixth win against a team that upended the Orange in 2007.

It was also the second time this season that the Minutemen were dominated in every facet of the game. Only the playing of the Orange's third and fourth units through much of the second half allowed some respite for the Minutemen and a final score that had more lopsided potential.

Though, the Maroon and White suffered a worse 14-goal loss on March 22 against Loyola, Syracuse made full use of its roster Saturday, entering 31 reserves into the contest – a figure that stands in sharp contrast to the Minutemen's entry of 27.

Despite having one of the statistically-best defenses and goalkeepers in the league, the sheer talent of the Syracuse offense overpowered the Minutemen. On many shots, junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider had little chance to make a play. The quick and athletic Orange used a combination of varied shot selection and set plays to create separation and fool the UMass goalie.

BRIAN FLEDER/COLLEGIAN

Sophmore midfielder Bobby Haves won 4-of-8 faceoffs in UMass's 16-3 loss to Syracuse Saturday afternoon at the Carrier Dome.

Syracuse employs a methodical offense similar to the Minutemen's, but the team also derives some of its offense from taking advantage of mis-

See M. LACROSSE on page 6

UM takes 2 in St. Louis

Freshman Maroney drives in 8 in sweep of conference foe

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team continued its dominance of the Atlantic 10 this weekend, sweeping a doubleheader Saturday, by shutting out Saint Louis, 23-0, over the two games. The victories extended their current winning streak to 23 games.

Game 1 was scheduled for Friday but was postponed due to lightning in the area with UMass (33-11, 18-0 A-10) leading, 8-0, in the fourth inning. The Billikens (17-31-1, 7-9 A, 10) used three pitchers in the game but could not cool the Maroon and White's hot bats.

UMass	9
SLU	0
UMass	14
SLU	0

Sophomore catcher Jessica Serio went 3-for-4 in the game with four RBIs and a run scored, while freshman Lindsay Maroney went 2-for-4 with five RBIs, including a grand slam in the top of the fifth inning that blew the game wide open at 14-0, which is how the game would end.

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter pitched the first three innings on Friday, giving up two hits and striking out four. Sophomore Bailey Sanders came in on Saturday when the game resumed and picked up right where Balschmiter left off, adding six strikeouts and giving up no hits while walking two.

The Minutewomen scored four runs in the third inning, another four in the fourth and added six in the fifth as they pounded the Billikens' pitching. It was 2-0 in the third before UMass got its second hit of the inning, scoring Whitney Williams on a throwing error and Lauren

See SOFTBALL on page 6

BRIAN FLEDER/COLLEGIAN

Freshman infielder Lindsay Maroney drove in eight runs in UMass's sweep of Saint Louis over the weekend.

Minutemen still alive in A-10 race

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team entered this past weekend's series against Saint Joseph's with fading hopes of making the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Friday's 11-4 series-opening loss to the Hawks appeared to make that all but official.

But the Minutemen answered back with victories in the final two games, winning the series against the Hawks in Philadelphia and maintaining their slim chance of playing in the postseason.

UMass	6
SJU	4
UMass	12
SJU	5
SJU	11
UMass	4

UMass (14-19, 7-11 A-10) was powered by Adam Tempesta's five RBIs in its 12-5 victory on Saturday and by starting pitcher Mitchell Clegg in yesterday's 6-4 win. The Minutemen currently rank 12th in the 14-team conference, the top six teams qualify for the conference tournament.

The top four spots are relatively set, with the remaining teams fighting for the final two spots. The Minutemen rank near the bottom, but their final three series are against teams directly above them, giving them an opportunity to make a move up in the standings.

Clegg battled back from a few recent rough outings, pitching eight strong innings before giving way to the bullpen to close it out in the ninth.

Aaron Smith entered, walking the first batter of the inning and allowing a single to set up a first-and-third situation with no outs. Mitchell Eilenberg came in and got the final three outs (the runner on third scored on a fielder's choice) for his fourth save of the season.

The Minutemen scored one run in both the first and second innings, and never trailed in the game. Three errors by the Hawks led to three unearned runs, and UMass held a 4-0 lead after the top of the third inning. St. Joe's tallied two in the bottom half of the inning and one in the fifth, but that would prove to be its final run.

See BASEBALL on page 6

INSIDE: A TASTE OF UMASS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN : HI: 59 LO: 34 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY APRIL 29, 2008

145 years in the making

BY NICHOLAS O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Take a look around campus this Founders Day. Everything you see – from the Mullins Center to the Old Chapel – has been 145 years in the making.

The institution whose anniversary Governor Deval Patrick and so many others will be commemorating today has come a long way since 1863.

The University of Massachusetts had humble beginnings, boasting only four buildings, four faculty members and a mere 56 students. Only acknowledged as the University of Massachusetts since 1964, the school was originally the Massachusetts Agricultural College, or "Mass Aggie."

The small agricultural school came into fruition as part of the Morrill land grant, a federal land grant that in 1862 allotted public grounds for agricultural and mechanical colleges.

"The Morrill land grant was for a lot of public universities," said UMass history professor David Glassberg. "It was part of a national movement."

Although it began as a small agriculture school, UMass Founders Day celebrates the original founding of the school and the growth it has undergone in almost a century and a half.

"We see it as part of a continuous growth, so we want to trace it all the way back to the beginning – which I think is right," said Glassberg.

UMass – which now boasts over 25,000 undergraduate and graduate students – has a long history of development

See ANNIVERSARY on page 2

COURTESY UMASS PHOTO/COLLEGIAN GRAPHIC

After almost a century and a half of continued growth and development, even campus staples like the Dining Commons have undergone a radical change.

Mixed reviews for chancellor candidates

Students voice support for worldly, experienced candidates

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The four candidate finalists for the position of chancellor at the University of Massachusetts have finished their visits on campus, leaving a wide range of impressions on students.

The four candidates, Satish K. Tripathi, Martin Hall, Harris Pastides and Robert C. Holub, all visited campus within the past two weeks in order to meet with both students and faculty. They shared past experiences, explained what they would bring to the job and discussed the issues that they would address if awarded the position of chancellor.

"Talking with students and hearing their reactions, it seems students are most receptive to Martin Hall," said new Student Government Association president Malcolm Chu. "He seemed extremely willing to engage with students and had ideas to foster healthy relationships with student government. In addition, due to his experience in South Africa, his ideas about cross-cultural training seem very powerful."

Each candidate brings different credentials to the position, but all want to see UMass advance academically both across the nation and throughout the globe. They all hope to bring knowledge from previous positions to UMass in order to enhance the undergraduate experience at UMass both academically and through extracurricular activities.

"I was unimpressed by all the candidates, but Martin Hall seemed to be in the best position to be an effective chancellor," said Republican Club president Brad DeFlumeri. "His experience in South Africa would enable him to bring worldly viewpoints of education to UMass. He seemed hostile, though, in his viewpoints regarding conservative thought.

"I was also disappointed that none of the candidates have Boston, Springfield, or Massachusetts roots because to lead a Massachusetts public university, it's beneficial to have local roots," said DeFlumeri.

Many students were interested in Hall's experience in education working overseas in South Africa because he could bring viewpoints from outside the United States and localize them within the UMass community.

In addition, students feel confident that he is familiar with the University because he has had one daughter already graduate from the Commonwealth College within UMass and a stepdaughter that is currently earning her masters at the University.

"I think it's interesting that all the candidates are from other parts of the country or world," said sophomore Lucy Kittle. "Bringing perspectives from outside Massachusetts could help our university grow and expand. Both Hall and Holub noted that they will address the lack of funding to public universities and the increasing cost of public education, which are issues that a lot of students care about."

Kristen Healy can be reached at khhealy@student.umass.edu.

GEO lands contract with administration

BY KATRINA CESSNA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After almost a year of contract negotiations, members of the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) reached an agreement with the University of Massachusetts administration.

The tentative contractual agreement reached earlier this month by members of GEO's bargaining committee and University administrators became GEO's official 7th contract after 93.5 percent of the ballots cast by members between April 17 and 18 were favor of ratification.

In a statement issued last week, UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski indicated that the administration is satisfied with the terms of the contract.

"We are very pleased to have reached an agreement with our graduate student employees, who play an important role in the success of our academic community," he said.

Literature in GEO's office claims proudly that the new contract is "one of the best contracts won by a public service union in the state during this cycle." Aaron Winslow, GEO's vice president, said, "We're happy to have negotiating wrapped up after 15 months of bargaining. The GEO leadership and bargaining committee were very pleased to bring this contract to our members for ratification."

Certainly, GEO has made some solid gains for its members. In each of the organization's four main areas of contention, which include wages, child care, diversity, and fees, progress toward initial goals was made, or at the very least nothing was lost. Among the highlights of the contract is a 2.5 percent wage increase across the board, with an additional 1.3 percent increase to raise the minimum wage. Since students in the Social Sciences and Humanities disciplines typically earn the least, they will receive a raise of 3.8 percent.

Other notable gains involve seemingly subtle changes in contract language, which will actually significantly change the status quo. MOU #6, for example, is now phrased to facilitate increased transparency, part of which includes the agreement on the part of the University to publish a report documenting the specific allocation of the funds.

Furthermore, a "signing bonus" of $400 per employee was included to ensure that employees were compensated for their work in lieu of receiving retroactive pay.

Contractual gains came at the expense of some of GEO's own concessions. One of the major ones was GEO's eventual agreement to switch from a three-year contract cycle to a one-year.

Tim Scott, the UAW representative working with GEO, explained that the acceptance of the one-year cycle was, in fact, "a tough decision initially," but was not a unique concession. In fact, acceptance of a shorter contract cycle was "something asked of all unions by the governor's office because of budget concerns," said Scott.

The acceptance of the abbreviated contract is especially problematic because it means that GEO members are probably going to be engaged in negotiation year-round. For example, the contract that preceded this one expired on June 30, 2007.

Because GEO has technically been operating for almost a year without a contract, the seventh one recently ratified will actually take effect retroactively, starting on July 1, 2007. With only a few months left before contract No. 8 prompts new rounds of negotiations, the seventh contract is still awaiting approval from the president and Board of Trustees at UMass, after which it must be approved by the state legislature.

Scott explained that even if the University is able to expedite the process, as it has offered to try to do, it will still take at least two months. Ana Rona, the ALANA coordinator, said that while she was, "very relieved" to have a break from negotiations after the ratification of the seventh contract, she could be happier about the terms and conditions of the contract.

"[The contract is] not ideal, but I think we all feel it is the best we could get right now," said Rona.

GEO will begin negotiating its eighth contract with the University early this summer.

Katrina Cessna can be reached at kcessna@student.umass.edu.

Graduate employees settled negotiations with the administration last week after almost a year of talks before agreeing to the latest contract.

Officials deem text alert test a success

Text message alerts were successfully sent to 6,574 subscribers two weeks ago in the first wide-scale test of the campus emergency system.

New text-messaging service added to campus precautions

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Officials at the University of Massachusetts have announced a successful wide-scale test of the campus' new emergency text-messaging system last week, making the service now fully operational.

According to Chief Information Officer John Dubach, on April 17 the campus service provider sent messages to 6,574 subscribers. Of that number approximately 6,570 had valid cell phone numbers.

An online survey examining message delivery time taken during the campus wide test indicated that 96 percent of the 1,175 responding subscribers received the alert within four minutes of the message having been sent.

Twenty-eight people reported not having received the text-message alert.

Dubach said the test validated the effectiveness of the emergency service in the eyes of the Office of Information Technology, but that OIT will continue to assess the results of the trial run.

The emergency text-messaging system, part of UMass Amherst's Campus Alerts system, sends time-sensitive alerts to subscribers' cellular phones in the event of a safety or security risk to the University community or in case of potential disruption to daily campus activities.

According to University officials, the text-messaging is offered on a "best-effort" basis, and cannot guarantee that all subscribers will receive the alerts.

In addition to the text-message alert system, administrators and University officials can use e-mail or Web site alerts, fire alarms and an emergency closing telephone hot line. Additionally, officials point to the existing network of key personnel across campus that, in the event of an emergency, could be tapped to inform building occupants of a problem.

Officials also praised the 62-member on-campus police force as one of the largest in western Massachusetts and "well-trained in emergency response."

The University stepped up emergency preparedness following last year's Virginia Tech shooting that left 32 people dead after student Cho Seung-hui turned a gun on both faculty and his fellow classmates. The tragedy marked the worst school shooting in U.S. history.

"It is not a question of if we have security on campus. How we can be quicker and more efficient is the question that needs to be asked," UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski told The Massachusetts Daily Collegian at the time.

Since then the University has undergone several security risks, including a bomb scare last fall and a rash of threatening messages found in bathrooms across campus earlier this semester.

UMass has joined universities across the country, like Amherst College and Northern Illinois, by implementing a text-message alert system.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 129

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Manea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIBI, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1900, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

Campus celebrates Founders Day

ANNIVERSARY from page 1

since its days as a small-time college.

After an influx of new students and broader curriculum at the Massachusetts College of Agriculture began to expand and deviate from its focus as an agricultural school. This continued expansion led to the school's emergence as the Massachusetts State College in 1931.

"Mass State" only lasted 17 years as the curriculum and student body continued to grow.

"The curriculum kept growing and the school was teaching more than agriculture. The diversity made the title of 'college' not right," Glassberg said. The school finally became the University of Massachusetts at Amherst in 1947.

UMass experienced it period of greatest growth in the 1960s when, "dramatic growth occurred in the University," according to Glassberg.

"We went from about 6,000 students in the early '60s to 20,000 students in the '70s," he said.

With the change came the foundations of the school as it appears today. University landmarks such as the W.E.B. Du Bois Library – at that time the "tallest library in the world" – were completed in the 1970s. The school's busing system also emerged during that decade. Even buildings like Whitmore acquired their reputations long ago, as the administrative building was victim to a student "sit in" as early as 1963.

Members of the UMass community have seen the changes the school has gone through and acknowledge that there is more to the story of the University than a simple history lesson. In addition to more construction, the school has grown academically, as well.

"The biggest change that I've seen over the years is with SPIRE and registration. You can't imagine nowadays applying for a class without knowing if it was filled up or not," said sociology professor Suzanne Model.

A faculty member since 1985, Model has seen the student body undergo a positive transformation throughout her time at the University.

"If anything, our students are more qualified now than when I started teaching here. I think that because it's harder to get in to schools nowadays, we're receiving better students," she said.

Drawing on the University's look back upon its past leading up to this year's Founders Day, faculty members have reconnected with strong memories of their time on campus.

"UMass has always stood out because its commitment to public education is strong," said Glassberg. "I've always valued the opportunity for students to get ahead at this University."

Model shared similar feelings.

"UMass has been the center of my life for 25 years. It's fun to come to work everyday. I love the library, the Web sites, working with Spark – it's all fun."

Nicholas O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Technology, growth and expansion have marked the University since its founding in 1863. Students who once studied in the reading room of the old chapel (left) now enjoy wireless technology in the learning commons of the W.E.B. Du Bois library (right).

Austrian electrician admits to imprisoning his children

BY VERONIKA OLEKSYN AND WILLAIM J. KOLE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The children locked in the basement never saw the light of day for years. A retired electrician has confessed to imprisoning his daughter for 24 years and fathering seven children with her in a windowless cell sealed by an electronic keyless-entry system, police said Monday.

One of the children died in infancy and was tossed into the furnace of what stunned Austrians have labeled a "house of horrors," officials said. The suspect owned the gray stone apartment building, lived there with his family, and rented the other units to relatives.

Austria is still scandalized by a 2006 case involving a girl who was kidnapped and imprisoned in a basement outside Vienna for more than eight years, and residents of this working class town west of the capital were puzzled as to how the latest instance could go undetected for so long.

Questions were being raised as to how the suspect identified as Josef Fritzl, 73 – deceived neighbors, social workers and police for so long.

"How is it possible that no one knew anything for 24 years?" asked Anita Fahlan, a teacher in Amstetten. "This was not possible without accomplices."

Fritzl was placed in pretrial detention and faces up to 15 years in prison if charged, tried and convicted on rape charges, the most grave of his alleged offenses under Austrian law.

Police released Fritzl's full name and photograph at a news conference Monday, after his identity was widely reported by media in Austria and elsewhere in Europe.

Fritzl was born in 1935 and was a young child when the Nazis annexed Austria before World War II.

His daughter, now 42, was 18 when she was imprisoned in the cell constructed deep beneath the family's apartment in the building, said Franz Polzer, head of the Lower Austrian Bureau of Criminal Affairs.

"He admitted that he locked his daughter ... in the cellar, that he repeatedly had sex with her, and that he is the father of her seven children," Polzer told The Associated Press.

An Austrian police officer stands inside the house of a man who has confessed to imprisoning his daughter for 24 years in his basement.

The only thing better than Facebook is www.dailycollegian.com.

Important Parking Regulation Reminders

No parking is allowed in tow zones, roadways, sidewalks, access lanes, or construction areas at anytime. Violators are subject to towing.

Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots between 8:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m., Monday – Friday.

After 5:00 p.m. and on weekends, vehicles may park in any non-reserved, non-restricted parking space with the exception of 24 hour enforced lots.

Library Parking

Parking Garage night rate is only $3.00 between 5:00 p.m. – 5:00 a.m.

Learning Commons visitors get first hour free in Campus Center Garage with validation stamp, 24/7.

Go to http://parking.umass.edu for more information

CLASSES START MAY 27TH

Forecast: sunny

...with an excellent chance of receiving your degree early.
200 undergraduate and graduate classes — held online and on campus, mornings, afternoons and evenings.

Framingham State College
GRADUATE & CONTINUING EDUCATION
Online. On Campus. Ongoing.
framingham.edu | 508 626 4550

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking hard-working, motivated
undergrads to fill our
Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley
or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The sun also rises in Africa

Yasmine Farah

Many people view Africa as a place full of diseases, wars, and famine. It is hard for Americans to view Africa as a nice place. Citizens are constantly bombarded with negative images of Africa on television showing children with their mouths open with dirty flies everywhere.

The question that people should ask themselves is why they think poorly of Africa. Is it something that is programmed in the minds of people or are people unknowingly branded with the concept of Africans being less intelligent than the Europeans?

It's hard for people to think positively about Africa due to the stereotypical image the media creates of a sad, defeated people in need of intervention. So how does one escape from the media's unnecessary hype? For one, keeping an open mindedness towards others is essential.

Carol Pineau is a journalist who has done a decade of numerous reports about Africa for CNN. Pineau understands the problems of Africa and how the media has portrayed the continent as one body rather than 54 countries that are different and similar to one another in many ways.

In Pineau's article "The Africa You Never See" she writes, "Yes, Africa is a land of wars, poverty and corruption. The situation in places like Darfur, Sudan, desperately cries out for more media attention and international action. But Africa is also a land of stock markets, high rises, Internet cafes and a growing middle class."

These are positive aspects of Africa that Pineau explores in her documentary "Africa Open For Business." The film premiered in April 2005, and it shows the media's neglect on the booming business of major entrepreneurs in the business world of Africa.

The documentary details the business moguls of 10 different individuals from different countries in Africa who have reached an enormous success, from animation to mobile phone businesses employing millions. The documentary is a far cry from the war, famine and the abnormal living the media have successfully made "normal" for the outside world's judgment of Africa.

Pineau was interviewed by National Public Radio (NPR) host Ferai Chideya on why she chose to undertake this eye-opening project. Pineau said, "I wanted to show the Africa that has high rises, stock market, internet coffee shops, an Africa that is not so different from America in certain places."

On the radio, Pineau also addressed the misconception people have of Africa and how growing up as children, "we are constantly taught Africa is a victim." The documentary breaks down common misconceptions people have of Africa.

The documentary offers a different side of Africa than the media's coverage of the usually ill and deformed children or the famine stricken communities in need of help from the outside world.

The question that people should ask themselves is why they think poorly of Africa.

It is the duty of a news reporter to tell all sides of a story from every angle; however, many journalists have failed in addressing the concerns of Africa, turning it into one problem rather than being fair and telling both sides of the story with negatives along with positives. Many journalists have chosen to take the easy road by simply identifying Africa as a crisis rather than reporting balanced, accurate information from all aspects of a story.

The film is an eye opener for individuals who perceive Africa with negativity. Pineau said, "The whole purpose of the film is to change perceptions and encourage investment."

However, the film has done more than this. It has encouraged many journalists to look beyond Africa as just a "problem." In journalist Drake Bennett's article "Africa Rising" he said, "By many standards, Africa is doing better than it has in decades. The number of democratically elected governments has risen sharply in the past decade, and the number of violent conflicts has dropped. African economies, and African businesses are starting to show impressive results, and not just by the diminished standards the rest of the world reserves for its poorest continent."

It is very alarming and consciously dangerous when the former Prime Minister of England, Tony Blair says, "The state of Africa is a scar on the conscience of the world."

Tony Blair is an important figure; he is an individual who is supposed to be a leader of the people and a guide to correcting misconceptions. However, he has fallen into the stereotypical pool. Maybe he needs to view "Africa Open For Business."

In journalist Luyton Driman's article "Is Africa Open for Business" he said, "Clearly the developed world sees Africa as one, with no inherent borders, therefore all the countries collectively are tarred with the same negative points as afore mentioned."

It is visually clear that the media has tainted the world's core conception of Africa. Nevertheless, documentaries such as "Africa Open For Business" depict the side of Africa that has never been told before in the media.

The side of Africa that is presented does not just include begging or starving people. Instead, it depicts the positive aspect of Africa that is able to be strong enough to get by without intervention or help from the outside world.

A good journalist must escape from the unknowingly branded imperialistic thinking of the white men's burden that Africa cannot stand without international intervention.

We are living in a time where humanity has already suffered enough from slavery, colonization and holocaust, among many other things. Journalists should strive to study the past and present problems of the world in order to prevent the ignorance of dehumanizing a continent through the media by telling one side of a story that is far more complicated than simple.

Yasmine Farah is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at yfarah@student.umass.edu.

The ED/OP page is hiring for Fall 2008

Ever dreamed of working for the Collegian?
Make your dreams come true.

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

The old man and the polygamist sect

Shayna Murphy

Unless you've been struck by lightning, or tucked away on a secluded compound for the last few weeks, you've probably heard about the recent crack down on polygamy in Eldorado, Texas.

What you probably haven't heard much of, though, is the fervor which polygamy has sparked on the catwalks of Paris, Milan and Fox News, respectively.

Oh sure, it seems like polygamy is all sermons and oppression, child-rearing and the like. But if you thought there wasn't a passion for fashion lurking inside those dusty sect ranches, you were mistaken.

In a recent article, Fox News mulled over the fashion habits of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (whew) to great detail. Through it, they determined a few principal things.

One, polygamist women are modest. Two, celebrity stylist Ted Gibson thinks their hairdos are dowdy. And three, the media will pounce all over any story if it means capitalizing on the hot-button issue of polygamy.

Firstly, there are the fashions to consider.

The dustbowl finery the ladies sport hearkens back to the pioneer days of the 19th century. The women, under the auspice of greater modesty, abstain from makeup and keep their legs and arms covered. Falling on the pastel end of the color wheel, the dresses are both restrictive and uniform, much like the lives of the ladies themselves.

The dresses are also marked by symbols denoting religious devotion. The meaning of these symbols is indistinct, but as styles go, it could be weirder. Ever wonder why polygamist ladies grow their hair out so long? As it turns out, they do it so that Christ will have something nice to wipe his feet with in the event of a second coming.

All potential pseudo-feminist mongering aside, let's consider this for a second. These women belong to a religious cult, and Fox News is running stories about their fashion sense?

It must be a slow day for news when

It must be a slow day for news when homespun prairie dresses and braided 'dos are the talk of the hour.

homespun prairie dresses and braided 'dos are the talk of the hour. But is it actually?

If Fox News or the Associated Press bothered to do their jobs, they'd find the actual news remained more compelling than anything fit to run concurrent in the latest edition of Cosmo magazine.

Prompted by allegations of sexual assault on an underage teen, the sect was raided by officials earlier this month. Following the raid, Texas courts determined that all compound progeny must undergo DNA testing, in an attempt to sift through the labyrinth of lineage which has arisen from the sect's polygamist lifestyle.

On April 22, the courts raised the heat: they granted Child Protective Services the right to remove children to foster care while testing continued. At present, more than 400 children under the age of 17 reside in state custody, many of them under the age of four years old.

Now, I'm only a college student, but even to my sophomoric eye, it seems like there's the potential for a massive human interest story here. Mothers separated from kids, families torn asunder by a legal system incapable of understanding their way of life – it's heart-wrenching stuff.

Why the media concerns itself with irrelevant aspects of the affair, like who's wearing what on the cement path leading up to the courtroom, is beyond my comprehension. Perhaps the reasoning is: whatever works best for public consumption.

Certainly, the public's appetite for polygamy seems insatiable.

HBO's popular melodrama, "Big Love," dramatizes the issue on a weekly basis. In it, a Utah businessman conceals his three wives while maintaining the public face of a home goods empire. Liken him to Sam Walton, if Mr. Walton had had a fetish for kinky footwear or something.

I can't watch the show much, regardless of how often my grandma sings its merits to me. Not because I have a low threshold for controversy, but because inevitably, viewings leave me craving something more fact based than soap opera.

While few could claim contempt of the media for exploring polygamy further, it's dispersal through common media outlets leaves a bit to be desired.

At least we're looking at it, right? Yet when we begin to rely more on cable dramas and fashion trends to deliver truth, the value of exploring polygamy in the mainstream seems to go kaput.

We see some facts within these mediums, but face it – it's a cop out. It's made less acceptable when dealing with a topic like polygamy, which few understand, yet most find morally reprehensible.

If this trend in coverage continues, we should guard against the blow-up sure to follow. I see it now, in a blaze of pop culture decadence: Playboy's special summer edition, the Barely Legal Teens of Polygamy. And coming soon to the big screen, watch out: It's Zombie Polygamists, who won't rest until they've spread the gospel – or eaten most of our brains.

Maybe it sounds shameless. But in a culture as exploitive as our own, should we expect any less?

Shayna Murphy is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

Farewell to AIDS

Sherrie Bain

"No pestilence had ever been so fatal, or so hideous ... And Darkness and Decay and the Red Death held illimitable dominion over all." — The Masque of the Red Death by Edgar Allen Poe.

The devastation caused by the modern day HIV/AIDS plague rivals that of the most severe epidemics in human history. Nowhere is the impact of this tragedy felt more than in Sub-Saharan Africa, home to 80 percent of the HIV/AIDS cases in the world.

What does it mean that 24 million people in Africa are infected with a disease that is 100% preventable and treatable? Why is it that by the year 2010 almost all of those people are expected to die?

Why do so many children have to end up being orphaned by this disease, only to become victims themselves at birth or before they reach adulthood? These are not trivial questions by any means.

For many people it is difficult to imagine that there could be countries in the world today where a large percentage of the population is infected with a disease.

And like Prince Prospero in "The Masque of the Red Death," government officials refuse to even acknowledge that the disease exists or try to implement effective treatment and prevention programs.

The impact of HIV/AIDS is not simply felt in poor or downtrodden regions.

For a long time that was the attitude of some governments in African countries, including South Africa. Under increasing pressure from both local and external human rights and global health agencies, these countries are now beginning to address the HIV/AIDS crisis.

However, this change in attitude might be too little, too late for many of the 24.8 million people who will die within the next two years. In Africa, 6,000 people die of AIDS each day and twice that many are infected during that same period.

To put those numbers into context for us here at UMass, the undergraduate student population of UMass is approximately 20,000 – what would it be like if half of the students suddenly quit school one day?

There are numerous socioeconomic and cultural factors that either prevent persons at risk from being screened for HIV/AIDS, or limit their ability to acquire and maintain life – sustaining retro-viral therapy.

Sadly, some societies in Africa encourage cultural stereotypes about disease transmission that often discriminate against women who are seen as the major source of diseases.

The reality is that with improvement to universal HIV testing, more women are screened and know their status as opposed to males. Males in many cases move from region to region, at times from country to country, looking for work, acquiring numerous sexual partners, and spreading the disease with reckless indifference to the long-term affects it will have on the women and children that result from these transient relationships.

In many of the poorest regions of countries like Kenya, there is no work for the women to do, no land to farm, no factory jobs to help feed their children, and no schools to educate them about how to prevent STDs like HIV/AIDS.

In these regions there are only fishermen willing to support the women and supply food, at a price that exceeds dollars and cents. These "bread winners" require payment in the form of sex – unprotected in most cases.

Many women are literally faced with either starving to death, or exposing themselves to being infected by HIV/AIDS and other STDs for a few fishes. Often, neither males nor females are limited to a single partner and therefore the rate of disease transmission is significantly enhanced.

With unprotected sex comes the possibility of pregnancies that result in HIV-positive babies. There are also cultural practices such as polygamy that increase the incidence of HIV/AIDS in small villages and result in nearly all members of a family being HIV-positive.

The lack of basic health infrastructure in these areas results in victims who simply go undiagnosed and untreated, waiting to develop full-blown AIDS, waiting to die.

The impact of HIV/AIDS is not simply felt in poor or down-trodden regions. In 2005 President Nelson Mandela announced that his son had died of AIDS. A part of the reason for acknowledging this openly was to promote AIDS awareness and destigmatization.

This willingness to encourage dialogue about the AIDS crisis has set a tone for how many countries such as Uganda and Senegal are implementing comprehensive HIV education, prevention, and treatment programs that stop the spread of this disease.

There has also been a significant shift in attitudes of countries including the United States, who initially sought to prevent efforts by African countries to develop or import cheap retro-viral drugs, because it would affect the profits of local pharmaceutical companies.

With the realization that the AIDS pandemic in Africa is not just a healthcare issue but a political crisis as well, many governments now encourage pharmaceutical companies to donate the drugs free of charge, especially those that prevent transmission from mother to child.

All is not lost yet in Africa's fight to stop the devastation of AIDS, but persistance and dedication is required on all fronts. Every step towards development of cheaper, more effective drugs or an effective vaccine brings us closer the end of another period in the fight against a plague as dark and destructive as the one alluded to by Poe in 1850.

Sherrie Bain is the chapter coordinator for the FACE AIDS UMass Student Chapter.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tokyo Police Club stir NoHo into frenzy

Canadian quartet lights up Pearl Street with music, lasers

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With a backdrop of sirens and the unified chanting of their name, Tokyo Police Club emerged onto a tranquil, illuminated stage amidst a hue of blue light and much fanfare. What followed was far from a peaceful Saturday night.

Translating their frenzied material seamlessly in the live setting, the band powered through the lengths of almost their entire discography before a capacity crowd at the Pearl Street Night Club. Four-piece bands generally don't create the kind of energy and depth of sound that the Canadian quartet mustered, and for that the band deserves their due. Whether rattling tambourines, emphatically clapping, or incorporating crowd interaction, the band not only stretched the limitations of what a relatively simple four-piece arrangement can offer in a live environment, they abandoned them altogether.

The frantic pace of their recorded works took on new life on stage, aided by the band's theatrical flair, engaging material, and the elaborate circle of fluorescent punctuations that accompanied every second of their set. Surrounded by synchronized glowing pillars, every break down was met with an elaborate array of colors, and every lull was met with soothing and still light. This added visual provided a unique dimension to their stage performance, accentuating the insatiable highs and melodic lows of their set list.

Bassist and lead vocalist Dave Monks was front and center and proved to be a stabilizing force to the band's eccentric on-stage persona. His bass lines carried the majority of the night's selections and were accented by Graham Wright's over-the-top keyboard arrangements and the spirited drumming of Greg Alsop.

Guitarist Josh Hook served in a variety of roles, playing his guitar positioned well below his midsection and periodically letting it hang from its strap in favor of inspiring clap-alongs and feverishly providing a supplemental layer of tambourine.

Wright was the true showman of the quartet, owning his corner of the stage with an unparallel flair for the dramatic. The audience could see the sweat drip from Wright's hair and collect on the lenses of his black-rimmed glasses and the exhausted expression on his face as he screamed into the microphone, lunging over his synthesizer, desperate to reach the audience.

When he wasn't playing or grinding his hips into the casing of his keyboard, he was violently rattling and slamming a tambourine, using his free hand to punctuate the fourth beats so hard your palms felt sore even from the back of the clubroom.

On this night, one of the biggest criticisms of the band's records turned out to be one of their live shows greatest strengths. With a discography that runs under an hour in length, the band provided a taste of everything, both old and new, and delivered their quick hitting songs with all the necessary dynamism.

Despite their newest album "Elephant Shell" being released just this past Tuesday on Saddle Creek Record, the crowd was familiar with the wide range of the new material performed by the band. Slower selections such as "Juno" and opener "Listen to the Math" resonated through the clubroom and were met with softly mouthed audience renditions to accompany the relatively calm lightshow.

Upbeat songs like the cheekily titled "Your English is Good" and the clap-along single "Tessellate" caused quite a stir in the crowd, as dancing broke out in patches throughout the packed room while those on the outskirts were likewise helpless to stand motionless.

As is almost always the case, the band's older material garnered the most positive response from the crowd. Tearing through tracks from "A Lesson in Crime," the bands 2006 release, the band managed to supplement their newest material with their established works, maintaining a delicate balance throughout the length of the set.

"Nature of the Experiment" elicited the warmest response of the night. The frantically paced number got people moving in unison with the song's aggressive pace and singing out with a complete lack of restraint in unison with Monks' vocals, which arguably sounded superior in the flesh then they did on the songs digital counterpart.

The band fittingly concluded the night with "Cheer it On," a song that served as the introduction to their first album and the band as a whole. As band and crowd yelled in unison along with the song's chorus "When you're standing near Tokyo Police Club/ when you're standing next to me/ Tokyo Police Club," the lyrics developed new meaning. With each emphatic declaration of their namesake it became increasingly obvious that the song was no longer an introduction; rather, it was a statement that they had truly arrived.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

The Tokyo Police Club played the Pearl Street Night Club on Saturday night. The band powered through almost their entire discography complete with a laser light show that was synched to the music.

Film series continues

Professors, movie buffs gather over French arts house works

BY CAROL LAWLESS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Throughout April and continuing in May, Amherst Cinema is hosting the Essential Art House Film Series of International Classics.

There is a new batch of films being shown, many in 35 mm prints, giving viewers the highest quality experience at the film showing. Film scholars from the Five Colleges will also be accompanying one showing of each movie to introduce the film and answer questions afterwards.

On Thursday, May 1 at 7 p.m., Dale Hudson, a visiting assistant professor of Film Studies at Amherst College, will introduce "Pierrot le fou," a French film directed by Jean-Luc Godard in 1965. It has English subtitles and some English dialogue. The film, which is 110 minutes long, will be followed by an audience question and answer session with Hudson.

Hudson teaches courses in history, criticism, and theory of film and new media. He will be teaching a new course in transnational French cinemas next spring.

"I think that it's important for students to learn to make connections that they might not notice," said Hudson. "So we look at ... artsy films like 'Pierrot le fou' to unapologetically commercial films from Bollywood, Nollywood, Hong Kong and Hollywood from activist videos to video games, from indigenous media to state propaganda, from hand-processed experimental films to amateur mashups."

The Amherst Cinema Essential Art House Film Series continues this week with the French film "Pierrot le fou" on Thursday night.

Hudson wanted to introduce this film to audiences on Thursday because "Godard's films of this period were among the first films that I studied as a student. To see the film again evokes a sort of nostalgia for a time when I could be more easily surprised and delighted." Director Godard has been directing films and videos for the past 50 years and is one of the most highly regarded directors in European cinema.

Criterion, the company that distributes this film and other "classic" films on DVD, illustrates the film as "a stylish mash-up of consumerist satire, politics and comic-book anesthetics, as well as the violent zigzag tale of, as Godard called them, 'the last romantic couple.'"

Hudson believes it is a "must-see" for students who love film. He says it is "rambunctious, self-reflexive, full of bright colors, unexpected events, and often inappropriate behavior."

"Pierrot le fou" stars in the lead roles Jean-Paul Belmondo and Anna Karina who were both enormously popular with young French audiences in the 1960s. They both starred in director Godard's other films, and Karina was even married to Godard for some time. According to Hudson, they "represent a new generation of film stars who invigorated French cinema with acting styles that rejected the clichés of professional acting styles."

Hudson, who finds the end of the film explosive, describes the film as reflecting "much of the confusion of young people during the 1960s in France in terms of an increasing alienation from the government, dissatisfaction with educational and other institutions, fatigue with gender roles and sexual codes, and deep divisions over U.S. military action in southeast Asia."

"Pierrot le fou" is roughly translated as "Pierrot (Pete) goes wild." Pierrot is a nickname that character Marianne calls Ferdinand in the film.

Those interested in "Pierrot le fou" or the other upcoming international film classics being shown this month can learn more at amherstcinema.org.

Carol Lawless can be reached at clawless@student.umass.edu

Ben & Jerry's hits 30 years

Ice cream pioneer holds free cone day nation-wide today

BY BARBARA BOORAS
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Nothing beats ice cream on a hot day, and nothing beats a scoop of one of Ben and Jerry's wacky flavor concoctions on any day.

With around 40 flavors, Ben and Jerry's is a pioneer in ice cream innovation. They're known for their creative names and mixing up intriguing ingredients like chocolate-dipped peanut butter pretzels, graham cracker swirls and even chocolate dinosaurs. Whether your favorite is Chunky Monkey, Cherry Garcia or maybe Chubby Hubby, there is one for every palette and mood.

Good ice cream is synonymous with celebrations, warm weather and the occasional drowning of sorrows with good friends. Today however, is a day of celebration for Ben Cohen, Jerry Greenfield and ice cream lovers across the United States.

Since 1979, founders Greenfield and Cohen have held an annual "Free Cone Day" celebration. The two best friends started their business in an abandoned gas station in Vermont and turned their dream into an empire. Ben and Jerry's ice cream can now be found in pints and scoop shops across the globe, from Thailand to Belgium to Iceland.

Today is the annual free cone day at Ben and Jerry's stores.

Free cone day is a way for these businessmen with humble roots to give back to their loyal customers. All day today, scoop shops nation-wide will be scooping free ice cream for anyone who stops in.

If you haven't had a chance to try a Ben and Jerry's product before, there are a few things you might be wondering. Because their ice cream is all-natural, you will notice your beloved mint chocolate chip is not the familiar bright green color, made from artificial dyes but a stark white color with vanilla bean speckles and huge chunks of chocolate.

The popular flavor Phish Food, named for the rock band, recently celebrated its 10 year anniversary. One of the most frequently asked questions of Ben and Jerry's employees from kids and, believe it or not, even some adults, was, "Is there really fish food in it?" This top 10 flavor is a delicious, rich, milk chocolate based ice cream with swirls of caramel and marshmallow and miniature chocolate fudge fish swirled in. And no, it doesn't contain actual fish food, or any fish products, for that matter.

Flavors that lack in popularity end up in what is affectionately referred to as the "flavor graveyard." If you take a trip up to the factory in Burlington, Vermont you will be able to see the actual graveyard with dearly departed flavors of yesteryear like Dastardly Mash, Cool Britania, Festivus and Holy Cannoli.

Annually, new flavors are added to its list of staples. Fans of the Colbert Report will love the new Americone Dream flavor with chocolate dipped waffle cone pieces in a vanilla base with a gooey caramel swirl. Other great flavors have been inspired by Monty Python, Willy Nelson, Jerry Garcia and the Dave Matthew's Band. This year's newest addition, "Imagine Whirled Peace," was named for famed musical artist John Lennon.

Even though Ben and Jerry's was recently sold to corporate giant Unilever, it still remains grounded keeping in mind its important environmental and social commitments.

Its famous "Lick Global Warming" campaign raised awareness through education on renewable energy sources and how to offset your own carbon emissions. On their highly interactive Web site, visitors can calculate their own carbon emissions and see ways to reduce them. Ben and Jerry's also launched its newest campaign, called "One," to fight against poverty.

With a conveniently located scoop shop only minutes away from campus, there's no excuse to miss this tasty event. Also, with the regular price of a single scoop now pushing $3, take advantage of this scrumptious steal. Although they'll be dishing up all day, it is best to arrive early for this one.

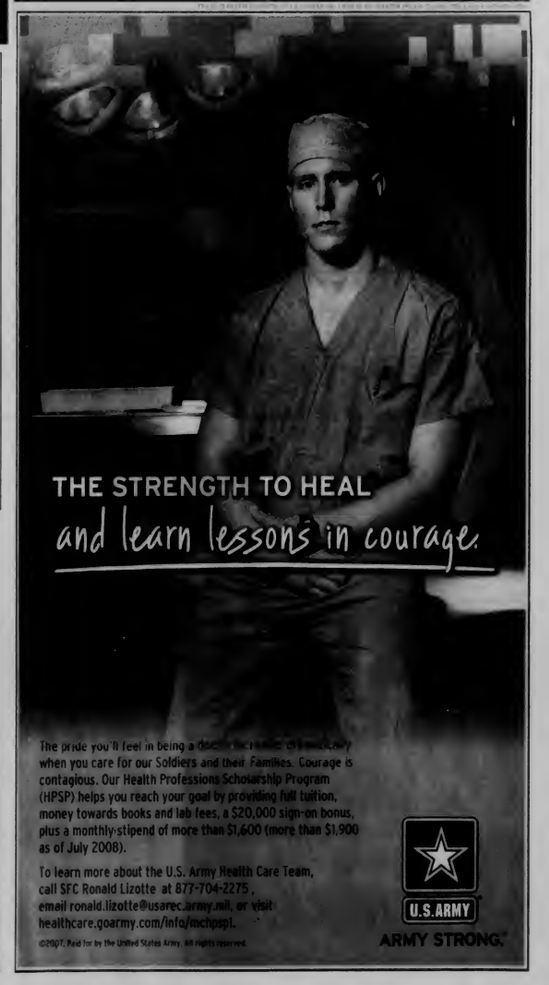
In past years the line has stretched down the sidewalk past Antonio's Pizza. The store in downtown Amherst is located at 19 North Pleasant Street and will be open 11 a.m. to 9 p.m.

With an emphasis on nurturing our environment while providing an outstanding and interesting product, you can't help but feel good about supporting a company like Ben and Jerry's. Pick up your free cone today and celebrate with your friends 30 years of ice cream euphoria.

Barbara Booras can be reached at bbooras@gmail.com.

Taste test at the Mullins

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE $1000
OFF ANY RENTAL FROM NOW THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1ST!
STOP BY FOR FREE PIZZA!
FRIDAY MAY 2ND 8:30AM-7PM
&
SATURDAY MAY 3RD 10AM-3PM
ONLY
CALL 253-7377 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE 420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE



NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich/daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

Elite athletes hit the track

Basketball and soccer stars compete in spring sport

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

You would have to be roommates with the top distance runner on the Massachusetts womens' track and field team to consider joining the team in your last semester of college because you thought it would be funny.

Seniors Kate Mills and Pam Rosanio were exactly in that situation this year. Mills and Rosanio have been roommates with seniors Christina DeRosa and Jennifer Curtin since freshman year. At the beginning of this year, they joked about what it would be like to join the track and field team after their last season with the UMass women's basketball team.

When March came around, Curtin and DeRosa turned the joke into a reality. She asked UMass coach Julie LaFreniere about having her roommates and senior Alisha Tatham on the team.

"She was all for it," Rosanio said.

Rosanio joined the team as a mid-distance runner while Mills joined as a javelin thrower. Tatham chose sprinting. The transition for them has been difficult given that they have no experience in track and field events, even as high school students. Some of the transition has been simply appreciating the difficulty of the event.

"[Javelin throwing] is more difficult than I thought it would be," Mills said. "I thought I could throw it like a baseball."

She is still on track to reach a personal accomplishment, despite her struggling with the technique of the throw. When Mills first started, she never thought she could throw 100 feet (30.48 meters) on a single throw.

Mills started out the season throwing 25.54 meters at the Connecticut Invitational on April 5. Since then, UMass assistant coach Mark Gottdenker has worked with Mills on running faster before the throw to get more distance.

On April 19, the advice paid off as she completed the Larry Ellis Invitational with 29.74 meters, less than a meter away from her preseason goal.

"Mark just told me to be as patient as possible," Mills said.

Rosanio's personal feat came at the UMass Invitational on April 12 at the 800-meter run. Rosanio led for most of the race before getting passed. She caught up and won the third heat of the 800-meter run (2 minutes, 29.18 seconds) and finished 30th overall.

"Obviously she was quite tired, but she was so determined that she came off that final turn and sprinted so she could finish the section," LaFreniere said. "I think Pam has done a very nice job, and that particular race on that day shows you how determined and competitive she is."

TATHAM EXCEEDING ALL EXPECTATIONS

Tatham went into the track and field season expecting nothing more than to keep herself in shape for playing professional basketball overseas.

Those plans changed quickly after her first race at the UMass Invitational, where she took first in the 100- (12.19 seconds) and 200-meter dashes (24.97 seconds).

"It definitely changed my focus because I never thought I was going to do that well in this sport," Tatham said.

Her first place finishes made her a serious contender for an ECAC Championship qualification on May 15-16 in Princeton, N.J. The only problem was that she had to learn how to run in a way that is second nature to most track athletes, but foreign to her.

She runs bent over because she's used to playing basketball, which is different from the straight running posture that track athletes have.

"The first time I saw her running, we all thought she was going to fall on her face," LaFreniere said. "She looked like she was barely putting one foot in front of the other without taking a nose dive."

The next weekend, Tatham took sixth in the 200 at the Larry Ellis Invitational on April 19-20 (24.82) at Princeton, qualifying for ECACs, despite her problems with form.

"I was sort of in shock a little bit because I didn't think I was going to do that well," Tatham said.

The 4x100-meter team already qualified for Princeton (47.49) with a second place finish at Larry Ellis. Tatham is close to qualifying for ECACs in the 100-meter dash and the 4x400-meter relay race. She came .04 seconds away in the 100-after finishing fourth (12.16) at the invitational.

The 4x400 team (3:52.51) is under a second away from qualifying after finishing second at the invitational. The team needs to finish at 3:51.84 at the A-10 Championships this weekend to advance to ECACs.

Tatham has played a crucial role with the team as an anchor leg, finishing in 56 seconds. It was the fastest time on the UMass 4x100-meter team. Her time didn't come as a surprise to Rosanio at all.

"She's always been the fastest on our basketball team," Rosanio said.

Even with her contribution to the relay team, Tatham still has a lot to learn. Many of the technical aspects, such as making sure she's in the right zone when she receives the baton and which hand to receive from are still new concepts to her.

Tatham also has difficulties getting off the starting block since she's never had to before. Her only experience on the starting blocks came a few days before the Invitational.

The hardest part for her being on the starting block is waiting. She anticipates the starting gun and is still learning how to stay still so she doesn't get charged with a false start. At 5-11, her size makes it difficult to crunch up before the start.

BRIAN TELLER/COLLEGIAN

Alisha Tatham (left), Pam Rosanio (center) and Kate Mills (right) have all taken up track in addition to basketball their senior year.

"Using starting blocks is so foreign to her that she's having a little more difficult transition with having to use starting blocks in a race," LaFreniere said. "It's totally foreign from anything she's ever done before. Sometimes I forget that she doesn't know anything about it."

LaFreniere has made Tatham her project for the A-10s by making sure she stays still on set. But what she lacks mechanically, she makes up for in raw speed and competitiveness.

"Everyone wants her to come back for one more year because she's so dominant for the track team," Mills said.

FOUR-YEAR SOCCER, TRACK ATHLETE STILL LEARNING

When the name Britt Canfield comes up, most think of her leadership on the UMass women's soccer team. But for the past four seasons, the senior also participated on the track and field team.

Unlike the new additions from the Minutewomen's basketball team, Canfield started track and field in high school, participating mostly in the 400-meter. This season she started running the 800-meter and picked up the javelin event.

Canfield believes that learning how to run track is harder than learning how to play soccer because of track's technicality.

"The better form you have in track the faster you run," Canfield said. "In soccer, you're not really too concerned about form. You're concentrating on keeping people off the ball and shielding yourself."

Mills and Canfield have worked together in learning how to throw the javelin. Canfield picked up the event a little quicker than Mills, although they have yet to throw in the same meet.

They turned the learning experience into a friendly competition. Neither has scored points for the Minutewomen, although Canfield has been competitive this season with a fourth place finish at the UMass Invitational (33.19).

LaFreniere believes that Canfield is close to scoring if she makes a few adjustments.

"I think the key with the javelin is that both of them are very strong. There's finesse to throwing the javelin that isn't just muscling it out there and their tendency is to muscle it out there," LaFreniere said.

Canfield has welcomed the energy and enthusiasm of the new additions to the Minutewomen.

"I think it's great," Canfield said. "They're three really fun people, and they're bringing something to the team."

The contributions from Canfield and the women's basketball players have been fun for the rest of the team to watch and for LaFreniere to coach. Their determination and what they bring from their other team adds character to the Minutewomen.

"I love having their attitudes," LaFreniere said. "I like the attitudes of my team anyway, but the four of them have been a nice addition. I think they always bring something else from their team sport experience to our program."

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TELLER/COLLEGIAN

Britt Canfield led the Minutewomen with eight goals and 10 assists this season. She mainly runs the 400-meter on the track.

CREATIVE?
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR
DAY AND NIGHT
GRAPHICS STAFF MEMEBERS
INTERESTED?
COME VISIT THE COLLEGIAN IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

Campus to Career
Dress to Impress
Dress for the Job You Want, Not the Job You Have!
"real world." Proper dress can make or break an interview, an important business deal or presentation. Join us for this valuable workshop before you head off for summer jobs and internships or your first job as a college graduate.
FREE ADMISSION
FREE PIZZA
FREE REFRESHMENTS
To register for this FREE event, visit UMassAlumni.com/students.
MODELS WANTED!
We are looking for a handful of students to participate and show proper dress and not so proper dress. If interested, please contact the Student Alumni Association at 545-2317 or saa@vuaf.umass.edu.

Minutemen's Evans headed to Panthers

While the upcoming spring game provides a glimpse into the future of the Massachusetts football team, the NFL has given reason to look at its past.

Former UMass fullback Breyone Evans became the first of an expected group of Minuteman alums to sign pro contracts with the NFL. Evans, 22, signed with the Carolina Panthers on Monday. Carolina signed nine other rookie free agents – to go along with nine draft picks – and Evans will compete with them for a roster spot. The Panthers now have seven running backs and two fullbacks on their roster.

More signings of former UMass players could be imminent. Tight end Brad Listorti and running back Matt Lawrence were considered to have higher draft stock than Evans by experts. Both are likely to sign somewhere in the coming days, as is place-kicker Chris Koepplin.

Evans graduated from Syracuse and came to UMass as a graduate student last year with one year of eligibility remaining. He played in all but one game, starting in half of his 12 appearances. His one carry during the season went for a 5-yard touchdown against Maine. He had three catches (for 15 total yards and a touchdown) in 2007, all coming against Colgate.

—Eli Rosenswaike

Want more insight on UMass Athletics?
Check out sports podcasts on the Collegian website!
www.dailycollegian.com

DON'T HIDE YOUR FEELINGS.
comics@dailycollegian.com

Good sudoku addict.

		6	1		5		2
5			7			4
					3			5
3		8			4
	7	9				2	4
			3			9		6
2			5
		4			7			2
	8		4		2	3

QUOTE OF THE DAY

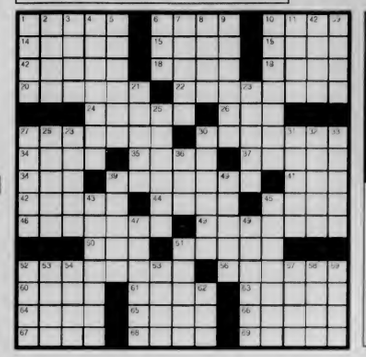
"Holy testicle Tuesday!"

— Jim Carrey as "Ace Ventura"

BROTHERS WATT BY WILLIAM WILSON

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY



ACROSS
1 Platters
6 Pond cover
10 Like broken horses
14 Sky hunter
15 Aquatic organism
16 Engage in
17 Artillery burst
18 D.C. bigwigs
19 Glamour competition
20 Goes in
22 Spoke for transcription
24 Swamp plants
26 Cereal grain
27 Farm animal
30 Duration
34 Starring role
35 Seedy bar
37 Musical syllables
38 PC key
39 Creators' credits
41 Straw drawn
42 Brown in butter
44 Cordelia's father
45 Pout
46 Mavens
48 Renters
50 Always, to a bard
51 Surveillance, shortly
52 Road parallel to a highway
56 Pleasantly warm
60 Corn Belt state
61 Lemming cousin
63 Close call
64 Air bag?
65 Actress Gray
66 Actress Barkin
67 ___ majesty
68 Oh, why not!
69 Goes after

DOWN
1 Apothecary measure
2 Teheran's place
3 Delta deposit
4 Type of wagon or dish
5 Serenaded the sheets
6 Dig a trench
7 Blockheads
8 Wrinkly citrus fruit
9 Good luck source
10 Cool weather wear
11 Sentry's command
12 Gawk at
13 Instrument of title
21 Rundown
23 Tasty desserts
25 Practice exercises
27 World-weary
28 Chill out
29 Devour
30 Upper house
31 Claw
32 Influence
33 Despises
36 Contend
39 Special Forces cap
40 Put up
43 Adolescent
45 Handcuff
47 See the world
49 Hangman's knots
51 Ignited again?
52 Occupy completely
53 Lecherous man
54 Holds title to
55 Al or Tipper
57 Mail happening
58 Rough journey
59 Cravings
62 Skinny twins?

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Nine Down: Good luck source

Submit your seed!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If smiles were the currency of life, you'd be rich, but they aren't, and you just look like a grinning goomba.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The kid next to you with the puffy red eyes doesn't have a bad case of allergies, he's rabid.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't be mad at the raindrops for falling from the heavens, they're just trying to get closer to you.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You may be broke, but is the money worth spending the rest of your life wondering if someone used your specimen?

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The road to tomorrow is paved with yesterday's potholes and this morning's roadkill.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't feel too bad about yourself, Miley Cyrus has hooked up with way more guys than you, and she's only nine.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your class may be boring, but you will survive. Just stay positive and you can get through this.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
A common American name for the Brazil nuts is the "Cream Nut." If that doesn't make you smile, you're hopeless.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
After you went to bed, your roommate cleaned his toejam with your toothbrush. How's that for minty fresh?

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Today is a perfect day to start collecting citizens for your earthworm farm.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
UMass spent all our money on giant tents then moved the Founder's Day Celebration inside. Hooray for wasting our money!

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You may not like public bathrooms, but unless you're willing to switch to diapers, you better stop complaining.

Like a lost child for a hungry hyena, Comics gives you something to chew on.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT FOR RENT

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton.
2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1025+
4 Bedrooms $1225+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

APT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT
REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY

EMPLOYMENT

NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or info@idealmovers.com

Looking for an internship? International business publisher in Amherst seeking interns in areas of

EMPLOYMENT

Management, Publishing, Marketing, IT, Business Development and More. Several opportunities. Call Mike 413-253-3488 and ask for Greg.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details.

EMPLOYMENT

Requirements-should be a computer literate, 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 29, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen host Saints

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two days after taking two-of-three crucial games against conference foe Saint Joseph's, the Massachusetts baseball team is scheduled to host Siena today at Earl Lorden Field.

However, there's a good chance the game will be rained out, as rain is in the forecast for much of the day.

The Minutemen (14-19, 7-11 Atlantic 10) will look to build upon the modest two-game win streak they currently hold after taking the final two games of the series against the Hawks.

Siena (19-24, 7-8 Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference) is coming off a weekend series in which it won two of the final three games as well.

It dropped Game 1 of a doubleheader to LeMoyne on Saturday but rebounded to win the second game and then won again in dramatic fashion on Sunday.

Rick Seltzer hit a walk-off single with no outs in the ninth inning to end a game that saw the two teams combine for 31 hits.

Nick Serino, the probable starter for UMass, will take on the task of trying to slow down the Saint hitters.

The freshman left-hander leads the starting pitching staff with a 3.45 earned run average but struggled in his latest outing.

Serino pitched one week ago against Central Connecticut State and allowed four runs in five innings of work.

Eight Blue Devil hitters came to the plate in the fifth inning and while Serino escaped that inning with two runs allowed, UMass coach Mike Stone elected to go to the bullpen.

On the other side, the Saints pitching staff has struggled this season. They rank near the bottom of the conference, and Craig Marcellus and Craig Chaput, the two starters with the most starts (10) have ERAs of 6.58 and 8.72, respectively.

The UMass lineup surged and collected 24 hits in its final two games against St. Joe's and has drastically improved from last year.

Charlotte is far above any other team in the conference (.332 team batting average) but the Minutemen rank right in the middle of the pack with their .282 average.

Last season they batted .259 as a team, which ranked only ahead of Saint Louis.

Brian Baudinet leads the way for the team with a .395 average. He also shares the team lead for home runs with Kyle Multner (5) but hasn't hit one since an April 6 victory over George Washington.

These nonconference games don't affect whether or not UMass qualifies for the Atlantic 10 Tournament but are vital to prepare the team for the weekend series.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

FILE/COLLEGIAN

Freshman pitcher Nick Serino (2-2) leads the Minutemen with a 3.45 ERA. In his last outing against Central Connecticut State, he gave up four runs in five innings in the extra-inning loss.

Senior Andy Tuetken is batting .307 and has 16 RBI for the Minutemen this season.

Franczek beginning to hit

After getting off to slow start, senior finding a rhythm

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It took a while for him to settle into the new season, but it appears that Ryan Franczek is now in a steady rhythm at the plate.

The second baseman's average currently stands at .218, and although the average doesn't rank near the top on the team, Franczek has been one of UMass's most consistent hitters recently.

Franczek went just 2-for-8 in three games against Saint Joseph's this weekend, walking six times, which left him with a .571 on-base percentage for the series. He's second on the team with 20 walks this season, behind leadoff-hitter Brian Baudinet (22).

He also scored a team-high seven runs in the series.

"I think he's starting to swing like we know he can," UMass coach Mike Stone said after last Wednesday's lost to Sacred Heart, in which Franczek had four hits. "He's just got to keep his front shoulder down and keep his head on the ball. He'll be fine; he's got a good swing. It's just a matter of discipline to stay on the ball."

UMass Baseball

Although coaches sometimes move players down in the lineup when they're struggling, Stone elected to keep Franczek in the No. 2 spot, a move that appears to be paying dividends.

Even when he was struggling, Stone still wanted Franczek to receive as many as bats as possible per game, as he values the seniors' base stealing (11-for-14 this season) and bunting abilities.

MULTNER STREAKING

One player who came in this season and excelled immediately is right fielder Kyle Multner.

Hitting from the nine spot for the majority of the season, Multner's current 14-game hitting streak leads the team.

The freshman from Peabody, Mass., has been consistently batting over .300 this year. Multner helped his season average (.339) by going 5-for-12 against the Hawks this weekend.

Stone switched the lineup card for the first and third games of the weekend series. Instead of Multner hitting in his regular spot in the lineup, he was moved to sixth, behind Andy Tuetken.

However, he went 2-for-8 in those games, and enjoyed his best game of the weekend in the ninth spot, going 3-for-4 with his sole RBI of the series in Game 2.

STAYIN' ALIVE

Though not in prime position right now, UMass still remains mathematically alive in the race for a spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Six teams qualify for the conference tournament, and while the top four appear to be in good position to lock up a bid in the near future, the final two spots remain available for the remainder of the conference to take.

One thing the Minutemen have working in their favor is the remaining conference schedule.

Rhode Island, Dayton and Fordham currently hold the fifth through seventh spots in the standings while UMass is tied with Saint Joe's for 11th, two games behind the final spot.

The Minutemen host Dayton in a three-game series this weekend, before traveling to Rhode Island next weekend and then finishing up the season at Earl Lorden Field against Fordham from May 15-17.

Winning games in these series is not only important so UMass can make up ground in the standings but also to gain an edge if a tiebreaker were necessary.

The first tiebreaker for the tournament involves head-to-head competition, and since the weekend series are three games, the results will be crucial.

PITCHING INCONSISTENT

UMass has not had a shortage of pitchers this season, and while virtually everyone on the staff has pitched well at some point, consistency is something it's still searching for.

The team earned run average is nearly one run higher than last year (6.04 versus 5.05) while the staff is considerably younger.

One problem the team has encountered is finding a consistent arm in the bullpen once the starter is removed from the game.

Garrett Butt, Charlie Benson and Aaron Smith have all struggled with ERAs over nine while Nathan Monroy and Mitchell Eilenberg have pitched better, but still hold ERAs over four.

Since the staff is young, the Minutemen rely on the bullpen often, as the starters don't often pitch more than six innings.

However, the team did receive productive outings from their starters this weekend.

Mike Dicato pitched a complete game and Mitchell Clegg pitched eight innings – these were the two games the team won.

When the starters give outings such as these, it puts less pressure on the arms of the bullpen and gives UMass a better chance to have success.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Hobart to join Division III for '08-'09 season

University struggles to find non-scholarship athletes

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On April 26, the Eastern College Athletic Conference got some interesting news from a team in its conference.

As of the 2008-2009 academic school year, Hobart will reclassify from a Division I team to a Division III team.

"The changing landscape of collegiate lacrosse" and "the challenges inherent in recruiting talented student-athletes at the Division I level without athletic scholarships" led to the reclassification, according to the team's Web site.

ECAC Lacrosse

The Statesmen, along with No. 5 Johns Hopkins (6-5), are the only two Division III institutions competing in Division I men's lacrosse. However, Hobart cannot offer athletic scholarships, due to NCAA regulations, something that the Blue Jays can give.

Moving to Division III will help bring more recruits and more competitive play to Geneva, N.Y.

Since reclassifying programs are not eligible for the NCAA tournament until two years after they switch divisions, Hobart must request a waiver to qualify to compete in the Division III playoffs beginning in 2011.

This policy was enacted to give time for current Division I-caliber players to graduate, and for the program as a whole to make adjustments to the new Division III rules and regulations.

The Statesmen moved from Division III to D-I in 1995, and competed against Division I programs during its regular season schedule since 1971, when the NCAA first sponsored men's lacrosse.

Hobart joined the Patriot League as an associate member in 2000, after competing as an independent. Four years later, the conference's membership policies changed, forcing the Statesmen out of the league. A year removed from the Patriot League, the team joined the ECAC, where it was to compete against No. 4 Georgetown (9-3, 5-1 ECAC), No. 16 Loyola (7-5, 6-1 ECAC) and Massachusetts (5-8, 3-3 ECAC).

Hobart has fared much better in Division II, III and the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association than in Division I lacrosse.

In 92 seasons under the three divisions, the Statesmen were 624-321-20 with 63 winning seasons, 21 NCAA tournament appearances and 16 national championships.

Between 1980 and 1991, Hobart won 12 consecutive NCAA Division III championships, but they have not seen that success translate in D-I play, going 88-98 since 1995.

They have had three winning seasons since moving up to Division I, and earned four NCAA Tournament bids, including a Patriot League Championship victory, an automatic birth and two at-large bids.

HOYAS GET HELP FROM UNDERCLASSMEN

Georgetown got a preview of its future this weekend, as it defeated conference foe Rutgers, 13-7, giving the Blue and Grey a second-place finish in the ECAC. Four players from the class of 2010 totaled eight goals and five assists in the victory. Attackman Craig Dowd set a career-high with five assists, while fellow attackman Ricky Mirabito and midfielder Andrew Brancaccio had three goals against the Scarlet Knights (6-6, 3-3 ECAC). Midfielder Chris Schuville also contributed two goals, as eight different players recorded at least one goal, and 13 players had at least one point.

The Hoya offense is effective while attempting to score early in games, recording 130 shots in the first quarter of games this season.

The team will close out its regular season in an ECAC matchup against Penn State on May 3 as the Hoyas look to get a bid to the NCAA Tournament.

NO. 1 DUKE, COLGATE CLINCH CONFERENCE TITLES

Even though the Atlantic Coast Conference does not grant at large bids to the NCAA Tournament to conference champions, the nation's top ranked team defeated No. 3 Virginia, 11-9, for its second conference title in two years.

Blue Devils (15-1, 4-0 ACC) goalkeeper Dan Loftus had a career-high 17 saves, earning the Tournament MVP title, while attackman and three-time ACC Conference Player of the Year Matt Danowski recorded a hat trick as well as an assist. Duke defeated the Cavilers, 19-9, back on April 12, and will look to be the top-seeded going into the NCAA Tournament.

No. 15 Colgate won the Patriot League Championship and an automatic bid to the tourney, defeating Bucknell, 13-9, for the program's first conference championship. The Raiders, who were unranked last week, will also make its first-ever NCAA Tournament appearance.

No. 6 Notre Dame cracked the top 10 this week, defeating Ohio State in its season finale, 17-12. The victory sealed a three-way tie in the final Great Western Lacrosse League standings with the Fighting Irish, Buckeyes and Denver all finishing with 4-1 conference records. ND will be the No. 1 seed at next weekend's first-ever GWLL tournament, in hopes of reaching the NCAA Tournament.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEVLIN/COLLEGIAN

Chris Hurley will be playing his senior season as a Division III athlete rather than playing in the ECAC.

INSIDE: BEDTIME PLAYERS PERFORM TODAY | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 58 LO: 36 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 2008

Campus celebrates Founder's Day

Governor visits for day's event

BY CARA GRANNEMANN & EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Governor Deval Patrick and University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson emphasized the benefits of education in their Founders Day speeches yesterday at the Fine Arts Center.

Despite the rain, students, faculty and members of the University of Massachusetts community gathered to celebrate the 145th birthday of the flagship Amherst campus.

Shortly after noon, the Minuteman Marching Band played the UMass fight song, signaling the start of the featured speakers.

Chancellor Thomas W. Cole first introduced Wilson, who said the Founders Day celebration was "to honor the spirit of innovation." He also said that this was not only a celebration in Amherst, but "a statewide celebration of a

See PATRICK on page 2

Governor Deval Patrick spoke on campus yesterday, highlighting the history of UMass and the opportunities it holds for students.

Students provide entertainment

BY ANDREW SHERIDAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One hundred and forty-five years ago, Governor John A. Andrews signed a bill to fund a state school for farming and agricultural sciences. Not long after, the Massachusetts Agricultural College was born, spreading across 310 acres of rural Amherst land.

Though our school has grown since then, and undergone a name change, the spirit of public education has remained intact. To commemorate that spirit, and mark the 145th anniversary of the University of Massachusetts, the UMass community celebrated a Founders Day festival at the Fine Arts Center yesterday, complete with food, entertainment and a guest speaker – Governor Deval Patrick.

For several days prior to this Tuesday's Founders Day happenings, construction crews were busy at work outside of the Fine Arts Center. They erected tents, moved in grills and set up tables, turning the Haigis Mall into a party ground worthy of this grand institution's big birthday.

The tents were necessary, unfortunately, as April showers drove the festivities off of the grass and into the FAC. What was originally scheduled to be a grand picnic festival in the springtime sun became more of a celebratory recital held in the concert hall.

The indoor venue wasn't a bad thing, however, as the acoustics were well suited for the host of local high school bands, choirs and jazz ensembles who performed. Entirely amateur, the groups were all highly skilled and well directed, despite the last-minute change of location. The last group on the program was

See FOUNDER'S DAY on page 6

Despite the rain, the UMass Marching Band performed outside the Fine Arts Center during yesterday's Founder's Day celebration.

UHS campaign challenges assumptions

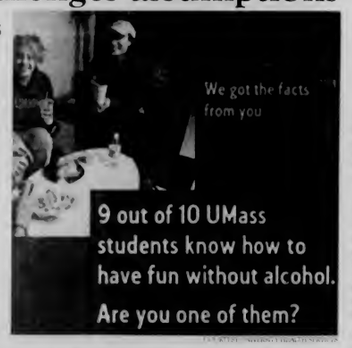
Students will see new posters on campus, buses next semester

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A new social norms slogan will be making its debut on the PVTA buses this fall.

With the guidance of April McNally, a health educator at University Health Services who oversees the social norms campaign, the new slogan is currently awaiting field testing among both current and future University of Massachusetts students.

"There are large gaps in data between what people do and what people think other people do," said McNally, referring to the beliefs students have about drinking.



The new slogan, although not released yet, will focus on students knowing their limits concerning alcohol. It will be the next installment in a series of quotes advertising the facts about UMass students' behavior and drinking.

"Lots of students are beginning to understand what the campaign is all about," McNally said. Data collected from recent surveying shows that many students themselves are receptive to the messages, and often overestimate how much other students drink.

The campaign itself has no intention to affect the current drinking habits of students, but to help reduce the negative effects brought on by acts of high-risk drinking.

"We don't expect students' behaviors about drinking to

See SLOGAN on page 2

April McNally, who runs the social norms campaign, says many students overestimate how much their peers drink.

UMass student to run for legislature

BY ERIC SCHLICHTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Matt Giancola, who will graduate from the University of Massachusetts in May with a political science degree, is running for the fourth Middlesex seat in the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

There have been rumors that the seat's incumbent, Rep. Stephen LeDuc, will not be running for re-election. Giancola said that "when it finally opened up in late February, I began to consider it, and after much discussion with committee leaders and potential campaign heads I realized that it was something I had to do."

Giancola has been praised by many for his community-oriented attitude and his willingness to serve others. He views the position of a state representative more as the chance to advance the public interest than to advance himself.

"I really dedicate my life to public service and to bettering our community, whether it's at the University or the local or the state or the national level," he said. "I realized that getting into public office can really have a transformative aspect on the community. I don't know if going into my freshman year I would be able to say I would be running for state Rep., but I always knew that public service in one way or another would be what I do."

The 4th Middlesex seat encompasses Berlin, part of Southborough, and all of Marlborough. Giancola's hometown. Giancola graduated from Marlborough High in 2004 and

See GIANCOLA on page 2

6th annual Clif Bar SoccerFest to return to campus May 10

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 2008 Clif Bar SoccerFest is approaching and spots are filling up quickly.

This year's event will be held on Saturday, May 10. Registration is $100 per team for teams of up to 10 players. Today is the last day for teams to register.

Clif Bar SoccerFest is organized by the University of Massachusetts Sports Management department's event management course. It is a one-day, six-on-six soccer tournament hosted each year on campus.

There is competitive and recreational pool play for male, female and co-ed teams from all around New England. Each team is guaranteed three 25-minute games, plus up to three rounds of playoff games.

Free SoccerFest T-shirts will be given to all participants, and prizes to the winning teams.

SoccerFest will also feature two exhibition games played by both the 2007 NCAA Final Four UMass Men's Soccer team and the Women's Varsity team.

The Clif Kid FunZone will also be back this year and will feature inflatable rides, a dunk tank, a rock wall and craft center for kids of all ages. Live music and food will be provided. Admission to these events is free with team registration.

Six different divisions for female, male and co-ed teams are available at SoccerFest registration. Pictured above is a 2006 male "top gun" team.

"This event really showcases what UMass Amherst is all about," said Matt Weinberger, one of the organizers of SoccerFest. "It is a great reflection not only on SOM and the sport management program, but the entire campus. We involve many different aspects of campus in our promotion and facilitation of the event. Among them are UMass Athletics, UVC-19 TV, UMass concessions, RSOs, Greek life, clubs, housing services and dining services."

For more information please visit: http://www.soccerfest.org.

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

Alumni to bike across U.S. during summer for charity

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jon Korhonen and Andy McCarron, roommates and University of Massachusetts alumni, decided back in December that they wanted to spend their summer biking across the United States.

By February, they were set up to do the trip for charity, and the Coast 2 Coast Cycle 4 Hunger was born.

McCarron and Korhonen, who is currently the assistant director of admissions and assistant coach for track and field at UMass, will take off on June 15 from Boston and will finish out the trip in San Francisco, where McCarron's sister lives.

"I think it's going to be a great experience," Korhonen said.

The money will be going to the Children's Hunger Fund, which provides aid to children in need around the world. Initially, Korhonen was considering doing the bike trip to raise money for Lyme disease, which he struggled with for 15 months after college. He talked to one of his doctors, who introduced him to the Children's Hunger Fund.

Korhonen said he was impressed by how efficiently the Children's Hunger Fund handles its money. According to the Web site, more than 99 percent of revenue goes to the children, and the fund was the only charity to receive a 100 percent efficiency rating from Forbes magazine. The fund uses the money to distribute food.

"I was really impressed with what they do," Korhonen said.

The pair began fundraising by sending letters to family and friends, but has moved on to asking for corporate sponsors, like Balthazar Contractors, Heritage Landscaping and the West Street Service Center of Gardiner.

Korhonen also said that he and McCarron have raised over $7,000 for the fund; all of the money raised will be going directly to the charity, as Korhonen and McCarron plan to fund the actual trip out of their own pockets.

Korhonen said he hoped to raise $10,000.

"We may stay in a hotel about once a week," Korhonen said. The rest of the week, the roommates will be staying in tents and on camping grounds; the "most earthy, crunchy, hippie Amherst" type of vacation, Korhonen said.

McCarron is currently biking the Appalachian Mountain Trail, but Korhonen said that they have not done much in the way of formal bike training for the trip.

"As former athletes, we're crossing our fingers," he said. Korhonen and McCarron are both distance runners and Korhonen said he's been biking for two years.

They plan to be done with the trip 40 days after starting, which means biking roughly 100 miles a day, Korhonen said.

They are not participating in an organized group trip.

"It's really just going to be him and me," said Korhonen, "so it should be an interesting ride."

There will be a 5k road race fundraiser for the trip on campus this Saturday, at nine in the morning by the track field.

After the bike trip, Korhonen will be studying for his master's in Education at Harvard University.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 130
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stagiin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wollack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburs
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenowsike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ABBIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SPECTATOR IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1924 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1996. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN CHANGED TO BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Patrick praises University

PATRICK from page 2

university with a global reputation."

Wilson went on to praise the Amherst campus for being the largest and most academically diverse.

He also commended the campus for its impressive gain of hundreds of millions of dollars in research grants within the last year.

Cole then introduced Governor Patrick.

"I'm going to be brief," Patrick said, "because the marching band has to stand here while all of you sit."

He began his speech with a brief history of the founding of the Amherst campus, and discussed the qualities that make the Amherst campus unique, including the University's brainpower, innovation, talent, research and invention.

Patrick also remarked that UMass holds great opportunities for its current students, and that the same opportunities should be preserved for future generations. He echoed the chancellor's remarks about UMass's global reputation.

"Education is the calling card for the Commonwealth all over the world," he said.

Patrick also discussed the theme of how education can transform lives, and used his own experiences as an example.

He grew up on welfare in the south side of Chicago, and did not own a book until he was awarded a scholarship to a private academy. His admittance to the school opened many opportunities for him to learn and grow.

Through his story, he explained the importance of passing on the gift of education to future generations, and the opposrtunities his education has allowed him to pass on to his children.

The ceremony ended with the marching band's rendition of the UMass alma- mater song, "Twilight Shadows."

Many UMass students attended the event, including sophomore and Dynamics performer Jessica Gordon.

"We had a pretty good crowd and we didn't know there would be so many people at this event," she said, adding that, "the pasta salad was top-notch."

Founder's Day celebrated John A. Andrew's signing of Senate Bill No. 156, 145 years ago on April 29, 1863, that established what would later become UMass.

Andrew Sheridan contributed reporting to this story.

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu and Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu.

Giancola aims to hold seat in Middlesex has been making weekly trips back home as he sets up his campaign.

GIANCOLA from page 2

"I've lived in Marlborough my whole life and understand the concerns of the people in the community," he said.

Knowing that his age is a point of interest for many and a concern for some, Giancola was quick to offer a list of leadership positions in which he has served. At UMass, he has served as president of the UMass Democrats. He is an advocate of keeping student fees low and has waged that battle on campus.

Back home in Marlborough, Giancola currently serves as secretary of the Marlborough Democratic Committee. Prior to that, he was the town coordinator for Governor Deval Patrick's campaign as well as an intern with United States Representative James McGovern.

Giancola is focusing his campaign on a few key issues, including combating rising healthcare costs, revitalizing a downturned economy and calling attention to environmental concerns.

"I believe that everyone deserves affordable and accessible healthcare, and while the reform that was passed in 2006 was a good first step and it was well intentioned, I think that there's a lot more we can do," Giancola said.

When asked about how he would drive down rising healthcare costs, Giancola offered two main solutions.

"One way to make healthcare cheaper is to reduce the administrative overhead that currently plagues the system. More than 30 percent of all healthcare costs are administrative. We need to be more efficient, figure out ways to get services to people in a more practical way," Giancola said.

He also stressed preventative care, rather than emergency care.

"What we're seeing is a lot of uninsured individuals are going to the emergency room. Because they don't have insurance they wait, and what were once minor problems mushroom into really big emergencies," he said. "Preventative care is much cheaper in the long run and will ease the flood of people in emergency rooms, and that should save quite a bit of money."

Regarding the economy, Giancola believes economic improvements need to be blended with environmental responsibility. Noting today's difficult economic situation, he stressed the importance of attracting high-paying jobs in "the sectors of the future" like biotechnology, green technology and stem cell research. The awarding of grants to UMass for stem cell research as well as construction of the new Integrated Sciences Building are cited as evidence by Giancola that these fields will be both centers of study and sources of jobs in the future.

"With green technology, creating energy from solar, wind and water power also have the added benefit of helping out the economy. These are going to be the ways people are going to get their energy in the future and whether it's for their housing or for their automobiles, the government needs to stimulate production of these new lines of energy," he said.

Additionally, Giancola favors financial incentives for small business holders. He pointed out that most people in Massachusetts actually work for a small business.

"If we give these small businesses a tax break or some other incentive to continue their business, they'll have the power to either hire more workers or expand product lines or just stay afloat," he said. "If we give tax breaks to huge corporations, they're just going to save the money. But $600 to a mom-and-pop store on Main Street will have a big benefit for them. It's important that we understand that most people work in this sector and it's vital that we help (these businesses) out."

According to his campaign's Facebook group (Matt Giancola for State Representative), "Matt stands up for a woman's right to choose, the right of all couples to get married regardless of orientation and is against the death penalty."

Giancola stated, "I've always been very tuned to making sure that people retain and maintain their civil liberties and I think it's important that the legislature upholds the rights that we already have," adding that the gay marriage issue is "especially close to me" as it was the first political rally he ever attended.

Giancola concluded with a few thoughts on UMass, saying, "It's been an incredible four years that I'll never forget. I'm really thankful to the University for the education that I've received and I can't ask for a better, more diverse education."

"Something I'd tell incoming freshman or younger students is to continue to explore with an open mind, try to learn about the world around you, and make the best of [your] four years here, because it's really a quality education," he said.

The first step toward winning the seat in November will be to win the Democratic primary in September. Giancola will be opposed by Danielle Gregoire, a legislative aide to Representative LeDuc.

Eric Schlichte can be reached at eschlich@student.umass.edu

Students react to 'norms'

SLOGAN from page 2

change overnight," McNally said.

There are students who agree with the messages presented by the campaign.

"At first I thought it was a joke, as I'm sure the majority of students on this campus feel the same way," said junior psychology major Andres Castro.

"But then I started realizing that the statistics included students who don't drink at all," Castro concluded. He believes that the social norms messages may have lasting effects on other members of the student population.

Conversely, the actual wording of the messages has evoked some degree of doubt from students as well.

"When it comes to the ad that read '9 out of 10 students know how to have fun without alcohol,' I agree," Castro explained. "We can, but we just choose to add alcohol to our otherwise fun activities," he said.

Sophomore forestry major Pete Storey said the problems with campus drinking are deeper than what is discussed in the slogans.

"I disagree with the University sanctions against underage drinking; I think the problem is not limited to the University, and we're just seeing an unfortunate manifestation of the disassociation between the law and the will of the people," Storey said.

The social norms campaign is trying to effect change in a positive matter, but because of the existence of very strict University housing rules, students believe they are working against each other.

"Spending money trying to eliminate the problem rather than using it to re-brand and mask the underlying issue seems way more productive," said Brad Giguere, a junior legal studies and journalism major.

There are many students who do not believe the social norms campaigns create any positive changes, however.

"I think it's a futile but expected continuation of the current campaign," said senior psychology and sociology major Svetlana Borochin. "Based on various psychology classes I've taken, very few drug campaigns actually work."

Borochin said that many students make their own decisions about drinking, regardless of the campaign.

"The people who do not want to get drunk will not drink, but people who come to drink will drink a lot," Borochin said.

The new slogan was put together through a lengthy process, where large amounts of students were e-mailed surveys about their drinking habits.

"The problem is how to get students to personalize it," said McNally about the survey data. "Students also typically overestimate [what they think others are doing]."

Most recently, the social norms campaign formed a Facebook group where students can join and get updates about events the campaign plans on hosting.

"We want to plant the seeds and get the truth out there," McNally said.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Mysterious absinthe ingredients analyzed

BY CHARLES Q. CHOI
LIVESCIENCE

An analysis of century-old bottles of absinthe — the kind once quaffed by the likes of van Gogh and Picasso to enhance their creativity — may end the controversy over what ingredient caused the green liqueur's supposed mind-altering effects.

The culprit seems plain and simple: The century-old absinthe contained about 70 percent alcohol, giving it a 140-proof kick. In comparison, most gins, vodkas and whiskeys are just 80- to 100-proof.

In recent years, the psychedelic nature of absinthe has been hotly debated. Absinthe was notorious among 19th-century and early 20th-century bohemian artists as "the Green Fairy" that expanded the mind. After it became infamous for madness and toxic side effects among drinkers, it was widely banned.

The modern scientific consensus is that Absinthe's reputation could simply be traced back to alcoholism, or perhaps toxic compounds that leaked in during faulty distillation. Still, others have pointed at a chemical named thujone in wormwood, one of the herbs used to prepare absinthe and the one that gives the drink its green color. Thujone was blamed for "absinthe madness" and "absinthism," a collection of symptoms including hallucinations, facial tics, numbness and dementia.

Prior studies suggested that absinthe had only trace levels of thujone. But critics claimed that absinthe made before it got banned in France in 1915 had much higher levels of thujone than modern absinthe produced since 1988, when the European Union lifted the ban on making absinthe.

"Today it seems a substantial minority of consumers want these myths to be true, even if there is no empirical evidence that they are," said researcher Dirk Lachenmeier, a chemist with the Chemical and Veterinary Investigation Laboratory of Karlsruhe in Germany.

Lachenmeier and his colleagues analyzed 13 samples of absinthe from old, sealed bottles in France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, the Netherlands and the United States dated back to the early 1900s before the ban. After uncorking the bottles, they found relatively small concentrations of thujone in that absinthe, about the same as those in modern varieties.

Laboratory tests found no other compound that could explain Absinthe's effects. "All things considered, nothing besides ethanol was found in the absinthes that was able to explain the syndrome of absinthism," Lachenmeier said. (Ethanol is a word for common drinking alcohol).

The scientists are set to detail their findings in the May 14 issue of the Journal of Agricultural and Food Chemistry.

Absinthe is known to have mind-altering effects.

Now Hiring:
Features Editor for the fall
...pretty please?
apply at features@dailycollegian.com

Mill Valley ESTATES
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE $1000
OFF ANY RENTAL FROM NOW THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1ST!
STOP BY FOR FREE PIZZA!
FRIDAY MAY 2ND 8:30AM-7PM
&
SATURDAY MAY 3RD 10AM-3PM
ONLY
CALL 253-7377 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE 420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking hard-working, motivated
undergrads to fill our
Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley
or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.
Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted.
Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.
U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.
Visit the newsblog at http://dailycollegian.blogspot.com/

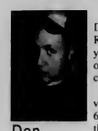
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN



EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 2008

"The final purpose of art is to intensify, even, if necessary, to exacerbate, the moral consciousness of people." - Norman Mailer

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Just politics as usual

Dan Nicastro

Mississippi's First Congressional District has remained a solidly Republican district for almost fifteen years. In the Republican revolution of 1994, Republican Roger Wicker carried 63 percent of the vote.

In subsequent elections, his vote totals never dropped below 66 percent. President Bush won the district by a huge amount in 2004. Much to the chagrin of the GOP, however, the district's hue may be changing from red to blue. In a special election held last week, Democrat Travis Childers came up only 400 votes short of winning a plurality. While Childers did not win the seat outright, he has a good chance to win the seat in the May 13th run-off election.

The district's change in political attitude isn't coming without an ugly fight. In order to reduce the vote margin between himself and Childers, Republican challenger Greg Davis aired a campaign commercial reminding voters that Travis Childers was endorsed by the "liberal Barack Obama."

The advertisement superimposes a picture of a slightly smirking Childers on top of a video of Reverend Jeremiah Wright. An ominous voiceover announces that "when Obama's pastor cursed America, blaming us for 9/11, Childers said nothing." The ad continues its "dire" message, saying that "when Obama ridiculed rural folks for clinging to guns and religion, Childers said nothing."

The tone of the advertisement is clear. The Republican Party is not going to lie down and die in this election season, and Obama is quickly becoming a gigantic lightning rod for their attacks.

This is obviously not a new tactic. Candidates from both parties have always tried to damn relatively unknown candidates by comparing them to nationally known "ideologues." The difference in this case is that Obama has remained committed to running a "different" kind of campaign, handicapping his response to these partisan attacks.

In case you missed it, the theme of Obama's campaign is change. While change is a broadly defined term (especially in politics), one of the few concrete definitions of the word Obama has offered up is the fact that he's unwilling to engage in partisan bickering to win an election. How far will this take him?

These advertisements aren't going to get any better as November draws closer, especially if the GOP is scared about their electoral chances. Is it possible for candidates to stay above the fray of "traditional" politics?

It's appealing to believe that there would be a way for political discourse to move beyond 30-second attack ads and out of the realm of the sound byte. However, it's not a very likely possibility, something the cynic in me has begrudgingly accepted.

Political campaigns are the stuff cynical dreams are made of. There are few large-scale events that inspire the same amount of prolonged petty bickering as political elections. That being said, my cynic self is starting to take over and ask bigger questions about this election season, like, 'When will Obama's refusal to retort become tantamount to political suicide? Is it possible for the Democrats to fight Republican tabloid fire with silence and issue-oriented retorts? Will we see a new era in modern politics?'

I don't see the "Obama revolution" ushering in an era of "feel good" politics, as the country is still too bitterly partisan. At the same time, however, I'm willing to suspend my disbelief and concede that some sort of change in tone may actually be possible and it may even last longer than eight months.

Political campaigns are the stuff cynical dreams are made of.

It's hard to explain Barack Obama's success. He really is able to inspire hope that citizens of this country really can change the bureaucratic governmental machine. It's easy for me to say that it's very difficult for candidates to win elections by standing solely on their principles (watch Robert Redford's movie "The Candidate" if you want to understand what I mean or you feel like being depressed about the political system), but it's hard to ignore Obama's presence.

For the first time in my life there is a politician that inspires a yearning to move back to the issues. Granted, my life has been comparatively short, but I've still seen many politicians try to do what Obama has promised on the national trail and I've watched them fail miserably.

It's hard to be attacked day in and day out and not want to lash out at opponents. That's not to say he hasn't slipped, but it's more about Obama's message than the particulars of his campaign. For some reason or another he has made people believe that political discourse can take place above petty bickering. There's still a long election season ahead, however, and he still needs to get through the primary.

The change in tone (whether real or imagined) may just be a phase. There is a very real possibility that disillusioned Americans are simply reacting to a charismatic leader's appeals for "change" in the system.

On the other hand, maybe this is the beginning of a new era in national politics. Or maybe we've just run out of things to say about this primary season. Whatever the answer is, it would definitely be nice if we could have an election with actual political discourse for a change.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

Letters to the editor can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or dropped off at the Collegian office in the Ed/Op mailbox.

Student Bridging the gap

Dear editor:

You may have heard of Student Bridges, a relatively new, student-initiated program whose mission is to support college access and success for underrepresented students, including first generation students, working-class students, students of color and student parents. The program was piloted last year and it became an independent agency this fall.

What is Student Bridges, and why is the program needed?

Three years ago, the administration forcefully removed the Office of ALANA affairs (a student-funded, student-initiated advocacy agency that addressed campus climate issues for students of color at UMass) from under student leadership at a time when many students were outspoken about the University's lack of commitment to outreach and diversity.

In response, a student coalition began an intensive process of interviewing student organizations, faculty, community members and administrators to survey what we as students could do to directly support college access and success for underrepresented students, particularly those from UMass's neighboring communities.

After a year of gathering feedback, researching past college access programs and carefully documenting the need and possibilities for a student-initiated outreach program, Student Bridges was piloted. Since that time – less than two years ago – Student Bridges has blossomed into a very active, well-regarded and widely-supported program.

The program has three components: First, the program hosts a component academic course and internships that place UMass students as tutor-mentors at local schools and programs. Second, the program provides unique trainings for UMass students, community-based events (such as Hip Hop Café and Holyoke Bound) and campus visits that integrate UMass students and local youth. Third, the program produces advocacy materials and acts as a student voice for college access across the state.

This fall, in partnership with Freshmen Achieving More for Undergraduate Success, Student Bridges will further expand to provide greater student-to-student social and academic support to ensure that incoming underrepresented students successfully graduate from UMass.

Though it is too early to assess longitudinal data about the program's impact on the number of local youth enrolling in college, Student Bridges has developed an impressive track record – as evidenced by data evaluating the agency's events and programs, its reputation with partner programs in Holyoke and the program's persistent advocacy for policy changes and funding to better support college pathways for underresourced students.

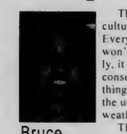
The program's activities and membership have greatly expanded over the past two years, it has secured several grants, the Office of the Provost has funded a distinguished faculty adviser for the program and the program was explicitly sited in the University's recent award of the 2007 U.S. President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll – a recognition bestowed on only six campuses nationwide.

Unlike most campus offices that have a single director, a team of student staff coordinates the program under the guidance of an active Advisory Board. Much like UMass's unique student-run businesses, this empowering model offers students leadership development opportunities and it ensures that the program stays in touch with young people's needs.

Indeed, nearly all of the campuses in the University of California system have similar student-initiated outreach (SIO) programs, just as the University of Colorado Boulder is home to the Student Outreach Retention Center for Equity. Like Student Bridges, these initiatives are student-founded, student-directed and student-funded, and they have been a tremendous asset to these campuses.

This spring, the SGA Ways and Means committee voted to increase Student Bridges' budget for next year. This represents a vote of confidence in the agency and a desire to expand Student Bridges to meet growing interest and demand.

Yet even with this increase, the agency will still receive less SGA funding than the Office of ALANA Affairs did just three years ago, and Student Bridges' budget for next year will amount to a mere 0.05 percent of in-state students' total cost of attendance (or approximately $1 out of every $1,933 our families pay to UMass), though the program serves hundreds of UMass and local students, it presents a highly positive image of the University off-campus and it provides advocacy and activities that benefit the campus as a whole.



Though the program's model is highly efficient – many of its resources are donated, while most staff time is provide by dedicated interns and volunteers – the agency will continue to seek greater administrative and outside funds, allowing Student Bridges to serve a great number of UMass students and local youth.

At a time when Governor Patrick is calling for increased partnerships between UMass and the Springfield area, and when last year's entering freshman class at colleges and universities across the nation was the richest in the past several decades, and when the number of students of color enrolled in college is decreasing relative to the number of white students, what better approach than to start local, with the grassroots energy and enthusiasm that Student Bridges has become known for?

I urge you to learn more about the program and to consider supporting the program's growth.

Elvis Mendez
Former SGA President
Student Bridges Advisory Board

Speak with conviction, cut the small talk

Bruce Lerner

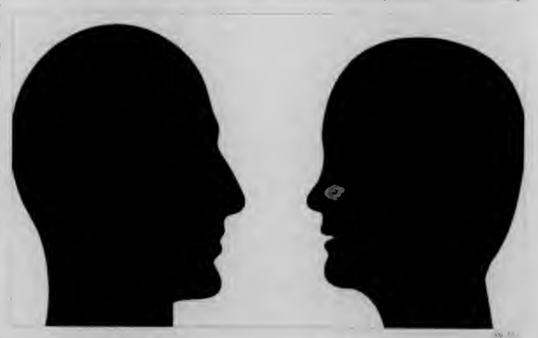
There is something in American culture that we call small talk. Everyone is familiar with it, so I won't go into details, but basically, it is conversation that has little consequence and has to do with things like puppies and diners, or the ultimate small talk subject: the weather.

There is nothing inherently wrong with this aspect of our social behavior, but it does have bad consequences if it is the only type of conversation that one engages in.

Unfortunately, small talk has too much of a presence on the UMass campus, much like an unwelcome relative at a holiday meal, albeit one that temporarily charms. Two topics that are the direct antithesis of small talk, namely religion and politics, are explicitly interdicted in everyday life. There is that rule: "Anything except religion and politics."

Being a social outcast, I will commence to talk about religion and politics. First of all, everybody assumes that everyone else is religious, given that this country has the religious beliefs of most third world countries. This is a problem. It's time for atheists to speak up and decry the irrationality of religion. There is no god of any kind anywhere. Not one, not two, not three. Zero. Period. If someone wants to talk about it with me, I'm more than willing.

The point is, this is a worthy topic of conversation, more so than what kind of waffles are delicious. We have far more irrational people than a country like France or Britain, where presumably people talk about important stuff more and give themselves a chance to test their beliefs.



Next, consumerism is a political phenomenon that is also worthy of a few words, instead of the blind acceptance it is usually given. Instead of discussing the Michael Jordan sneakers that you are looking forward to obtaining, it would be more beneficial to question the concept of paying way too much money for a sneaker made by slaves in order to improve your own social status. This includes not just Jordans, but cars, clothes or even vacation getaways. Let's talk about class for a second: Not everyone can afford to buy rice, and here we are wasting our breath talking about consumer luxury goods.

Sexism and racism are also some great topics to rally around, as they affect, especially in the case of sexism, a majority of people. Why not question something like the portrayal of women as sexualized commodities in all aspects of the media and in the general culture? It's much more interesting than talking about some supermodel that you aspire to look like or be with, especially given the disgustingly unhealthy standards of beauty that these models embody.

Seriously, take a look at that fashion magazine again. Are you sure you think that's attractive? I don't. Also, racism's far from over – just look at who was affected by the latest subprime mortgage crisis, or the rates of disease in different communities. The only thing that's changed is that it's now okay to say "Hi" to a person with a different skin color while we are doing this to other people for years without so much as a peep from us – although it has been getting better, as the massive demonstrations before the Iraq invasion showed.

So, these topics are just my own personal ideas about what would be beneficial to talk about. There are no real limits, except for the exclusion of small talk. This means that a conversation should be an intellectual stimulant, not the equivalent of verbal heroin.

We are going to hell in a handbasket. The least we could do is discuss our predicament. We should change that person is still stuck in a completely different economic situation from a middle class white person such as myself.

Complex language is what seperates Homo sapiens from the rest of the animal kingdom. Are you using your vocal chords for the good of the species?

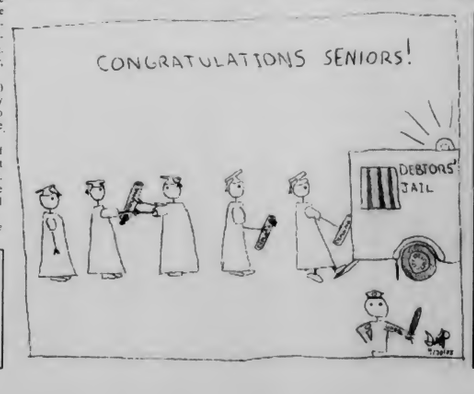
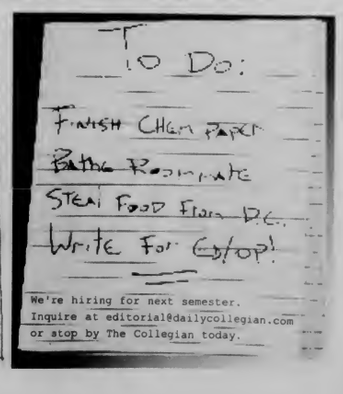
On to the greatest and most pressing conversational topic: U.S. foreign policy. They can't do that stuff without our tax dollars. It's about time to get some accountability from the head criminals, i.e., the good terrorists. The Iraq war is not something to dismiss or ignore.

A conversation should be an intellectual stimulant, not the equivalent of verbal heroin.



Its consequences are disastrous for the Iraqis and for us. Afghanistan is also a human rights disaster, and Iran could easily be the next one. When the bombs rain down on Boston – which they easily could, given the anger toward the U.S. – people should not be surprised in the least. Our great land has it, too, but this can't be done without true conversation and understanding.



The people in power have consciously imposed their agendas on us in the form of consumerism and the establishment of limits on discussion. Let's not be afraid, as most people probably agree with us on the important issues but just don't want to take the risk of opening their mouths.

We should refuse their narrow constraints on what it is okay to talk about by refusing to talk about TV and iPods and instead discuss Bush's criminality and the global food crisis, or the crumbling U.S. economy.

The latter actually has consequences for our lives. That's the only reason I advocate talking about these subjects, not because I hate sneakers.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bylerner@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Time to get ready for the Bedtime Players

Comedic group brings new light to serious health topics

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Not Ready for Bedtime Players, a theater troupe comprised of 11 UMass students, does its part to educate on the importance of many sexual health topics. Throughout the spring semester, the group has made a number of appearances all across campus.

Tonight, the group will perform their second to last show of the semester at Coolidge Tower in Southwest, at 8 p.m.

Brought to the campus by the Health Education Department of University Health Services, this year marks the group's 20th anniversary at the University of Massachusetts.

NOT READY FOR BEDTIME PLAYERS
COOLIDGE TOWER
TODAY, APRIL 30 8PM

According to the group's playbill, the NRBP formed in 1988 under their former name, "The AIDS Follies." Their introduction to the campus was both a reaction and a response to the AIDS crisis and the lack of information available on campus at the time. Since then, the show has evolved over the years to cover a variety of other health topics. The sex education theater group covers prevalent issues, including how to use a condom, relationship violence, giving consent and homophobia.

Although the troupe presents information through an unconventional comedy format, it is the message delivered at the base of it all that is the most important part of the group's performances.

"We want to be funny and we want to entertain people, but we also want to provide information and get people thinking about different issues and what they mean to their lives," said Angela Bruns, Assistant Director of the Not Ready for Bedtime Players.

Adrianna Rosembert, a freshman member of the NRBP, agrees.

"I think our AIDS monologue is the one that captures most people's attention. The room is always silent – I never hear anyone laugh or even cough during that skit. So yes, we're joking about this stuff, but there's kind of a scary reality to it at the same time," she said.

But, are these performances really drawing the attention of students?

"There's definitely a hope that we're making a difference. Sometimes you hear snippets of things too," Bruns said. "A couple of weeks ago I overheard a conversation at the end of one of our shows between a few people in the audience and they were talking about going to get tested for HIV. And if those people actually go out and get tested – that's pretty amazing, I think."

The involvement of all 11 of the dedicated students of NRBP plays a significant role in the group's success. For each show of the spring semester thus far, the turnout has exceeded expectations.

"There were over 130 students who showed up at our Kennedy performance and last semester one show had over 200 people," said Bruns.

For Rosembert, being a part of something that she feels makes a difference in people's lives is what made her join the troupe.

"When I saw [the Not Ready for Bedtime Players] at freshman orientation it was hysterical and I just decided that I wanted to be a part of something that seemed like a lot of fun and is here to educate students on relevant issues," said Rosembert.

The Not Ready for Bedtime Players will perform today at Coolidge Tower before wrapping up the semester May 7th at Durfee Gardens.

As assistant director of the Not Ready for Bedtime Players, Bruns feels that the members each believe and want to make a difference in the lives of others.

"Some of the players will tell me stories about how people on campus have come up to them while walking to class and say 'Hey are you one of the Not Ready for Bedtime Players? I have a question about !IPV!'" said Bruns.

It has happened to Rosembert on a number of occasions

"I'll try to keep my ego to a minimum here, but when people come up to me on campus and tell me how much they enjoyed the show, it's really cool," she said. "I've even had people tell me at parties that they saw the show, that it was really funny and that they got a lot out of it."

The last show of Not Ready for Bedtime Players will be outside at Durfee Gardens on May 7.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

Deacon brings electronic revolution to Northampton

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the better part of the decade, Baltimore, Md., has been an offbeat breeding ground for eclectic musicians and visual artists. The city is home to the Wham City collective, a mélange of neon-clad, forward-thinking individuals with seemingly one goal: to have as much fun as possible.

The most well-known of this group happens to be none other than Dan Deacon, a bundle of energy and sound wearing gym shorts and large-frame glasses. Deacon will be gracing the Pearl Street Clubroom Thursday evening, one of three New England dates before heading off to Europe for the rest of May and June.

Deacon is a graduate of the Conservatory of Music at SUNY Purchase, where he also attended grad school. His graduate concentrations included electro-acoustic and computer music composition. After playing with a number of bands while in New York, Deacon moved to Baltimore, where he would go on to become one of the city's most recognizable contemporary music and performance innovators.

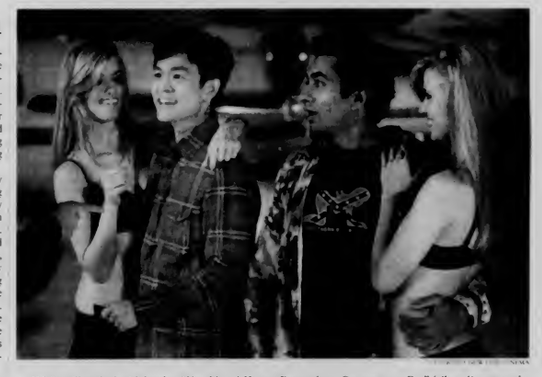
Deacon is an extremely prolific performer. He seems to embark on tours as often as possible and performs them with unrelenting energy. He thrives on live performance, integrating the audience with sound into his chiming, pulsating electronic compositions. He sets up his table of synthesizers, vocal manipulators and other noisemakers in the audience and goes to work, sonically prodding the audience into a throbbing euphoria.

Deacon has released many records since 2003 (including four that year), though many were in limited print and in turn hard to come by at this point. More recently he has released the "Acorn Master" EP in 2006, which includes a take on Bobby Darin's "Splish Splash" among its short, eight-bit, videogame soundtrack-sounding pieces. Though the songs do become more complex than a midi-file videogame score, the elements are still there, creating a youthful, oddball feel.

He was propelled into the underground spotlight by his 2007 full-length album "Spiderman of the Rings," a critically acclaimed marathon of drum machine-driven electronic washes with some airy, tinkling ambience in between. Highlights include the single "The Crystal Cat," a rollicking piece cluttered with high-pitched vocals and meows, which was accompanied by an eye-melting video directed by fellow Wham City filmmaker and video artist Jimmy Joe Roche (whom the last song on the record is named after).

Deacon and Roche also collaborated on the recent "Ultimate Reality" film. Deacon provided a hyperactive score for Roche's fractured, neon interpretations of Arnold Schwarzenegger, melting in and out of the center of the screen. The two took this project on the road for a January 2008 tour, surely baffling audiences while exciting them all the same.

Also appearing on "Spiderman



See DEACON on page 6

Baltimore's Dan Deacon is considered one of the most progressive acts in electronic music.

DAN DEACON
PEARL STREET
THURSDAY, MAY 1
8:30PM
$10/$13

Inferior sequel, but still delivers

While still packed with laughs, "Harold and Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay" fails to live up to the original's "stoner charms."

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

"Harold and Kumar Escape from Guantanamo Bay," like its predecessor, "Harold and Kumar Go to White Castle," falls under the label of being a stoner movie. Though smoking a certain substance before the movie isn't required, the film does cater to that crowd. However, you do not have to be a stoner to appreciate its comedic value and moments of utter hilarity.

A typical stoner movie has a main plot that revolves around the smoking (and smokers) of marijuana and the series of events and mishaps that its main characters get into. The predecessor of this movie successfully depicted that – resulting in "Guantanamo Bay," an inferior, yet still very funny, sequel.

To refresh your memory, or for those who haven't seen the first movie, Harold and Kumar are a pair of best friends, a modern day "Cheech and Chong." Harold is a non-confrontational, nerdy Korean-American guy with a high-paying job, while Kumar plays the role of an Indian-American in a state of post-college rebellion.

This time around, Harold and Kumar (John Cho and Kal Penn) are off to Amsterdam to chase down Maria, a woman that Harold is madly in love with yet barely knows. On their way through the airport, the dynamic duo bump into Kumar's love interest, thus setting up a second sub-plot. It's quickly understood that Kumar still has very strong feelings for her, though she just so happens to be getting married in a week to some preppy rich snob.

After their awkward and brief run-in with Kumar's ex-girlfriend, the friends get on the plane. Playing his role in life as a stoner to a tee, Kumar successfully smuggles on board a bong, which he invented and designed himself, that eliminates any evidence of the smoke residue. Despite his wishful thinking, Kumar and his impressive contraption get both himself and Harold into heaps of trouble that follow them for the remainder of the film.

The next thing you know, Harold and Kumar are taken away to an undisclosed interrogation room and, because of the seriousness of the matter, the United States Department of Homeland Security is promptly notified. The man at the helm of the interrogation is Ron Fox (Rob Corddry), a buffoon whose behavior is downright absurd. By painting the picture of an incompetent Homeland Security, the film pokes fun at the Bush administration (a consistent undertone that resonates throughout the film) and effectively accentuates the feeling of discontent that many Americans have for the U.S. government.

As punishment for carrying a "bomb" on a plane, Harold and Kumar are sent to Guantanamo Bay. The Guantanamo Bay scenes last for about 10 minutes, thankfully, as they are without a doubt the grossest and least funny scenes of the whole film. It's as if they were almost sloppily thrown in as an excuse for the film's title.

Ultimately, the friends avoid incarceration and just barely escape the island with some Cubans headed for southern Florida. From there, the rest of the movie is really just the story of two guys trying to get from Florida to Texas in order to reach the preppy snob fiancé, who may be able to get them pardoned (through his father's ties to the Bush administration).

This movie definitely doesn't hold up to the same level of greatness that the first movie did. In fact, it's quite a few notches lower in terms of quality.

First, it breaks the rule of the definition of a stoner movie. Unlike "White Castle" – which introduced us to Harold and Kumar as two stoner buddies, looking for burgers to satisfy their hunger cravings after smoking weed – "Guantanamo Bay" involves very little marijuana. The buddy-buddy format is ditched; instead, the friends are on the run from the government for crimes they didn't commit, while simultaneously trying

See KUMAR on page 6

HAROLD & KUMAR ESCAPE FROM GUANTANAMO BAY
STARRING JOHN CHO, KAL PENN
B+

Deschanel transcends screen

Actress demonstrates her musical prowess on new disc

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Staff

Finally – an actress gone singer done right.

The common good has become practically immune to the myriad of actors and actresses attempting to make a breakthrough in the mainstream pop scene. Tacky, computer-generated melodies and mindless lyrics implode the television and radio airwaves, leaving little room for true talent to have its turn at bat.

It's safe to say that the musical team She & Him, comprised of actress Zooey Deschanel and indie blues/folks artist M. Ward, fall nowhere near this less-than pleasing category of shallow, pop shenanigans.

Deschanel is better known for her role as Will Farrell's love interest in the comedy, "Elf" (remember their beloved bathroom duet?) as well as the dramatic, outspoken Anita in the Oscar-winning flick "Almost Famous."

Now, the 28-year-old is unleashing her long-kept secret, emerging as a truly talented singer/songwriter/musician, thanks to Ward, who managed to crack her shell.

Before getting together with Ward, Deschanel performed alongside her cabaret act, "If All the Stars Were Pretty Babies," and was featured as a guest vocalist on ex-boyfriend Jason Schwartzman's 2007 Coconut Records LP – neither of which allowed her proper recognition.

"I've been writing songs and stockpiling them for years," she said in a recent interview with Nylon Magazine. "I knew that at some point I would want to make music with other people, but no opportunity presented itself to me that made sense. But when this came along it was just so obvious."

The two first recognized their shockingly similar tastes in music while covering Richard and Linda Thompson's "When I Get to the Border" for Deschanel's 2006 film "The Go Getter."

"Pretty much everything that I named as one of my favorite records, he was like, 'Oh yeah, I have the box set of that,'" she said.

The feelings of admiration were evidently mutual.

"They were just vocals and piano or vocals and guitar and I thought they were incredible," Ward said of Deschanel's home demos.

Actress Zooey Deschanel has combined with folk artist M.Ward to release "Volume One."

Yes; her unmistakable beauty and crystal-clear baby blues are not the only thing that will bring you to your knees. Her voice possesses an ultra-rich timbre, crossing a bridge between Ella Fitzgerald and Carole King.

Between that and Ward's rugged persona and superior musicianship, it was basically a win-win situation.

The duo headed straight to the studio and, a mere two weeks later, banged out their debut album, "Volume One," which pays tribute to early-to-mid-20th century pop and country artists.

The most popular ditty off the album, "Why Do You Let Me Stay Here," channels a crisp, vintage blues quality with '60s supreme-esque "doots" and "ahhs." Upon hearing "This is Not a Test," George Harrison fans will scream "My Sweet Lord" and crack a half-smile at the human-trumpet solo halfway through the song.

So, why the simpleton name?

"I think that modesty is something that is very underrated," said Deschanel. "She & Him felt classic to me and also nice and modest. With any kind of art, I like the idea that the audience is as important as the artist, and that anyone can fill in the blanks to give it a meaning that's personal and unique to them."

As for volume two, feel free to keeps your hopes high.

"Zooey has a lot of songs," Ward notes. "And there are about a million more that we want to cover. So I think it's safe to say that 'Volume Two' is right around the corner."

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu

SHE & HIM
"VOLUME ONE"

MERGE RECORDS

3.5/5

Harold and Kumar deliver new laughs

KUMAR from page 5

to hook up with girls they have deep feelings for.

In contrast to the first film, the two main characters are never seen high – escaping from Guantanamo Bay is too stressful. The complicated plot and the issues of race and politics interfered a bit too much to allow "Guantanamo Bay" to equate with "White Castle."

Something worth noting is that "White Castle" cleverly and light-heartedly dealt with its underlying theme of race in American culture. After all, the "Harold and Kumar" movies are Hollywood films with a cult following, starring a Korean-American and an Indian-American in roles which have usually been filled in the past by white actors.

During a classic scene from the first movie, when Harold shares a prison cell with a black man, we learned Harold's cellmate was literally arrested for being black. Meanwhile, "Guantanamo Bay" tries a little too hard to create similar scenes. It highlights racial stereotypes, then upends them, far too many times.

Like most Hollywood sequels, it doesn't hold a candle to the original. But unlike most, it's still worth seeing, full of laughs and ultimately maybe even worthy of a spot in your DVD collection.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu.

In the new sequel, Harold and Kumar find themselves on the run from the Department of Homeland Security.

Elaborate electronics come to Pearl Street of the Rings" is the song "Wham City," the official anthem of the collective. The twelve-minute epic eases in with a single soft tone followed by ringing xylophone-like percussive elements before yielding to the sheer force of the battering drum sounds and chorus of externally nonsensical lyrics, repeated twice before an actual groove is reached. In the live spectrum, it is hard to feel that close to a group of people, even if you've never even been to Baltimore. The feel of the song extends to those not even involved, casting a positive light on non-instrumental live music while energizing the viewer.

DEACON from page 5

Dan Deacon is certainly not the first electronic musician to bring a superb live show to his audience, though he is one of the best going today. Luckily, he still plays shows small enough for one to feel connected to him, so close you can lean on his rickety table of electronic devices. This is what's happening in electronic music, this is what's exciting, and this is just a snapshot of what is to come. As Deacon himself proclaims in his brief Wham City bio, "The future surrounds us. Let us begin."

Dan Deacon will perform at the Pearl Street Nightclub's Clubroom Thursday, May 1 at 8:30 p.m., with openers Future Islands and Eric Hnatow. Pearl Street is located on 10 Pearl St. in Northampton. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door, available through iheg.com or at the venue the night of the show.

Jan Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Deacon is renowned for his ability to integrate audiences into his performance.

Birthday a success despite rain

FOUNDERS DAY from page 1

a UMass African Dance class who demonstrated an African harvest dance, complete with traditional drums and costumes.

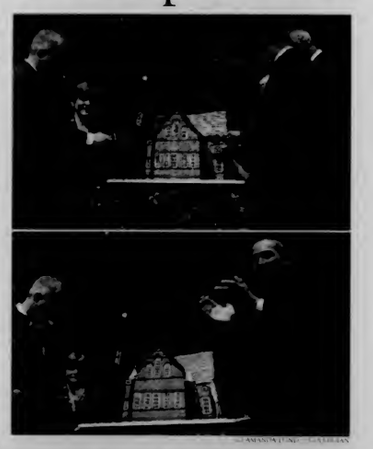
The second phase of the event was lunch, which, undeterred by the rain, took place outside.

Under the protection of the tents, locally-farmed burgers and chicken were devoured and washed down with local apple cider by hundreds of hungry staff members, alumni and reporters. All the while, in the FAC lobby, performances by the Minuteman Marching Band, "Dynamics," a student a cappella group, continued to entertain.

All was not serene at the party, however. Members of "UMass Unions United," a coalition of faculty and staff at the University, formed a permeable picket line in front of the main doors. They handed out stickers and pamphlets criticizing the governor and his policies regarding state benefits and cost of living increases.

The group even posted a banner inside of the concert hall, with graphs showing a decrease in real wages.

Despite the disturbances, the lunch break finished and the attendees filed into the concert hall once again, heralded by a select few Minuteman brass players.



Once inside, the famous Minuteman Marching Band, led by director George Parks, warmed up with a few classic songs. Parks did his best to rouse the crowd, and succeeded in bringing the crowd to their feet in excitement just as the VIPs entered the stage.

Chancellor Thomas Cole, UMass President Jack Wilson and finally Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick gave speeches that expressed pride in the University and the power of education.

At the conclusion of the event, Patrick, Cole, Wilson and other administrators cut into the expertly crafted cake while the band played the "happy birthday" song.

It may have seemed a bit corny, but to those who love the school, it was a touching moment and a fitting conclusion to a day-long celebration.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asheridan@student.umass.edu

Governor Deval Patrick and UMass President Jack Wilson helped cut the ceremonial birthday cake.

Moved indoors due to weather, an array of musical talent entertained inside the Fine Arts Center. Acts ranged from high school ensembles to the Minuteman Marching Band, shown above.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Colonials still in playoff race

Three teams alive for spot in Atlantic 10 Tournament

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Heading into the final week of Atlantic 10 play, five teams have clinched a tournament spot, leaving the sixth and final spot left to be claimed.

Three teams remain in contention for the sixth-seed: Saint Louis, George Washington and Dayton.

George Washington (11-26, 7-9 A-10) may be the biggest surprise in the mix for the playoffs. With a .297 overall winning percentage, the second worst in the conference, the Colonials have not had the overall success they had last year when they finished 23-27 and in seventh place in the conference.

It seemed as if GW would not make the playoffs this year until the Colonials won three of four this past weekend to end a dismal 1-9 record in the prior 10 games. The strong weekend ended a six-game skid for GW.

The three wins came against conference opponents Temple and Saint Joseph's, respectively, and all were shutouts. All four games over the weekend were pitched by sophomore Amanda Gabriel, who recorded three consecutive complete game shutouts to start the weekend. The fourth game, the second of a Sunday doubleheader, saw Gabriel pitch well, despite her team losing.

Gabriel gave up four runs (all unearned) in the 4-3 loss. GW committed three errors in the final game of the weekend, making the difference in the game.

A-10 Softball

She has carried the Colonials all season, recording 10 of their 11 victories. Gabriel (2.13 ERA) has almost single-handedly brought the team back into contention for the final playoff spot

The three other pitchers for GW have given up twice as many earned runs as Gabriel, in less than half of the innings pitched.

Gabriel has also added to the team on the offensive side of the ball. She is tied for second on the team with five home runs and has the second highest slugging percentage and on-base percentage on the team. She also leads the team in runs scored while batting .256.

For the Colonials to claim the sixth spot in the A-10 tournament, a few things must happen. First, GW must win its final two conference games – this weekend at home against Fordham. The Rams (31-23, 10-6 A-10) currently reside in fourth place in the conference.

Even with a sweep, GW needs help from Dayton (20-29, 7-11 A-10). If the Flyers can sweep their weekend home doubleheader against Saint Louis (19-31-1, 9-9 A-10) on Saturday, the Colonials will claim the sixth and final spot for the A-10 tournament.

DAYTON KEEPS PLAYOFF HOPES ALIVE

After losing four straight conference games heading into Game 2 of their doubleheader on Saturday, the Flyers were in a must-win situation to stay alive in the playoff race.

After being shut out, 5-0, in Game 1 of the series with St. Bonaventure, the Flyers needed extra innings to get the win in the second game. The victory showed the resilience of the Dayton team.

Down to their last out of the game with their playoff hopes on the line, the Flyers tied the game on a solo home run by junior second basemen Katie Jordan. Then in the bottom of the 10th, sophomore centerfielder Molly Meyer came through with a two-run home run to give the Flyers the victory and keep them alive in the race for sixth place in the A-10 conference.

Dayton needs to have more of that resilience this weekend when it faces Saint Louis. The Flyers need to sweep the doubleheader or their season will be over. A sweep is not something Dayton has accomplished much this season, doing it only once.

BILLIKENS NEED JUST ONE WIN

Of the three teams still competing for a berth into the A-10 Tournament, SLU has the easiest route and is the only team that controls its own destiny.

Currently sitting in sixth place, the Billikens need just one victory in their Saturday doubleheader against Dayton. A victory would guarantee the team a spot in this year's A-10 Tournament, its second consecutive tournament bid.

SLU put itself in the best position to win a playoff spot with its sweep of URI this past Sunday. The sweep helped the Billikens rebound after a tough series against first-place Massachusetts. In the doubleheader on Saturday, SLU lost by a combined score of 23-0.

The offense has been a continuing problem for the Billikens. Before the series with the Rams, SLU had only managed three runs in its previous six games. Over the season the team has scored an average of 2.96 runs per game.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Senior Colleen Kegler and the Colonials have brought themselves into playoff contention after going 3-1 in their past four games.

Freshmen learned from A-10 tourney will be attacker Melynda Zwick, midfielder Jeannette Villapiano and four-year starter Julie Papaleo, along with Anderson in goal. These seniors were the core of the Minutewomen this year, and will be missed in the offensive and transition games.

BRINCH from page 10

But Venechanos incorporated several freshmen into her game plans this season to give them a feel for collegiate lacrosse.

Along with Speth, midfielders Jackie Lyons and Kelsey Schreiner started all 16 games, while fellow midfielders Haley Smith and Vicki Farrell saw a good amount of playing time.

UMass capped off its A-10 semifinal comeback over Richmond with a tough loss in the championship game, but this season was still a dramatic turnaround from last year's team.

The 2007-2008 Minutewomen laid another building block for the program that could contend for a national championship somewhere down the road.

This year's team had only seven victories as opposed to last year's team, which had eight. However, the Minutewomen of 2007-2008 were able to make their way into the Atlantic 10 Tournament, something they were not able to accomplish in Venechanos's first season at the helm of the program.

The Minutewomen did not win the A-10 tournament and will not make the NCAA Tournament. But advancing to the conference title game was huge for a team that overcame an early schedule with tough opponents and consecutive losses.

Having a good mix of seniors as well as incorporating rookies into the same gameplan this season will pay dividends for a program that has made giant strides toward becoming a nationally-ranked program and championship caliber team.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Second Varsity 8 boat ranked 5th in region

CREW from page 10

like NU, the program's future looks bright.

The other boats that competed on the day were the Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8 and the Varsity 4. The Varsity 8 struggled the most on the day when they raced against the Huskies, whose Varsity 8 boat is ranked third in the New England Region.

UMass's Varsity 8 boat tried rowing with a different technique this weekend, trying to row higher to get more strokes per minute, but did not get the outcome they desired.

"I hoped the first boat would have been closer," Dietz said.

The Minutewomen finished 22.5 seconds behind the third-ranked boat in the region, finishing with a time of 6:58.8. The Varsity 4 boat also lost to NU by a wide margin, 15.1 seconds, but raced well on the rough water. The boat finished in 8:08.5.

UMass's Second Varsity 8 had more success against the Huskies. Dietz said before the weekend that he would not be surprised if his JV rowers beat his alma mater and they almost did just that. Finishing in a time of 6:59.4, 1.9 seconds off from the Huskies, the Minutewomen's Second Varsity 8 proved why they are ranked fifth in the New England Region.

"I was very pleased with the JV. With the rough conditions they really did well," Dietz said. "On a better day I think they could take [NU's] boat."

Overall, Dietz was pleased with how his crew performed against one of the top schools in the country. Next up for UMass is the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship next Saturday.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

YOU DO KNOW THAT THE ONLY THING BETTER THAN FACEBOOK IS

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Make the Collegian Web site your #1 source for procrastination

SUMMER SESSION
• Graduate • Undergraduate • Days • Evenings • Weekends • Online •
at Southern.

Summer's the perfect time to take a class at Southern.

Students from other colleges welcome!
Transfer credits to your college or university
Choose from more than 600 classes
Undergraduate and graduate courses
Accelerated courses — one week to five weeks
Study abroad: Paris, Spain, Guatemala, and China

For information and a Summer Session catalog, call or visit our Web site.
Register online at www.SouthernCT.edu

SESSION A May 27 - June 27
SESSION B June 30 - August 1
SESSION C August 4 - August 22

Southern Connecticut State University
New Haven, Connecticut • 203-392-SCSU • 1-888-400-SCSU

CREATIVE?

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR

DAY AND NIGHT

GRAPHICS STAFF MEMBERS

INTERESTED?

COME VISIT THE COLLEGIAN IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION

Minutewomen finish season strong

Ryan Fleming

Scott Feldman

Starting off the 2008 season facing four Ivy League foes in its first 10 matches, the Massachusetts tennis team's outlook looked bleak after a 3-7 start to the season.

But the Minutewomen turned their season around with determined play and a resolute attitude, earning the No. 1 spot in the Atlantic 10 conference tournament.

Unfortunately for the Maroon and White, its season ended with an early exit from the tournament after being upset by fifth-seeded Xavier. After a fourth overall finish in the A-10, the team looks forward to next season, when they can use the experience they gained over the course of the year.

Since the beginning of the season we've been covering the team, and here are our thoughts on a roller-coaster of a season.

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER

RYAN FLEMING:

MASHA POZAR

When a team nominates a captain they look for certain qualities. That person should benefit the entire team, make everyone around them better and be a leader. Masha Pozar boasts such qualities.

Pozar showed passion and leadership among many other priceless intangibles, which in many cases earned her team one point and sometimes more. In her Senior Day match, Pozar fell behind early but buckled down, corrected her mistakes, forced a super-tiebreaker and came out on top at the end.

Pozar, the present record holder for the most doubles wins by a UMass player (75), was a catalyst all year long and the Minutewomen wouldn't have been close to a postseason berth without her. She brought experience and the right attitude right up to her last match. A player like Pozar was one the team desperately needed.

SCOTT FELDMAN:

LAURA DANAI

I have always felt that when handing out an MVP award, one should not look at who is the best individual player, but the person who has been the most important player to the team's success. Danai is a perfect example of a player whose impact far exceeds her status. She is second on the team in singles wins and during the second half of the season had a seven-match unbeaten streak.

As a junior, Danai has two of the most important roles on the team. She is the sixth slot starter, and, together with Maude Lecluyse, is the team's third doubles pairing. That means whenever a point is up for grabs, all the pressure falls on her shoulders. Therefore, it is critical to have someone that the team can rely on to come through.

Never was this more evident in the team's quarterfinals meet in the A-10 tournament against Saint Louis. With the meet tied at three points apiece, Danai came through to seal a 4-3 victory. That's an MVP-worthy performance.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR

FLEMING:

CANDYNCE BONEY

This award was a lock. The future star from Andre Agassi's tennis school in Las Vegas and the probable No. 1 next year was outstanding. As Pozar's No. 1 doubles partner, the pair owned a 25-10 record that was tops on the team. Boney was named the A-10 Player of the Week and Rookie of the Week numerous times throughout the season.

In her team's loss to Xavier in the semifinal round of the conference tournament, she was the only Massachusetts player to beat her opponent. She finished the season with a team-high 18 singles wins. With some more experience Boney could challenge school records and be a menacing force in the A-10.

FELDMAN:

CANDYNCE BONEY

This one was too easy. Boney was an extremely talented recruit from Las Vegas who was expected to be the future of the team. It turned out the Minutewomen did not need to wait, as Boney displayed her outstanding natural talent in victories against opponents from Ivy League schools such as Brown and Cornell. Her only shortcoming is her occasional inconsistency against some inferior competition, such as her loss against Saint Louis. Once she gets another year of seasoning, she will be a force in the A-10.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

UMass coach Judy Dixon led the Minutewomen to a 12-12 record and the No. 1 seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament after starting the season out 3-7.

BIGGEST SURPRISE

FLEMING:

LAURA DANAI

The junior was faced with unbelievable pressure at times throughout the year. Being in the No. 6 singles position when a match was up for grabs, it was often her point that would determine the outcome. Danai showed her cool in the quarterfinal round of the conference tournament when the match was tied three points each with just her match left to decide. The steady lefty won her match and earned her team's decisive point.

FELDMAN:

UPSET WIN AGAINST TEMPLE

Temple was widely considered the best team in the A-10 and became the eventual champions, but its only conference loss came against the Minutewomen. It was a major victory, which secured UMass the top seed and a bye in the A-10 tournament. Not even UMass coach Judy Dixon expected the team to pull off a win against the conference powerhouse, so this was definitely the shock of the season.

DISAPPOINTMENT

FLEMING:

EARLY POSTSEASON DEPARTURE

After earning a No. 1 spot in the A-10 conference tournament, the team, as well as I, thought they were destined for a deep playoff run. Instead, they were beat by underdog Xavier in the second round. It's tough to see all the hard work and effort the coaches and players put in come to a crashing halt abruptly. Here's to next year.

FELDMAN:

A-10 TOURNAMENT WEEKEND

I don't quite agree with my partner's assessment. UMass had the higher seeding, but as far as talent goes the teams were closely matched. I feel the way the team performed over the weekend as a whole was more disappointing than the result itself. In the team's first match of the weekend against No. 8 Saint Louis, not a single freshman won a set. It took Danai's clutch performance to rescue them from being knocked out in their first match.

Then against Xavier, it was disappointing that the team lost, 5-2, despite winning the doubles point. The loss in the third-place game to Richmond capped a rough weekend, especially for the freshmen. The team had a ton of talent, but unfortunately for them, they did not put their best foot forward in the postseason. The upside is that the experience the team gained will only help them in next year's tournament.

UNSUNG HERO

FLEMING:

MASHA POZAR

Another award I'm giving to Pozar. I can't explain her value to the team enough. Her persistent effort and attitude did not go unnoticed by the players and coaches. When a player brings an uncanny positive attitude and an everyday, "leave nothing back" playing style, it influences the people around her. She elevated her teammates' play and her own. This captain set the perfect example.

FELDMAN:

JUDY DIXON

Some people might find it weird to choose a coach as the unsung hero, but the job she did this season did not get nearly the credit it deserved.

Dixon took a team with a 3-7 record and a starting lineup that was 50 percent freshmen. With only four home games in the remaining 11 games, she managed to finish with the top seed in the conference and fourth place in the conference. This is a feat of coaching excellence and a reminder of why Dixon has held the post for nearly 20 years.

No good coach would ever admit it publicly, but a team will always follow the coach's lead, and having a great one made a huge difference in the Minutewomen's season.

Scott Feldman and Ryan Fleming can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com

Masha Pozar and the Minutewomen had a strong second half of the season before being upset by fifth-seeded Xavier in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Maroney leading at the plate

AWARDS from page 10

Balschmiter continued to dominate the A-10 with three more near-perfect performances. She did not allow a run in three starts, striking out 16 batters in 14 innings, and leads the conference in every major pitching category.

Her 23 victories this season put her easily at the top in the league – three players are tied in second with 14. Her 0.56 ERA is best by nearly a full run (St. Bonaventure's Sherri Thompson is second at 1.31). She is also the only pitcher in the A-10 with more than 200 strikeouts at 242. George Washington's Amanda Gabriel is second with 170. Opponents are batting .143 against her, and her teammate, Sanders, is second on that list at .176.

BATS HEATING UP

If the Minutewomen had concerns about their offense earlier in the year, they seemed to have laid those to rest with a week left in the regular season.

Six players are now batting above .300 on the season and the team average is up to .297 (they finished at .304 in 2007). Against the A-10, UMass is batting .370 as a team, compared to .342 last season.

Maroney may be the biggest surprise for the Minutewomen, with her team-high batting average. She has come on strong of late, batting out of the seventh spot in the lineup. Serio is also having a career year. She is second in batting behind Maroney but is batting nearly .500 against the A-10 at .479.

CULLINGTON COULD RETURN

All of the Minutewomen's success has come without arguably the team's best hitter, second baseman Stacy Cullington. The senior injured her right hand during the second game of a sweep of George Washington on April 5.

Her cast was due to come off yesterday, but it is unknown when she will be able to return to action. That day will most likely come after the A-10 Tournament during the NCAA regional round.

UMASS CLIMBS TO 20TH

In the latest ESPN.com/USA Softball poll, released yesterday, the Minutewomen reached No. 20 in the Top 25 rankings, climbing from 24th last week. They also got onto the National Fastpitch Coaches' Association poll at No. 25 this week, their first week in the rankings.

The two polls have several teams with similar discrepancies in ranking. DePaul is 20th in the NFCA poll, but was left out of USA Softball's Top 25.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Junior Carly Morin has batted .265 and has a .306 on-base percentage. Morin and the Minutewomen are ranked 20th in the ESPN/USA Softball Collegiate Poll.

UM dominating BC since '03

SOFTBALL from page 10

will put in the circle ahead of time, but odds are Balschmiter (23-6) will be getting the extra mid-week work. With the postseason just a week and a half away, she will be getting called on more as the summer gets closer.

The junior's numbers continue to improve as well. Her ERA is now 0.56, the lowest of her career. She has struck out 242 batters this season and walked 28. She has given up one home run and one triple in 33 appearances.

The Minutewomen are 39-4 all-time against Boston College, their last loss coming on the same date, April 30, in 2003, a 2-0 defeat at Chestnut Hill. The record against the Eagles marks one of the best against a non-conference opponent in the program's history (UMass is 42-0 all-time against Vermont and 20-0 against Maine).

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Important Parking Regulation Reminders

No parking is allowed in tow zones, roadways, sidewalks, access lanes, or construction areas at anytime. Violators are subject to towing.

Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots between 8:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m., Monday – Friday.

After 5:00 p.m. and on weekends, vehicles may park in any non-reserved, non-restricted parking space with the exception of 24 hour enforced lots.

Library Parking

Parking Garage night rate is only $3.00 between 5:00 p.m. – 5:00 a.m.

Learning Commons visitors get first hour free in Campus Center Garage with validation stamp, 24/7.

Go to http://parking.umass.edu for more information

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY

KARAOKE

******

LIVE BANDS

THURSDAY, 5/1/08

DAN KIND

FRIDAY, 5/2/08

MOSRITES

SATURDAY, 5/3/08

LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE? STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?

CALL 413-530-6996

ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788

3 PM TO 1 AM M-F

1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN

NEXT TO CLUTCH'S APTS.

Hump this.

9							5
		7	8	3	1	2
	2						4
		3	6		5	4
	4						2
		2	7		9	6
	6						3
		4	5	7	3	1
2							8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm not allergic to milk; I just don't really like it. I'm lactose-indifferent."

— Chris Mawson

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

WONDERMARK By David Malki

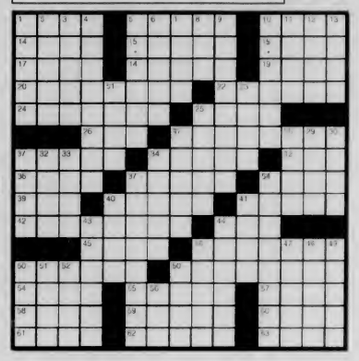
BLISS By Harry Bliss

"When you finish all of your homework, then you can kill everyone."

ACROSS

1 Bit of slander
5 Piggens
10 Mine finds
14 Yearn
15 Military chaplain
16 PBS science series
17 Marsh bird
18 Comic DeGeneres
19 Butcher's cut
20 Closeness
22 Hardly anything
24 Hilarious jokes
25 College bigwig
26 Possesses
27 Water holders
31 Ready for the light
34 Boundary marker
35 Shemp's tormentor
36 Foray
37 Beginning of a conclusion
38 Sacrifice play
39 Whether nobler ... Hamlet
40 Photo finish
41 Assignments for the DA
42 Traps
44 ... appetit!
45 Memorable periods
46 Stuck in the mud
50 Holdings
53 Delight
54 Sell
55 Piece of paper
57 Ski lift
58 Unwritten tradition
59 Canvas holder
60 Otherwise
61 Engage in
62 Incline
63 Raise a stink

DOWN



1 Bit of parsley
2 Climbing vine
3 College credits
4 Engaged
5 Asparagus pieces
6 After-bath powders
7 Sinfilessly
8 Before, in a poem
9 Judge's pronouncement
10 Surfing
11 Mouth part
12 Bad to the bone
13 Rational
21 Anthropologist Margaret
23 Merit
25 College mixer
27 Some change
28 Cassowary kin
29 Nary a one
30 Match components
31 Comic Johnson
32 Maugham story
33 Shoot wide
34 Gallas
37 Badgers
38 Railing
40 Trade center
41 Unconscious state
43 Passer
44 Scarab
46 Censor's insertion
47 Russian bread?
48 Rub out
49 Actress Bo
50 Confess
51 Evening in Roma
52 Hosiery mishap
53 Mexican money
56 Clarke's computer

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

It's Color-Me Snail Baby!

Continuing & Professional Education

UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

KICK off your Summer right!!!

Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity

Session I June 2 - July 10

Session II July 14 - Aug 20

REGISTER NOW!

UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18

One day you're stealing a Snickers and before you know it you're kidnapping infants and harvesting organs.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20

If you're feeling pee shy, maybe the DC is not the best place to attempt to empty your bladder.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19

One day you'll drive a sports car. Until then you'll have to settle for a used family sedan with Cheerios stuck in the the seats.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20

Mind of a professor with the body of a Sophomore. Must be a TA.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21

Your hair is looking parched. Soak your follicles in a serum of olive oil and lukewarm green tea.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22

You've got more clap than an auditorium. Head to UHS for an STD check.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22

Great job, gumshoe. You found Carmen San Diego!

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22

You suck at walking in large groups of people. Get off the phone, stop swerving into that huge sweaty kid and focus.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22

Slowly but surely, your reliance on cheese is destroying your heart.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21

Your parents used to dress you in the costume on the top right corner of this page, then set you free in the woods.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21

People's Bank may or may not have a safe full of illegal immigrants.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19

Avoid meetings at all costs. Meetings should at the very least be free, if not paid.

Comics and Canada: a partnership for the ages.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT FOR RENT

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+

APT FOR RENT

4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or info@idealmovers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an internship? International business publisher in Amherst seeking interns in areas of Management, Publishing, Marketing, IT, Business Development and More. Several opportunities. Call Mike 413-253-3488 and ask for Greg.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

EMPLOYMENT

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?

Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No. 20 UMass goes for 24th straight win

Maroon and White 39-4 all-time vs. Boston College

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team's rematch with Connecticut last night was cancelled due to heavy rain in the Pioneer Valley, but the 20th-ranked Minutewomen will get little rest after their day off. They travel to Chestnut Hill today to take on Boston College at 4 p.m.

UMass (33-11, 18-0 Atlantic 10) defeated the Eagles (29-27) on April 9 at the UMass Softball Complex, 8-0, in five innings. Pitcher Brandice Balschmiter gave up one hit and one walk in that game with three strikeouts. Shortstop and leadoff hitter Whitney Williams went 2-for-3 with a home run.

The Minutewomen are down to their final week of the regular season. The matchup with the Eagles is the final non-conference game until any potential NCAA Tournament games after next week's Atlantic 10 Championships. The regular season ends Sunday with a doubleheader at A-10 rival St. Bonaventure.

Second baseman Renee Ramos continues to be a force for the Eagles, batting .348 on the season with nine home runs and 43 RBIs. She leads BC in almost every offensive category, including on-base percentage (.460) and slugging percentage (.568), and also leads the team with 24 walks. Last time out against the Minutewomen she went 0-for-1 with a ground out. She was hit by a pitch in the first inning and did not see a third at-bat because the run rule ended the game.

The Eagles are coming off a weekend in which they nearly swept Atlantic Coast Conference rival Virginia, taking the doubleheader Saturday (6-2 and 6-4) before falling, 2-1 on Sunday. They stayed above .500 on the season with the strong weekend, but remain well back in the conference standings at 5-13.

The Minutewomen will return to action after a rather unusual weekend of softball for their pitching staff. Normally, Balschmiter and sophomore Bailey Sanders will each start one game in a two-game set with an A-10 rival, but after lightning postponed the conclusion of Game 1 against Saint Louis, Balschmiter became the starter, and Sanders took over relief duty, closing out both wins (14-0 and 9-0 over the Billikens).

UMass coach Elaine Sortino does not like to reveal who she

See SOFTBALL on page 8

BRIAN TUCCI/COLLEGIAN

Bailey Sanders and the Minutewomen will take on Boston College today in Chestnut Hill at 4 p.m. Sanders has 10 wins on the season to go along with her 1.94 ERA and .176 opponents batting average against.

Serio stepping up in 2008

Minutewomen sweep A-10 awards for second straight week

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team has been the cream of the Atlantic 10 crop spanning three decades, and 2008 is proving to be no different. Outside of the Minutewomen's 18-0 record in conference and 33-11 overall record, they're also stocking up on the individual awards.

For the second straight week, UMass swept the A-10 weekly awards. On April 21, pitcher Brandice Balschmiter (pitcher of the week), centerfielder Carly Normandin (player of the week) and designated hitter Lindsay Maroney (rookie of the week) brought home all the hardware the A-10 had to offer.

UMass Softball

On Monday, the Minutewomen did it again. Balschmiter and Maroney repeated last week's feats with the same awards, while catcher Jessica Serio captured the A-10 Player of the Week honor.

Serio has developed into an offensive force this year after developing her defense behind the plate as a freshman. She is second on the team in batting with a .364 average. She went 7-for-10 last week over three games with five RBIs. She leads the team with a .460 on-base percentage.

Maroney, the team's batting leader at .380, has yet to hit the rookie wall, going 5-for-10 last week, hitting two home runs (including a grand slam) and totaling nine RBIs. She is second on the team in slugging percentage at .577 (Normandin, .595), one of five players slugging at better than .500.

See AWARDS on page 8

Catamounts host UM

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Before hosting Dayton in a crucial Atlantic 10 series this weekend, the Massachusetts baseball team will travel to Vermont for a non-conference game tonight.

The Minutemen were scheduled to play yesterday at Earl Lorden Field against Siena, but the game was cancelled due to rain and will not be made up.

Due to yesterday's cancellation, freshman Nick Serino will once again be scheduled to pitch.

The left-hander will have the challenge of facing a team that holds over a .300 average for the season. Vermont's (19-17, 6-6 America East) top four hitters are all batting at least .319 and have more than 26 RBIs for the season.

Serino struggled in his last outing, allowing four runs in five innings in an extra-inning loss to Central Connecticut State.

However, he still leads the starting pitching staff with a 3.45 earned run average.

Since winning six consecutive games from April 12-16, the Catamounts have been playing .500 baseball for the past couple of weeks, including a loss and a split in their two most recent conference series against Stony Brook and Albany, respectively.

The Minutemen (14-19, 7-11 A-10) are coming off winning the final two games of their weekend road series with Saint Joseph's.

They still are in the running for a spot in the A-10 Tournament, but will have to consistently win at least two of three games in their remaining weekend series.

Non-conference games against teams like Vermont serve to keep the team in game shape for the weekend series, and tomorrow's game against the Catamounts should be a good test.

While Serino will face the challenge of the Catamount hitters, Vermont's starter will face a much improved UMass team from the plate.

Brian Baudinet leads the way with his .395 batting average and .483 on-base percentage from the leadoff spot. Last season, Baudinet saw limited time (7-for-53) but he has flourished as an everyday player.

Co-captain Adam Tempesta has picked up where he left off from last season, where he led the team with a .306 batting average. He's upped that to .341 this season and also has 31 RBI, nine more than he had all of last season.

GAME NOTES

UMass coach Mike Stone began his coaching career at Vermont, where he compiled a 54-90-2 record over five seasons. ... The Minutemen lead the all-time series, 60-50, a series dating back to 1960. ... The game will be played on Centennial Field, which also is currently used by the Vermont Lake Monsters of the New York Penn League. The field has been around since 1906. It will begin at 5 p.m. and the field has lights. ... In addition to Baudinet and Tempesta, Kyle Multner, Jim Macdonald and Andy Tuetken are all batting above .300. ... The Vermont pitching staff holds a 5.32 team ERA.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

MEGHAN JOHNSON/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Nick Serino will start today for the Minutemen against Vermont. Serino has posted a team-best 3.45 ERA in 31.1 innings pitched this season.

Venechanos sets up future

If I was to write this column a month ago, at the halfway mark in the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's 2007-2008 season, I wouldn't have known what to say.

The Minutewomen were just coming off their first win against Boston College after a six-game losing streak, where the offense was lacking and senior captain Kathleen Typadis was being contained by opposing defenses. This team was in a huge hole after playing some of the nation's premier lacrosse teams. Five of the first eight games for UMass were against ranked opponents, one of the toughest and most competitive schedules in the country.

The Minutewomen started the season off with a 9-5 victory over in-state rival Holy Cross. They went on to suffer losses to No. 6 Boston University, Dartmouth, No. 15 Yale and No. 13 New Hampshire, along with two other teams that UMass coach Alexis Venechanos had some history with: No. 5 Maryland and No. 2 Northwestern.

David Brinch

The coach was an All-American goalie at Maryland, where she was part of a team that won back-to-back national championships in 2000 and 2001.

She later went on to become an assistant coach and recruiting director for Northwestern, helping coach the Wildcats to two national championships and a 56-4 record over her three-year tenure.

With Venechanos being a goalkeeper for a well-known team like the Terrapins, UMass freshman goalkeeper Colleen Speth can definitely reap the benefits of having a former All-American as a mentor.

Senior Krissy Anderson started the first three games of the season, but after three straight losses, Venechanos put the rookie in goal against Dartmouth. Anderson got the job back, starting the final six games of the season and giving the Minutewomen a three-game winning streak.

I believe that the change in net played a huge role in sparking the UMass postseason run. In four starts, the senior totaled 28 saves per game while allowing just 9.25 goals per contest. However, Speth, who started nine games and saw plenty of game action in her freshman season, will benefit the team for the next three years, as she will likely take over the starting job.

Venechanos's connections to these two distinguished programs will help UMass make a name for itself as a national championship caliber team. She brought some of New England's best products out to Evanston to the Wildcat program, and with her now at a local school, she should have no problem keeping some of those recruits in the area.

The team will lose Typadis to graduation this year, a player who might go down in history as one of the best athletes in the program and at UMass. Also graduating with the single-season scoring record holder

See BRINCH on page 7

COLLEGIAN/MASSACHUSETTS ATHLETICS

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos led the Minutewomen to a second-place finish in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Novices come up big against Huskies

BY JEFF R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With strong tailwinds and choppy water on the Charles River in Boston on Saturday, the Massachusetts rowing team raced well against its coach's alma mater, Northeastern.

While the Minutewomen's heavyweight boats faced off against the Huskies, their Lightweight 4 boat took on the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Without knowing much about the Engineers, the Minutewomen and their coach were uncertain how the race would unfold.

With MIT's Lightweight 4 boat coming off its first victory of the year against Holy Cross and Trinity's Second Varsity crews, it seemed as if the Minutewomen would face the Engineers just fine. MIT turned out to be more then UMass could handle.

The Engineers raced two Lightweight 4 boats, each finishing faster than the Minutewomen's. The first MIT boat finished in 7 minutes, 44.4 seconds, and its second boat followed with a time of 7:58.8. UMass trailed the Engineers' second boat by just under 20 seconds, finishing in 8:18.6.

Against the Huskies, one of the premier crews in the nation, the Minutewomen were looking to keep the races close. By staying within two seconds in the Second Varsity 8 race and winning the Novice 8, the Minutewomen did just that.

The Novice 8 boat was the only UMass boat to cross the finish-line first, finishing with a time of 7:11.4 – 15.4 seconds faster than NU.

"The freshmen have been carrying the team," UMass coach Jim Dietz said. "They are really stepping up."

The novice rowers have continually been impressive for the Minutewomen. With four freshmen in the Varsity 8 boat and three others in the Second Varsity 8 squad, freshmen are contributing in many places. Also, with the Novice 8 boat winning against premier schools

See CREW on page 7

MAY

INSIDE: CARLIN COMES TO THE CALVIN | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 64 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MAY 1, 2008

Holub endorsed as new chancellor

Students unaware, detached from candidate search process

BY KATIE HOUSTON AND MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Robert C. Holub has earned University of Massachusetts President Jack Wilson's recommendation for the position of chancellor at the Amherst campus, the president's office announced Wednesday afternoon.

"Robert Holub is a distinguished scholar, a proven administrator and is driven by a desire to make UMass Amherst one of the premiere public universities in the nation," said President Wilson. "Excellence has been the hallmark of Dr. Holub's academic career and will be his watchword and goal at UMass Amherst."

Holub, 58, is currently the provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Tennessee Knoxville, also a flagship campus in a state university system.

When he visited UMass on April 22, he said he applied to be chancellor because he saw it as "a campus that wants to move forward."

It was the advertisement for the position that attracted him to the job, the Daily Collegian reported on April 23.

"In the first paragraph, it said that the University of Massachusetts Amherst wants to be one of the premier universities in the country," he told students last week. "I want to be at a campus that wants to improve and wants to gain more prominence nationally as a public university."

Holub said he was "pleased and honored" to receive President Wilson's recommendation.

"This is an outstanding University that aspires to rise even higher. I was attracted to this position because President Wilson, the Board of Trustees and the UMass Amherst community all harbor an ambitious vision for this campus. It is a vision that inspires me and calls me to this great flagship campus," Holub said.

Members of the chancellor search committee praised Holub's experience, ambition and scholarship.

Jennifer C. Braceras, a UMass trustee who chaired the search committee, said Holub's extensive experience at top-notch public universities, including the University of California-Berkeley and the University of Wisconsin-Madison, gives him a "unique perspective" on the University's past and its future goals.

"Dr. Holub has the experience and the drive to lead our flagship into the top tier of public universities in the nation," she said.

Holub's academic focus is German literary, intellectual and cultural history of the 19th and 20th centuries, specifically poet Heinrich Heine, philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche and social theorist Jürgen Habermas.

Yet, the announcement sparked a mixed reaction from members of the UMass community.

Malcolm Chu, president of the Student Government Association, admitted his ideal candidate was Martin Hall, one of the other three finalists chosen by the search committee.

"Our preference would have been Hall," Chu said. "In these regards, I am disappointed. However, out of the candidates, Holub presents great opportunity to move forward for this campus. I look forward to promptly meeting with Holub along with the other student leaders to plan future collaboration."

However, the chancellor search process underscores how detached students are from University affairs.

Most students did not have a stance on the University's choice. Others were unaware that UMass was engaged in the process of searching for a new chancellor and did not know who Holub was replacing. Some admitted that they were ignorant of the chancellor's role at the University.

Students were invited to attend a presentation by each of the candidates, but most chose not to attend.

Manneh Ghazarians, a junior kinesiology major, acknowledged the importance of the chancellor position, but admitted she lacked the time to become sufficiently involved in the search process.

"I think the school could have organized multiple sessions to meet each chancellor and made more of an effort to emphasize the importance of the decision," she said.

Robert Miller, an employee of the University's Facilities Services unit, also favored Hall. But Miller believes that Holub can excel at the position even though many challenges lie ahead for the new chancellor and the University.

"Considering everything that's going on with the New Dirt [program] and problems with the budget, it's a crucial time," Miller said. "[Holub] needs to come in and hit the ground running."

Katie Houston and Michael King can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

Poll says youth pick is Obama

BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Harvard University's Institute of Politics (IOP) recently developed a national poll that showed 18 to 24 year olds who plan to vote for the Democratic candidate in November overwhelmingly prefer Illinois Senator Barack Obama over New York Senator Hillary Clinton by a seven out of 10 margin.

In a head-to-head match up with Arizona Senator John McCain, the poll also found both Democratic candidates in the lead with likely young voters. However, Obama leads the presumptive Republican nominee, John McCain, by a 20-point margin of 53 percent to 32 percent while Clinton leads by a much smaller five-point margin of 44 percent to 39 percent.

"Young voters are attracted to his youthful appearance, and more importantly, he has made it a point to talk about politics in a new way," said University of Massachusetts professor Vincent Moscardelli of the Political Science department. "So many young voters find the new language more attractive than the traditional political rhetoric."

"I think he's a strong candidate for the presidency, and I like how he presents himself and his overall views," said UMass freshmen and potential first-time voter, Sharnia Dottin.

When asked about her thoughts on Senator Clinton, the 18 year old had thoughts echoed by some other young voters.

"I think she's playing the political game dirty, and I just don't find any interest in her even though we are both women," Dottin said.

Though junior Loretta Connolly may be in the minority on campus, she continues to feel strongly for her endorsement of candidate Hillary Clinton.

"Hillary Clinton comes off as stern and that may be unappealing to young voters," she said. "However, I like her healthcare policy and the fact that she is a woman."

As observed in countless other national polls, the economy is considered the number one ranked issue with likely young voters.

The concern trailing close

See YOUTH VOTE on page 3

SGA budget debate heats up

Money allotted to Student Bridges comes to the fore

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The debate over the Student Government Association's (SGA) Student Bridges agency reached a climax at last night's senate meeting.

The SGA passed their budget for 2009, after heated debate in regards to Student Bridges, a hot topic on the University of Massachusetts campus after Derek Khanna's recently voiced opposition.

SGA Senate speaker Carla Dominguez said the night was a success.

"Tonight went well in terms of procedure," she said. "I was excited to see senators use the by-laws and I am happy with the final budget. Unfortunately, a few senators chose this forum to voice their complaints even though they had a year to voice them."

"I think the events of tonight are clear evidence of the laziest, most incompetent and most corrupt senate in recent history," Khanna said after the meeting.

The meeting began with an hour long presentation by Student Bridges led by former SGA trustee and Student Bridges graduate coordinator Mishy Leiblum.

She addressed many of the criticisms against the agency, clarifying its role in campus involvement, and provided testimonials by several other people involved with the agency to address its effectiveness on campus, and similarities to other university outreach programs across the nation.

Her presentation was followed by several SGA executives voicing their confidence for the night's proposed budget and Student Bridges.

"Education is like the new civil rights movement," said Student Trustee Ruth Thompson.

See SGA BUDGET on page 4

UMass professor receives NSF grant to study hydrogels

BY KAITLYN SILVA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Professor Ryan Hayward of the Polymer Sciences and Engineering department received a $475,000 CAREER grant from the National Science Foundation in order to research a poorly understood biomaterial.

Hayward's work will focus on polymer hydrogels, super-absorbent materials found in everyday products such as diapers, contact lenses and gelatin.

"Hydrogels can be 99 percent or more water, and are like sponges that can change their volume drastically by soaking up or expelling water," said Hayward.

These hydrogels have a unique quality, and if harnessed correctly, could prove to be invaluable to scientists and researchers.

"Now imagine adding water to a dry sponge that is attached on one side to a solid surface like a petri dish or an artificial joint," he said. "As the material swells and takes on water, the unattached structure can buckle and fold into structures we call creases."

"This can be a real problem in hydrogels used in biomaterials," said Hayward. "On the other hand, creasing could also be used to create 'smart surfaces' with properties that can be dramatically changed in response to environmental stimuli."

For instance, the smart surfaces created can display the same qualities as human tissue. This allows hydrogel creases to be used for medical purposes such as stem

See HYDROGELS on page 3

Stars and stripes on the library lawn

AMANDA LUCIER/COLLEGIAN

The UMass Republican Club held a patriotism exhibition this week, ending yesterday, complete with hundreds of American flags. To complete the week's exhibition, the club will be showing the film Obsession tonight at 7 p.m. in Herter 217.

verizon wireless

Be the enV of your friends.

Get the enV and see what it can do!

enV™ by LG
$79.99 after rebate
LG VX9900: $129.99 2-yr. price – $50 mail-in rebate. With new 2-yr. activation.

connect in more ways:
txt, pix, video, email & IM

know what's going on:
download new music & video on the go, get the game score and keep an eye on social networking sites

Win a hybrid!

Sign up for service at a participating Verizon Wireless Communications Store and ask how you could win a brand new hybrid car! Your friends — and the planet — will love you!

Switch to America's Most Reliable Wireless Network®

For sweepstakes details and store locations go to vzwcar.com.

Sweepstakes: NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Visit a Verizon Wireless Communications Store (BJ's and Circuit City not included) and activate a new line of service on a calling plan $39.99 monthly access or higher w/ 2-yr. Agmt, then register online by May 31st to enter. New line of service must be active for at least 30 days to remain eligible. On how to enter for free, see Official Rules at vzwcar.com. Sweepstakes begins on 4/14/08 and ends on 5/31/08. Must be 18 yrs. of age with valid driver's license and legal U.S. resident. Void where prohibited. Limit one entry per person.

Activation fee/line: $35 ($25 for secondary Family Share Plan® lines w/ 2-yr. Agmts).
IMPORTANT CONSUMER INFORMATION: Subject to Customer Agmt, Calling Plan, rebate form & credit approval. Up to $175 early termination fee/line & other charges & $1.99/MB (incl. Mobile Web ads). Offers and coverage, varying by service, not available everywhere. V CAST Music: per song charges req'd; airtime may apply for music downloads. Rebates take up to 6 weeks. Limited-time offers. While supplies last. Network details and coverage maps at verizonwireless.com.
© 2008 Verizon Wireless.
55054

Harvard youth voter poll shows Obama in clear lead behind is the war in Iraq. The poll found that healthcare remains an issue of concern to likely young voters as well.

YOUTH VOTE from page 1

"The economy is in a recession and there are millions of students graduating every year with student loans and debts to pay off, but there aren't enough available jobs at the desired level to offset that," said UMass freshmen Stephanie Aguguo on her top issue of concern this campaign cycle.

According to the poll, political engagement levels among young people are continuing to increase, and youths are looking forward to participating in the 2008 presidential election. Up three percentage points from the poll taken by the IOP last October, 64 percent of young people said they will definitely be voting in the general election.

"I'm a believer that past performance is the best predictor of future performance," Moscardelli admitted when asked about his faith in the youth vote. "So I'm inclined to believe that when all is said and done, turnout among youth voters in 2008 will remain low."

Not everyone agrees with Moscardelli's take on youth turnout for 2008.

"I think we might see a little increase in the youth vote considering the factors that make it harder for a young person to vote rather than an older person," said UMass political science graduate student Melinda Tarsi. "The likelihood that you are not as stable in your community is increased when you are young."

With help from Harris Interactive, a program considered a global leader in custom market research, the IOP surveyed 2,452 18 to 24-year-olds online.

Between the months of March and April, Harvard students designed the poll in consultation with IOP polling director, John Della. The IOP seeks to unite and engage students with academics, politicians and policymakers on a non-partisan basis.

Amara Anosike can be reached at aganosik@student.umass.edu

According to a national poll created by Harvard, a majority of 18 to 24-year-olds intending on voting in November prefer Sen. Barack Obama.

Microsoft teams up with Yahoo, still predicted to fall to Google

BY JOHN BOUDREAU
SAN JOSE MERCURY NEWS

SAN JOSE, Calif. – One of the biggest players behind Microsoft's drive to buy Yahoo has never been at the bargaining table – Google.

That company's dominance in search advertising prompted Microsoft CEO Steve Ballmer to go shopping and seek a tie-up with Yahoo so he could bolster his efforts against what has turned out to be one of Microsoft's toughest competitors.

If the deal happens, Google could face a stronger challenge in the $41 billion online advertising market. But a protracted antitrust review by U.S. and European officials, or difficult corporate integration, could actually help the search giant.

And if the deal does not occur? Google still wins. Most analysts believe the Internet juggernaut will continue gaining market share.

More than half of Web advertising revenue comes from online queries. In March, Google garnered 59.8 percent of the U.S. search market, while Yahoo had 21.3 percent and Microsoft, 9.4 percent, according to ComScore.

Microsoft, which has sputtered online, decided that hooking up with Yahoo of Sunnyvale in a $44.6 billion deal is the best way to gain traction against its rival.

But don't expect quick results.

"The Yahoo structure, as far as I'm concerned, does not work as effectively as Google's does," said George Kepnick, co-founder of DottedOnline, a search marketing firm. "It's the same thing with Microsoft. So merging two platforms that don't work too well on their own isn't going to create a Google killer."

In other aspects, though, the companies if they combined could pose new problems for Google.

Ballmer has noted that Yahoo and Microsoft have duplicate services. It's expensive to run services like e-mail, instant messaging and search. A joint effort would free up more resources for a fight with Google.

"You have more engineers," said Karsten Weide, an analyst with market research firm IDC. "That makes the combined entity more competitive than each one currently is."

While a retooled competitor may not ever be able to catch Google in search ads, it could be in a strong position to dominate in emerging advertising areas, such as video. Google, which acquired online video sensation YouTube, hasn't been able to exploit its popularity for advertising revenue.

Research models for science museum cell research and cancer treatments.

HYDROGELS from page 1

Hayward will be researching the properties that cause creasing to occur under certain conditions and how this process can be controlled in order to harness the potential power of creasing.

"If we can learn how to control this process, we can take advantage of it – for example, to make biomaterials that deliver medication on demand," he said.

Based on Hayward's research, educational models about hydrogels will be created for the Boston Museum of Science. The models will be used as part of the museum's traveling outreach program for students in grades K-12, and will also be available to teachers through a museum database.

Hayward will also aid in the development of a graduate student seminar focused on the most effective methods of educating others on hydrogels.

According to the National Science Foundation Web site, Hayward has received $95,000 of the $475,000 five-year grant so far.

In 2007, Hayward also received a $50,000 Small Grant for Exploratory Research (SGER) to study nano- and microparticles from the NSF.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 131

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzweike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIDING IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SEVEN ECHO AWARDS FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbasciano

Check us out on Facebook!

Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.

Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.

Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.

If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.

We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.

Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com

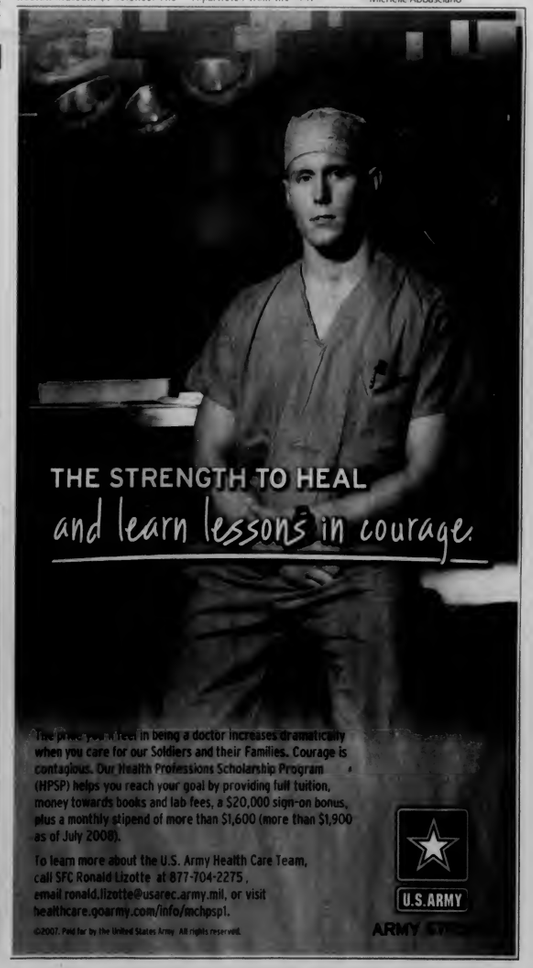
TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

SKYPLEX

18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup



THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST

$100 Best Male $100 Best Female

The Hottest 19 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party

NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff

SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413 827 9000 www.SkyPlex.us

The price you'll feel in being a doctor increases dramatically when you care for our Soldiers and their Families. Courage is contagious. Our Health Professions Scholarship Program (HPSP) helps you reach your goal by providing full tuition, money towards books and lab fees, a $20,000 sign-on bonus, plus a monthly stipend of more than $1,600 (more than $1,900 as of July 2008).

To learn more about the U.S. Army Health Care Team, call SFC Ronald Lizotte at 877-704-2275, email ronald.lizotte@usarec.army.mil, or visit healthcare.goarmy.com/info/mchpsp1.

©2007. Paid for by the United States Army. All rights reserved.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG

Gallery painting presumed stolen, found yesterday

Only hours after sending out a mass e-mail announcing the search for a missing painting valued at $1,000, University officials reported the artwork had been found in a New York gallery yesterdaay.

University police informed the campus community to the alleged theft at approximately 9 a.m. yesterday morning. According to the public safety alert sent to students, faculty and campus staff, the owners of the work of art reported the painting missing from a shipment that arrived in New York City on April 18.

Gallery owners discovered the painting in an adjacent room later in the day after a second search was launched for the piece of art, prompting the UMPD to call off the search for the missing artwork at about 2:30 p.m. yesterday. According to the gallery owners, the painting had been stored in a container covered in bubble wrap.

The oil painting – entitled "The Japanese Railroad Crossing," by Hiroshi Anzai – was on loan to the Herter Art Gallery from the Caelum Gallery.

– Derrick Perkins

"The Japanese Railroad Crossing," by Hiroshi Anzai, was loaned to the Herter Art Gallery and reported as stolen yesterday.

SGA budget hit by Khanna

SGA BUDGET from page 1

When it came to debate the budget, Senators Kevin Bolduc and Derek Khanna voiced their opposition, and cited specifically the Student Bridges budget.

Bolduc began the debate by mentioning numerous statistics relating to the budget such as 19 percent of the SGA budget is spent on Registered Student Organizations (RSOs), while Student Bridges receives about 10 percent of the budget for its activities in Holyoke.

He also addressed the $5,900 spent on food by the agency since September – almost five times the average RSO budget.

"Next year, I'm considering not buying a meal plan," said Khanna after the meeting. "I'm signing up for Student Bridges."

Bolduc then continued to criticize the structure of the Student Bridges, citing its lack of a Center for Student Development (CSD) director to oversee its budget and top-driven structure.

Khanna then took the podium and asked if Student Bridges should be judged by its intentions over its results.

Several members of the senate Ways and Means committee took the podium to argue in favor of passing the budget.

Directly addressing the issue of Student Bridges, members of the committee cited that the SGA already funds community service in other RSOs and that they had actually rejected many of Student Bridges proposals.

They also mentioned that voting against the budget would mean that the senate would need to review every item in the budget, which would take several hours.

The senate then moved to vote on the budget again, but both senators Bolduc and Khanna moved for a second round of debate.

Bolduc and Khanna took a deeper approach to their statements.

Addressing the inconvenience of opening the whole budget to address one agency, they mentioned they wanted to take this chance to accomplish something in student government. They also addressed the different nature of Student Bridges, that it's very different from the former Office of ALANA affairs, which members of Student Bridges claim that it is replacing, and as such isn't as justifiable.

Members of the Ways and Means committee took the podium again to argue in favor of the budget, citing senator Bolduc and Khanna's failure to attend Ways and Means committee meetings to lodge their complaints.

They stated that they took their time to fairly evaluate every budget, repeating their often mentioned point that many RSOs received smaller budgets this year due to faulty paperwork.

Again, the budget moved to a vote, which it passed with a mild majority.

"It was centered on the political motives of several SGA senators acting against an organization that has a proven track record," said Leiblum referring to the night's criticisms.

Member of the Ways and Means committee Devin Ashe agreed.

"Our committee presented a fair and neutral budget that was targeted by specific people for specific agendas," said Ashe.

In regards to his failure to question the budget earlier, Khanna said, "I had no idea what the budget would be previously and I acted the instant that I knew it. I have no problem with Student Bridges – I have problems with its budget."

"As an agency, Student Bridges has very little professional oversight," Bolduc said. "Its undergraduate supervisors aren't democratically elected and they are hiring other undergrads with no oversight. They say that all of this is public record as their defense, but that doesn't make it right. UMass student money should be spent on UMass students, not in Holyoke."

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

SGA senator Derek Khanna called for a debate on the budget for Student Bridges at last night's meeting.

Florida Atlantic University lockdown lifted, shots fired over hat argument

By Jerome Burdi and Dianna Cahn
South Florida Sun-Sentinel

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Two men arguing over a hat led to gunshots at a party at Florida Atlantic University, sending revelers running for cover after a bullet possibly grazed one man's ear, university police and witnesses said.

Police locked down the campus for nearly 12 hours, from shortly after the shooting at 1:16 a.m. Wednesday until around 12:30 p.m. when investigators were sure the shooter was not in the area. Finals were canceled Wednesday and students were told to stay in their dorms or apartments where staff brought them food.

"When you're the president of a university these days and you hear your chief of police use the words 'gun' and 'shooting' and 'campus' it sends a chill up your spine," FAU President Frank Brogan said.

Police arrived at the student apartments within three minutes and notified the campus of the shooting by 1:42 a.m. using a newly installed emergency alert system, officials said.

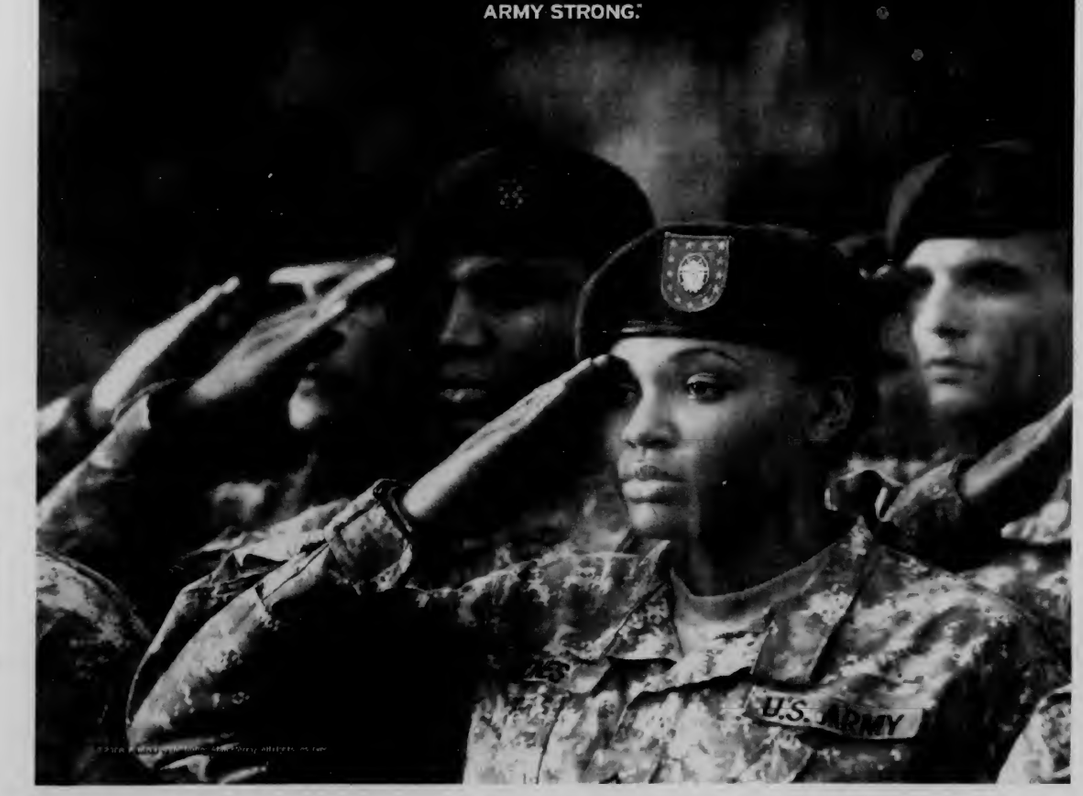
Investigators circulated a remarkably clear surveillance photograph of the shooter throughout South Florida. Officials of a Miami university identified Omar Everton Graham Jr., who turned 23 on Tuesday, as one of their own.

Graham was arrested on Johnson & Wales University's North Miami Campus, where he is a resident student and junior studying management, spokeswoman Marie Cirelli said. Graham, of Royal Palm Beach, Fla., is no longer permitted on campus while he faces charges, Cirelli said.

A neighbor who knows Graham's family in Royal Palm Beach said he was surprised Graham was arrested.

The 12 hour lockdown at Florida Atlantic University was lifted yesterday after gunshots were fired after an argument.

BAND OR FAN?
BRING THE BEST UNTAPPED MUSIC TO THE TOP!
JOIN RALLYFORMUSIC
THE LATEST COMMUNITY FOR CUTTING EDGE BANDS.
FANS! BE THE FIRST TO DISCOVER THE BEST NEW MUSIC. BANDS! GET YOUR MUSIC HEARD AND COMPETE FOR $15,000
Enter to win huge cash prizes, LG phones, and flat screen TVs at WWW.RALLYFORMUSIC.COM
LG RALLY FOR MUSIC



Good with computers?
Need Experience?
Apply here!
The Daily Collegian is now hiring a Technical Support Supervisor for the '08-'09 school year.
Primary duties include:
- Maintaining the Daily Collegian's website
- Placing online ads
Required Skills:
- Comfortable with computers and general internet practices
- Thorough understanding of HTML and CSS
- Some knowledge of FTP or other file transfer protocols
- Some graphic knowledge and ability to work with the Adobe CS2/CS3 suite.
Training will be provided.
For more information, contact James Hale at jhale@dailycollegian.com or come down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS IN AMHERST
FREE $1000
OFF ANY RENTAL FROM NOW THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1ST!
FRIDAY MAY 2ND 8:30AM-7PM
&
SATURDAY MAY 3RD 10AM-3PM
ONLY
CALL 253-7377
OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE
420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.
Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.
U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Funny money at the capitol

Nick Milano

After finishing a tour of the White House and spending a few minutes in the White House Visitor Center during a recent visit to Washington, D.C., my family and I headed down the street to catch the subway back to the hotel. Not two blocks from the White House, there were numerous empty buildings and one homeless man sleeping on the sidewalk.

Just 20 minutes earlier I was standing on the front steps of the most powerful house in the whole world. Later that afternoon on a tour of the U.S. Capitol, we watched a Republican representative offer an argument to a bustling chamber. Scratch that.

The bustling referred to the clamoring of tourists. There may have been 20 representatives actually at work in the chamber and those few in attendance were more interested in typing away on cell phones. Is anyone home?

With the economy tanking, fuel prices continuing to skyrocket upward, food prices causing starvation in many countries around the world (not that this problem did not exist already) and housing foreclosures not showing any signs of slowing down, is anyone really expecting relief from the federal government?

Well, there are $600, maybe $1200 checks coming to a mailbox near you. For a family struggling to pay its mortgage, this one time assistance from Washington is sure to save them. Right.

Meanwhile, the federal government bailed out an economic giant in Bear Stearns. Being a crazy liberal from Massachusetts, I probably cannot understand the importance of giving one billion dollar business (JP Morgan Chase) control over another billion dollar business (Bear Stearns) at a vastly reduced price. To me, it is just the oft-told story of government supporting business over the interests of the people.

Look at big oil. After quarters and quarters of posting record profits, only recently were the executives dragged in front of Congress. The system of ignoring the plight of common, working class people is sure to continue to cause problems in the future.

The homeless man on the street may have been a drug addict. He may be addicted to alcohol. He may have mental problems. But that he was lying literally five minutes from the White House was stunning and sad. Most likely left to fend for himself, he lives at the mercy of the streets. While there are avenues for people to turn their lives around, surely there is more than can be done. But the problem is not localized solely to the homeless or the addicted or the mentally ill.

The elected government that has been serving us in Washington D.C., has been put the interests of the business community over the interests of their constituents.

Lack of assistance plagues college students who cannot afford college. Instead, we take out ridiculous loans to graduate with a bachelor's degree. Those of us who enter fields for which graduate school is a must face more bills. With the credit crisis, it is assured that student loans will be harder to find. When banks do not have money, they cannot give out loans. Nothing has happened on this issue; the cost of secondary education has long been escalating. Washington would rather ignore the issue.

Lack of assistance plagues those who cannot afford health insurance. With the current estimate of about 47 million uninsured, there are many more problems with the United States health care system than there are cures. The uninsured are not those who fall under the government's determinant of impoverished; they are covered by Medicaid. The uninsured are not those who are elderly and thus out of work; they are cared for by Medicare and Social Security. In fact, the uninsured are working class people for whom one illness can spell bankruptcy.

According to a recent Harvard University study, 50 percent of all bankruptcies are due to medical costs. The study also found that 68 percent of those who declared bankruptcy HAD health insurance. The government in Washington has done nothing to combat this. Congressional pockets are just spilling over from health care industry donations – Hillary Clinton, their former enemy, recently claimed the title as biggest earner.

Even with a Democratic majority, the elected government that has been serving us in Washington D.C., has been put the interests of the business community over the interests of their constituents. Anyone who has the gall to claim that a pittance of a tax refund is enough to get the economy back on track clearly has been swayed by outside influences. Those who call for a suspension of the gas tax because prices are so high miss the point by not asking why the prices are so high.

The United States is not perfect, but our government has seemed to have perfected turning a blind eye to its own failures. There is no greater indictment of this than a homeless man sleeping on a cardboard box in the middle of the afternoon minutes from the White House.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

NFL draft dodging

Nicholas O'Malley

Like many other players that expected to be taken in the 2008 NFL draft, Caleb Campbell was pondering where his career would take him. Campbell was eventually picked up by the Detroit Lions in the seventh and final round of the NFL draft. Just like any other player, Campbell could have ended up in Carolina, Atlanta or maybe Indianapolis, but there was a place that Campbell was supposed to go where other players were not: Iraq.

You see, unlike other football players, Caleb Campbell played for the United States Military Academy at West Point. Along with the free education and opportunity to play collegiate sports, West Point also involves a multi-year commitment in the armed forces – no exceptions. Until recently, at least.

In 2005, the United States military began the Alternative Option Service program that allows, in certain privileged cases, West Point graduates to forego their oaths that required them to take part in active duty and work as a recruiter or reserve in their spare time. Such cases include signing a contract with a major professional sports league like the NFL.

The program is not provided to those in the Navy or Air Force, whose members must serve a two year tour of duty before choosing three years of active duty or six years in the reserves.

What the army is trying to do with this program is to improve its publicity and potentially attract more recruits. Bringing a major figure into the NFL could potentially bring some positive attention to the armed forces in general. The problem, however, isn't that the program won't bring attention – which it will. The major issue with the Alternative Option Service program is that it brings forth the wrong attention.

The war in Iraq is by no means a popular topic, especially with high school graduates – just the type of people the Army wants to attract. When they see a recruit such as Campbell avoid active duty because of his talent on the football field, they don't see the Army's icon for youths. Instead, they see a man near their age take an oath to go and fight overseas, only to back out of it, regardless of the circumstances.

Campbell was selected in the final round of the NFL draft, where a large amount of players are cut from teams before the season even begins; nevertheless, he will be viewed as a role model for the Army. It simply gives the image of an Army graduate barely making it in the NFL to get out of fighting.

The war in Iraq is by no means a popular topic, especially with high school graduates – just the type of people the Army wants to attract.

Despite our government's best efforts, the war in Iraq is viewed more and more as something that can, or should, be abandoned. There is no requirement for service; it's purely volunteer. So when potential recruits see someone that has taken an oath, on their own free will, to go and fight only to "get out" through his football talents, it speaks volumes about the war.

We no longer view military service as an honor; it's now a burden. With every rumbling about a potential draft that isn't for a sports league, we're coming closer to a reality that we don't want to accept: Nobody wants to fight in this war. Even more important than that, however, is the attitude people have towards those that are heading there. The overall attitude towards the drafting of Campbell is that he's being saved from his duty in Iraq, the very duty for which he volunteered.

Caleb Campbell is an outstanding individual that will do more good for this country that most of us can speak of – he has done nothing wrong. The issue, however, is that when the army allows leeway for a binding military commitment, regardless of how small, it makes an impact. It's sad that the army has come to the point where it takes good publicity from a relatively unknown football player that has yet to even make the roster of an NFL team.

Whether or not they intended to do so, the army's actions have made military service something to be avoided and even abandoned. The army can't be taking cadets such as Campbell away from his military duty in hopes that he'll attract some kids that, in regards to joining, were on the fence. Because if kids do end up looking up to him, they might be jumping right back over it.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomally@student.umass.edu.

Did you hear?

Ed/Op is hiring Columnists for next semester.

Time WAITS for no man - apply today!

Inquire at editorial@dailycollegian.com or stop by the Collegian newsroom in the Campus Center basement.

Prescribing temperence

There is no denying the counter-culture which fueled the drug revolution and experimentation of the 1960s. We are the offspring, and we live in a highly medicated era.

A product of the "War on Drugs," our generation has become the guinea pigs of an Rx rage. In our medically and technologically advanced decade, every symptom necessitates diagnosis, every ache demands attention and every pain can be alleviated with a prescribed cure.

Solmaaz Yazdiha

Recently and dramatically, more and more children are being diagnosed with severe psychiatric disorders. As a result, the youth of our country are being prescribed medications that have only just begun being tested in children. Is there truly a serious increase in childhood disorders? Or are drug manufacturers working together with physicians simply to boost sales? Could these bogus diagnoses be more plainly blamed on being a living, breathing child?

Think back to your elementary school days. Overwhelming bouts of energy, tantrums you knew could get you what you wanted, and moments of extreme insecurity. It all sounds pretty familiar, right? These are the emotions we go through as we're growing up and adapting to our environment, meeting new people and dabbling in unfamiliar social circles, experiencing, living.

For many physicians in America, these highs and lows that seem purely human nature to the ordinary Joe have become a science. Having family members in the medical field, I have seen that much of the hospital's focus is on profit. In the United States, health care is just another rung on the ladder of capitalism and consumerism, and many medical institutions have their eyes on the sky. How does it make you feel to think of your health as part of the free market? The United Kingdom, Canada, and virtually all of Europe provide universal health care to their citizens. In American hospitals, profit is first priority, and research and health care come second in line.

Sedatives to sleep, stimulants to stay up; Adderall to focus and Valium to relax; lots and lots of Ritalin to sit still. After all, that is the common illustration of a child, one who's quiet and sits still. No?

Children in America are being diagnosed left and right with drugs that have not proven effective for young ages. Many children are now being diagnosed with bipolar disorder and are being prescribed a dangerous plethora of drugs to "balance out" their personalities. These anti-psychotics have one goal and one goal only: to numb.

But what kind of life is one that feels like it's on ice? One with the edges blurred? What is a childhood that is hard to recall? Who is a child that cannot feel? Our generation and those younger than us will one day run this world. Where are we headed if we can't find our heads?

Not only is this insurgence of prescription drugs harmful to the child's internal makeup, causing things like tics that cannot be reversed when medicated for too long, but is also damaging to their social life and self esteem as well. Once diagnosed, a child is forced to live with the baggage of their so-called disorder and to carry the label with them throughout their lives.

Children in America are being diagnosed left and right with drugs that have not proven effective for young ages.

If someone as respected and highly intelligible as a doctor claims that there is something wrong, who's not to believe them? Many prescriptions like Zoloft or Paxil, when prescribed to children, have resulted in severe depression and worse, ghastly happenings of suicide and self-harm.

According to PBS' Frontline report, the FDA has concluded that 4 percent of children have an increased risk of becoming suicidal when on these medications.

Ultimately, medicating a child is a serious gamble. In a country where it is unclear what the motives of the medical institution really are, it is important for citizens to be aware and to educate themselves. It is vital to always seek a second opinion, and to always keep in mind that it is healthy and vital for a child to be a child.

Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu.

Time and the river of passing

Brad Leibowitz

Timing … is … everything.

Timing is everything.

See, big difference.

Time is an interesting thing – a human construction. In our so-called civilized world, we humans shuffle about this planet on a day-to-day basis like chickens with their heads cut off. We go from place to place in an attempt to squeeze every last second out of the day before the clock strikes midnight. We travel from city to city losing and gaining hours. Lose three flying to L.A., gain six flying to London. If we wake up in a different city, in a different time zone, are we a different person?

Are we the same person at 4 p.m. that we are at 2:27:03 a.m.?

A split second too late and we miss the train, a split second too early and we get mugged. There is a 24-hour difference between Honolulu, Hawaii and Kiritimati, Christmas Islands. As I write this, it is currently 6:40 a.m. on Monday the 28th in Honolulu; in Kiritimati it is Tuesday the 29th at 6:40 a.m. Curious, isn't it?

In Chatham Island, New Zealand it is currently 5:32 a.m. on Tuesday the 29th. Somehow, while the rest of the world is at 40 minutes after the hour, Chatham is at 32 minutes after the hour. Somehow they are eight minutes back. Go figure. I wonder what the hell this does to Fed Ex.

The world record time for running a mile was set in 1999 by a Moroccan man named Hicham El Guerrouj. He ran it in 3:43.13 minutes. Pretty impressive I suppose. The world record for swimming a quarter mile is 3:40.08 minutes set in 2002 by the Australian Olympian Ian Thorpe. This means if Thorpe were to swim a mile at top speed, not factoring in fatigue, he would swim it in roughly 14:40.32 minutes. We can run a mile in under four yet we can't swim a mile in less then roughly 15 minutes.

Actors are always told that a small silence on stage when giving a monologue feels like an eternity to those watching the performer. In life, the longest pause often seems instantaneous.

They say time slows down when you get into an accident. They say you can see each shard of glass crack and break free from the windshield. Everyone also says that as the years go by, time seems to move quicker. When you were young, the passage of a year took forever – now it's gone in a blink.

We are an interesting lot.

Are we the same person at 4 p.m. that we are at 2:27:03 a.m.?

Even in sex timing is everything. For two people to get together and enjoy it, both have to be in a natural rhythm. The man has to thrust and the woman has to grind in a correct pattern of time for both to reach climax. If one goes too fast or too slow and upsets the timing of the motion, one party will be upset.

Timing is indeed everything in life. Yet it doesn't matter anywhere more than in the arena of dating. For a couple to successfully get together and stay together, the timing has to be dead on. If one party kisses the other party too quickly, or if one party says those three little words too quickly, the whole thing is off.

I was in a relationship earlier this year. She is a sophomore, I am a senior. She is staying, I am moving on. We told each other the timing was wrong. Indeed, it was.

I often wonder if fate has a hand in timing. I don't believe in fate, but for those who do, does your body know according to the time soon to be, what actions your body will do or what words your mouth will say? Does the body, by way of the future rapidly becoming present know what it is intended to do when the moment becomes now?

Or do we move through time unencumbered by a course of action already set out for us? Are we free from the construct of time or are we bound to it?

It has been said that nothing is as far away as a second ago. We can always look to the future – plan and bend it to our will – yet we can never touch the past. Which beckons the question, if you could go back, would you really want to?

Marcus Aurelius once wrote, "time is a sort of river of passing events, and strong is its current; no sooner is a thing brought to sight than it is swept by and another takes its place, and this too will be swept away."

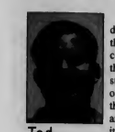
My friend Ty knows this lesson very well. He doesn't speak all that often. He chooses to listen rather than fill the moments with useless babble. He picks his moments to say what needs to be said. He rarely speaks, but because of this, when he does, I listen.

Most interestingly, when you read this you will be reading a distant thought. Separated from me to you by a distance of more than 48 hours. You are reading the past. I am writing for the future. Interesting, isn't it?

I will leave you with this thought: Nothing is a waste of time if you use the experience wisely.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN presents
UMASS YAK BACK!
AIRING WEEKDAYS AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M. ON UVC TV 19



POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

An amendment-caliber question

An issue to be handled

Ted Rogers

I usually don't debate on the topic of gun control. It's not that I don't have strong feelings on the issue, it's that people who are for unlimited gun rights don't care.

If you're looking for reasons to restrict access to guns, there are about 89,000 of them (the number of homicides from handguns from 1990-1997). Still, that doesn't convince the defenders of the Second Amendment that there is a problem.

To put it less tastefully, if someone is willing to take the chance of having his or her kid splatter his brains across the room because it's their constitutional right to own a gun, what chance does some pinko journalism major have of persuading them that guns should be regulated?

But I draw the line at bringing guns onto campus. There is no way I'd feel safer, and there is no way I'd be safer. For all the research I've done on the matter, I think I've found a good thing in being in a place where guns are not around. The statistics back me up.

For the sake of this argument, I'll be using handgun stats. This is because handguns are easily concealable, and thus would be the weapon of choice for people concerned enough about their "safety" to bring a gun on campus. I'm using stats from the Violence Policy Center, (VPC.org) so you can check them out at your leisure.

Since the argument about bringing guns on campus has always been about students using guns to defend themselves, I think you should take a look at the numbers on defense. For every time a handgun in America is used in a justifiable way that the courts call "self-defense," there are 1.3 unintentional deaths – there are also 4.6 intentional deaths, but the courts call them homicides.

So what's all this noise about guns being a safe self-defense tool? At the very least, there's a pretty big cost/benefit ratio.

The weirdest thing is that gun enthusiasts often say that the way to bring these violent crimes down is – you guessed it – more guns. The logic behind this is that criminals would think twice about robbing Granny if there was a bigger likelihood of her packing heat. Well, that logic is flawed.

Louisiana, a state where 46 percent of households have a gun, has a gun death rate of 19 out of 100,000 people. Massachusetts has a rate about a fifth of that. Only 13 percent of households here have guns.

Some argue that these statistics are meaningless, because the Bill of Rights clearly states that people have the right to bear arms.

Well, maybe. The Second Amendment is an oddly worded sentence that says states need armed militias to stay safe. That was at our county's birth, when we had no standing army. Today, the U.S. has an army with tanks, stealth fighters, tactical nuclear warheads and dolphins trained to navigate mined harbors. If those fail to stop an invasion of the U.S., a militia of firearm enthusiasts will not turn the tide.

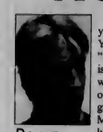
But more to the point, the whole Bill of Rights is violated on a daily basis. When police search your dorm because of a suspicious smell, that's a violation of the Fourth Amendment. If you want to complain about your Second Amendment rights being violated because you can't bring a gun on campus, get in line with the hippies and Bush-haters.

Here's the thing. I think I know why some people still would want to bring guns to campus, even after knowing all of this.

I remember Virginia Tech too. I remember that rainy, awful day. I remember watching the news for hours without getting up. And I remember feeling angry. I felt like if there was a way I could have stopped that, I would have.

But guns on the campus would not have solved that. I don't think that many of us could bring ourselves to kill another person, no matter what the outcome. And if someone found the fortitude to raise a gun and shoot at the killer, what would happen if they miss? What if another innocent person was hit and had to die because of some misguided notion of safety?

Most people, thankfully, will not need to deal with something as horrible as that. But we all need to deal with life. Sometimes people get heated, get crazy. It's part of being a human. Can anyone really say that guns will make us safer in those situations?



The tragedy at Virginia Tech makes any person ask questions. What could have been done to avoid this? Should people have been more vigilant?

Am I safe?

Having guns on campus is not the answer to any of these. Keep things the way they are.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

A shot at common sense

Devon Courtney

I know what you're thinking. You're thinking, "Why the heck is there anyone writing in favor of carrying a gun on campus? More importantly, why is Devon Courtney writing it?"

These are both crucial concerns, and the first one needs to be addressed. First of all, we all know about school shootings. People who don't know the definition of the word "newspaper" know all about Seung-hui Cho, and can recall all of the details of the Virginia Tech massacre.

Students all over this campus are eternally busy thinking of reasons why our campus isn't "safe" enough, and the administrative powers that be are text messaging us willy-nilly during class. This is all part of an effort to safeguard our campus against other potential future rogue shooters.

Easy solution alert: let students legally carry firearms. This is the most logical choice for several "real" reasons. First of all, students have unanimously been the targets for those who perpetrate these horrible massacres.

The police (who also carry guns) can only respond so quickly, but the fact of the matter is that nobody (including the police) expects a school shooting to happen at any given time. Also, you will never hear about a shooter walking into a police station (where there are lots of guns) and beginning a rampage there. The police (who carry guns), who are best prepared to respond to a senseless school shooting, are almost always going to be a certain distance away from the shooting.

Another solid reason is that the law (which in Massachusetts is very strict) has never stopped a crazy person from acquiring a gun. The vast majority of gun sales are illegal, and USA Today made a striking claim about the ease of illegal gun trafficking. Last March, Mark Nelson, a former police officer, was arrested for perpetrating a scheme where he was able to acquire and resell over 500 firearms to any Tom, Dick or Harry who wanted one. Firearms from Nelson's "business" were traced back from drug dealers, gang members and even convicted terrorists.

Getting a gun illegally is not that difficult. The danger is real. In order to counter this very real threat, a select group of students who legally follow the correct procedure and take part in the extensive training required in Massachusetts to own a firearm would be more than beneficial in case something like Virginia Tech, Columbine or Indiana State were to happen again.

A student who knows the laws, rules and safety responsibilities of a concealed weapon and who is in the right place at the right time can shepherd the safety of his or her fellow students. Instead of many students lying dead in the aftermath of a terrible tragedy, an educated student carrying a weapon responsibly can appropriately take charge of the situation.

There would no doubt be many concerns that a gun not only is the great equalizer, but would enter into an on-campus argument inappropriately. This is also a very grave concern, seeing as many other commonplace items (screwdrivers, lacrosse sticks, beer bottles, baseball bats, what have you) have been introduced into arguments and conflicts here at UMass with headline-generating results.

Clearly, these perpetrators are the crazies we don't legally issue firearms to. If some misguided student is capable of violence, that student may sadly pick any means of carrying that violence out in our peaceful student community. Knives and other sharp objects are easily attainable, and at the other extreme, so are firearms. The solution is to have intelligent and legally recognized gun carriers on campus. It would most certainly keep your closest friends and other students from being victims, and make the legal carriers heroes and saviors.

Here at this funny University, it seems to be the fashion to take issue with the police following us around and peeking in our windows. We don't want the police in our dorms watching whatever it is we're doing, certainly not because we want to smoke marijuana in peace. If an awful and senseless school shooting were to happen in your on-campus residence, the utter untruth of "cops in dorms" won't save you, and throwing your bong at him probably won't either.

It's easy to condemn gun violence, but nobody really has this issue in the correct perspective. I say this because nobody is being asked about this issue while they themselves are staring down the barrel of a loaded weapon pointed right at them. If someone is about to shoot you, you most certainly would want someone who is a legal carrier in the vicinity to come to your rescue. Having myself been robbed at gunpoint before, this issue makes sense to me, and I invite you to think about it from that perspective.

Guns. Give them a shot.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

THE ISSUE:

After the anniversary of the Virginia Tech shootings, some have raised the suggestion that college students should be given the option of carrying concealed weapons for their own protection and the protection of others. Needless to say, controversy abounds.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

BUILDING BRIDGES

Dear editor:

We, the undersigned, represent a cross-section of institutions and programs working with families, children, youth and college students in Holyoke. We are writing in strong support of the work of Student Bridges. Student Bridges has a proven track record of operating with the highest degree of professionalism and integrity.

Indeed, its dedicated team of students represents some of the most highly effective college student leaders many of us have had the pleasure of working with. In a very short amount of time, not only has Student Bridges implemented its clearly defined objectives effectively, but it has also established respectful and productive relationships with a wide array of agencies and institutions across Hampden and Hampshire Counties.

What stands out most about the UMass students working as tutor mentors in several Holyoke programs is their training, their reliability, their commitment, and their ability to work with a very diverse set of agencies and institutions. This level of work by college students, integrated with their academic studies, requires a high degree of support and evaluation by the UMass Student Bridges staff, but also represents an invaluable educational and professional experience for the participating UMass students.

To those in the UMass community who may wonder how this benefits them personally, we submit that UMass Student Bridges participants serve as good will ambassadors for UMass Amherst, a public institution dependent on the taxpayers of the state, and on the goodwill of public elected officials. Student Bridges volunteers and staff consistently show UMass students in a very positive light. Maintaining good relations with surrounding communities and demonstrating the professionalism and service that UMass students have to offer benefits all UMass students, faculty, staff, and administrators.

More broadly, all of us will be affected economically by the high drop out rates and low college enrollment rates of an increasing portion of the population of the state, just as all of us stand to benefit from an educated and engaged population.

However, community relations and economic considerations cannot possibly paint a complete picture. The question involves the purpose of higher education itself and our views of ourselves and of our nation. Does a university education elevate us to challenge ourselves beyond the familiar and parochial, and to understand how closely our fortunes are bound to those of our neighbors near and far? Or is it merely a training ground for various careers?

We believe that Student Bridges demonstrates that reaching across divisions of income or geography can enrich both the lives of college students and the lives of public school students. In its best forms, idealism can work pragmatically.

In an era when college is increasingly out of reach for many of the University's neighboring youth, Student Bridges has been a vital contribution in efforts to expand college access and success for moderate and low-income students, first-generation students, and students of color. The program serves as an example of the profound impact that college students can have on their own institution and in their neighboring communities. Student Bridges has developed a model that should be expanded, emulated and commended.

We urge you to learn more about Student Bridges, to consider participating in the program, and to support a program that highlights the best that UMass has to offer.

Gustavo Acosta, Director,Upward Bound/Holyoke Community College; Jaime Cotto, Middle-to-High School Transition Coordinator, Holyoke Public Schools/Engaging Latino Communities for Education; Elia Dreyfuss, Program Coordinator, ABE/College Transition Program/ Holyoke Community College; Paul Hyry, Principal Lynch Middle School/Holyoke Public Schools; Imre Kepes, Co-Director El Arco Iris; Betty Medina Lichtenstein, Director, Enlace de Familias - Holyoke Family Network; Melany Mendoza, Director of After School Programming, Holyoke Community College; Laurie Millman, Director of Program Development, Boys and Girls Club of Greater Holyoke; Isolda Ortega-Bustamante, Director, Engaging Latino Communities for Education (ENLACE); Daniel Ross, Executive Director, Nuestras Raices, Inc.; Harold Santiago, Bilingual Admissions Counselor Holyoke Community College; Hector L. Santos, Assistant Principal, Marcella Kelly School/Holyoke Public Schools

REMOVING STAPLES

Dear editor:

I am writing to express my hope that companies in Massachusetts, like Staples Inc., will demonstrate responsible leadership through their involvement in the 2008 Olympic Games.

The Olympics should be a symbol of unity and international goodwill, but hostilities in which China has been complicit have marred this ideal. Since 2003, over 300,000 innocent people have been killed and 2,500,000 have been displaced by the government of Sudan in a conflict the Bush administration has deemed a genocide.

China, host of the 2008 Olympics, is responsible for 90 percent of small arms sales to Sudan since 2004, according to a March 2008 report by Human Rights First.

As the exclusive supplier of office furniture to the Olympics, Staples (headquartered in Framingham, MA) has an opportunity to hold the Chinese government accountable for its adverse role in Darfur. Staples should sign a public statement of concern about China's involvement in Sudan and make a public or private appeal to the Chinese government to suspend arms sales to Sudan, press for full deployment of the United Nations-African Union Mission in Darfur (UNAMID), and support a comprehensive peace agreement that encompasses Darfur and South Sudan.

On April 27, 2008, students from across the state will host a rally by the gazebo in Boston Common titled, "One World, One Dream for Darfur: An Olympic Corporate Sponsor Raly."

From 1 to 3pm, academics, politicians, students, and local Sudanese will entreat President Bush to stick to his promises by supporting the full deployment of UNAMID and negotiating an all-Sudan solution to the conflict.

Secondly, we invite Staples representatives to sign a statement of concern about China's role in the Darfur atrocities, and express their commitment to being responsible Olympic partners.

We single out Staples as a local corporation and one that has shown regrettable indifference towards this issue, having obtained a shameful "F" on Dream for Darfur's (a non-governmental organization) Corporate Sponsor Report Card.

Staples' Code of Ethics promises that "acting with integrity is a way of life." While I commend the company for past attention to social and environmental issues, I urge Staples to demonstrate the same for Darfur.

Firth McEachern
UMass student

THE VALUE OF VERIFICATION

Dear editor:

Re. "Pass the Manishewitz," Brad Leibowitz, Ed/Op, April 24, 2008.

I am writing to express my frustration towards the April 24th column "Pass the Manishewitz" by Brad Liebowitz.

To be concise: What he says about Chanukah is a lie. It is a holiday celebrated by Jews to commemorate the revolt against Greek tyranny in 167 B.C. It was not invented by Jewish parents wishing to satisfy their children who wanted presents because they were jealous of their Christian peers.

I'll prove this by challenging anyone to find any evidence of en masse present-giving on Christmas before, say, 1800 AD. Chanukah has been celebrated since at least 500 AD (earliest mention I could find in Jewish texts, which actually implies it must have been celebrated beforehand, because all the text says is "People are celebrating this holiday in many different ways, which are acceptable and which are not?").

It is true the holiday has gained much more fame in America because of its temporal proximity to Christmas, but Chanukah existed long beforehand.

However, I'd like to address a growing problem I've noticed within your editorial section. It appears as if most of your columnists believe they are news reporters. This is a problem that absolutely must be addressed. Your opinion pieces are not checked for factual accuracy (how can you check the factual accuracy of an opinion?).

However, sometimes opinions are reported on things that are described entirely inaccurately (Thank you, Mr. Liebowitz). Sometimes, though, "facts" are just reported and an opinion isn't even presented (See Sherrie Bain's April 29th column "Farewell to AIDS", which while well-written and accurate, is quite devoid of opinion).

This has got to stop.

To be fair, I must say this is not an ever-present problem. Yasmine Farah, Eli Gottlieb, and Shayna Murphy come to mind as admirable opinion writers. They get a fact (and they get it right) and they tell us what they think about it. Done and done.

Please, I beg you, take a closer look at the columns submitted for publication. Check the facts presented. If the facts are false, do not publish it (or allow the columnist to change their presentation. That Brad Liebowitz THINKS Chanukah was created by crying Jewish children is fine, that he says this is a fact is simply absurd).

Then check for an opinion. If there is none, and if they are just reporting a story, I dunno, forward it to the news editor. Those articles are great, but they are not opinions, and to publish them in the opinion section diminishes their importance.

If a column is both factually sound and presents an opinion of said fact, then publish it. The opinion section of a paper, I believe, is the most important. Here, writers and readers can talk freely about news stories and what they think about them. But this sanctuary must be protected from falsehoods.

Dissenting opinions are welcome. Inaccurate facts are not.

Alex Maslow
UMass student

LETTERS POLICY

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

The Collegian also encourages guest columns from students, faculty, alumni and community members. Guest columns should be 750-850 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Carlin at Calvin

Comedian to entertain Noho

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At 70 years old, it's hard to imagine anyone being considered edgy and controversial without immediately being thought of as old and cynical. George Carlin, however, is able to walk that fine line with ease.

Tomorrow night, Carlin will be performing two shows at the Calvin Theater in Northampton, Mass.

Despite his age, Carlin has been touring 70-80 days a year since the 1970s.

A comedian, actor and author, Carlin has been in show business for five decades. While most of the uninformed will recognize him for his film roles such as Rufus from "Bill and Ted," Carlin is best known as a stand-up comedian.

Unafraid to touch any topic in his act, his salty and provocative style of comedy has put him on top. Everything from politics to sex to humanity as a whole is fair game to the seasoned veteran.

Some of the most influential comedians and politic satirists, such as Jon Stewart, Stephen Colbert, Jerry Seinfeld and Lewis Black have credited Carlin as a major personal influence.

Many critics had begun to write Carlin off, feeling he was starting to lose touch, but his latest HBO special, "It's Bad For Ya!," which aired March 1 of this year, cleared up those misconceptions fairly quickly.

He is still as sharp as ever, cutting through things that often go unquestioned.

"I question American beliefs and accepted American thought patterns," Carlin said in a recent interview with HBO promoting his new special. "Americans don't question things anymore. We don't question things because everybody is fat and happy…they don't rock the boat. That's how you get bullshited; by not looking at things carefully."

Carlin has never been one to shy away from controversy. His most well-known routine is the "seven dirty words you can't say on television," a bit that brought him face to face with the United States Supreme Court in 1978.

He prides himself on being able to keep people on edge and making them uneasy.

"I like figuring out – and it's not hard to figure out – which things make people a little uneasy when you talk about them, and I like to get into those things," Carlin said. "But I like to find the way in through the side door. I don't like to be predictable."

Carlin is an acquired taste and his style of humor is not for everyone. While his willingness to use vulgarity is a turn off to some people, the message behind the words is appropriate for everyone.

As always, Carlin's favorite targets are the most controversial: politics, religion, rights and humanity. All of them come under fire in his latest HBO special.

On the bible: "Lets get back to the bible, America's favorite national theatrical prop."

On rights: "There are no such things as rights, there imaginary. We made them up like the boogieman. They are an idea, a cute idea, but they're fictional. I ask you where they came from, and people say 'they're a God given right,' ah f, here we go again.

"I believe we should have unlimited rights. I believe I have the right to do anything I please, and if I do something you don't like, I believe you have the right to kill me. The next time someone says 'I have the right to my opinion,' you say, 'I have the right to my opinion and my opinion is you have no right to your opinion.' Then shoot the f and walk away."

With 22 comedy albums, 14 HBO specials, five books, a lifetime achievement award from the American Comedy Awards, and named the second greatest stand-up comedian of all time by Comedy Central, Carlin has done it all.

Carlin is performing two shows tomorrow night at 7:00 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. at the Calvin Theater in Northampton, Mass. Tickets are $28.50-$48.50 and can be purchased at IHEG.com.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

GEORGE CARLIN
CALVIN THEATER
FRIDAY, MAY 2
7 P.M. & 9:30 P.M.
$28.50-$48.50

COURTESY COMEDY CENTRAL

World-renowned comedian George Carlin will bring his honest and controversial style to the Calvin Theater on Friday night. At 70 years old, the comic's vulgar language continues to be a crowd pleaser.

Singer brings unique style to Amherst

These United States to join WMUA spring concert line-up

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

These United States just finished an extensive and unique tour: 33 shows in 33 days with 33 different line-ups, to support the debut album, "A Picture of the Three of Us At The Gate of the Garden of Eden." The album came out in March on United Interest. Jesse Elliott is the real name of the singer/songwriter behind the band and the ambitious tour.

The tour was a difficult undertaking for Elliott. Each night, he had to teach all of his songs to a new band that was based in whatever city he performed. With this unique undertaking, he hoped to capture a new mood and authentic feel each night of the tour.

Elliott talked to the Daily Collegian about the tour.

"Some of them [the crowds] certainly seemed to [feel the authenticity]. Some wanted what was 'us.' Some wanted what was not us. People always want different things. We split the difference.

"The teaching was exhausting, but it was the only thing that kept us going. Drive straight from Denver to Minneapolis, through a blizzard that lasted four hours, from 3 a.m. to 7 a.m., and you better have some beautiful new creative souls waiting for you with a cup-o-joe in one hand, a Budweiser in the other."

The bands were "Inspiring… we stole their hearts. And they stole ours. It was orgiastic. Is that a word?" he said, talking about the bands and the great times he had on tour.

On his extensive tours, Elliott brings the writings of Walt Whitman to keep him company. He reads Whitman "Over and over. Put myself into a trance," he says. And the poetry has made its way into Elliott's songs. With lyrics like, "Eyeballing the clock as if time passed, making subtle statements she was afraid to just ask: Was I only looking for a blast? I had to find some Bohemians, and fast," one can see the poet coming through Elliott.

"Writers and great thinkers influence everyone. It's the trickle-down effect of culture – Reagan would be proud. Except the hippies won, or are winning. Subtly. Everyday. Look around at culture, at what's considered the norm now," Elliott says about his influences.

"I am influenced by everything I ever see or hear. I'm very easily influenced, which is good and bad. I don't have much within me, but I am an amazing sponge and thief."

Part of his influence is the Federal Reserve Collective in Washington D.C., where Elliott lives. The Collective is a group of musicians who love playing music with one another.

The Collective and Elliott have been reviewed by the newspapers in Washington D.C. area. The Washington Post said of the Collective, "The group [These United States] is a vital cog in the Federal Reserve, a self-described 'collective' of local bands with a penchant for Americana-tinged folk rock."

"That's why we love playing [music] with new people, why we did this tour. Why we gather the first Monday of every month at Iota and play new songs and jump up on each others' songs without invitation, and get drunk and surly with each other. We are such an unsightly lot," Elliot said.

To create his songs, Elliott has created a writing style that fits the Collective and his personality. It is a simple, free-flowing style, much like Whitman's poetry.

"The song is usually written in one burst - maybe pored back over and edited several thousand times after that, maybe just left as is. These days, the music is left as skeleton as possible until we [the Federal Reserve Collective] can all get together to discuss it," he said.

Much of the album "A Picture of the Three of Us At The Gate of the Garden of Eden" was comprised like this, and the Collective had a major part on the sound of the album. Different pieces of the Collective contributed to the music on the album.

Elliott had just returned home and was slated to record a new album this spring but already has more shows listed online. He has played more than 300 shows the past three years. He has played with local bands from each area and met very unique people and he has his favorites.

"Everyone in Boise. And everyone in Salt Lake City. They are mad, all of them. They are the craziest mountain people I have ever met, and I have met a lot of people in a lot of mountains," he told the Daily Collegian.

Now he is making his way to Amherst for WMUA's Spring Kick-Off Concert this Sunday, May 4. He is very excited to play in Amherst and "expects everything!" when he arrives.

These United States will be playing with Mussels, Baker and Deer Tick in the Student Union Ballroom this Sunday, May 4. The concert is being presented by WMUA 91.1, and will begin at 1 p.m. It is a free event with raffles.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu

THESE UNITED STATES

WMUA SPRING CONCERT

SUNDAY, MAY 4

FREE

JAY BYRD/THESE UNITED STATES

These United States, the one-man-band by Jesse Elliott, travels from city to city, teaching a new band all his songs every night. Elliott will bring his laid-back style to the WMUA's free spring concert on Sunday at the Student Union Ballroom.

Ben Folds talks new release, Bonnaroo

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival offered reporters a chance to interview a few of its main attractions to help publicize the upcoming concert. The first interview was with musician and University of Massachusetts Spring Concert alum, Ben Folds.

Reporters asked a wide variety of questions about what he intends to play at his festival slot this summer. They also took the opportunity to verify rumors of a potential new album. Gary Graff of United Stations Radio asked the first such question:

GARY GRAFF: "So you've been, you know, throughout your tours this year and even in the last year, you've been playing a lot of new material. What do you have planned for Bonnaroo in terms of rolling out new stuff? Is there even more of it, and also, what's up with the new album? When's it going to come out?"

BEN FOLDS: "I think it's coming out in September, and yes – it's not a bad idea to play, although we've played most of the album [and] there's not a lot left to unveil. We've got two or three songs that we were sort of holding on to, just so that someone could buy the record, not knowing it's going to be on the whole thing. But it's not a bad idea to play one of those new ones at Bonnaroo. That's kind of a special show so we may do that."

GG: "Well, if you know, do you have a title for the album, the new one?"

BF: "No, I don't. That's going to be one of the last things I think that's going to fall together here. I'm not really sure. I may have a couple of ideas, but we've got some really good stuff going for the art work that I'm excited about. So I kind of want to get that in order and see if that helps me make up my mind."

Other reporters focused their questions more on his upcoming festival appearance and about his sentiments on his 2006 set at the famed festival.

Rachel Katz of Columbia University asked, "So you played at Bonnaroo back in 2006 and I was wondering what your experience was like then on stage, off stage and with the fans, and then do you think that this year will be at all different and how so?

BF: "Well, I don't know. I mean, mine was funny because I just – I kind of live in a cave. I mean, I spend a lot of time in the dark room making prints and then I go out on the road and it's not that I'm not interested in what goes on, but I played a lot of festivals."

Ben goes on to say that he's played a diverse array of festivals, including most of the "important ones over the last 12 years," though he admits that due to his reclusive personality, he'd rather be at home or on a "yoga retreat." His first experience at the festival provided him with this funny anecdote:

BF: "So I did this thing and then I got off the plane and the next day I went to play this thing called Bonnaroo. For all I knew, it was like a coffee house. I had no idea. And then we walked out on stage and there's like 60,000 people."

The festival also will give Folds the chance to play and interact with some of music's other big names. He shows particular excitement when declaring that "Kanye West is playing right after him."

While Folds is excited about the festival appearance, he personally prefers "just touring with one or two other bands – with the exception of a few notable festivals."

Unlike many of his fellow artists, who opt for festivals for environmental reasons, Folds says that his relationship with the huge shows exists quite outside the realm of environmental activism.

BF: "I don't suppose that our driving our bus, you know, [going how many] miles to get there is going to do anything for the environment. I try not to use plastic bottles, I try not to leave lights on and I don't drive much. So I don't know, you know, I tried to do my little bit, but I don't really pretend that I'm doing it through the festival."

Folds also goes on to compliment the festival crowds, saying that they do a lot to ease his worries that America will end up resembling the dumbed-down futuristic society in Mike Judge's movie "Idiocracy." He compliments the crowds on their knowledge of music and their ability to give live musicians an educated listen.

He also does his best to put down the complaints that the festival acts have gotten increasingly mainstream, and offers his personal opinion about the burgeoning success of Bonnaroo and festivals in general.

BF: "What I mean by that is, you know, maybe indie rock is actually more mainstream. I think it's a sign, no one is going to listen to my demo tape for 10 years and then suddenly things changed, they came my way and then I – it was mainstream there for a little while just because everything came out. I think this was happening with Bonnaroo."

Pete Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

Real reality television

BY ETAN HOROWITZ
THE ORLANDO SENTINEL

In December, Dana Neil Oaklund of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., began streaming live video on the Internet from a laptop in his SUV to assure his customers that their cargo was safe. What he didn't expect was that dozens of people would get a kick out of seeing him stuck in traffic in California or cruising between snow-covered mountains in Colorado.

"It just blows my mind," said Oaklund, who escorts oversize loads while parked in San Diego. "Right now there are 33 people who think this is interesting enough to watch. A lot of people tell me, 'Oh, wow, this is cool because I am getting to see the country without leaving my desk.'"

Oaklund is a "lifecaster," one of a growing number of people creating their own reality shows by broadcasting live for a few minutes or hours at a time from their computers or cell phones. Unlike videos uploaded to YouTube, lifecasters are inviting viewers into their world to see what they see, comment on it and ask questions, all in real time.

Broadcasting live from a webcam is nothing new, but what makes services such as Justin.tv, Ustream.tv and Yahoo Live (live.yahoo.com) different is that technology has evolved to the point where practically anyone can stream live from almost anywhere and interact with people who are watching.

You don't need to be a technical genius or even have your own Web page. And with the spread of wireless Internet and the fact that webcams have become a standard feature on many new computers, you might not even have to buy anything.

Oaklund, 40, uses a mobile broadband connection to broadcast as the "Master Roadcaster" on Justin.tv. People tune in from all over the world to laugh at his jokes, make comments about other drivers, tell him to slow down or suggest hotels for him. While driving, he glances at the computer screen when it's safe and speaks into a headset to respond to questions and comments. He usually has 15 to 100 people watching.

"People are already looking at video online, so wouldn't it be funny if you could watch a funny video clip and you could tell the person doing it, 'Hey, do that again'?" said Michael Seibel, CEO of Justin.tv.

Seibel started Justin.tv in 2006 with three friends to live broadcast co-founder Justin Kan 24/7 as he walked around San Francisco with a camera attached to his hat. In October, the site opened to everyone, and it now has more than 430,000 registered users, about 34,000 of whom are broadcasters.

Britta Seisums, 18, typically streams live from her red-polka-dot-covered bedroom for about four hours after school each weekday. She plays games with viewers, dances to pop songs, hangs out with her friends, talks about school and curses out people who come into the chat room and are rude.

Seisums has been creating her own Web sites since she was about 10 and wants to work in Web development. "I keep the camera on as much as possible, but I like to have privacy. If I don't want to be on camera, then I put the camera on my animals."

In recent episodes, she has bathed her guinea pigs, painted a video-game console and accidentally spilled soda on her laptop.

Seisums is careful not to reveal too many details about herself or where she lives, and has moderators who ban people who are vulgar. Her typical audience is about the same size as Oaklund's.

Oaklund thinks his broadcasts are popular because he's always somewhere different, and because he spends so many hours on the road, viewers don't have trouble finding him.

"It's a lot of fun; they keep me in stitches," he said.

At 61, Don Browne of LaBelle bills himself as the "world's oldest lifecaster." A retired teacher who loves technology and blogs about local news, Browne spends about six to eight hours a day in front of the camera while working at his computer.

He has danced to Hannah Montana and rap music, played the ukulele, looked for groundhogs in his backyard, brushed his cat and taken calls from someone claiming to be CBS Corp. President and CEO Les Moonves.

"It's just so novel that you can look into somebody's house and they don't know you are watching," Browne said. "You are like Superman with X-ray vision."

To get a glimpse of the future of live streaming, look no further than Qik.com, the Web site of a California company that has developed free software to stream live video from cell phones to the Internet and display live chat on the phone and the Internet.

Florian Seroussi, 39, a Qik user and the CEO of a Miami telecommunications company, has used the service to stream the takeoff of the Airbus A380 and his son's second birthday party so Seroussi's mother in Paris could watch it live.

Seroussi said streaming from a mobile phone is about being a witness or a reporter for events and places.

"I just want to share what is happening through my eyes," Seroussi said.

New release Testament to heavy metal

Pales to older albums, still satisfies fans

BY MIKE TOOMEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Testament, a thrash metal band that debuted in the 80s, is returning to the music scene with "The Formation of Damnation." This release disappoints, focusing more on technicalities than tunes.

Testament spent its late 1980s playing second fiddle to thrash metal giants Metallica and Slayer, but die-hard metalheads rank Testament's work with the best of their better-known peers.

But as of late, Metallica has adopted a gritty working-class, hard rock aesthetic, and Slayer's Kerry King seems intent on converting the group into Slipknot II. Megadeth has continued to be subpar and not sell records and Anthrax's singer has changed three times by the end of this sentence.

Taken in context of the current thrash metal scene, the reformation of Testament's "classic" lineup is stirring up great expectations among metal purists, who are hoping the genre's best underdogs can still deliver the goods (Judas Priest style, of course).

From their 1987 debut, "The Legacy," virtuoso lead guitarist Alex Skolnick grabbed Testament some attention as a regular feature in guitar magazines, but the band largely toiled through five good albums in the shadows of their peers. Harangued by Atlantic Records to shift more units, Testament felt the pressure acutely. After 1992's "The Ritual," Skolnick and drummer, Louie Clemente, jumped ship.

This Tuesday, Testament released "The Formation of Damnation," their first new album with Alex Skolnick on lead guitar in 16 years. To much excitement, the roll call for "The Formation of Damnation" reads just like it did in 1988, sans drummer Louie Clemente, replaced by the technically superior, more "metal," Paul Bostaph. Guitarist Eric Peterson said the new effort recalls the classic, "The New Order," and 1999's super-heavy, death-metalesque "The Gathering." What's strange here is that Peterson is basically saying the new album is the best and worst of Testament.

The "Formation of Damnation" is not a return to metal's glory days. It's actually a very modern metal album, but more importantly, a modern Testament album. What this means is that its sound is a logical extension of their musical roots pushed by uber-clean modern production values.

Guitar freaks have always praised Testament's technically challenging, complex guitar work. Skolnick and Peterson's riffs always steamroll like all good thrash, but the attack is sharpened with some interesting note choices and the occasional use of unorthodox timing. But as far as classic Testament goes, the technical nuances in their guitar-playing don't define their music, but helps it.

In this album, it's the other way around – the technicality is what's noticeable, and this hurts the music. On songs like "The Persecuted Won't Forget" or "The Henchman Ride," it sounds like the band had money on squeezing as many notes as possible into a single measure.

In fact, production-wise, the album sounds like a death-metal album or something from Lamb of God, characterized largely by the incessant double-bass clobber of hired-gun Bostaph, a technically good drummer, who makes it very clear he has fast feet. Double-bass footwork can be wonderfully effective when used with discretion, like Slayer's "Raining Blood," or the pre-chorus in Testament's own "The Preacher," but on many of these tunes, it's overdone.

The title track is a death-metal song, with a good lead from Skolnick as its only redeeming characteristic. Chuck Billy isn't using that great rasp he has, but belching a pretty characterless cookie-monster performance.

But there is some of the magic that makes fans regard Testament as an equal of the time-tested greats. "More than Meets the Eye" is about as close to traditional thrash metal the album offers. It features a sing-a-long harmonized lick from Skolnick and Peterson, and a straight-ahead chug that powers the song. Billy's vocals are in fine form on this one and Skolnick shows us why he's a demi-god to guitar dorks everywhere.

"Killing Season" has a clattering riff reminiscent of something off of 1990's "Souls of Black" with Billy belting it out like it's, well, 1990. Skolnick offers what may be his best solo of the LP on this track. It is rock 'n' roll more than metal, but entirely menacing over Peterson's snarling rhythms. "F.L.A.R. (False Evidence Appearing Real)" offers a few great moments after a note-buss start, especially with another great solo from Skolnick.

Taken altogether, "The Formation of Damnation" is a metal album with the potential to win over new fans in an ever-decreasing niche. But that doesn't mean it's good. Its sterile, in-your-face production values in tandem with Peterson's push for as many notes as humanly possible and Bostaph's hyper-kinetic drumming makes "The Formation of Damnation" amenable to kids who like extreme metal - the same kids who might not have enjoyed the more groove-based early records tread: the early records actually had a groove).

At the same time, Alex Skolnick's playing is a treat for the musician crowd. Every lead on this record has interesting melodic themes, while still being as outrageous and testosterone-fueled as a good metal solo should. And of course, all the solos require enviable technique. Those expecting "Over the Wall" or "Practice What You Preach" or anyone who thinks the only good metal sounds like 1986 might be disappointed. This barely sounds like Testament, but when it does, it sounds like the band at their best.

Mike Toomey can be reached at mjtoomey@student.umass.edu

THE FORMATION OF DAMNATION

NUCLEAR BLAST AMERICA

3/5

To celebrate your upcoming graduation, your UMass Amherst Alumni Association invites you to Memorial Hall for... a FREE GIFT,
free Career information,
a DEMO of the ALUMNI DIRECTORY,
a chance to win $1000 and/or an iPod Shuffle
and a few SNACKS to get you through exams.
Monday, May 5 through Thursday, May 8
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
You own. You are. UMASS. • UMassAlumni.com

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 583-9500
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM
FREE BREADSTICKS: MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY. BUY ANY MEDIUM OR LARGE PIZZA AT MENU PRICE. GET ANY ORDER OF BREADSTICKS FREE
LARGE UNLIMITED TOPPING PIZZA $10.99 NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS
ANY LARGE SALAD
ANY BREADSTICKS
ANY 20 OZ DRINK
ONLY $7.99
1 PERSONAL PAN PIZZA
WITH 2 TOPPINGS + 10 WINGS OR KICKERS
ONLY $9.99
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS

CERVEZA			TEQUILA
Corona	24pk btl	$22.99	Don Julio Reposado	750ml	$39.99
Modelo Especial	12pk btl	$11.99	Gran Centenario Reposado	750ml	$39.99
Negra Modelo	12pk btl	$11.99	Cabo Wabo Blanco	750ml	$32.99
Dos Equis	12pk btl	$10.99	Milagro Reposado	750ml	$29.99
Sol	12pk btl	$10.99	1800 Reposado	1.0lt	$24.99
Tecate	12pk can	$9.99	Jose Cuervo Flavors	750ml	$18.99

CINCO DE MAYO
Route 9, Hadley 584-8174
Hours: Mon-Sat 9 a.m.-11 p.m.
Sun Noon-11 p.m.
Www.MySpace.com/FourSeasonsHadley
Sale Ends May 7, 2008
Not Responsible for typographical errors.

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking hard-working, motivated
undergrads to fill our
Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley
or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
•SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

For Zwick, perseverance pays

ZWICK from page 12

of caution that she would further injure her knee. She finished the season with five goals and two assists.

Zwick spent her junior season working through pain, and she altered her playing style to adjust. In high school, she was a goal scorer, and admittedly didn't pass the ball much. Yet most collegiate players were standout goal scorers, which is why they can compete at the collegiate level.

In college, Zwick was among many goal scorers and had to find her niche with the Minutewomen. Because of her knees, it would have to be more of a finesse role than a physical one. Her new role saw her dishing the ball off instead of taking it to the cage herself.

In each of her past two seasons, she registered at least 10 assists and was among the team leaders in points. Zwick is currently eighth in career assists, with 40 to date.

The change in surfaces is also a problem for Zwick. Her knees constantly take a pounding when she runs on the hard turf of McGuirk Alumni Stadium, where the Minutewomen play their home games. Because of the tenderness of her knees, Zwick needs, and is allowed,' to sit sometimes during practice. Also, she rarely involves herself in practice activities the day after a game.

At the end of her junior season, Zwick had a lateral release surgery, which involves the severing of tight tendons behind the kneecap in order to release pressure and allow for more range of motion. Again, she had to recover and wait for clearance, which she received three weeks before the start of her senior season.

During that offseason, she had another surgery to remove scar tissue from her knees that built up as a result of the work she's had done over the years. During the season, she continually rehabilitates her knee by doing workouts in the pool, getting knee massages and other treatments.

Zwick also struggles with arthritis, which has developed in both of her knees. The weather puts increased pressure on her knees, especially when it's rainy or cold.

"My knees have so much pressure in them that sometimes they feel like they're going to explode," she said. "It affects my everyday life, with how active I am."

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos knows that Zwick is in a unique situation because of her injuries and has accommodated her in terms of rest, understanding how valuable she is to the team.

"Coming into the season, we didn't really know [what to expect]," Venechanos said. "We took it pretty much day-by-day. She's been really honest with us and the training staff and I'm really impressed with her courage and her ability to withstand what she's been doing. We do what we can to make sure that she makes it through the weekend."

Venechanos also credits Zwick's recovery to athletic trainer Kristin Wilson, who has worked with Zwick throughout the ordeal.

"She's been doing a great job of keeping her on the field," Venechanos said.

Venechanos understands that at times, Zwick will need to step out of a drill and rest her knees, or that she'll need to rest in her apartment to let the swelling in her knees go down.

Zwick is currently fourth all-time in career minutes played for the Minutewomen, racking up 3,103 minutes of play during her time at UMass.

However, her time off of the field has been equally as rewarding as her time on the field. Zwick admits that she would not have made it in college with her one-dimensional style of play in high school that enabled her to be such a dynamic scorer.

"Sitting out for a year and a half doing rehab, I watched a lot of lacrosse," Zwick said. "By sitting out, I got to know what my teammates like to do. I watched the sport and learned so much."

Sitting out has helped her live up to her nickname as the team's quarterback. She is one of the most threatening players on the field because she knows what to do and when to do it. She is one of the players that coaches love because they can play the sport well and teach it to their teammates – making the team better collectively.

The most alarming part of Zwick's injury is the fact that it could affect her throughout the rest of her life. Even now, the injury affects her on a daily basis. She is a geology major and has a lab every week that puts her outside for four hours at a time.

She likes the outdoors, but because of her injury, Zwick can't enjoy a simple nature hike due to the tremendous stress that it puts on her knees. During the season, she keeps recreational activities to a minimum because she needs to conserve her energy for lacrosse.

What Zwick plans to do after college is another story. She aspires to be a high school science teacher and also wants to coach lacrosse and field hockey.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Staying healthy was no easy task, but Melynda Zwick is all smiles after staying injury-free for her senior year.

Maroney, Reeves go deep against BC

SOFTBALL from page 12

ners into scoring position and Samantha Salato drove Williams in with a single to left field. After Salato stole second with Proctor already on third, an error by pitcher Allison Gage (1-3 inning pitched, two hits, five runs, three earned) left Reeves safe at first and brought Proctor across for the 2-0 lead.

A double by catcher Jessica Serio drove in two more runs and chased Gage from the game after just 1/3 inning. Taylor Peyto relieved her and went the rest of the way, giving up six hits and four runs (three earned) and striking out six. Carly Morin hit an RBI single to extend the lead to 5-0 in the first inning.

Maroney's solo homer in the third made it 6-0, and that would be it until the top of the seventh. With the game already largely in hand, the Minutewomen added three more to make the score 9-0.

After Salato reached on the third BC error of the game, Reeves hit her team-leading eighth home run of the year. Following her double into left center, Maroney was brought around for the Minutewomen's ninth run on a ground out by Morin.

GAME NOTES

Balschmiter ended the game with no hits, no walks, no runs, one hit batsman and eight strikeouts ... Maroney increased her season batting average to .387, easily tops on the team. Serio is second at .361. Maroney also leads the team in slugging percentage at .627. She has 23 RBIs and four homers this season ... Reeves' three RBIs ties her with Carly Normandin with a team-leading 32 this season.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Lindsay Maroney boasts a .387 average and has knocked in 23 RBIs in her freshman campaign.

Minutemen to Catamounts in Vermont

BASEBALL from page 12

Ryan Franczek knocked in two runs in a losing effort.

least four runs.

Serino, a freshman left-hander, entered the game with a team-leading 3.45 ERA, but that would go up as he had little command against Vermont. He lasted just 1 1/3 innings, allowing four hits, four walks and five runs to boost his ERA up to 4.69. Jared Freni replaced him in the second inning, allowing two more runs to score. He gave up four runs total in 3 1/3 innings of work.

Vermont's Eric Thompson pitched two shutout innings to earn his fourth victory of the season, as starter Kyle Henry lasted just three innings. Serino took the loss to move to 2-3 this season.

After Serino struck out Ethan Paquette to end the bases-loaded threat in the first, he ran into serious trouble early in the second. He started the inning with two straight walks and then three of the next four batters recorded base hits to take an early 4-0 lead – capped by a three-run double by designated hitter Justin Milo.

Freni replaced Serino and walked the first batter and hit the second. He then struck out Paquette, but he walked in a run to Jeff Nolet and two more scored on a single by Todd Allen.

In the seventh, Vermont scored six runs on six hits and three walks; all the runs were charged to Monroy.

UMass returns to action on Friday for the start of a three-game set against Dayton at Earl Lorden Field.

GAME NOTES

Milo had five RBIs, despite having only one hit – which wasn't even a home run. Milo had a three-run double in the second inning, drove in a run on a groundout and another on a bases-loaded walk ... Every starter for Vermont had at least one hit, while five had at least two ... Five different Catamounts scored two runs.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Xavier stands alone atop Atlantic 10

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

(Editor's Note: This story originally ran on the Daily Collegian's Web site on Wednesday, April 30.)

With a sweep of St. Bonaventure this weekend, Xavier moved up into sole possession of first place in the Atlantic 10. Its third win of the series, combined with a Charlotte loss, moved the Musketeers past the 49ers, who are currently tied for second place with Duquesne.

The Musketeers (19-23, 13-5 A-10) finished up the weekend with a 4-0 shutout of the Bonnies as sophomore left-hander Danny Rosenhaun went eight innings and set a new career high with 12 strikeouts.

Xavier scored two runs in the fourth after Bobby Freking and Zac Richards both reached on errors and were driven in by a Billy O'Conner single. The junior catcher went 1-for-2 with a walk and two RBIs. The two runs would be all XU would need for the win.

Before its shutout effort, Xavier beat St. Bonaventure with back-to-back one-run victories, including a 6-5 win in 12 innings. Facing a three-run deficit in the bottom of the ninth, Xavier scored two runs on hit by pitches and eventually tied the game with a sacrifice fly.

After a scoreless two innings, the Musketeers had runners on first and third with one out when junior Adam Pasano popped up a pitch in the infield. The St. Bonaventure defense, however, failed to get the out after the fly ball fell because of confusion among the infielders, and the winning run scored.

A-10 Baseball

Xavier leads in the conference standings, despite having the eighth-best overall record in the A-10 at 19-23, and will take that lead into a midweek series against Cincinnati. St. Bonaventure came out of the weekend even at 9-9, trailing the first-place Musketeers by four games.

DUKES GO DEEP

Duquesne finished a weekend series against Charlotte by hitting four home runs against the then-first place 49ers en route to an 18-9 victory. With the win, the Dukes moved into a tie with Charlotte for second in the conference standings at 12-6.

Derek Mechling led the Dukes by going 3-for-6 with four RBIs and three runs scored. The senior is second on the team in batting average with .333 and home runs with nine. Mechling, Aaron Janusey, Pat Kimutis and Mark Tracy all went deep for the Dukes as they doubled up on Charlotte, which went through six pitchers in an attempt to slow down the Duquesne offense.

49ers starter Ryan Rivers lasted only two innings, giving up three earned runs on four hits. Duquesne responded to his early departure by putting up 12 runs in the next three innings. The Charlotte defense committed four errors, giving up four unearned runs.

With its win earlier in the series, Charlotte now leads the A-10 with 31 wins overall. It has now won at least 30 games for the past four years.

DAYTON EYES A-10 TOURNEY

Sunday's win over Richmond places Dayton in a tie for sixth place in the A-10 conference standings as the Flyers (26-17, 9-9 A-10) look to make their fifth tournament appearance in school history. Their nine wins match them with conference rivals Fordham, St. Bonaventure and Rhode Island.

Richmond freshman Billy Falasco made his first career start, giving up five runs (four earned) in the first inning before being taken out of the game without recording an out. The Spiders cut the deficit to two runs in the fourth inning, but Dayton responded with four runs in the bottom of the inning, holding on to an 11-4 win.

Senior catcher Shawn Gizynski made his second career start of the season, going 1 for 3, including a home run. Dayton has now won three straight series against A-10 opponents and looks to keep itself in a position to play in the A-10 Tournament starting May 21.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

MOVINGON?
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
COME CELEBRATE WITH US AT Salem Cross Inn
— RESTAURANT —
Route 9, 260 West Main St., West Brookfield, MA
Great food, Great setting, Great time! Call now to book your reservation!
Groups of any size welcome!
For Major Credit Card Reservations
(508) 867-2345
www.salemcrossinn.com

SUMMER SESSION
• Graduate • Undergraduate • Days • Evenings • Weekends • Online •
at Southern.
Summer's the perfect time to take a class at Southern.
Students from other colleges welcome!
Transfer credits to your college or university
Choose from more than 600 classes
Undergraduate and graduate courses
Accelerated courses — one week to five weeks
Study abroad: Paris, Spain, Guatemala, and China
For information and a Summer Session catalog, call or visit our Web site. Register online at www.SouthernCT.edu
SESSION A May 27 - June 27
SESSION B June 30 - August 1
SESSION C August 4 - August 22
Southern Connecticut State University
New Haven, Connecticut • 203 392 SCSU • 1 888 500 SCSU

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money! (40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

If you can't pronounce sudoku, you probably shouldn't be doing it.

		1			8	3		4
4							2
			2		5	8
	5		9		1	6
8								3
		2	5		3		9
	1	7		3
	6							5
9		5	4			2

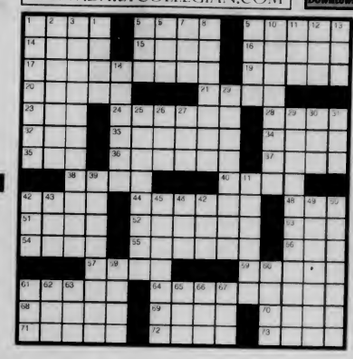
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Age is something that doesn't matter, unless you are a cheese."

— Billie Burke

DREAM NATION By Louis Coppola



PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

ACROSS
1 Houston and Huff
5 Actress Polo
9 Apparition
14 Fix text
15 Skater Heiden
16 Dustup
17 Colorado park
19 Not moving
20 Arboreal lemur
21 Road turn
23 "Annabel Lee" poet
24 Climb aboard
28 Invitation letters
32 Periphery
33 Greek sea
34 Fencing sword
35 Poetic piece
36 Cave
37 Computer input
38 Affirm confidently
40 Anjou relative
42 Nobel winner Morrison
44 Historian Toynbee
48 Actor Wallach
51 Kind of horse or wall?
52 Dodger Reese
53 Pale
54 French mother
55 Trainee
56 Pack animal
57 Actress Lollobrigida
59 Sound of a wet impact
61 "___ Frome"
64 Every Wednesday, say
68 Goldbrick
69 Buffalo's lake
70 Peddle
71 Restoration dansi
72 Logical
73 Family chart
DOWN
1 Part-time athlete
2 Lymphoid tissue
3 Minor crime
4 Deneb or Vega
5 Golfer's need
6 Go wrong
7 Eliminate
8 Winter craft
9 Broad smile
10 C-notes
11 Single entity
12 Superior salutation?
13 High explosive
18 Human lace
22 One conferring royal status
25 Maryland player
26 Star quality
27 Touch tenderly
29 EVA astronaut
30 Old hand
31 Shade of green
39 Certainly sour
41 Danish seaport
42 Comic Conway
43 Mineral vein
45 Dubs anew
46 After-tax amount
47 Be indebted to
49 Philadelphia university
50 Fashionable
58 Signs
Hollywood-style
60 Nagger
61 Mind-reading letters
62 Definite article
63 Part of the pelvis
65 Nest-egg initials
66 Noisy disturbance
67 Like a little Scot
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, Apr 25 - Thu, May 1
PRICELESS 2:30 4:45 7:00 9:15 No 9:15 Wed
DAUGHTERS OF THE DUST
Mon 5/5 7:00 FREE SHOW!
JASON STATHAM pickpocket Sun 5/4 2:00 Thu 5/8 7:00
BLADE RUNNER
2:15 4:30 7:15 9:45 No 7:15 Mon
THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 6:00 7:30 9:30 No 2:45 Sun No 7:30 Thu
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2347
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, April 25 - Thu, May 1
SNOW ANGELS 5:00 7:15 9:30 PLUS 12:15 & 2:45pm Sat & Sun & 10:15am Wed
YOUNG @ HEART 4:45 7:00 9:15 PLUS 12 & 2:30pm Sat & Sun & 10am Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT PRESENTS
THE WAILERS plus Passafire
WED. MAY 7 • 8:30 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:30 PM BALLROOM
Pearl Street Nightclub
10 PEARL ST. • NORTHAMPTON, MA
TO PURCHASE TICKETS ON THE WEB PLEASE GO DIRECTLY TO OUR
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
British people are not nearly as clean as they sound; in fact most of them are quite smutty.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Real people aren't born at the Jersey Shore, though many are conceived there.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
When your SIMs life becomes more enjoyable than your real life, you've got serious issues, man.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Granola is nice to eat, but it doesn't make a very good gift.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Unless you started using Proactive before you got zits, you aren't really living up to the product name.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Learn from the mistakes of John Mayer. He has so much skill yet he chooses to write so many crappy songs.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Strive to be the type of person who works hard but also knows how to have fun. Kind of like the ninja turtles.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
All the taurine you ingest is gonna manifest in your sperm and your first child will leave shoot out of the womb like a bullet.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
May Day, May Day! Your unibrow is growing at an alarming rate.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are too young to have lost your mind but too old to still have your virginity.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Find and nurture your inner force. Jedis never run out of toilet paper mid-wipe.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Awkward and funny are not the same thing. Ergo, Wes Anderson movies suck and you know it.

WMUA91.1FM PRESENTS:
The FREE Spring Kick-Off Concert!
Sunday May 4th at 1PM
UMass Student Union Ballroom
FEATURING:
These United States • Deer Tick • Baker • Mussels • DJ Andy Ward
PLUS: Stop by at 12:30 to see Hadoken perform outside!

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT FOR RENT

Rent Townhouse 53 starting 6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town, 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available, Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen flotr, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton.
2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1025+
4 Bedrooms $1225+

APT FOR RENT

6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Townhouse Apt. 49 for rent $1500 a month lease starts 6/1 Contact Rmelvill@student.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Put up Posters! In Pioneer Valley, Brattleboro, Hartford & Colleges. $9-12/hr. 20 flexible hrs. 15 hrs MUST be during daylight business hrs. Car, references, email, & cell, commit through fall minimum. Excellent attention to detail and follow up. PAID TRAINING MAY 12, 13, 14. Email: postering@artspromo.org

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an internship? International business publisher in Amherst seeking interns in areas of Management, Publishing, Marketing, IT, Business Development and More. Several opportunities. Call Mike 413-253-3488 and ask for Greg.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

EMPLOYMENT

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

JI STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Melynda Zwick has recovered from two major knee injuries during her career to return for her senior season with the Minutewomen.

Staying focused

Zwick battled knee injuries to become a role-player for UM

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After severely injuring the anterior cruciate ligament in both knees, most collegiate athletes end their careers. Senior attack Melynda Zwick of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team went on to have a productive career, playing four years of collegiate lacrosse.

The ACL is one of the four major ligaments in the knee. It is a serious, but common injury in many sports.

Zwick was a dominant lacrosse player at Council Rock South High School, earning numerous accolades, including three All-Conference selections. In 2004, her future was in doubt when she tore the ACL in her right knee, just five games into her senior season.

She wanted to play basketball that year, but doing so would jeopardize her lacrosse career at UMass – Zwick had already signed a National Letter of Intent to play for the Minutewomen. She anxiously sat home recovering.

Two weeks before UMass' first game, doctors cleared Zwick to play. 10 games into her freshman season, her career stalled again. On April 8, 2004 in a game against La Salle, Zwick collided with a teammate and an opposing player and she crumbled to the ground. She hyper-extended her left knee far enough that the ACL ripped entirely from the bone. She had reconstructive surgery in May 2005.

Zwick's speedy recovery allowed her to return in November of that year. However, contact was not allowed until the spring of 2006, her sophomore season.

"Mentally, I had trouble coming back," Zwick said. "I was a little scared that I was going to do it again."

Zwick was used in a reserve role in her sophomore season, out

See ZWICK on page 10

Balschmiter unhittable again

Junior tosses fourth no-no this season

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter was one inning away from her third perfect game of the season with 9-0 lead at Boston College Wednesday night. That's when she hit Carly McNar with a pitch, allowing the first Eagle of the game to reach base.

UMass	9
BC	0

Balschmiter held on for her fourth no-hitter of the season, defeating the Eagles by the same 9-0 score, extending her streak to 65 innings without allowing a run and 84 2/3 without allowing an earned run.

Lindsay Maroney and Sarah Reeves led the offensive charge, each with a home run in the game. Maroney went 2-for-3 on the day with a solo shot to left field in the third inning and a double in a three-run seventh.

The Minutewomen (34-11) completed a series sweep of the Eagles (29-28) last night, defeating BC at home, 8-0 in five innings, on April 9 at the UMass Softball Complex. They will close out the regular season with a doubleheader at St. Bonaventure Sunday. The Atlantic 10 Tournament starts May 22 in Charlotte, N.C.

UMass did not wait long to break open a lead against the Eagles, notching five runs in the first inning and earned its first two base-runners without recording a hit. Shortstop Whitney Williams was hit by a pitch to lead off the game, and Lauren Proctor moved her to second by drawing a walk.

Junior Whitney Mollica dropped a sacrifice bunt to move both run-

See SOFTBALL on page 10

BRIAN TANNENBAUM/COLLEGIAN

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter threw her fourth no-hitter of the season yesterday against Boston College. The Minutewomen will close out the regular season Sunday at St. Bonaventure.

Catamounts cruise over Minutemen

Vermont racks up 19 hits, 13 walks in 13-run victory

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nick Serino and the Massachusetts baseball team averted damage in the first inning last night against Vermont.

The same can't be said about the second inning – or the seventh.

Vermont	17
UMass	4

After leaving the bases loaded in the opening frame, the Catamounts teed off on UMass pitching to the tune of seven runs in the next inning and six more in the seventh, cruising to a 17-4 victory at Centennial Field in Burlington, Vt.

UMass left the bases loaded in a crucial situation, failing to score despite loading the bases with no outs in the seventh inning, trailing 9-4 After two walks and single, three consecutive Minutemen were retired by two different Vermont pitchers to quell the rally and remain down five runs.

Then the Catamounts tacked on six more runs in the bottom of the inning to totally pull away from the Minutemen. It could have been worse, as Vermont left the bases loaded with one out.

The Catamounts (20-17, 6-6 America East) had baserunners all over the place, finishing the game with 19 hits, 13 walks and 16 runners left on base.

UMass (14-20, 7-11 Atlantic 10) entered the game on a two-game winning streak, having taken the final two games of the series last weekend against conference foe, Saint Joseph's. But last night the pitching wasn't there, as the first three pitchers for UMass (Serino, Freni and Nathan Monroy) all allowed at

See BASEBALL on page 10

JENNA CHESCHEIR/COLLEGIAN

Brian Baudinet went 3-for-5 with two doubles and scored a run in UMass's 17-4 loss against Vermont yesterday.

ECAC pondering conference tourney

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As a seven-team conference, the regular season winner of the ECAC men's lacrosse league earns the league's automatic qualifier for the NCAA Tournament. But unlike other Division I conferences, the ECAC has no season-ending conference tournament.

According to UMass coach Greg Cannella, the possibility of adding a tournament has been a contentious issue among the league's coaches.

"We talk about that every year, but there's been a resistance from a few schools year after year," Cannella said. "When you're in the upper-echelon of the conference every year, you don't want a conference tournament. But if you finish third or fourth every year, you want one."

Despite the disagreement among some other members, Cannella believes the league and his program would benefit from a conference tournament.

UMass Lacrosse

"I've always wanted a tournament," Cannella said. "It's exciting for your kids. That's your shot [to make the NCAA Tournament]."

Seven leagues maintain NCAA automatic qualifiers, though not each of these conferences has a season-ending tournament. Other conferences, which lack enough membership to be eligible for an automatic bid, have a conference tournament, such as the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Beyond the implications a tournament can have for an individual team's season, Cannella believes the ECAC is not harnessing an opportunity to market itself.

"It's only going to help your conference in terms of exposure," he said. "If you have a conference tournament, people are going to be talking about it."

Though the coach does not dismiss the potential for a conference tournament, he acknowledged that the member schools would need to be fully in accord for the plan to move forward.

Instead, the Minutemen (5-8, 3-3 ECAC) will end their season Saturday against Rutgers (5-7, 3-3 ECAC). With a losing record regardless of the outcome, it will be the final game for UMass. The NCAA mandates that teams must win at least half of their games to be eligible for its tournament.

UNSTABLE FUTURE

With ECAC-member school Hobart (8-5, 4-3 ECAC) deciding to reorganize its men's lacrosse program at the Division III level, the ECAC and UMass lacrosse are left with an uncertain future. Hobart, which competes at the Division III level in every other sport, does not offer athletic scholarships to its student athletes.

After enjoying significant success at the Division III level, the Statesmen upgraded their program after the 1995 season. Since that season, Hobart has qualified for the NCAA Tournament four times, while UMass has qualified six times.

But the decision has an overarching impact on UMass.

"Obviously we're disappointed," Cannella said. "You hate to lose a good program from Division I. They have a shot to make the NCAA Tournament this weekend and they've been the most improved team in our conference."

As a product of losing a team in conference, UMass will also lose a game off of its schedule next season. Cannella said that the decision about whether to add another team to next year's schedule will be made early in the offseason.

But there's also been talk that the seven Big East schools that maintain Division I lacrosse programs will form their own conference. The institutions include Syracuse, Notre Dame, Georgetown, Rutgers, Providence, Villanova and St. John's.

"I think that's a reality," Cannella said. "The Big East has its meeting sometime in May, so we may get that decision. It certainly concerns us since we would have to realign ourselves with another conference as quickly as we can."

But there is a precedent for the Big East adding schools to its league on an individual sport basis. For example, Loyola's women's lacrosse team maintains Big East membership, while its men's team is a part of the ECAC.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

AMANDA TUNIS/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Ryan Hantverk may see an ECAC Tournament take form by the time he's a senior.

Write for Sports

Come to the Collegian newsroom in the Campus Center basement or contact the sports desk at sports@dailycollegian.com

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:59 | SAT H:63 | SUN H:66 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MAY 2, 2008

The Western Massachusetts Coalition for Immigrant and Worker Rights hosted speakers, including Julissa Lee Rodriguez (left), for their May Day event on the Amherst Common yesterday to spread the message of "injustice for one is injustice for all" concerning immigrant rights in the U.S.

INSIDE:

NEWS
Communications class produces politics survey
Page 3

FEATURES
Disabled and handicapped at UMass
Page 4

ARTS & LIVING
Exclusive interview with WMUA concert headliner Mussels
Page 8

SPORTS
UMass track hosts Atlantic 10 tournament
Page 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 132

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALPHA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Lief Walcutt

VOX holds pharmacy "sting"

By Sara Afzal
Collegian Correspondent

By asking local pharmacies if they dispensed emergency contraception like Plan B, VOX: Students for Choice members participated in a pharmacy "sting" last Saturday during "Live Acton Camp."

The pharmacy "sting" was a way for VOX, an organization that advocates for reproductive health and rights, to check the availability of emergency contraception, a drug that prevents pregnancy after unprotected intercourse or contraception failure.

At 10 a.m., the "Live Action Camp" started in Kennedy Tower in the Southwest residential area with a lecture by the educational policy manager of Planned Parenthood, Sarah Steinfeld, who discussed the history of emergency contraception and the reasons why a pharmacy "sting" was necessary.

In 2006, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved the dispensing of emergency contraception over the counter without a prescription to customers 18 years or older. However, even with proper identification, many women have reported being refused emergency contraception by pharmacists.

The states of Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi and South Dakota have laws or regulations that allow pharmacists to deny patients emergency contraception due to the pharmacist's personal beliefs.

According to the group, there is a misconception that emergency contraception acts as an abortion, but emergency contraception has no effect once a woman is pregnant. Emergency contraception prevents pregnancy before it happens by suppressing ovulation or fertilization of the egg.

The U.S. Constitution imposes no limitations on non-governmental institutions like pharmacies, so women have no federal constitutional right that ensures access to contraception. However, state legislation can protect patients trying to fill prescriptions for emergency contraception.

In Massachusetts, pharmacists are required to dispense all medication, including emergency contraception. In 2005, the Bay State passed a law allowing pharmacists with specific training to dispense prescriptions for emergency contraception to anyone once they had the proper certification.

Massachusetts pharmacies, like CVS, were part of a "sting" by the UMass group VOX to make sure emergency contraception was being sold to customers.

After "stinging" the pharmacies in Amherst and Hadley, VOX members confirmed that all the pharmacies dispensed emergency contraception to patrons with prescriptions or over the counter to patrons who were 18 or older.

VOX president Irene Ushomirsky and VOX member Tevin Murray went to the Target and Wal-Mart pharmacies.

"Not all pharmacies are as educated about emergency contraception as I would have expected in this liberal area," said Murray. "The pharmacist we talked to at Wal-Mart didn't seem educated about the issue at all."

After questioning the Wal-Mart pharmacist, Murray said the worker did not know the proper name for the "abortion pill" or RU-486.

In February 2006, Wal-Mart pharmacies in Massachusetts were required to carry emergency contraception after the state's pharmacy board ruled in favor of three women who sued Wal-Mart.

"I felt better knowing that Wal-Mart dispenses Plan B," said Ushomirsky.

At Wal-Mart and Target, Plan B costs approximately $47. Most medical insurance does not cover emergency contraception.

After the pharmacy "sting," the 10 attendees of the "Live Action Camp" listened to a lecture by Emily Rigmont, the site coordinator of Massachusetts for microbicides.

Microbicides are products being developed to prevent the sexual transmission of HIV and other STIs for women. Microbicides will likely come in the form of gel, cream, sponge or a vaginal ring.

Rigmont asked VOX members to participate in an activity where they pitched the best way to sell microbicides to specific demographics of women.

One group shared that women in violent and abusive relationships could control their contraception by using microbicides to protect themselves against HIV and other STIs.

"Microbicides can put sexual power in the hands of women," said VOX member Stephanie Luke.

With research and testing being done on microbicides, Rigmont claimed that women in sub-Saharan Africa could greatly benefit from microbicides by being able to protect themselves from the HIV epidemic.

The Global Campaign for Microbicides is lobbying for the Microbicides Development Act of 2007, which will ensure the U.S. government's commitment to microbicide research.

The "Live Action Camp" ended with VOX members going door to door in Kennedy Tower to attain signatures petitioning the legislation of the Microbicides Development Act of 2007.

"I liked the fact that we learned about microbicides and emergency contraception and then got real life experience," said Luke.

Sara Afzal can be reached at safzal@student.umass.edu.

Politics survey conducted at UM

By Lisa DeBenedictis
Collegian Staff

As the 2008 Presidential election draws closer, the University of Massachusetts can see for itself how it measures up in terms of political affiliation and hot-button issues.

A survey was created and distributed in March by a UMass communication class, COMM 497XX, which researched UMass students' opinions regarding national political affiliations and issues such as health care, immigration, the environment, mandatory voting and the war in Iraq.

"My students wanted to know where other students stand on political issues," said assistant professor Ekra Miezan. "They tried to investigate whether political affiliation had an affect on how they vote, and how they think about those issues in general."

The survey revealed that roughly 40 percent of UMass students surveyed identify themselves as Democrats, 15 percent as Republicans, and 31 percent as Independents.

"I was surprised at the number of Independents, as this seems to be such a liberal campus, in a liberal area," added Miezan.

However, one of the communication students who helped conduct the survey, UMass junior Jared Gilman, was not so surprised.

"I've noticed that [UMass students] were most in favor of a need for more political parties," said Gilman. "There is an unhappiness with the way this country is split, and the party labeling that may stop them from siding with one party more than the actual issues themselves."

Additionally, the survey disclosed which national issues the surveyed UMass students favored.

Concern for the environment topped the list, with 91 percent of all surveyed agreeing that the United States should invest more in alternative energy to save the environment.

Following that, 83 percent of those surveyed displayed an interest in encouraging other party affiliations in the democratic process, 83 percent believe Americans should have more say on how their tax dollars are spent, 79 percent believe it is a basic human right to have healthcare and 78 percent support the implementation of universal health care in the United States.

"Nothing surprised me in this survey, because look where we are," said UMass senior and one of the class leaders of the survey, Rachel Siddiqi. "It is pretty liberal on this campus."

As for the issues students were least in favor of, 90 percent of students surveyed disagree with the proposal that people should be fined if they do not vote, 81 percent believe that the war in Iraq is illegitimate, 76 percent do not support the prolonging of U.S. troops in Iraq, 68 percent do not believe that the two-party system best represents the views of the country and 68 percent oppose giving amnesty to all illegal immigrants.

Primarily, political affiliation affected the way students voted on issues more than any other factor.

According to the survey, Democrats were more liberal on social, political and economic issues, while Republicans were more conservative. Independents proved to consistently side with the Democrats, taking a liberal view on many of the issues.

"I was actually surprised about the Independents agreeing a lot with the liberal ideas," said UMass junior communications and journalism major Julie Lonardo, a teaching assistant of the class. "If we had done a survey outside of Amherst I think it may have been different."

When examining other socio-economic factors, the survey uncovered that of those surveyed, women tended to be more liberal than men, especially with social issues.

"Social issues affect women more than men," said Siddiqi. "They are the primary caregivers, and things like abortion and health care are going to affect them."

Another factor that affected the way students vote was family income. The higher the student's family income, the more conservative they were about immigration, in particular the support of a wall between the United States and Mexico.

"My understanding is that with more lower-class people coming into the country we end up paying more Social Security, more taxes in general, which affect the riches' tax dollars," said Jared Barney, another member of the class.

The results that surprised professor Miezan the most was just how much political affiliation affected the way students view issues.

"The views on the war in Iraq really surprised me," said Miezan. "After all the evidence that we went on wrong motives, I was hoping that both Democrat and Republicans would agree that it is illegitimate. That had me worried a little bit. If we cannot see fact, is it that our political affiliation is blinding us? Bring this attitude toward global warming."

"Democrats see it as a threat but Republicans still do not," he continued. "If there is some concern and factual evidence, we should all see it as human beings, rather than a Republican view or a Democratic view – a human perspective. If someone is dying, I don't have to see it as a Democratic or Republican view. Dying is dying. These major issues are causing major divides in this country, and these divides will lead us into major conflicts."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

CREATIVE?
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR DAY AND NIGHT
GRAPHICS
STAFF
MEMEBERS
INTERESTED?
COME VISIT THE COLLEGIAN IN THE CAMPUS CENTER BASEMENT TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION

FEATURES

Disabled but not down: life at UMass

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Although many campus buildings are handicap accessible, including the Isenberg School of Management with its ramps and elevators, many still need the necessary changes.

BY CARA GRANNEMANN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For nearly all students at the University of Massachusetts, the hardest part of the day is getting through classes, exams and homework. But some students face everyday difficulties by having a medical, physical, mobility, visual, hearing, learning, mental or temporary disability.

According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, some 18 to 19 percent of the population has a disability.

Also, according to a study at the College Disability Services Web site for the State University of New York at Buffalo, 1.3 million of these people are students.

To accommodate students with disabilities, UMass Disability Services serves qualifying students under the American Disabilities Act of 1990, according to Disability Services consumer manager Benjamin Ostiguy.

"We offer a range of services and programs that support the academic, social and professional lives of people with disabilities while here at UMass," said Ostiguy. "Additionally, Disability Services is a resource for any campus community member who may have questions regarding appropriate accommodations or require workshops or trainings regarding disability oppression."

Ostiguy noted that according to the ADA of 1990, "no qualified individual with a disability shall, solely on the basis of their disability, be excluded from participation in, be denied benefits of or otherwise be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity in higher education."

Zoe Crowley, a junior at UMass and a member of Disability Services, was born with spina bifida – a condition that has caused her to be paralyzed from the waist down.

Though there are multiple correct terms for someone with a disability, such as the newly coined term "differently abled," Crowley prefers disabled person, or person with a disability.

According to Crowley, she has had an overall good experience on campus regarding Disability Services, but has also come into some obstacles.

"Many of the academic buildings are inaccessible, or only accessible on the first floor, and I have had many professors who have offices in the inaccessible parts," she said. "Luckily for the most part, my professors have been more than willing to work with me and meet me somewhere else."

In addition to teacher cooperation on campus, Disability Services also helps students who cannot reach their academic destinations.

According to Ostiguy, "If a student with a mobility impairment notifies us that they are enrolled in a course in an inaccessible building or room, we will work with the scheduling office to have the course moved to an accessible location."

For some students without disabilities, they think about the difficulties of having a disability on campus, especially when it comes to their social life.

Sophomores Joe Krassler and Joe Migliaccio both noted that it is unfair that some dorms are inaccessible to students with disabilities, but also noted that making the dorms accessible would be an expensive undertaking.

Disability Services, however, has made many accommodations in student housing for persons with disabilities.

According to sophomore Laura Van Schyndel, her friend who has a lot of health-related issues has been well-accommodated in his housing, and that "he has a really nice room in Southwest."

According to Crowley, this is an issue she has encountered in the past. She said, "Visiting friends in their dorms has been an issue. Luckily, oftentimes my friends are strong, and willing to carry me upstairs if we really want to hang out in their room for whatever reason."

Though this many be a temporary solution to the issue of dorm inaccessibility, it is unfortunately hindering a leadership opportunity for Crowley.

"Now one of the reasons that this is frustrating is applying for the RA position – it diminishes greatly where I can be an RA, something that I am really interested in doing," she said.

According to Crowley, another challenge she faces is a sense of community with other persons with disabilities.

"I often feel frustrated that I am one of only a few people with disabilities on campus. As far as I know, I am the only person in a manual wheelchair – there are others in power chairs, and while I am friendly with them, our experiences are very different," she said.

She also said that a lack of community within persons with disabilities is something she will face after college.

"I have made friends with some people with different disabilities other than myself, but really, it is feeling like I can't relate to others. I also am aware that this is going to be something I have to deal with for the rest of my life, no matter where I live or work or what I do," she said.

In addition, she attributes the easiest part of her experience at UMass to being an extroverted person who can make friends easily.

As for transportation, Crowley finds the UMass van service helpful, which is one of the many organizations associated with Disability Services.

According to Ostiguy, accommodations for students with disabilities are determined on a case-by-case basis, but there are many more programs that accommodate more "popular" needs.

This includes the Test Proctoring Program, Note Taking Program, Communication Access Program, Information Access Program, Lab/Classroom Assistants and Academic Access Assistance Program, which vary in eligibility for each student.

"Disability Services offers a one-credit Academic Access course that allows students to explore their learning abilities and challenges, and develop stronger organizational and academic skills," Ostiguy said.

Ostiguy also said Disability Services works closely with the UMass Parking Services, Transit Services and Housing assignments, and also offers scholarships to qualified students ranging from $100 to more than $1,000.

In this sense, UMass Disability Services outshines many other universities across the country – including University of New Hampshire and University of Arizona, both of which have been cited for violations in the past, according to an article by USA Today on the College Disabilities' Web site.

"From speaking with service providers from other campuses, as well as the conversations I have had with prospective students and their families, I can confidently say that we compare favorably with other colleges and universities," said Ostiguy. "In addition to the quality and quantity of our programs, I believe it is our department's commitment to social justice and our recognition of the strengths and gifts that people with disabilities possess that truly sets us apart."

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu.

Life's 'Simple Gifts'

BY EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Eating locally grown products has become very popular in recent years, and one local farm is connecting people with food produced right in North Amherst.

Simple Gifts Farm runs its operation on-site with land leased from the North Amherst Community Farm that is, according to its Web site, a non-profit organization and proud owner of an approximately 36-acre farm.

The vegetable operation at the farm is run by Jeremy Barker Plotkin, who has a master's degree in Plant and Soil Sciences from the University of Maine and has owned and operated Simple Gifts since 1999. His wife, Audrey, received her master's in Forestry from UMaine and runs the "people" side of the business.

According to Barker Plotkin, being a small farm takes a lot of hard work.

"This time of year we work on the tractors, work the ground up, we spend a fair amount of time in the greenhouse starting plants that we're going to put in the ground, a lot of planting and working the soil with the tractors. Later on we'll get into weeding and harvesting," he said.

The farmers work together with apprentices to complete daily tasks, according to William Hough, a University of Massachusetts student that worked and lived at the farm full time.

"The farm apprentices all share the same duties which include [...] the maintaining of all the farm equipment, the maintenance of the buildings, the handling and feeding of animals, the planting and harvesting of crops, the upkeep of the greenhouse, the managing of the booth at the farmer's market, driving trucks and looking fantastic in flannel," Hough said in jest.

Simple Gifts Farm, located in North Amherst, is one of many area farms providing an alternative to buying produce at chain supermarkets.

A regular day at the farm, said Hough, consists of reporting to the barn at 6:30 a.m., being assigned various tasks for the day, completing those tasks, breaking for lunch and then doing more work.

"At five, we'd call it a day and most of us would bike to Puffer's Pond," he said. "We didn't really have a shower, so that was our way of cleaning off."

And with all this work, the farm produces a variety of different vegetables.

"We do a lot of tomatoes, especially Heirloom tomatoes, we grow a salad mix, garlic, summer squash, a lot of greens; basically anything that we are able to grow around here," said Barker Plotkin.

Hough really got to experience the full effect of being around a farm by actually living at there. For him, it was initially an adjustment to live around young children who lived with their family on the farm as well, receiving phone calls such as one he got at 4 a.m. when some of the goats escaped from their pen.

Another adjustment Hough had to make was living in a trailer behind the farm before moving into the actual farmhouse.

"I learned a new appreciation for simplicity and was amazed by how little space a human really needs to live," he said. "When you really think about it, you just need a bed."

The overall experience described by Hough was like a scene out of a movie. "We'd listen to Neil Young and sit on the porch, smoking cigarettes or drinking tea, talking about revolution, women we loved and books."

Simple Gifts is part of the Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) network, which means the farm pays for a portion of the CSA farm's expenses and in return, receives a share of the harvest. By having a CSA share, Simple Gifts receives a weekly array of seasonal vegetables from June through October. A full share is typically enough for two to four adults, their Web site said.

Being a small operation, SGF is up against many larger corporations, but Barker Plotkin has found an increase in recent years of support for small farms.

"I think of myself as being in a different segment of the market [than chain supermarkets]. We're more catering to the Whole Foods crowds," he said. "There is a lot of understanding about the importance of growing locally these days, especially around here, and I think there's been a wave of interest nationally too."

UMass junior Gabriel Chicoine also thinks that people in the Amherst area are more likely to buy locally-grown food.

"I think in this area it's easier for small farms because people are more aware of [the health benefits] of eating locally grown foods," said Chicoine.

Corey Charran, a UMass Junior, believes the large amount of college-aged people in the area may also better understand the benefits of eating locally grown.

"I think our generation in general is more aware of eating healthily," said Charran.

Barker Plotkin sees the benefits of locally grown food to the economy and the local land.

"Eating locally grown food supports the local economy and keeps space open that you drive by every day and that keeps the New England landscape looking like New England," he said.

That is not to say that it is easy for a small farm to make a living.

"It's a job; the really hard part is putting it together in a business that can sustain [itself]" Plotkin said. "Selling my products is really a problem."

Eating locally grown food, however, definitely has its benefits, according to Barker Plotkin.

"There are health benefits. There's higher nutritional quality and it will also taste better. It's picked fresh, so it is a variety that is not adapted to being shipped long distances and that helps to maintain the flavor and quality."

Ken Toong, director of Dining Services at UMass, believes locally grown food has many benefits as well.

"Our chefs love the food grown locally because it is fresher and more favorable," he said.

According to Toong, 23 percent of produce used at UMass Dining Commons are locally grown and Dining Services recently won the Ivy Award by Restaurants and Institutions Magazine, for its outstanding food service, support sustainability, diversity of world cuisines and consistent efforts to improve and stay on top.

"We believe it is the right thing to do by supporting the local economy and preserving the farm land," said Toong.

Serving locally grown food has brought the option to students who have UMass meal plans, but off-campus students without a meal plan sometimes lack the means to purchase locally.

"I live off campus and I would definitely prefer [to eat locally grown foods], but it's generally too expensive for a college student," said Chicoine. "Occasionally I'll buy farm fresh eggs and vegetables, if I can when they're in season."

Hough recommends that people spend the extra money and buy locally grown foods.

"If you want to see the affect your money has and you care about what you spend it on and you're mindful, then buy produce from a local farmer and then go out and have a beer with him or her," said Hough. "They can tell you how each one of your dollars helps them."

Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu.

EDITORIAL OPINION

John Locke in America

Eric Magazu

'Rachamim' is the transliteration of the Hebrew word that connotes mercy and compassion. The conventional wisdom posits that if strong world powers, including the United States, were to exercise this quality of mercy in the sphere of foreign relations, we would be perceived around the world as possessing a weak will. This argument states that we would lose the respect of other nations.

The government officials and casual observers who rely on this assessment maintain that we must act in a realistic, Machiavellian manner, by putting down any threats to American hegemony quickly, and not seeking to bring about love, but rather fear, in our potential adversaries.

I do not agree with this view. One of the lessons we can acquire from studying American history is that when a nation acts primarily on the basis of its first principles, especially when those principles are rooted in an ethical system founded in a proper understanding of divine law, then such a nation will always secure the blessings of heaven upon its people.

American statesmen of the past certainly affirmed such a view, including, as recently as two decades ago, President Ronald Reagan, who, in a national address on Jan. 11, 1989, reflected, 'Because we're a great nation, our challenges seem complex [...] But as long as we remember our first principles [...] the future will always be ours."

The task before us is to define these first principles, and once we have done so, to determine if such principles are binding upon all people and all nations. Philosophers throughout the centuries have made attempts to find such a universal code. Perhaps the most well known, considering his influence on the American founders, is John Locke.

Locke theorized that there is such a universal code that exists when men live in a state of nature. The state of nature exists prior to the establishment of governments, and in this state, men are free to take whatever measures necessary to protect their life, liberty and property. Locke affirms that the establishment of governments is by the voluntary, or implicit, consent of men in order to better protect these natural rights. Locke posits that such a law of nature can be deduced when men invoke their rational facilities, without any reliance on external sources, such as the Scriptures.

Thus the law of nature appears insufficient for producing the ideal of harmony among men and among nations. There must exist another law that rectifies this deficiency. This law is what is referred to as divine law, the law of God, or as invoked by John Winthrop, the law of the Gospel.

The law of nature can be understood to be a compromise with the flawed state of mankind. This law commands us to refrain from any actions that may be harmful to our fellow citizens. While this may be sufficient to maintain the basic order of society, it will never have the power to restore damaged relationships among men and among nations. The law of nature may maintain a human form of justice among men, but it fails to regenerate sincere brotherly affection. This can only be established through mercy and compassion.

In philosophy, there exists the concept of the 'logos.' "Logos' is a Greek word that conveys the idea of reason or argument. 'Logos' also implies the use of speech. Man is made in the image of God most closely through the use of speech. It is through speech that man invokes – rightly or wrongly – the celestial attributes of justice and mercy. Through justice we may establish order, but only through mercy can a man love his neighbor as himself.

The law of nature ... will never have the power to restore damaged relationships among men and among nations.

The relationships among nations parallel the relationships among men. Through speech and dialogue we can begin to right the wrongs that have occurred among the community of nations. This cannot occur unless all parties sincerely begin to understand each other's positions. This is done through compassion. This mercy most closely mirrors God's own mercy in the most powerful of nations.

I cannot know with certainty that other nations would show us the same mercy. But this I do know: it is up to us, in our day, to begin to make things right again. If this position is naive, then so be it; at least the conscience of our nation will remain intact, and this is all that counts in the end.

I close by considering the teaching of John Winthrop, one of the early governors of Massachusetts. "The Lord will be our God, and delight to dwell among us, as His own people, and will command a blessing upon us in all our ways, so that we shall see much more of His wisdom, power, goodness and truth, than formerly we have been acquainted with. We shall find that the God of Israel is among us [...] He shall make us a praise and glory that men shall say of succeeding plantations, 'may the Lord make it like that of New England.'"

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

When George signs a bill

Hannah Nelson

I have a very strong dislike for private student loan companies. I'm no expert, but a large amount of government control over loans comes across as quite socialist in my mind. I certainly am not advocating the sole existence of private loans – far from it – but it is the balance of both that is essential.

That being said, the Bush administration is urging for the progress of legislation in Congress that would give the government the ability to buy private student loans so that the lenders can use the profits to make more loans. The bill also proposes an increase in the amount of federal aid that students are allowed to borrow amidst the epidemic of student debt. But the bill would also be temporary, lasting only until July 2009.

The Ensuring Continued Access to Student Loans Act has been passed in the House and has moved on to the Senate. It must make it to the president's desk by June 1 in order to have any impact for the coming fall semester. The scariest part of all? If the government doesn't get control over a certain amount of loans, then the claim is that pickings are going to be very slim for the summer loan application season. The credit crunch could be cutting off eligibility for many students and their parents. This is a shocking turn of events considering the last I knew there were plenty of private loan companies eager to have me sign in blood.

Bush needs to do something to keep the economy afloat, but why choose student loans? Is nothing sacred?

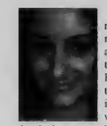
"A slowdown in the economy shouldn't mean a downturn in educational opportunities," Bush said in a speech addressing the legislation he is pushing in Congress. As lovely as those words are to hear, his underlying motives are flashing brighter than Vegas lights. The economy is in bad shape, everyone knows it. Bush is feeling pressure to do something about it. If you want to help out students, do something with a sticking effect. Quick fixes are nice in the moment, but the aftermath is almost always a guaranteed hell. Bush needs to do something to keep the economy afloat, but why choose student loans? Is nothing sacred? Thank you, Mr. Bush for encouraging the financial demise of America's future workforce so that you can make it look like your trying to fix the economy.

"Many students may approach the upcoming year uncertain of when they will able to get their loans or where they may come from," Bush said in his radio speech.

Since when is this a revelation? This is a low blow. Sure, on the surface this idea seems in the student's favor, as federal loans are generally more favorable to the student's purse and an increased borrowing capacity would certainly help there. But once the economy is back in place, which is a highly debatable issue in its own right, then what? And what makes this solution the only one on the table? Is the buying up of private loans really the best way to go about it?

In fact, Sallie Mae, which went completely private in 2005 after starting as a government-sponsored loan company, is now lobbying for government help. This is a curious thing considering it has one of the largest returns rates as one of the top student loan companies. Sallie Mae claims it has a lot to lose with the new legislation, a sentiment being shared by its rivals.

If Sallie Mae is honestly in as much trouble as it is asserting, then which is the lesser of the two evils? Socializing student loans or fighting for a loan in the first place? Maybe we are finally at the breaking point now because actions weren't taken in the past. Interest rates didn't just spontaneously explode to their current level. The news of the proposed loan changes are already having a negative impact on private lenders, with Sallie Mae shares dropping within hours of the news breaking across the Internet. Lenders are warning that government action will only make problems worse in the long run.



Given that if the bill doesn't make it to the president's desk soon, too little, too late will be the appropriate theme. Waiting until the last minute isn't a good idea with term papers and it isn't good with congressional legislation, either. My overwhelming complaint is what took so long?

Students have struggled to pay for education for centuries, but to speak in more contemporary terms, matters had been getting steadily more difficult even before all the hubbub over the economy started. I, for one, don't want to be a pawn for the ailing economy's recovery, but all too often college students can't be choosers.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.

GET YOUR ED/OP AUDIO AT
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Greed, avarice, covetousness and the UMass life

Leigh Greaney

America is driven by money. A disease of greed runs more rampant than any epidemic that we battle, from AIDS to obesity. From corporate scandals to corrupt politicians and into our day-to-day lives, we see greed rear its ugly head, taking away the 'moral fiber' American's claim to represent. This greed sullies the things we hold to be honest for the sake of competition and self-betterment.

This relentless ambition seems to never end. There is always someone out there that has it better than we do. There is always a higher pedestal we seek to place ourselves on. Yet, we seem to blind ourselves to its consequences. We mask the truth of what our means are by the successful feeling of our ends.

Greed drives everything we recognize as wrong. Murder, exploitation, false advertising, slavery, lies and theft are the children of this envious culture. If something seems too far out of reach to obtain by moral standards, greed takes over, leaving immorality in its path to getting what is desired.

Even here at UMass, we are riddled with greed. We see it every day. People take what is not theirs as long as they are able to reap the benefits. From other people's answers on exam questions to other people's laptops, what is taken with greed is never authentic to its new possessor. Stolen victims of greed, such as other people's ideas, seem to slip under the radar while the bigger issues – usually in the form of material objects – are brought to light. However, their impact is the same and is never virtuous.

Even the concept of gained knowledge, our whole purpose for attending college, is not safe from a fate of materialism. With essays that can be bought and sold for credit and through plagiarism, knowledge loses its value. The degree at graduation becomes more important than the road to the diploma. Even worse, the diploma is tainted as a fakery of wisdom and a fakery of tribute.

We are lazy. We want everything for nothing.

More obvious examples of avarice also plague the campus. Walking through the Campus Center, it's common to see tables set up displaying and selling jewelry, clothing and many other forms of art. All too often have passersby taken an object for sale without paying. They stuff that thing, whatever it may be, into the depths of their pocket and sneak off with it simply to have it.

It's not necessary. It's just a thing to have.

With no appreciation for the hand that made it and no appreciation for the meaning of the object, it becomes nothing more than a dollar sign and a possession for the sake of possession.

Anything that could have a price tag on it becomes fair game for the self-indulgent. If in any way something could be used as a means to an end of materialism, its function is lost and the outcome seems to be the all-mighty determinant.

If we cannot appreciate the art of others' minds and the art of what others have created, then what is taken has no true value to its thief. When the meaning is removed, all that is left is the covetousness. To know hard work and to know passion should slay greed, yet it still persists. If we know how important authenticity is to ourselves in our own lives, how is it so easy for us to disrespect the authenticity of others?

The idea of something being easy overshadows the idea of something being genuine because of this gluttony. The motivation to cheat life and produce the same results as someone who makes their material fortune morally seems voracious. We are lazy. We want everything for nothing.

It seems that the only cure to this epidemic is the knowledge of how to reach our ends without greed as our means. We need to see that it is not the outcome of our doings that holds importance, but how we got there that gives us self-worth and value. If the journey is more applauded then the endpoint then this insatiable lust for money can be healed.

When we put value into our own brush stokes, so to speak, we may be more able to appreciate the beauty of others. When the idea of completion seems pointless without self-reflection of our own work, authenticity can be born. If this can be done, we will realize that with greed we are only taking beauty away from ourselves and those who fight to maintain the truth of their own beauty.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Y GIVES SPEECH ... OTHER GUY DISAGREES, SOURCES SAY ... GOOD GUYS WI

EDITORIAL OPINION

John Locke in America

Eric Magazu

'Rachamim' is the transliteration of the Hebrew word that connotes mercy and compassion. The conventional wisdom posits that if strong world powers, including the United States, were to exercise this quality of mercy in the sphere of foreign relations, we would be perceived around the world as possessing a weak will. This argument states that we would lose the respect of other nations.

The government officials and casual observers who rely on this assessment maintain that we must act in a realistic, Machiavellian manner, by putting down any threats to American hegemony quickly, and not seeking to bring about love, but rather fear, in our potential adversaries.

I do not agree with this view. One of the lessons we can acquire from studying American history is that when a nation acts primarily on the basis of its first principles, especially when those principles are rooted in an ethical system founded in a proper understanding of divine law, then such a nation will always secure the blessings of heaven upon its people.

The law of nature ... will never have the power to restore damaged relationships among men and among nations.

American statesmen of the past certainly affirmed such a view, including, as recently as two decades ago, President Ronald Reagan, who, in a national address on Jan. 11, 1989, reflected, 'Because we're a great nation, our challenges seem complex [...] But as long as we remember our first principles [...] the future will always be ours.'"

The task before us is to define these first principles, and once we have done so, to determine if such principles are binding upon all people and all nations. Philosophers throughout the centuries have made attempts to find such a universal code. Perhaps the most well known, considering his influence on the American founders, is John Locke.

Locke theorized that there is such a universal code that exists when men live in a state of nature. The state of nature exists prior to the establishment of governments, and in this state, men are free to take whatever measures necessary to protect their life, liberty and property. Locke affirms that the establishment of governments is by the voluntary, or implicit, consent of men in order to better protect these natural rights. Locke posits that such a law of nature can be deduced when men invoke their rational facilities, without any reliance on external sources, such as the Scriptures.

Thus the law of nature appears insufficient for producing the ideal of harmony among men and among nations. There must exist another law that rectifies this deficiency. This law is what is referred to as divine law, the law of God, or as invoked by John Winthrop, the law of the Gospel.

The law of nature can be understood to be a compromise with the flawed state of mankind. This law commands us to refrain from any actions that may be harmful to our fellow citizens. While this may be sufficient to maintain the basic order of society, it will never have the power to restore damaged relationships among men and among nations. The law of nature may maintain a human form of justice among men, but it fails to regenerate sincere brotherly affection. This can only be established through mercy and compassion.

In philosophy, there exists the concept of the 'logos.' 'Logos' is a Greek word that conveys the idea of reason or argument. 'Logos' also implies the use of speech. Man is made in the image of God most closely through the use of speech. It is through speech that man invokes – rightly or wrongly – the celestial attributes of justice and mercy. Through justice we may establish order, but only through mercy can a man love his neighbor as himself.

The relationships among nations parallel the relationships among men. Through speech and dialogue we can begin to right the wrongs that have occurred among the community of nations. This cannot occur unless all parties sincerely begin to understand each other's positions. This is done through compassion. This mercy most closely mirrors God's own mercy in the most powerful of nations.

I cannot know with certainty that other nations would show us the same mercy. But this I do know: it is up to us, in our day, to begin to make things right again. If this position is naive, then so be it; at least the conscience of our nation will remain intact, and this is all that counts in the end.

I close by considering the teaching of John Winthrop, one of the early governors of Massachusetts, "The Lord will be our God, and delight to dwell among us, as His own people, and will command a blessing upon us in all our ways, so that we shall see much more of His wisdom, power, goodness and truth, than formerly we have been acquainted with. We shall find that the God of Israel is among us [...] He shall make us a praise and glory that men shall say of succeeding plantations, 'may the Lord make it like that of New England.'"

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu

When George signs a bill

Hannah Nelson

I have a very strong dislike for private student loan companies. I'm no expert, but a large amount of government control over loans comes across as quite socialist in my mind. I certainly am not advocating the sole existence of private loans – far from it – but it is the balance of both that is essential.

That being said, the Bush administration is urging for the progress of legislation in Congress that would give the government the ability to buy private student loans so that the lenders can use the profits to make more loans. The bill also proposes an increase in the amount of federal aid that students are allowed to borrow amidst the epidemic of student debt. But the bill would also be temporary, lasting only until July 2009.

The Ensuring Continued Access to Student Loans Act has been passed in the House and has moved on to the Senate. It must make it to the president's desk by June 1 in order to have any impact for the coming fall semester. The scariest part of all? If the government doesn't get control over a certain amount of loans, then the claim is that pickings are going to be very slim for the summer loan application season. The credit crunch could be cutting off eligibility for many students and their parents. This is a shocking turn of events considering the last I knew there were plenty of private loan companies eager to have me sign in blood.

Bush needs to do something to keep the economy afloat, but why choose student loans? Is nothing sacred?

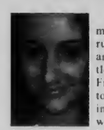
"A slowdown in the economy shouldn't mean a downturn in educational opportunities," Bush said in a speech addressing the legislation he is pushing in Congress. As lovely as those words are to hear, his underlying motives are flashing brighter than Vegas lights. The economy is in bad shape, everyone knows it. Bush is feeling pressure to do something about it. If you want to help out students, do something with a sticking effect. Quick fixes are nice in the moment, but the aftermath is almost always a guaranteed hell. Bush needs to do something to keep the economy afloat, but why choose student loans? Is nothing sacred? Thank you, Mr. Bush for encouraging the financial demise of America's future workforce so that you can make it look like your trying to fix the economy.

"Many students may approach the upcoming year uncertain of when they will able to get their loans or where they may come from," Bush said in his radio speech.

Since when is this a revelation? This is a low blow. Sure, on the surface this idea seems in the student's favor, as federal loans are generally more favorable to the student's purse and an increased borrowing capacity would certainly help there. But once the economy is back in place, which is a highly debatable issue in its own right, then what? And what makes this solution the only one on the table? Is the buying up of private loans really the best way to go about it?

In fact, Sallie Mae, which went completely private in 2005 after starting as a government-sponsored loan company, is now lobbying for government help. This is a curious thing considering it has one of the largest returns rates as one of the top student loan companies. Sallie Mae claims it has a lot to lose with the new legislation, a sentiment being shared by its rivals.

If Sallie Mae is honestly in as much trouble as it is asserting, then which is the lesser of the two evils? Socializing student loans or fighting for a loan in the first place? Maybe we are finally at the breaking point now because actions weren't taken in the past. Interest rates didn't just spontaneously explode to their current level. The news of the proposed loan changes are already having a negative impact on private lenders, with Sallie Mae shares dropping within hours of the news breaking across the Internet. Lenders are warning that government action will only make problems worse in the long run.



Given that if the bill doesn't make it to the president's desk soon, too little, too late will be the appropriate theme. Waiting until the last minute isn't a good idea with term papers and it isn't good with congressional legislation, either. My overwhelming complaint is what took so long?

Students have struggled to pay for education for centuries, but to speak in more contemporary terms, matters had been getting steadily more difficult even before all the hubbub over the economy started. I, for one, don't want to be a pawn for the ailing economy's recovery, but all too often college students can't be choosers.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.

GET YOUR ED/OP AUDIO AT
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Greed, avarice, covetousness and the UMass life

Leigh Greaney

America is driven by money. A disease of greed runs more rampant than any epidemic that we battle, from AIDS to obesity. From corporate scandals to corrupt politicians and into our day-to-day lives, we see greed rear its ugly head, taking away the 'moral fiber' American's claim to represent. This greed sullies the things we hold to be honest for the sake of competition and self-betterment.

This relentless ambition seems to never end. There is always someone out there that has it better than we do. There is always a higher pedestal we seek to place ourselves on. Yet, we seem to blind ourselves to its consequences. We mask the truth of what our means are by the successful feeling of our ends.

We are lazy. We want everything for nothing.

Greed drives everything we recognize as wrong. Murder, exploitation, false advertising, slavery, lies and theft are the children of this envious culture. If something seems too far out of reach to obtain by moral standards, greed takes over, leaving immorality in its path to getting what is desired.

Even here at UMass, we are riddled with greed. We see it every day. People take what is not theirs as long as they are able to reap the benefits. From other people's answers on exam questions to other people's laptops, what is taken with greed is never authentic to its new possessor. Stolen victims of greed, such as other people's ideas, seem to slip under the radar while the bigger issues – usually in the form of material objects – are brought to light. However, their impact is the same and is never virtuous.

Even the concept of gained knowledge, our whole purpose for attending college, is not safe from a fate of materialism. With essays that can be bought and sold for credit and through plagiarism, knowledge loses its value. The degree at graduation becomes more important than the road to the diploma. Even worse, the diploma is tainted as a fakery of wisdom and a fakery of tribute.

More obvious examples of avarice also plague the campus. Walking through the Campus Center, it's common to see tables set up displaying and selling jewelry, clothing and many other forms of art. All too often have passersby taken an object for sale without paying. They stuff that thing, whatever it may be, into the depths of their pocket and sneak off with it simply to have it.

It's not necessary. It's just a thing to have.

With no appreciation for the hand that made it and no appreciation for the meaning of the object, it becomes nothing more than a dollar sign and a possession for the sake of possession.

Anything that could have a price tag on it becomes fair game for the self-indulgent. If in any way something could be used as a means to an end of materialism, its function is lost and the outcome seems to be the all-mighty determinant.

If we cannot appreciate the art of others' minds and the art of what others have created, then what is taken has no true value to its thief. When the meaning is removed, all that is left is the covetousness. To know hard work and to know passion should slay greed, yet it still persists. If we know how important authenticity is to ourselves in our own lives, how is it so easy for us to disrespect the authenticity of others?

The idea of something being easy overshadows the idea of something being genuine because of this gluttony. The motivation to cheat life and produce the same results as someone who makes their material fortune morally seems voracious. We are lazy. We want everything for nothing.

It seems that the only cure to this epidemic is the knowledge of how to reach our ends without greed as our means. We need to see that it is not the outcome of our doings that holds importance, but how we got there that gives us self-worth and value. If the journey is more applauded then the endpoint then this insatiable lust for money can be healed.

When we put value into our own brush stokes, so to speak, we may be more able to appreciate the beauty of others. When the idea of completion seems pointless without self-reflection of our own work, authenticity can be born. If this can be done, we will realize that with greed we are only taking beauty away from ourselves and those who fight to maintain the truth of their own beauty.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu

Y GIVES SPEECH ... OTHER GUY DISAGREES, SOURCES SAY ... GOOD GUYS WI

ARTS & LIVING

Band flexing some Mussels

COURTESY BRANDON LENIHAN

Brooklyn indie rockers set to play WMUA Spring Concert Kick-Off

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With catchy songs and good lyrics, Mussels – the Brooklyn-based, four-member band – is starting to make a name for itself.

In a recent e-mail interview, amid heavy schedules, Brandon Lenihan of Mussels provided answers to some key questions trying to get to know them before their WMUA Spring Kick-Off Concert show Sunday afternoon at the Student Union Ballroom.

Ian Nelson: After hearing all the songs on your MySpace page, I guess my first question is what sort of bands, whether it's older stuff or contemporary, influence your music and motivate you to do what you do?

Brandon Lenihan: I think we all pretty much grew up during the "Golden Age" of indie rock with bands like Pavement, Polvo, Unrest, Superchunk, Archers of Loaf, Fugazi, Sebadoh, Modest Mouse, Built to Spill, etc., leaving lasting impressions on all of us. Beyond that though, bigger acts like Weezer, Guns N' Roses, Yes, Thin Lizzy and others certainly seeped into our brains as well over the years.

IN: I see you're from Brooklyn. Are you guys all from Brooklyn originally? How and when did you meet?

BL: Yeah, we all live in Brooklyn now. John [Niccoli] and I moved down here in '99 from Albany, N.Y., to start a band called tinc-antelephone. We started Mussels in late 2004 with Brody Boyer (drums) and Dan Briggs (bass) whom we basically met through the Craigslist music pages. Brody's from Georgia and Dan's from the [Washington] D.C., area, but both of them have been living in Brooklyn for a while now.

IN: Why start making music together?

BL: Do kids really grow up thinking that playing in a rock band doesn't look fun? I don't know why more people don't do it.

IN: What's the Brooklyn music scene like nowadays?

BL: The Brooklyn music scene is all over the place. It would be pretty hard to say it has a definitive sound right now.

IN: What bands are doing things similar to you guys and who do you look up to?

BL: We regularly play with a bunch of bands we really respect – Appomattox (who we played five dates with on our recent tour and who also just released an amazing debut LP called "AO"), Goes

See MUSSELS on page 10

Joe's latest effort enough to silence critics

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An "elephant in the room" is a phrase describing "a problem or issue that is present but which everyone avoids or ignores."

That problem, as some in the rap circles may believe, is that Fat Joe's relevance as an artist is dead and that he should be consequently ignored. They think his skills have diminished and that he will never recover from being dropped by Atlantic Records.

With Fat Joe's new album, "The Elephant in the Room," the Puerto Rican rapper is out to show that the only elephant in the room is the people who doubted him.

With a solid individual performance on his new CD, Fat Joe hasn't totally accomplished that, but he's at least stopped the stampede of his critics.

The strength of the album is also its weakness – all 12 songs are solid, but none of them jump out at you. This provides a deep CD that can be popped in and listened to at anytime, but there are no instant-hits that you want playing at your party, a la "Lean Back," "New York," or "Make it Rain."

For whatever reason, Fat Joe seems to be some type of running joke, a rapper that never gets the respect he deserves. Maybe it's his name or his weight, things that could possibly keep people from taking him seriously.

One of the biggest issues with the album – believe it or not – is that there isn't enough Fat Joe on it. Forget the fact that there are only 12 songs (and a total running time of fewer than 43 minutes) on the CD, but almost every song has some other artist featured on it. In some instances this is a good thing, but Fat Joe is the strength on this album and far too often someone else is ruining the track.

The album features good, interesting and uptempo beats throughout, which can be largely attributed to a solid group of producers: Swizz Beatz, DJ Khaled, Scott Storch and Danja.

The opening track on the album, "The Fugitive," serves as an introductory song to the CD, providing a glimpse into why Fat Joe named his eighth album what he did. "Major label drop me, what I do? I got richer," he raps.

In terms of introducing the album and what it's all about – it does a great job. Other than that, it's one of the weaker songs on the CD, filled with way too much swearing.

The last song on the CD, "That White," is another of the weaker songs on the album. But what's in between those two songs is a good effort.

As I mentioned earlier, there are no instant hits on this album, but there are a few songs worthy of any iPod or sampling at a party. My two personal favorites are "I Won't Tell," featuring J. Holiday and "Cocababy," featuring Jackie Rubio. With the latter, the hook by Rubio actually detracts from the quality of the song, but Fat Joe is great and it's a catchy song that can be danced to. In "I Won't Tell," Joe and J. Holiday have great chemistry going back-and-forth in the song, which adds a good dimension to one of the slower songs on the album.

On the flip side, songs like "300 Brolic," and "Preacher on a Sunday Morning," are two of the collaborative songs that really disappoint and take away from Fat Joe's performance on the album.

Fat Joe is at his finest on "K.A.R.," which provides some impressive rapping and really shows off his lyrical talents. It's a throwback-type song from him, something that reminds you of his better days as a member of Terror Squad. Again though, the hook of the song is a bit annoying and holds it back from being an elite track.

Fat Joe hasn't completely shed the label of his apparent demise as a major rap figure with this effort, but he's certainly made a statement.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at ernsenww@dailycollegian.com

Fat Joe's latest release "The Elephant in the Room," proves why he should be mentioned with other heavyweights of rap. Too much collaboration, however, pulls down the new album.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S
2, 3 & 4 BEDROOM APARTMENTS
IN AMHERST
FREE $1000
OFF ANY RENTAL FROM NOW THROUGH SEPTEMBER 1ST!
STOP BY FOR FREE PIZZA!
FRIDAY MAY 2ND 8:30AM-7PM
&
SATURDAY MAY 3RD 10AM-3PM
ONLY
CALL 253-7377 OR STOP BY OUR OFFICE 420 RIVERGLADE DRIVE

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, May 2

THEATER

Mount Holyoke's Shakespeare Mafia presents a free performance of "As You Like It" in the amphitheater at Mount Holyoke College at 6:30 p.m. In the case of rain, the play will move to Chaplin Auditorium. An afternoon encore will take place Saturday at 1:30 p.m. in the amphitheater (or the rain location, Blanchard Auditorium).

•

"A Shel Silverstein Evening," a piece based on Silverstein's work, will take place at 8 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center. The event is free, open to the public and will be performed by UMass Theater students. An encore will be held Saturday at 5 p.m. in the same location.

FILM

"Be Kind Rewind" will be screened in the Cape Cod Lounge at 8 and 10 p.m. The movie follows two video store workers, played by Jack Black and Mos Def, who must remake films that they accidentally erased. The event is free and open to the public. Free popcorn and refreshments will be available. The movie will be re-shown on Monday at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

COMEDY

Comedian George Carlin will be performing at the Calvin Theater at 7p.m. and 9:30 p.m. Ticket prices range from $48 to $28.

Saturday, May 3

DANCE

UMass dance students will be performing their own choreographed jazz, ballet and modern dance pieces. Titled "Emerging Choreographer's Series," it will take place in the Hampshire College Studio Theater at 8 p.m. Tickets are $8 to the general public and $5 for Five-College students, children and senior citizens.

Sunday, May 4

MUSIC

New York rock band The Secret Machines will play in the clubroom at Pearl Street in support of their forthcoming album. They will be joined by Beltmer Dolls and Glue Bag. The show is set to start at 8 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

•

UMass Spring Concert festivities take place starting at 12:30 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom with the WMUA Spring Concert Kick-Off. The UMass Spring Concert starts at 6 p.m. in the Mullins Center.

LITERATURE

The Gallery of Readers Sunday series continues with a reading by two local writers, Teresa Whitaker and John Broglio. The event is free and open to the public. It will take place in the Nelson Library Browsing Room at 4 p.m.

-Compiled by Allie Roth; Collegian Staff

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!

COME CELEBRATE WITH US AT

Salem Cross Inn

— RESTAURANT —

Route 9, 260 West Main St., West Brookfield, MA

Great food, Great setting, Great time! Call now to book your reservation!

Groups of any size welcome!

TO MAKE RESERVATIONS:
(508) 867-2345
www.salemcrossinn.com

Mussels talks style, music and returning to Amherst

MUSSELS from page 8

Cube (who shake the walls of our practice space and will punish you live), The Mugs, Hopewell and The Aeroplane Pageant to name a few.

IN: How often do you play shows and who have you played with?

BL: In the past, Mussels has shared the stage with Wolf Parade, Clap Your Hands Say Yeah, The Detachment Kit, The Teeth, Dark Meat, The Forms, Cinemechanica and Old Time Relijun. We usually play a couple times a month in the city.

IN: What's it like creatively to be in such an urban area like New York City?

BL: I don't think we're conscious of it, but I'm sure we push a little harder because we live in NYC. There are so many creative people in the city that many really talented artists go unnoticed. I think we're pretty happy where we slot in right now. I guess in the end you just need to be happy with what you're doing (which should be the case wherever you are) or you could get beaten down by the amount of competition.

IN: Do you have any recent recordings available?

BL: So far Mussels has one EP [extended play] and one full-length under our belt. The "Night Lights" EP came out in 2005 and the "Little Voices" LP [record] came out in May of 2007.

IN: Why choose to come to UMass? Is it part of a current tour or in support of a record or just a random gig?

BL: In March we put together a two-week tour down to SXSW [a set of film and music festivals and conferences every spring in Austin, Texas.] We stopped by WOXY [an alternative, independent, and freeform rock 'n' roll radio station in Cincinnati on our way home for a lunge session. All in all, the tour was a blast. Why UMass? Well WMUA was kind enough to invite us out, but we want to spend a lot more time playing outside of NYC this year, so we're thrilled to play UMass. Plus, I used to drive out to Northampton a lot to see shows so it'll be fun to be back in the area.

IN: There's the mindset that the Internet allows one to steal music for free and not help out the artists at all, though there's also the school of thought that without the Internet, young band such as yourselves couldn't get your music out to the masses and expose people to what you're doing. What are your thoughts on the Internet's effect on the music industry?

BL: I'm sure individually we're all over the place on this issue, but I think ideally you just want as many people to hear your music as possible. It's nice to profit from it financially, but the more fans you have the better chance you have to get paid in the long run.

IN: What do you do differently than other bands you consider your peers? What makes you stand out?

BL: No bad songs. We don't have any bad songs. All of our songs are good. I think that's the main difference (haha). I don't know, that's a hard question.

Mussels will be performing early Sunday afternoon at the Student Union Ballroom, free of charge. The show, also featuring Baker, These United States, Deer Tick and DJ Andy Ward, kicks off at 1 p.m. inside the Student Union with Hadoken performing outside at 12:30 p.m.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO/JON CASHMAN

Mussels is a four-piece indie rock band out of Brooklyn. They are one of the five acts that are playing the WMUA Spring Concert Kick-Off on Sunday at 12:30 p.m.

UMass closes out season vs. Rutgers

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team began its 2008 season hoping to prove to the world of collegiate lacrosse that despite the preseason controversy and subsequent lack of depth, the Minutemen were a contender for an ECAC Championship.

At certain times during the season, the Minutemen (5-8, 3-3 ECAC) looked like a legitimate contender for a conference championship, but inconsistency deemed 2008 a rebuilding year; a year that ends on Saturday, when Rutgers comes to Garber Field. In 2007, the Scarlet Knights (5-7, 3-3 ECAC) ended any chance the Minutemen had to play in the postseason with a 9-8 win in New Brunswick, N.J.

Last Saturday, No. 2 Syracuse destroyed the Minutemen, 16-3. The Minutemen have lost three games in a row after a three-game winning streak positioned them for a possible bid to the NCAA Tournament. Rutgers is having similar struggles recently; it has lost three of its last four games by at least six goals including a 13-7 loss to No. 4 Georgetown.

Against a team with the raw talent of the Orange, UMass's lack of depth made it almost impossible to keep up. Rutgers isn't nearly as talented as the Syracuse, but the fast pace the Scarlet Knights play at poses problems for the Minutemen.

"They're a young and athletic team with just a few seniors," said UMass coach Greg Cannella. "They're a hungry group and they'll want to come here and take it from us."

Sophomore attack Justin Pennington is Rutgers leading face-off man and overall scorer. The defending ECAC Freshman of the Year is one of the few face-off men in the nation who also regularly figures into his team's scoring. With most of UMass's seniors residing in its backfield, they can expect a difficult task in their final game at Garber Field.

BRIAN HOWES/COLLEGIAN

Greg Cannella hopes his team can pull out a win on Senior Day.

BRIAN HOWES/COLLEGIAN

Christian Hain and the Minutemen host Rutgers tomorrow afternoon.

Freshman Kory Kelly is making a strong case to bring a second-consecutive conference rookie of the year award to New Brunswick. He is second behind Pennington on the team in scoring with 22 points on 20 goals and two assists.

A host of talented underclassmen round out Rutgers offensive attack, junior midfielder Jeff Rommel is the lone upperclassman ranked atop the Scarlet Knight scoring charts.

A characteristic of young, inexperienced teams is a hesitance to shoot. For Rutgers, that hasn't been the case. While 399 isn't a particularly high total, their opponents have taken the same amount. Meanwhile, UMass's opponents have outshot them 449-404. The face-off matchup is similarly hard to call; the Minutemen have exactly half of their face-offs. The Scarlet Knights' trio of Pennington, Michael Hurwitz and Christopher Mattes combine to win 49.6 percent of its draws.

Regardless, Saturday will be both the season finale and Senior Day for UMass. The NCAA mandates that teams must win at least half their games to qualify for its tournament.

"This is last game they'll play on Garber Field for the rest of their lives," Cannella said. "It's a big game, but we try to downplay that down some because we don't want the guys getting too emotional."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Minutemen host crucial weekend set against UD

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Winning two of its final three games in last weekend's series against Saint Joseph's was key for the Massachusetts baseball team. Though they remain at the bottom of the conference standings, the Minutemen still have a chance to qualify for the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

However, if they don't win the series with Dayton this weekend, last week's success will be a distant memory and may not seem so important.

The Flyers (26-18, 9-9 A-10) come to Earl Lorden Field with plenty of motivation of their own. They're currently in a three-way tie for the sixth and final spot in the conference standings with Fordham and St. Bonaventure.

Dayton didn't start the season well in conference play, but has won five of its last six conference games, including a sweep of George Washington.

The Minutemen (14-20, 7-11 A-10) are coming off a 17-4 loss at the hands of Vermont. Nick Serino, Nathan Monroy and Jared Freni all allowed at least four runs, while none of them pitched more than 3 1/3 innings.

The probables for this weekend are Mitchell Clegg, Bryan Leigh and Mike Dicato for UMass.

Of the three, Dicato has been the most consistent in the past few weeks. He shut down Boston College and Harvard to win the Beanpot and pitched a complete game against Saint Joe's last weekend.

Clegg also went eight innings last weekend and Leigh, though inconsistent at times, has the ability to go deep into games. He's gone at least seven innings in three games this year but still averages less than six innings per start.

It's imperative that the starters make it to the late innings this weekend, as the bullpen has struggled this year and pitched significant innings in the loss to the Catamounts.

The staff will face a lineup in which every starter has at least 20 RBI. Kevin Miller leads the team in batting average (.362), while Jake Hoover leads in the power department with 34 RBI.

While they don't have one dominant starter, Dayton's pitching staff compares favorably with UMass. The Flyers have a 4.10 ERA while UMass has a team ERA of 6.37.

The Minutemen do have a much improved offense from last year when they team hit .259. Much of this is due to Adam Tempesta and Brian Baudinet.

Tempesta is the 12th most difficult hitter in the country to strike out (1 every 21 at bats) and also leads the team with 32 RBI.

After going 3-for-5 last game, Baudinet once again pushed himself above the .400 mark (.403) and shares a team-high five home runs with Kyle Multner.

GAME NOTES

UMass leads the all-time series, 9-7. Dayton's won 12 of their last 16 games since losing six consecutive from March 29 and April 6.

The Flyers have a .296 team batting average while UMass is at .282.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK

The Best Seat In Town

CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL

367 Russell St. 413-587-4233

Schedule for Friday 5/2/2008 thru Thurs. 5/8/2008

Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

(Midnight Show) - Trading Places (R)* 12:01AM

Iron Man (PG-13)* 11:15AM 1:05 2:15 4:05 5:15 7:05 8:15 10:00

Made of Honor (PG-13)* 11:25AM 2:00 4:45 7:25 10:00

Baby Mama (PG-13)* 11:00AM 1:30 4:15 7:05 9:55

Deception (R)* 9:30

Harold & Kumar: Escape From Guantanamo Bay (R)* 11:35AM 2:05 4:35 7:35 10:25

88 Minutes (R) 11:05AM 4:40 10:25

Forbidden Kingdom (PG-13) 11:10AM 2:05 4:50 7:30 10:10

Forgetting Sarah Marshall (R) 11:20AM 12:00 1:10 1:55 4:00 4:55 7:00 7:50 9:40 10:30

Young@Heart - CineArts (PG)* 11:30AM 2:20 5:00 7:40 10:15

Prom Night (PG-13) 1:40 7:45

21 (PG-13) 11:55AM 4:05 7:20 10:20

Nim's Island (PG) 11:35AM 2:10 4:35 6:55

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS

TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

UMass hosts A-10 Tourney for first time in new complex

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

This weekend the Massachusetts track and field teams will host the 2008 Atlantic 10 Outdoor Track and Field Championships at the brand-new UMass Track and Field complex. The meet will be one of the many highlights of this year's Alumni Weekend in Amherst.

Two seniors, distance runner Christina DeRosa and sprinter Alisha Tatham led the Minutewomen this season. Junior Kristen Bakanowski also put in strong performances all year, and will look to use the A-10 Championships not only as a tune-up for the qualifying meets in the upcoming weeks, but as a statement of what to expect from her in her senior season.

Earlier this season DeRosa captured the top time of the A-10 in the 10K race with a time of 34 minutes, 26.95 seconds. At the UMass Invitational, Bakanowski qualified for the NCAA Championships in May, and broke a UMass record with a first-place finish in the pole vault with a height of 12 feet, 7.50 inches.

Sophomore Lisa Wilson has been another bright star for the Minutewomen. At the Larry Ellis Invitational at Princeton, Wilson captured the second best distance in school history in three separate events, the discuss, hammer throw and shot put. Coaches will be looking for exceptional outputs from her over the next two seasons.

The Minutemen have gotten their most consistent outputs of the season from four freshmen. Sean Busch has been solid in the pole vault, while Kevin Spieler has been a top shot put and discuss thrower. Daniel Schwartz and Chris Dzidek are two solid all-around performers who are able to compete in several events and proved their talent in the decathlon of the Holy Cross Meet.

The seniors will be led by Ryan Durkin in the 800-meter dash and Nick Fischer in the 5,000-meter run.

"This meet is really great for our seniors and juniors who before this year never were able to compete at home," said men's coach Ken O'Brien.

Though the men's team does not have a lot of depth at each position, they do have talent and are well spread out over all of the events.

"We need our athletes who are expected to do well to do well and our athletes who are expected to be in the middle or finish just outside the points to step up for us as a team to really be competitive," O'Brien said. "A home meet can boost a team's score by up to 12 points.

This will be the last meet for the men and women to qualify for postseason events.

In two weeks, both teams will travel to New Hampshire to compete in the New England Championships, followed by the ICAA and ECAC Championships for the men and women, respectively, and at Princeton a week later.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossack@student.umass.edu

Butternuts congratulates seniors and welcomes the UMass community to join us for our creative New England cuisine.

Make your graduation plans now!

Hours: Tues - Thurs 11-9 | Fri - Sat 11-10 | Sun 11-9
Closed Mondays

See our full menu on our Website!

413-586-0234
195 Russell Street
www.butternutsonline.com

Butternuts Features:

The freshest & finest local products

Celiac Friendly/ Gluten Free Dining

Full Service Bar with Celiac & Organic Selections

Vegan/ Vegetarian Selections

Extensive Wine Menu with Organic Selections

Wilson expecting improvements in 3 throwing events

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

If you have never looked at sophomore Lisa Wilson's results before, you would assume she is trying to qualify for her first postseason tournament when the Massachusetts track and field teams compete in the Atlantic 10 Championships in Amherst this weekend.

Wilson feels she still has more to prove even after qualifying for the New England Championships in shot put, discus and the hammer throw, while qualifying for the ECAC Championships in discus and the hammer throw. Besides, she figures she has every reason to keep up her success from the outdoor season.

"I really need to step up because even with all my [personal records], I'm around the top, but I'm not at the top, so I have a lot to do," Wilson said. "I want to get Top 3 in all three events."

The main event that Wilson wants to improve in is the shot put. Her best throw this season was at the Larry Ellis Invitational in Princeton, N.J., on April 19, when she recorded the second-best throw in school history and took third place overall (13.38 meters).

Wilson needs to throw 13.60 meters to earn a trip back to Princeton for the ECACs. She also has the NCAA Regional East Championships in mind. UMass assistant coach Mark Gottdenker is confident that Wilson will accomplish her goals if she allows herself to relax.

"If she's nervous or tight and she doesn't let the energy through, then she's going to make her life pretty difficult," Gottdenker said.

Wilson's best throw in discus also came at the Larry Ellis Invitational, shattering the ECAC qualifying mark of 42.50 meters by finishing in second (46.33).

This season has been quite the change from her freshman year. She struggled all of last season in her events, despite earning A-10 Rookie of the Week honors for the week of April 9 last year.

One of the differences this year is that she has more than one person to work with, making her practices less lonely than last year's. Wilson wanted to feel like she is part of a team the same way she was when she played high school football and basketball.

"Coming from a team-sport background, she's coming from a place with a lot of people around her," Gottdenker said. "She probably felt a little bit isolated."

One of those motivations comes from two freshmen who have more experience in her events than she does. Wilson credits Tim Place and Kevin Spieler for helping her improve in the field events.

"In high school [Place] did hammer so he knows more of what he's talking about," Wilson said. "It really makes a difference."

Her success comes as a surprise to Gottdenker because she struggled throughout the indoor season due to a back injury. However, Wilson did a significant amount of training to make her somewhat comfortable during the outdoor season.

The training involves a specific weight-lifting regimen that will not hurt her back.

"I'm small for a thrower, so I really need to work on my strength and conditioning," Wilson said.

Her nagging back injury will bother her well beyond her track and field career. Wilson's sports medicine doctor at home told her that she will feel pain for the rest of her life and the stress she puts on her back with the events will only make it worse.

Wilson's back problems have not affected her in the outdoor season so far. In fact, Gottdenker is looking for her to have her best weekend at the Minutewomen's home meet.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu.

NOW HIRING
Summer Job
OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich/daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

UMass to compete in ECACs this weekend

Minutewomen look to best Rhode Island after Atlantic 10 Tournament defeat

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team looks to get revenge on Rhode Island when it faces the Rams this Sunday in the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championships on the Cooper River in Camden, N.J.

Along with URI, the Minutewomen faces off against Bucknell, Buffalo, Rutgers, George Mason, Marist, Temple and Colgate.

UMass is familiar with many of the schools, as the team competed with Bucknell and Buffalo in the Knecht Cup earlier this month and faced Temple and URI two weeks ago in the Atlantic 10 Championship.

The Minutewomen are seeded fourth in the Varsity 8 race. Bucknell is the No. 1 seed followed by Buffalo and URI. The four boats were seeded the same in the Knecht Cup, with Bucknell eventually taking first place. The Minutewomen's Varsity 8 boat finished sixth overall also behind Buffalo, URI, Wisconsin and UConn.

The Second Varsity 8 boat was given the second seed for this weekend's race behind URI. Head coach Jim Dietz was surprised that his JV boat was seeded behind URI because the Minutewomen's Second Varsity 8 beat the Rams' in the A-10 Championship. UMass finished seven minutes, 11.7 seconds, 3.6 seconds faster than URI in that race. In addition, the Minutewomen's Second Varsity 8 is ranked fifth in the New England Region.

UMass's Novice 8 boat got the highest seed for the Minutewomen, taking the No. 1 seed, while the Varsity 4 boat is seeded fifth. The Novice 8 are coming off an impressive victory last week over Northeastern. Northeastern is one of the top crews in the nation.

The Novice rowers have continually been a huge part of this 2008 team. Their contributions give Dietz the hope that he can bring the team back to first in the A-10 next year.

"They are the strength of the team," Dietz said. "Having seven novice rowers in the top two boats means we'll be that much better next year."

The Minutewomen also made some changes to the Varsity and Second Varsity 8 boats, something the team has continually done throughout the year.

"The two boats are so close in time, no more than one or two seconds apart. We're just trying to make the first boat a little bit faster," Dietz said.

This week junior Andrea Morand of the Varsity 8 boat was moved into the Second Varsity 8 boat. Freshman Liz Euler took Moran's position in the first boat.

Last week another rough week of practices for UMass. With the recent rain, the Connecticut River has risen a few feet and is flowing fast. The team has struggled all year with the river, and it has given the team trouble finding a rhythm in their practices.

While the Minutewomen prepared for their upcoming race, the A-10 announced its Academic All-Conference Team. Three UMass rowers were named to the team: senior captain Sarah Marsan, senior Amy Rayla and junior Airlina Burrill. To be named to the team, one must maintain a 3.0 cumulative grade point average and be a large contributor to the team.

Marsan, a marketing major, maintains a 3.68 GPA and with the help of her boat-mate, Burrill, a kinesiology major with a 3.64 GPA, earned a gold in the Quad race in the A-10 Championship. Rayla, a member of the Commonwealth College, who studies biology, maintains a 3.84.

Notes

The Minutewomen have raced on the Cooper River, in Camden, N.J. twice in the past three weeks. Once in the Knecht Cup and again two weeks ago in the A-10 Championships ... UMass took three silver medals last year in the ECAC Championships.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

The Minutewomen will compete in the ECAC Championships this weekend. UMass hopes to defeat Rhode Island after losing to the Rams in the A-10 Championships.

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking a hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley or Brendan Cherry @ 545-3500 for more information.

•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume

*20H students strongly encouraged to apply.

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
GREAT ONLINE COUPONS
WWW.DOMINOS.COM

FREE BREADSTICKS
MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY
BUY ANY MEDIUM OR LARGE PIZZA AT MENU PRICE
GET ANY ORDER OF BREADSTICKS FREE

LARGE UNLIMITED TOPPING PIZZA $10.99
NO DOUBLE TOPPINGS

ANY LARGE SALAD
ANY BREADSTICKS
ANY 20 OZ DRINK
ONLY $7.99

1 PERSONAL PAN PIZZA
WITH 2 TOPPINGS +
10 WINGS OR KICKERS
ONLY $9.99

WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Cliffside Apartments. 2 bedroom apt. for sublet/rent beginning June 1st. $915/mo. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED. Directly on bus route. Contact: rplool@student.umass.edu

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. contact gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town, 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+ 4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June-Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST. Mill Valley Estates. 2 bedroom $1175. 3 bedroom $1475. 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, deshwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377 email: millvalleyestates@wnnco.com

Townhouse Apt. 49 for rent $1500 a month lease starts 6/1 Contact Rmelvill@student.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED. Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Put up Posters! In Pioneer Valley, Brattleboro, Hartford & Colleges. $9-12/hr. 20 flexible hrs. 15 hrs MUST be during daylight business hrs. Car, references, email, & cell, commit through fall minimum. Excellent attention to detail and follow up. PAID TRAINING MAY 12, 13, 14. Email posterinq@artspromo.org

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

Looking for an internship? International business publisher in Amherst seeking interns in areas of Management, Publishing, Marketing, IT, Business Development and More. Several opportunities. Call Mike 413-253-3488 and ask for Greg.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com) Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

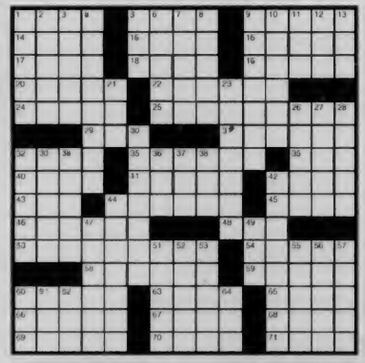
SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

ACROSS
1 Heroic tale
5 Drake or bull
9 Alums
14 Border upon
15 Opera song
16 Cowboy show
17 Lion's share
18 Convent crowd
19 Studio stand
20 Muffles
22 Complained
24 Boulder
25 New wings
29 German article
31 "Schindler's List" star
32 "Do it or ___"
35 Covered with a thin layer
39 Hush-hush org.
40 Top-drawer
41 Bancroft and Baxter
42 Hoarse sound
43 Classic Pontiac
44 $100 bills
45 Lode yields
46 Moved furtively
48 Aliens, briefly
50 Guesses
54 Photo finish
58 FDR center
59 Doctrine
60 Huskies in Storrs
63 Embraced
65 Iraq neighbor
66 Begin's peace partner
67 Bradley or Sharif
68 "Maggie" creator Bombeck
69 Dance components
70 Australia's largest lake, sometimes
71 Give guff to



DOWN
1 Emma of "Dynasty"
2 Circa
3 Hearty enjoyment
4 Audience member
5 Playing piece
6 Antilles island
7 Formed a row
8 Relaxed
9 Saluted
10 Rock-tour employee
11 Want
12 Ruby or Kiki
13 Our star
21 Caspian, e.g.
23 Subtlety
26 Film award
27 Hot air
28 Breaks
30 Cause of public outrage
32 Bald raptor
33 Water lily
34 Audible expression of contempt
36 Lennon's Yoko
37 Aardvark's snack
38 Golfer's gadget
42 Prayer beads
44 Affixes firmly
47 Seize for ransom
49 Alternative to HBO
51 Lake near Reno
52 Foe
53 Battery type
55 Earth
56 Reids and Rays
57 Ferber and Best
60 Battleship letters
61 Hip dude
62 Keats piece
64 Rapping Doctor

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

TWENTY-TWO ACROSS: COMPLAINED

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

KICK off your Summer right!!!

Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki

This is the feudal box.

Draw a small-scale feudal society complete with serfs and lords. There should be a garden somewhere in there as well, due to the fact that in feudal society, wealth was measured in land as opposed to hard currency.

Crimes of the smart.

5		4			6	1	3
				2				9
		9	3		8
6	3			8			5
				3
	9			5			7	3
			1		2	5
4				6
	6	1	5			3		8

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It's too late in the year for first dates. Do not buy flowers, do not dress, go directly to awkard first sexual encounter.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Reach out to a stranger in need, but don't reach for a "bathing suit" area.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You've got the personality of a hot pepper, but not everyone likes spicy food.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You've got all kinds of fashion sense and plenty of friends, but when it comes to being a mature adult, you're clueless.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Chivalry is dead. Hold your own door, woman.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Never make empty threats because when you don't follow through on your words you appear weak and feeble.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
This shall be a weekend of joyous festivities and as always, sickeningly good looks.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You go down more than a deep sea diver.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Set to work writing a treatise on the rapidly decreasing prevalence of dragons in modern society.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
...and you shall contract the scurvy.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your ratio of charming friends to creepy comrades is way out of wack.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
There is dissent among the the ranks. Subdue a potential mutiny with a ritual offering of snacks.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839

Quote of the Weekend

"I have to be a star like another man has to breathe."

— Sammy Davis Jr.

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: God for inventing both snails and babies so some brilliant human could then combine the two.

No caption needed: snail baby returns!

Pig Out! By Jake Whitty

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MAY 2, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass hosts season finale

Page 11

Minutemen host Dayton

BRIAN TEDESCO/COLLEGIAN — JENNA OLSEN-HEGGEL/COLLEGIAN (INSERT)

INSIDE: CONCERT RINGS IN SPRING AT MULLINS | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 71 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, CINCO DE MAYO, 2008

Students not ready for college

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the world continues to evolve and entry-level positions and opportunities for career advancement in the job market become more competitive, a college education and related training will carry more weight than ever for students.

But according to a statewide study released this month, Massachusetts high school graduates are starting the race a step behind.

The study and subsequent reports highlight concerns that the state's public schools aren't doing enough to prepare all their students for college course work. Consequently, because of the student's lack of basic skills in such subjects as English and math, they're forced to take remedial classes, which don't count towards a degree and have higher numbers of drop-outs.

Patrick Ashline, a freshman astronomy major, believes there is something public schools can do better to prepare high school students.

"One thing would be to put more weight and importance on exams in high school, and to take a stronger academic stance," he said.

The report states that the problem is particularly heightened in urban districts and vocational schools, and details five high schools in Boston and Worcester where at least 70 percent of students were forced to take at least one remedial class because of scoring poorly on college placement tests. At the University of Massachusetts, the main problem students arrive with is a lack of writing skills.

"In general I don't think there is enough writing and thinking; there are some really great students here that get stuck with simple writing, for example, on scholarship essays," said Susan Whitbourne, professor of psychology.

The report was conducted jointly by the state Departments of Elementary and Secondary Education and Higher Education. They found that the problem isn't centered in any one particular area and it crosses socioeconomic lines.

See HIGH SCHOOL on page 2

Orchard Hill Residential Area held its annual Bowl Weekend festivities that started last Thursday and ended on Saturday, with a carnival featuring wrestling suits and more. For full story see page 5.

ComCol hosts state research conference

BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Commonwealth College and the Department of Higher Education hosted the 14th Annual Massachusetts Statewide Undergraduate Research Conference last Friday.

Over 500 students from Massachusetts community colleges and state colleges in gathered at the University of Massachusetts campus center to present their collected research on a wide range of topics.

The day-long event kicked off at 9 a.m. and enabled students to present their thesis research, creative work in the visual and performing arts, independent studies and reports on community service and study abroad.

"This conference has been quite successful," said UMass senior and presenter Nick Straggas. "I've only been here for a few hours and have been asked a lot of questions. It's weird. I've actually bumped into a lot of friends from high school."

The conference expanded dramatically from its beginning in 1995, then including only the four undergraduate colleges of the UMass system. The conference has since progressed to involve students from all institutions of higher education in Massachusetts.

"The idea is to bring together all public universities across the state in an interdisciplinary manner," said Jill Meade the assistant coordinator of the conference. "The conference enables students to present their research and celebrate their work."

Commonwealth College, the honors program at UMass, promotes lifelong learning and engagement with society. The curriculum focuses on inquiry

See COMCOL on page 2

Local socialist organization celebrates May Day

JESSICA CARMICHAEL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Western Massachusetts branch of the International Socialist Organization (ISO) celebrated May Day, the holiday of the international labor movement, last Thursday.

Following an immigration rights rally May 1 in Amherst center, members of the ISO held their regularly scheduled meeting in the campus center and could be heard singing to the tune of the Battle Hymn of the Republic, "Solidarity forever! For the union makes us strong!"

Natalia Tylim, a Smith College student and ISO member, gave a speech on the history of May Day and the continued struggle of immigrant and native born workers today. According to Tylim, May Day is an international holiday that originated in the United States. The holiday dates back to May 1, 1886, when over 300,000 workers declared a national strike to demand that the regular workday be restricted to eight hours.

Natalia Tylim, student at Smith college and ISO member, spoke about the history behind May Day to attendees last Thursday.

One localized massive strike took place in Chicago's Haymarket Square that culminated in the death of at least 12 people after a violent confrontation with police and strikebreakers. Despite the opposition, labor leaders and socialists around the globe took the national strike as a jumping-off point for further demonstrations. Thereafter, May Day was recognized as a worldwide holiday and has marked a call to action to support immigrant workers and all workers' rights.

Tylim explained in her speech that "although it was U.S. workers' militancy which led to the creation of May Day as a worldwide holiday, it is not celebrated here today and its legacy goes largely concealed."

She reminded ISO members that in 2006, after about 70 years of repression, May Day was recognized again in large scale demonstrations across the U.S. and prompted a renewal of celebrations by organizations such as the ISO.

"We recognize that the fight for immigrant rights is inherently linked to the fight for workers' rights and there is a long history of struggle in this country that can show the ability of workers and immigrants to unite and fight back," Tylim said.

The ISO celebration was in an effort to raise awareness on the role that immigrant and native born workers have played and currently play in the American working class movement. Members and nonmembers alike were welcomed with a message in the front of the room exclaiming, "¡Si Se Puede! Immigrant rights are workers' rights! Happy May Day!"

The local ISO has about 14 regular members including participants of all age groups and a handful of UMass students. About 23 people were present at the meeting on Thursday night to listen to Tylim speak and also to participate in an open discussion.

Tylim noted that the significance should not be placed on the number of people present, but rather the informative discussion that took place. Individuals spoke about their personal experiences with May Day, understanding of border control, general opinions on the labor movement today and in the future, or simply why they chose to attend the meeting.

"It's about reclaiming the tradition of having a workers' holiday that's surrounded by the idea that workers have the right to fight back for a better world," said Tristan Brosnan, an ISO member and sophomore at UMass. "That's what this meeting is about, trying to bring that history to a whole new generation of people who don't know about it."

At the end of the discussion, song lyric sheets were handed out to participants whose voices freely blended together for two songs "Solidarity Forever!" and "The International," which spoke about strength in unity.

Jessica Carmichael can be reached at jcarmich@student.umass.edu

UMassOnline sees raise in enrollment

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMassOnline has seen a 26 percent increase in enrollments and a 32 percent increase in revenues in the past year.

For fiscal year 2008, UMassOnline had 33,900 enrollments and revenues of 37 million dollars. Looking back over the past five years, enrollments are up 205 percent and revenues 306 percent.

"Some of this growth is explained by excellent quality and some is explained by our ability to continually expand out academic program offerings," said David Gray, CEO of UMassOnline. "These are astonishing increases that speak to the tremendous value proposition offered by UMassOnline and by the receptivity of the marketplace to online learning."

UMassOnline is the e-learning division of the University of Massachusetts, where Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth, Lowell and Worcester collectively make up the site, and are individually responsible for the development and teaching of the online academic programs.

The UMassOnline's mission is to be the leading United States public university, serving local, national, and international community's online educational needs through creative pedagogy, state of the art technology and a fundamental commitment to student success.

Overall, Higher Education Student Population grew by 1.5 percent in the past year, which is considerably lower than that of UMassOnline, and Gray believes this outpace in growth is attributable to many factors.

"The most important of these is academic quality along with our ability to convince prospective students that the programs offered by UMassOnline are every bit as good as what they could expect to get from a traditional classroom experience," Gray said.

Other important factors include their capacity to bring new programs to market each year. In the past two years, they have gone from 56 online academic programs to 72. They have also introduced blended programs, which involve a mix of online and traditional "face to face" studies.

Gray also explains that for most of the UMass campuses, the online segment is the fastest growing part of their educational business.

"Overall, enrollments, both traditional and online, have been increasing between one and three percent per year, so it's evident that online is an increasingly important growth strategy for the University," he said.

UMassOnline is particularly important to adult professionals who wish to further their educa-

See UMASSONLINE on page 2

Spring Game displays 2008 Minutemen

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Despite interceptions, fumbles, penalties and other miscues, the Massachusetts football team gave its fans at least a temporary feeling of wide-eyed optimism on the upcoming season.

On Saturday, the Maroon and White suited up and gave its fans a chance for an up-close look at the new and old talent that the Minutemen will sport this approaching season.

The team held an open practice that featured referees who made calls as if it were a game.

Almost immediately the questions and doubts about the new receiving core to which senior quarterback Liam Coen will be throwing were put to rest when redshirt sophomore Warren Wilson leaped above two defenders and hauled in a 40-yard pass that was spotted at the 1-yard line. Wilson would continue his impressive performance by catching a pass from Coen at the back of the end zone.

Julian Talley, another new wide receiver, showed his excellent leaping and catching ability when he made a diving catch from Coen at the sideline.

Octavious Hawkins, Scott Wallace and Scott Woodard conducted most of the play at the quarterback position.

Junior tailback Tony Nelson showed off his strength and ability to carry would-be defenders for extra yardage before he would go down.

There were numerous highlights from the cornerback position as Brian Ellis, Corey Davis and James Carvan intercepted passes.

Redshirt freshman wide receiver Julian Talley runs with the ball after catching a pass from redshirt senior quarterback Liam Coen during the Massachusetts football team's Spring Game on Saturday.

The fans clapped and cheered throughout the event showing their enthusiasm and appreciation for the team's open practice and upcoming season.

At the public practice the Massachusetts football team also hosted a Bone Marrow Drive. UMass is one of five CAA football teams to partake in the event.

The Minutemen play host to Albany on August 30 for the first game of the season.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 133

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
GRAPHIC SPECIALIST Elaine Barba
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPY EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marnea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meleni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzweig
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING, AND ADVERTISING BUSINESS. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADAM LIED, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HOLDS COPYRIGHT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 AM AND 5:30 PM.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Stephanie McPherson

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION TEAM
Chris Martin
Elaine Barba

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Study: high school students unprepared

HIGH SCHOOL from page 1

At UMass, the SAT scores of men and women have stayed relatively level. According to the Admissions Fact Book detailing SAT scores and high school grade point averages for entering first-year students from fall 1998 through fall 2007, the mean average for females in 1998 was 1099 and males was 1151. The scores in the fall of 2007 were 1120 and 1167 for women and men, respectively. The study tracked more than 19,000 students who graduated from public schools in 2005 and went on to higher education.

The debate also enters the arena of whether public or private high schools are better able to prepare graduates.

"I think it depends on the private school," said Ashline. "There are some private schools that are designed to provide a greater environment for helping students to succeed in college."

"Students here should go back to their high schools and be ambassadors. We want schools to not only send the best students, we want to attract a wide range," said Whitbourne. "We don't want to just get you here, we want to keep you here and show that we can deliver."

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Revenue increases for fiscal year 2008

UMASSONLINE from page 1

tion. This allows them to have all the same materials as a classroom would, but removes the commute time to and from a campus.

Also, all colleges and universities, particularly those located in the northeast region of the U.S., are about to enter a period of demographic decline in the number of traditional age college students (18-23).

"Those institutions like UMass that have a well developed online delivery capability will be much better positioned to respond to demographic downturn," Gray said. "The fastest growing part of educational demand in the future will be coming from mid-career professionals, which is exactly what the market segment that UMassOnline was designed to address."

UMassOnline is also seeking to become a provider with an international profile to help continue its growing success.

"Our recently announced partnership agreement to deliver online programs to the Chinese market is a great example of the potential for building on our past success to open up access to our programs overseas where there is a great unmet demand for high quality academic programs," said Gray.

He continues to say that there is still room for improvement in the support services for students that wrap around the academic experience.

"We need to match very high quality of our online teaching with outstanding online services," said Gray. "We are in the process of working with our colleagues on the campuses to identify the areas of greatest need for improvement and then will work to apply resources to those areas."

According to Gray, a lot of the current success UMassOnline has comes from the hard working and dedicated faculty.

"If we didn't have faculty of the highest quality who were and are willing to work very hard to move their courses online and to make them highly engaging and meaningful learning experiences for students, UMassOnline would not be the success it is," he said.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Somali refugee shares story, volunteer sees troubled future

BY PAMELA LAWN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Editor's Note: Asad's name has been changed for privacy reasons.

When young Asad first visited Jean Caldwell's house for a reading lesson, he looked at the furniture and asked what they were planning to do with all the stuff when they moved.

Taken aback at first, Caldwell later realized this was a perfectly reasonable question for a little boy who was raised in refugee camps and used to moving.

Asad is a Somali Bantu refugee. In 2004, his family was one of many placed in Springfield by the United Nations. They were the first group of African refugees to be admitted to the United States.

"It is very rare for the very poor of a particular country to immigrate because immigration requires a lot of preparation and expenses," said Professor C.N. Le at the University of Massachusetts. "Refugees, however, span a much wider range of characteristics. Some may come from the upper class but some also come from the poorer classes."

Springfield resident and former Boston Globe correspondent Jean Caldwell has been volunteering with families in Springfield since 1991. In September 2004, Caldwell began tutoring two Somali boys. One of these was Asad. It didn't take her long to realize the difficulties facing teachers and volunteers working with these children.

"It is impossible to ask a child to draw a picture of their family when they do not understand the word family and you have no means of translating it to them," Caldwell explained. "It is just so much easier when they come with a written language. When the children came from Kosovo, we got an Albanian-English dictionary and were able to translate."

Mary Janeczek, Co-Chairman of Education at Elms College in Chicopee agrees the language barrier is a big problem for Somali refugees.

"Many Somali refugees, but not all, are from illiterate backgrounds in their own language," Janeczek said. "It is very hard to become literate in a second language if you have no knowledge of a first one."

In addition to language, cultural differences have made integration into the schooling system difficult for some.

"The kids were jumping on top of the tables, not out of rudeness but just because it was something to climb on," Caldwell said. "They didn't know what furniture was. Little Asad kept running over to the water fountain every five minutes. I realized he wasn't thirsty but was just so used to his mother carrying water in a bucket on her head that the idea of it flowing out of a tap amazed him."

Janeczek argues that while culture and language can impact the integration of children into the schooling system, it is not the only problem.

"I think the issue is two-fold," she explained. "It is a policy problem because children are facing programs that aren't meeting their needs, but it is also a culture problem because these people come from a very non-western culture and are having to adjust to the changes."

Two policies influencing their education is the Massachusetts Bilingual Law and the No Child Left Behind act.

Five years ago, the Bilingual Law was adapted to require non-native English speakers to be placed in "English as a second language programs" for one year. After the year, they would go into mainstream schooling.

This was adapted from the original system which had children studying English at the same time as taking some or all of their academic subjects in their native language. The recommended time-frame for moving children into mainstream schooling was three years.

"When the Somali children arrived in 2004, it seemed to make sense for them to be clustered together," Caldwell said. "You can't cluster children by race but you can cluster them by language. The problem is we also have the No Child Left Behind Act."

A 2007 report by the Rennie Center argued one problem with the No Child Left Behind Act is that it requires schools to ensure English Language Learners meet the same performance standards as their native English-speaking counterparts.

"The problem is that it compares how you do this year to how I do next year," Caldwell said. "It is not valid. If kids with one year English training are given the MCAS, they are likely to fail."

Caldwell thinks the No Child Left Behind Act was an influential factor in the decision to split up the Somali children.

"If you put them all in one school you are hurting the principal because there is nothing the principal can do in one year to get all these kids up to average learning grade," she said. "My feeling was they didn't want to cluster them because it would bring the scores down."

Whether it is policy issues, cultural clashes or a combination of both, figures released by the Rennie Center suggests that change is needed. The May 2007 report found that after one year, only 17 percent of English language learners were reaching the levels deemed necessary to transition into mainstream classrooms.

"I think the children are trying to fit into the programs when it should be the programs fitting around the children. This is a real issue for me," Janeczek said.

Caldwell believes we need someone in power who understands the issue and can use the available resources wisely. Springfield ran a summer program for Somali refugees and nobody came, Caldwell explained. But when you take into consideration that these people did not have cars and did not understand bus routes, it becomes apparent that the program was not tailored to their needs.

In March of this year, Governor Deval Patrick announced the selection of Paul Reville as the Commonwealth's new Secretary of Education.

"I think Reville is aware of the problems," Caldwell said. "He says it doesn't make sense to go back and fight the Bilingual Law but should be about creative effective ways to teach the students. I'm hopeful he will really look at this and deal with how teachers deal with children without English."

Helen Czernijewski, employee of Lutheran Social Services of New England, thinks Somalis will, over time, follow the success trend of immigrants and refugees.

"Like all refugees, if you are willing to work, you will get on," she said.

Historically, Somali' Bantus have moved from slavery in southern Africa to Somalia where they were treated as second class citizens. They then survived the refugee camps and are now adapting to a new culture in America.

Asad's mother has been here for two years and managed to host a wedding for her daughter. They had 200 people at the wedding and they prepared the food themselves.

"That took a lot of organization power ... that is one smart lady. Give her some English and she is going to go places," Caldwell said.

"The schools here are struggling but the kids have captured my heart," Caldwell explained. "If somebody in the school could have told me how to work with this child, I probably would not have got so involved in the issue. I'm doing what I'm doing by default, nobody else was doing it. But what is important now is having people keep watch and make sure changes are made."

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu.

Key speakers focus on personal areas of interest at conference and critical analysis, independent research, collaborative work and effective communication skills.

COMCOL from page 1

"I'm so impressed with the work of these talented, young scholars," said Priscilla M. Clarkson, Professor and Dean of Commonwealth College. "The work that is being presented demonstrates the creativity and scholarly pursuits of our undergraduate students in Massachusetts."

The event featured two keynote speakers, both from UMass. Professor Raymond Bradley in the Department of Geosciences was one of the speakers, with a particular focus on climate change over time. He has written or edited 11 books on climactic change and paleoclimatology, and has authored over 120 articles on those topics.

Dr. Amilcar Shabazz was the other speaker. As a professor and chair of the W.E.B Du Bois Department of African American studies and published international scholar, Dr. Shabazz's field work is focused in historical studies with an emphasis on the political economy of social and cultural movements, education and public history.

The Massachusetts public higher education consists of 29 campuses, 15 community colleges, and nine state colleges, all of which were represented at the Undergraduate Research Conference. The Department of Higher Education oversees all 29 institutions.

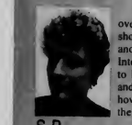
"It's not often that undergraduate students spanning the entire spectrum of public higher education in Massachusetts have the opportunity to come together to share their research and best thinking with peers and faculty," said Patricia F. Plummer, Commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Higher Education.

The Undergraduate Research Conference welcomes interested students every year and begins recruitment in January. In order to present, prospective students must have faculty oversight and receive academic credit for the acquired research.

Amara Anosike can be reached at aganosik@student.umass.edu.

Need More Meals?

Several options to choose from!
Now you can purchase additional meals or upgrade your meal plan on-line or go to our meal plan office at Franklin DC



YCMP RESIDENT
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Be A Local Hero
2007 Grand Prize Winner
Visit our website www.umass.edu/diningservices or call 545-1362

Take Out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie
MONDAY, MAY 5, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Headlines and bloglines

S.P. Sullivan

The west has been won, paved over and much of it peppered with shopping malls, but there exists another wild frontier out there: the Internet. Ours is the first generation to have come of age on the Web, and college students have learned how to code-switch between it and the real world.

We accrue giant, largely pirated music libraries whereas very few of us would even consider swiping an album from the local record store. We spend hours scanning personal information on our friends' Facebook pages – watching the human comedy unfold in real time on their news feeds – although we wouldn't ever watch the real thing with a pair of binoculars in their bushes.

The differences are subtle, and they're blurring all the time. A lot of us just don't know how to handle it, and the grown-ups are even more lost than we are.

Pulitzer Prize-winning author and journalist Buzz Bissinger made headlines ("bloglines?") in the blogosphere this week after his tirade on HBO's "Costas Now," in which he virulently attacked Will Lietch, editor of sports blog Deadspin.com.

Ironically, most of Bissinger's argument is quitable only for a blog and not for publication in a newspaper – but we'll forgive him, since it was on HBO. In a nutshell, Bissinger used Deadspin's publication of photographs of an inebriated Arizona Cardinals' quarterback Matt Leinart as a jumping-off point for an airing of his grievances with the medium in general.

"I think blogs are dedicated to cruelty, they're dedicated to dishonesty, they're dedicated to speed," said Bissinger, in one of his more family friendly, yet no less pointed sound-bites.

Blogs are the Wild West for journalists, and a lot of the professionals in the field are looking to this generation's journalists-to-be for cues. But this technology stuff is scary for us, too. We've grown up using AOL Instant Messenger for small talk while we ignore our homework - who knew we'd be conducting interviews on it by and by?

The Daily Collegian ran into trouble when handling the story of an untimely death of a student studying abroad. Faced with a lack of available information given the sensitive issue, we turned to information from Facebook.com. We were not in the wrong legally, and the information was attributed correctly. Nevertheless, people were upset, understandably, given the sensitivity of the issue.

This stuff isn't in our AP Stylebooks, and it's not in any textbooks in any journalism classes. It's much-talked-about in class discussions, but usually to the tune of "well, what do you guys think?"

The Internet ... much like its predecessor, television, hasn't exactly fulfilled its potential.

In short, none of us have really got a blogging clue.

The Internet has opened up infinite possibilities for the dispersal of information. But much like its predecessor, television, it hasn't exactly fulfilled its potential. Just as for every informative PBS special and crucial cable news segment there are ten times as many reality TV shows and O'Reilly Factor rants, the Internet isn't all Wikipedia and Google News. It's a lot of porn. And Deadspin.

Yet, the mainstream media hasn't exactly been doing its job as bulwark of democracy. If we look at Bissinger's "big three" of grievances about blogs – cruelty, dishonesty and speed – we don't have to look very far in respected news organizations to find examples of the same crimes. So who can blame the masses for turning away from CNN and towards the blogosphere?

Blogs take corporate interest out of the equation and wear their biases on their sleeves. As newspapers have become larger, or have been eaten up by media conglomerates, mainstream media has lost its scrappy, eye-for-the-underdog mentality. Many blogs have brought that back.

Bissinger is right, though. Not everyone can be, or at least should be, doing journalism. This isn't to sound elitist or protectionist, it's just the truth. Not everyone can be a doctor, or a postman or a kindergarten teacher, either. There ought to be a tougher barrier to entry than a Blogger account.

So what does this all mean to you, the reader? Well, a lot, actually. The real job of journalism – in every manifestation it's ever been through – is to tell the story, to tell it as accurately as possible and to make it engaging. Readers are too busy doing the other things that make society move to find out a lot of stuff for themselves, and whoever has taken on the task of informing ought to be doing a good job at it.

As the mainstream media began to fall at that more and more, and the internet made publishing a breeze, this blogging business was inevitable. But it's not the answer – at least not in its present state.

Bissinger and Lietch probably have more in common than either would admit, and both can learn a thing or two from the other.

Newspapers are going the way of the dinosaurs, but journalism isn't going anywhere. Blogs aren't going anywhere, either, but a lot of them could use a crash-course in journalism ethics. The future isn't going to be the result of an epic battle between the two mediums; it's going to be a marriage of them.

The Internet has opened up two things for journalists: the window of opportunity and a big ol' can of worms. While we clunk around clumsily, you might think about letting us know where your news-consuming priorities stand.

Write a letter to the editor to your local paper, or a comment on your favorite blog. I don't care who you're getting your information from – as long as you're keeping them honest.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu

Oh Canada, oh U.S., oh healthcare

Chris Amorosi

What reasonable college student would ever disagree with the concept of universal health care?

Perhaps those who see the red hand of Communism behind every welfare program, but such paranoia belongs in nursing homes or in the Republican Club. For those of us who will soon enter the shaky economy, especially liberal arts majors, health care should be a major concern beyond the election year cycle.

Roughly half of family bankruptcies in 2001 were due to medical debts, and over three quarters of those families had insurance prior to their illness. The average debtor was a middle-aged mother with a middle or working class income. In total, 47 million people in the United States may find themselves in such a position where they lack insurance coverage either during part of or through the entire year.

The problem with for-profit insurance companies should be obvious: they put their own enrichment over their customer's welfare. Generating profit for the shareholders is certainly an acceptable business practice in other industries. "If I'm not pleased with my Lenovo ThinkPad, I could buy a Dell Inspiron." This is not true for items outside of nonessential goods and services. With insurance, my options aren't so fluid. Being a history major, and assuming my nascent journalist credentials don't carry over into a lucrative job, I will most likely rely on my employer for an insurance plan. Already, my options are limited to whatever my employer provides unless I pay extra for another policy I may not be able to afford. This creates job lock, preventing me from seeking better employment opportunities elsewhere if I might suffer for lack of insurance in the meantime.

Far more unfortunate is a working class family and the repugnant insurance plans offered by their employers. Wal-Mart is the country's largest private employer with nearly two-million employees. An employee of theirs, who happens to fit the common debtor profile above, lost her short-term memory in a loading dock accident and was awarded damages from a lawsuit with the truck company responsible. Unbeknownst to them, their insurance plan includes a clause saying that Wal-Mart is entitled to compensation from any damages lawsuits their employees win. Thus, Wal-Mart sued the family for the over $400,000 in medical bills their health care program initially covered.

The problem with for-profit insurance companies should be obvious: they put their own enrichment over their customer's welfare.

She didn't read the fine print, but why should anyone be presented the opportunity to sign their livelihood away in the wealthiest country the world has ever known? Why should something so integral as health care be left to businessmen who would put their own mothers up for an initial public offering? Surely the only option is a violent overthrow of the bourgeoisie.

Or perhaps the Canadian system merits some investigation. After all, that bastion of Communism is still ruled by a queen. One might expect that the increased government involvement in health care would drive up costs to the tax-payer, but the United States spends nearly double the amount of money on health care per capita than Canada does. One wonders how that money is spent when there are 47-million people who have no insurance and millions more who suffer duhious, Wal-Mart style abuses.

Canada does not operate a government-run national health service, like many European systems. Health care is largely provided by private organizations while payment comes from the federal and provincial governments for all necessary medical care. Coverage is offered regardless of income level, so every Canadian effectively has insurance.

Incidentally, Canada has a far lower infant mortality rate than the United States and a longer life expectancy. It is arguable whether or not their superior health coverage is the primary reason behind those figures, but surely they have some influence. The oft-repeated fact that Americans are more obese and thus more prone to health complications also must contribute to our vastly more expensive health care requirements per capita. At least the Canadian system attempts to offer citizens some level of coverage, while Americans sabotage their own health.

Naturally, as with all things, there are problems with the Canadian system. Wait lines have increased the demand for technically illegal private clinics. The illegality stems from accepting payment for procedures otherwise covered by Canadian Medicare, but which are practically difficult to obtain due to the lines. Then again, the promise of some eventual medical assistance is more than many can hope for in the United States. Here, those without insurance wait until an emergency room visit is necessary and strain the hospital's ability to treat actual emergencies.

The solution is complex and requires experimentation, but a system where both everyone is guaranteed coverage for all necessary procedures coupled with a private insurance system for those who can afford it is a start. Safeguarding against the creation of an essentially class-based medical system is important, but above all getting health care to everyone who needs it should be the most important goal of any health care reform initiative.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

Do you agree with President Jack Wilson's endorsement of Robert Holub as Chancellor?

☐ Yes.
☐ No.
☐ What happened to that Lombardi guy?

You must choose now at www.dailycollegian.

it's just not breakfast without ED/OP.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 5, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Paramore steals Spring Concert

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ah, Spring. With it comes nature's fresh blossoms, the occasional rainstorm and of course the University of Massachusetts' annual Spring Concert.

Upon entering the Mullins Center last night, it was impossible to ignore the eruption of deafening screams of intoxication echoing from all angles.

The evening kicked off with two mini sets performed by the winners of this year's Battle of the Bands, Static & Messiah, as well as the runners-up, Exit Reason.

Static & Messiah, a Boston-based hip-hop, rap duo, took the stage with a heap of energy and did a sufficient job riling up the crowd for their measly 15-minute set, rapping primarily about tragic life in the slums.

After taking the stage, Exit Reason was full of grins and gratification.

"It was awesome - an unreal experience," said 19-year-old lead guitarist/vocalist Sam Wood. "We have no complaints. It was a dream come true to be here."

Certainly impressive considering three of the four band members are still in high school. Sean Nolan, bassist/background vocalist is a freshman at UMass while Wood, drummer Tony Interlande, and rhythm guitarist/vocalist Jarad Weeks were new to stepping foot onto a college campus.

Then came a very loud, pulsating bass shaking the ground beneath, Fat Joe took the stage for what turned out to be a seemingly endless and virtually pointless half-hour of noise.

He opened with an original number followed by a rendition of Akon's hit "We Takin' Over." The crowd was fairly amused and perked up a bit when "Lean Back" came on.

It was almost impossible to pay attention to the premise of any of his songs between the myriad of f-bombs and n-bombs being dropped like … well … bombs.

Following Fat Joe's less-than-pleasing performance was yet another sore disappointment.

Envision a cross between a wannabe Neyo and Omarion and you get Trey Songz, an R&B, hip-hop singer, from Petersburg, Va.

Much like his predecessor, his set consisted of a lot of back-tracks and crotch-holding. He could hardly be heard due to the roaring screams coming from behind as his DJ shouted a useless blend of "uh" and "what."

By the third track, entitled "Last Time," the audience had begun to drift off into a stupor. The inevitable and tacky ripping of his shirt kept the crowd amused for a short while, as his pants made their way down to his rear end, a clear shot of his "package" in tow.

All hope seemed to be lost until a tiny ball of fire burst onto the stage.

Haley Williams, 19-year-old lead vocalist of Paramore, exploded onstage with her impressive vocals and animated stage presence. She flailed around every which way, keeping the audience engaged with her every move in between backflips by bassist, Jeremy Davis.

"I like you guys," she said with a smirk, "welcome to the family."

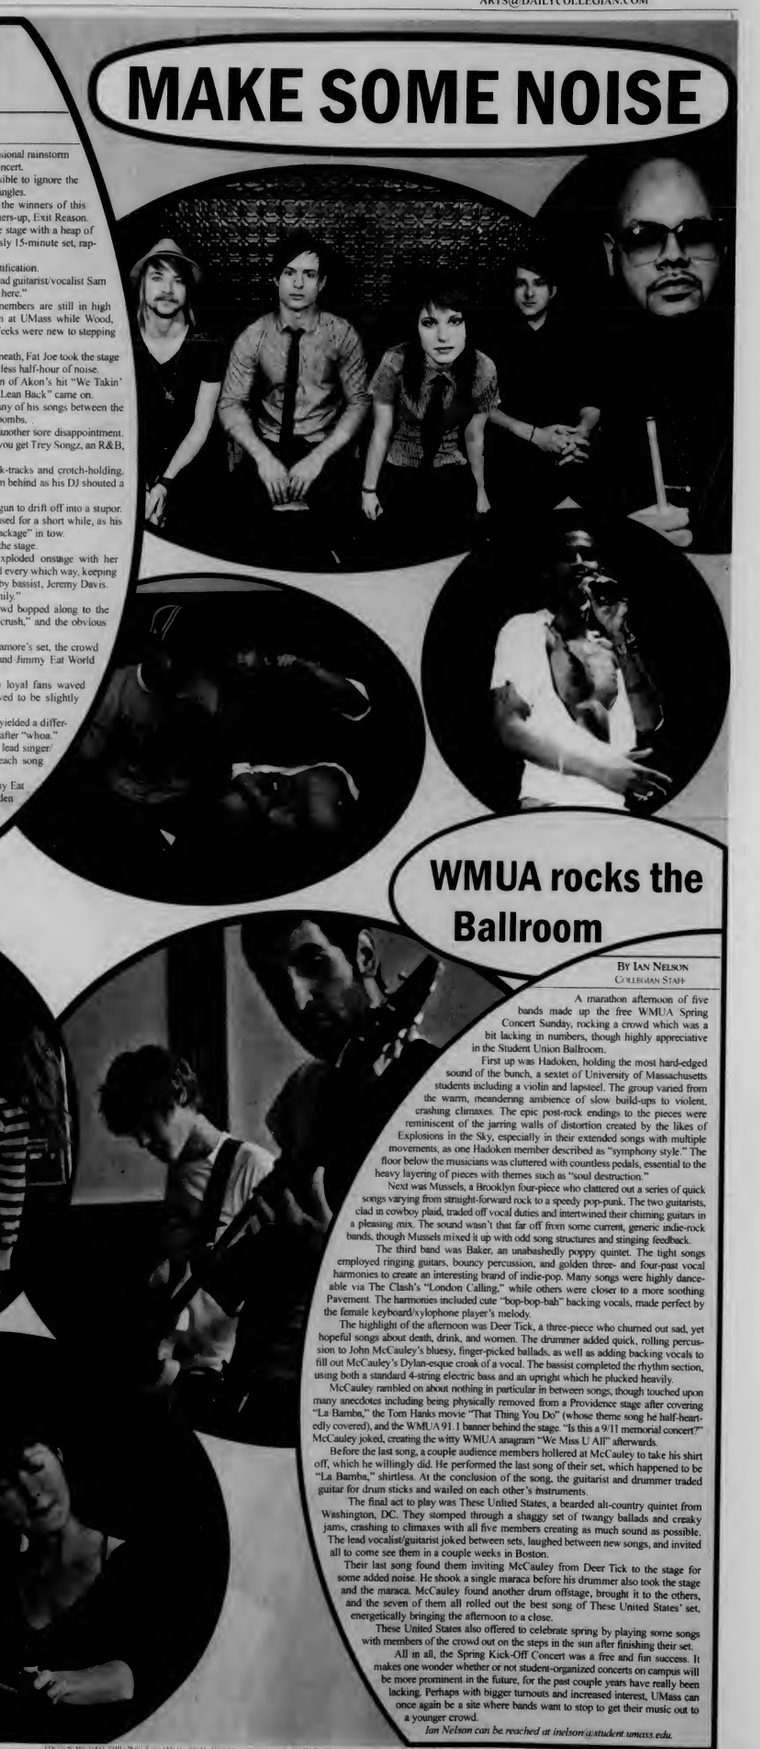
The Franklin, Tenn., natives were well-received as the crowd bopped along to the bands' catchy pop hits including their latest single, "crushcrushcrush," and the obvious crowd-favorite, "Misery Business."

After a perpetual half-hour following the culmination of Paramore's set, the crowd was anxiously squirming in its seats before the lights dimmed and Jimmy Eat World took the stage.

The band opened rather weak, with "Big Casino." A few loyal fans waved their hands frantically while the remainder of the crowd proved to be slightly underwhelmed.

"Sweetness," a ditty off their 2001 album "Bleed American," yielded a different reaction. Nearly everyone leapt to their feet, echoing "whoa" after "whoa."

Their stage presence lacked in comparison to Paramore's as lead singer/guitarist Jim Adkins failed to leave his five-foot radius and each song weaved through one after another.



Last night marked the band's last show with Paramore; Jimmy Eat World I soon to embark on a small cross-country tour in both Sweden and Norway, wrapping it up in mid-June.

By far, Paramore stole the night. Without its solid set, the show would have been a sure disappointment.

Better luck next year.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

MAKE SOME NOISE

WMUA rocks the Ballroom

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A marathon afternoon of five bands made up the free WMUA Spring Concert Sunday, rocking a crowd which was a bit lacking in numbers, though highly appreciative in the Student Union Ballroom.

First up was Hadoken, holding the most hard-edged sound of the bunch, a sextet of University of Massachusetts students including a violin and lapsteel. The group varied from the warm, meandering ambience of slow build-ups to violent, crashing climaxes. The epic post-rock endings to the pieces were reminiscent of the jarring walls of distortion created by the likes of Explosions in the Sky, especially in their extended songs with multiple movements, as one Hadoken member described as "symphony style." The floor below the musicians was cluttered with countless pedals, essential to the heavy layering of pieces with themes such as "soul destruction."

Next was Mussels, a Brooklyn four-piece who clattered out a series of quick songs varying from straight-forward rock to a speedy pop-punk. The two guitarists, clad in cowboy plaid, traded off vocal duties and intertwined their chiming guitars in a pleasing mix. The sound wasn't that far off from some current, generic indie-rock bands, though Mussels mixed it up with odd song structures and stinging feedback.

The third band was Baker, an unabashedly poppy quintet. The tight songs employed ringing guitars, bouncy percussion, and golden three- and four-past vocal harmonies to create an interesting brand of indie-pop. Many songs were highly danceable via The Clash's "London Calling," while others were closer to a more soothing Pavement. The harmonies included cute "bop-bop-bah" backing vocals, made perfect by the female keyboard/xylophone player's melody.

The highlight of the afternoon was Deer Tick, a three-piece who churned out sad, yet hopeful songs about death, drink, and women. The drummer added quick, rolling percussion to John McCauley's bluesy, finger-picked ballads, as well as adding backing vocals to fill out McCauley's Dylan-esque croak of a vocal. The bassist completed the rhythm section, using both a standard 4-string electric bass and an upright which he plucked heavily.

McCauley rambled on about nothing in particular in between songs, though touched upon many anecdotes including being physically removed from a Providence stage after covering "La Bamba," the Tom Hanks movie "That Thing You Do" (whose theme song he half-heartedly covered), and the WMUA 91.1 banner behind the stage. "Is this a 9/11 memorial concert?" McCauley joked, creating the witty WMUA anagram "We Miss U All" afterwards.

Before the last song, a couple audience members hollered at McCauley to take his shirt off, which he willingly did. He performed the last song of their set, which happened to be "La Bamba," shirtless. At the conclusion of the song, the guitarist and drummer traded guitar for drum sticks and wailed on each other's instruments.

The final act to play was These United States, a bearded alt-country quintet from Washington, DC. They stomped through a shaggy set of twangy ballads and creaky jams, crashing to climaxes with all five members creating as much sound as possible. The lead vocalist/guitarist joked between sets, laughed between new songs, and invited all to come see them in a couple weeks in Boston.

Their last song found them inviting McCauley from Deer Tick to the stage for some added noise. He shook a single maraca before his drummer also took the stage and the maraca. McCauley found another drum offstage, brought it to the others, and the seven of them all rolled out the best song of These United States' set, energetically bringing the afternoon to a close.

These United States also offered to celebrate spring by playing some songs with members of the crowd out on the steps in the sun after finishing their set.

All in all, the Spring Kick-Off Concert was a free and fun success. It makes one wonder whether or not student-organized concerts on campus will be more prominent in the future, for the past couple years have really been lacking. Perhaps with bigger turnouts and increased interest, UMass can once again be a site where bands want to stop to get their music out to a younger crowd.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Sumo, superheroes and more

Movie, dance, carvinal part of annual Orchard Hill Bowl Weekend festivities

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) of the University of Massachusetts sponsored its annual Bowl Weekend last week. The festivities, which began Thursday evening with a showing of "Spiderman," continued into Friday evening before concluding Saturday afternoon with a carnival.

Bowl Weekend is an event common to the Orchard Hill residential area. Free to the campus community, the event offers food, film and music to students, all situated within the heart of Orchard Hill: the Bowl.

However, this year's weekend presented something of a problem for its planners. Fenced in due to continuing work within the Bowl, the event was forced to take place outside the Bowl itself. Despite the problem, neither OHAG nor House Councils were dissuaded from continuing with the event as planned.

Grayson-Field House Council President Dan Hall talked briefly about the disadvantages of being without the Bowl for this year's Bowl Weekend.

"We were afraid it wouldn't be as epic [as other Bowl Weekends] because there's not as much space. But so far, it seems like it's still going to be a fun time for everyone."

Thursday's event took place on the field separating Central and Orchard Hill. Fitting with the theme of the weekend, "Spiderman" was projected onto the water tower on the hill.

For Friday night's dance, many students arrived in full superhero regalia. Masks were prohibited, as were bottled drinks of any kind, but that didn't thwart partygoers from creating a successful illusion of superpower.

Capes, the staple of any superhero garb, and other costume effects were common sights as students danced on the pavement surrounding the Bowl.

Although scheduled to go into the wee hours of Saturday morning, the weather for an outside dance proved less than ideal; cold and drizzly, many O-Hill residents seemed to keep time spent outside to a minimum.

"It's not great out, so we left early," said UMass student Carol Lawless. When asked how the dance measured up to past Bowl Weekend dances, she replied that the dance was good, but that last year's Sock Hop dance had been better.

Saturday afternoon's carnival had more success drawing a crowd. Beginning at noon, the carnival weathered on despite cold temperatures. Whether drawn by the smell of hamburgers sizzling on the grill, or by the live music provided by the Wolfman Conspiracy, students ventured to the source of all the commotion.

Once there, the carnival provided plenty of reasons to stay. The Moonbounce, Velcro wall and obstacle course fast became popular attractions, as the RA dunk tank drew spectators. A tie-dye station – sponsored by the Grayson-Field House Council – was also popular, allowing students the chance to splash their whites in the many shades of the rainbow.

In between pit stops at the barbeque stand, many took part in the time-honored act of Sumo wrestling.

Most seemed to get a kick out of the padded costumes and head gear made mandatory at the station. The rules were simple – stay in the circle, and bring down your opponent at all costs. In three rounds, one needed only to push their opponent down to declare Sumo champion supremacy, yet defeat in the Sumo circle did not come so easily to everyone.

"It wasn't fair," protested UMass sophomore Morgan Meagher, upon losing a Sumo match. "They should have made the suits more short-person accessible. My feet could hardly move!"

In addition to games, several campus clubs also held tables at the carnival, offering students the chance to mix social awareness with pleasure. The UMass Democrats Club encouraged student passersby to register to vote, while games played at the Sustainable Living booth allowed students the chance to win rosemary, thyme, parsley, cucumber or lavender plants.

Also in attendance at the event was Student Bridges, an outreach program that connects UMass students with local community-based organizations in an effort to provide academic mentoring and partnerships. At their table, they gave away lollipops and recommended students get involved with their program.

While admittedly students may have had their doubts about the fun this year's Bowl Weekend could provide sans an actual Bowl, those who went can say otherwise. Different from the Bowl Weekends of semesters past, this year's experiment showed how much fun outside-the-Bowl thinking can actually be.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

Brendan Dean Kemp, an RA in Greyson attemps to hit the target and dunk a fellow RA from Field, Kirby Fortin, into the tank of water. "Dunk your RA" was one of the many attractions at Bowl Weekend.

Taylor comes to Iron Horse

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There are obvious similarities between singer-songwriter Ben Taylor and his famous father James Taylor. The soothing voice, calming melodies and general lack of pretension come to mind. But in many ways, Ben Taylor is a more modern version of his father mixed with a bit of his mother, Carly Simon.

On Tuesday night, Taylor will be performing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton in support of his forthcoming album "The Legend of Kung Folk."

Taylor never expected to become a musician like his older sister Sally. He was home schooled during his younger years and subsequently attended private schools in Manhattan. He spent a lot of time throughout his teenage years traveling around the United States and Asia. Instead of going down the music path, he was thinking about become an organic farmer. He also briefly worked as a wilderness guide and a fitness instructor, according to a 2003 article in People magazine.

But at age 20, Taylor traveled to the Caribbean. He was inspired by the sounds of the island and the laid back sense found in all aspects of life. This fact stands out strongly in much of his music.

Armed with this new sense of who he was and some serious songwriting skills, Taylor befriended several Los Angeles musicians during a trip to the city in 2001. As a result, he formed The Ben Taylor Band with Adam MacDougall, Rick Musallam, Joe Dunne and Larry Ciancia.

With the Ben Taylor Band, Taylor recorded "Famous Among the Barns" in 2003. In 2004, they released an EP called "EP #1" that featured a duet with Taylor and his mom on the song "Island."

As a solo artist, Taylor recorded and released "Another Run Around the Sun" in 2005 and an EP called "Deeper Than Gravity" in 2006. His latest album, "The Legend of Kung Folk," will be released on July 22.

As with most musicians, Taylor appears to have developed a signature sound. He injects groove in the rhythms and lyrics. He is as laid back as they come, with a sort of Jack Johnson feel, especially on the album "Another Run Around the Sun."

One of his songs, "Digest," is sort of a throwback to the style of his father in songs such as "Carolina in My Mind" and "Country Road." And on the song "Lady Magic," he hums until the first verse begins and describes the effect that a breathtaking female has on his feeling of self. The guitar notes are sparse and the rhythm works to match the mood created by the lyrics.

Of course not all of Taylor's songs are of the island-life nature. "My Wicked Way," a song currently featured on his MySpace, has Taylor's quiet vocals and soft strumming but is of a completely different mood and theme – it's about more of a seduction with somewhat ill intentions.

In addition, unlike his father, Taylor found great inspiration from hip-hop artists. In a 2003 Rolling Stone article, he cited some of his greatest musical influences as Bob Marley & the Wailers' "Natty Dread," Mos Def's "Black on Both Sides," and The Roots' "Phrenology" and "The Roots Come Alive." This is not what one would expect from this 31-year-old musician who grew up in Manhattan and on Martha's Vineyard.

Even in songs with stronger themes and more atypical influences, he keeps the gentle signature Taylor-style alive. It appears that Taylor embraces his musical lineage and thrives off that acceptance.

Ben Taylor, with guests David Saw, Steve Blegner and Julia Suriano, will be playing at the Iron Horse Music Hall on Tuesday. The show starts at 7 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

Allie Roth can be reached at allie.roth@gmail.com.

Celebrating Cinco de Mayo in style

BY BARBARA BOORAS
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST

Since 1862, Mexicans have been celebrating their famed holiday "Cinco de Mayo" commemorating a victory in battle against the French. Mexicans usually spend the day dancing traditional dances along with eating and drinking with good friends. But they're not the only ones enjoying the festivities.

Americans have a habit of making foreign holidays their own, including St. Patrick's Day, Oktoberfest and, of course, Cinco de Mayo. Today, Cinco de Mayo is an excuse to don your sombrero, pull your blender out from the back of your cabinet, whirl together some strong margaritas and dance with your friends to the "Tequila" song.

For those of you who don't plan on spending Seis de Mayo with your face down on the floor of a stranger's apartment, here are some classy ways to ring in the holiday.

If it's Mexican cuisine that tickles your fancy, Amherst is the place to satisfy your craving. Both Bueno y Sano and La Veracruzana are located minutes away from each other downtown.

Bueno y Sano, a popular establishment with the college crowd, has roughly 18 different combinations to fill your burrito. Bursting with flavor, you can stuff yours with anything from beef chili, grilled shrimp or barbecue chicken. A basic burrito, which comes with rice, beans, pico de gallo, and mild sauce, costs $4.25 and each additional topping costs about $2.

With plenty of seasonings and spice, Mexican food is perfect for vegetarian and vegan cuisine, which can often be quite bland. Bueno y Sano's menu lists salads, tacos, burritos and quesadillas with seitan, a vegetarian beef substitute. Rice and beans, a great Mexican and vegetarian staple, can also be served on the side with your meal or wrapped up perfectly in a warm tortilla with homemade salsa and guacamole.

If you are looking for the most authentic Mexican cuisine, look no further than La Veracruzana. Although, non-spanish speakers might struggle with trying to read the menu written in Spanglish, its huge variety will impress any foodie.

Here you can dine on Chicke Poblano made from "a variety of mild chiles, nuts and spices." You can also sample the Especialidades Del Mar, such as seafood enchiladas made with shrimp or crab or the fish tacos made with fresh lightly floured cod. Their burritos are slightly more expensive ($4.95 to $6.95) but their fillings of egg and Mexican sausage called chorizo, cactus leaf and sirloin strips are more traditional for south of the border.

Once you've had a chance to get your fill of spicy Mexican food, it is time to wash it all down with some traditional drinks. Instead of chasing your tequila-of-choice with the usual salt-lime combo, try popping a slice of juicy orange sprinkled with freshly ground cinnamon. The sweet orange-cinnamon flavor lingers in your mouth, mellowing the strong flavor of the tequila.

If margaritas are your guilty pleasure then head over to Chili's on Route 9. With some of the cheapest Margaritas in town you can't go wrong. Their delicious Tropical Sunrise Margarita is made with Sauza Hornitos Tequila, Midori melon liqueur, pineapple juice and just a splash of grenadine. Served in a chilled glass and garnished with an orange slice this stylish drink is the perfect way to kick off Cinco de Mayo.

For those who plan on staying in for a fiesta and entertaining some friends, Ellie Krieger, host of "Healthy Appetite" on the Food Network, has created a chic and delectable drink called Frozen Mango Margaritas. This drink not only tastes delicious, but its also completely fat free and only 180 calories per serving.

Whether you are sipping a Corona at the bars, home with friends, or downing a burrito uptown, remember the spirit of Cinco de Mayo and celebrate it to the fullest.

Barbara Booras can be reached at bbooras@gmail.com.

SUMMER PARKING REGULATIONS

Faculty, staff and students with valid annual lot permits are eligible to park in any of the following lots, in addition to their assigned lot, effective May 27, 2008 to August 29, 2008. Red and Blue lots continue to be restricted during the Summer.

Green Lots	Purple Lots	Yellow Lots
25	22	11
26	44	12
33	49	13
34

Anyone who wishes to purchase permits, upgrade existing permits, or park in the Campus Garage for the summer, should contact Parking Services at 413/545-0065 or visit the website at http://parking.umass.edu

To celebrate your upcoming graduation, your UMass Amherst Alumni Association invites you to Memorial Hall for... a FREE GIFT,
free Career information,
a DEMO of the ALUMNI DIRECTORY,
a chance to win $1000 and/or an iPod Shuffle
and a few SNACKS to get you through exams.
Monday, May 5 through Thursday, May 8
10 a.m. - 3 p.m.
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
You were. You are. UMASS. • UMassAlumni.com

Junior Brandice Balchmiter pitched her fifth no-hitter of the season against St. Bonaventure in Game 1 of Sunday's doubleheader. She struck out seven and walked two in five innings pitched.

UM sweeps Bonnies

Balschmiter, Normandin lead Minutewomen in N.Y.

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

In the top of the seventh inning the Massachusetts softball team looked to be headed for its first loss in the Atlantic 10 against St. Bonaventure on Sunday, but sophomore Carly Normandin wasn't about to let that happen.

With two outs and UMass trailing, 1-0, Normandin hit a double to left field, scoring two runs and giving UMass its first lead of the game. Normandin went 2-for-3 in Game 2 after going 3-for-3 in Game 1. Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders finished off the Bonnies in order in the bottom of the seventh to complete the comeback in Game 2. It was the first time all season that UMass trailed against an A-10 opponent.

UMass	2
SBU	1
UMass	11
SBU	0

The 20th-ranked Minutewomen (36-11, 20-0 A-10) easily defeated the Bonnies in Game 1, 11-0. Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmitter tossed her fifth no-hitter of the season. Normandin and sophomore catcher Jessica Serio both went 3-for-3 and knocked in two runs.

In Game 1, UMass jumped to an early lead in the first inning when junior third baseman Whitney Mollica hit a two-run homer off senior Brianna Bricker. Sophomore catcher Jessica Serio singled in the third run to give UMass an early 3-0 lead.

That would be enough for Balschmiter, who fanned seven through five innings. Balschmiter walked the first batter of the game, junior Kathryn Pazda, but Balschmiter picked her off. She then walked the next batter; the Bonnies, however, would not see another base runner.

In the second inning, a combination of errors and walks doomed the Bonnies as UMass placed four runs on the board. Senior left fielder Lauren Proctor walked to load the bases. Mollica hit a pop-out and junior second baseman Carly Morin tagged up to score the fourth run. Junior Samantha Salato walked to reload the bases and sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves delivered a two-out single to drive in two runs.

The Minutewomen added four more runs in the fifth inning. Junior Whitney Williams hit a two-run home run to left field – her sixth of the season – to put UMass in position to win in a five-inning mercy rule.

In Game 2, UMass had nine hits, but had trouble getting runners to cross the plate. Bonnies' ace, sophomore Sherri Thompson, came one out away from throwing a complete game shutout. In the bottom of the seventh UMass trailed, 1-0. Reeves grounded out to the shortstop for the first out. Serio started the rally when she singled through the right side and junior Davina Hernandez came in to pinch run. Freshman Lindsay Maroney popped out and UMass came down to its final out. Morin kept the inning alive with a single up the middle and set the stage for Normandin.

Sanders threw a complete game, allowing one run on four hits, while striking out five. Sanders allowed one extra base hit, a double, which scored the Bonnies lone run of the day.

UMass has now won 26 straight games, 38 in A-10 play. UMass is headed to Charlotte, N.C., where it will be the No. 1 seed in the A-10 Tournament.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Relievers excel in extra-inning win

BASEBALL from page 10

Down 3-0 in the bottom of the seventh the Minutemen pulled within one by working the count and waiting for good pitches to hit. With once on and one out, Kyle Multner doubled to put UMass runners on second and third. After pinch hitter Mike Donato walked, catcher Bryan Garrity tallied an RBI with an infield single.

The Minutemen made it 3-2 when designated hitter, Andrew Black was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded.

Serrino, taking over for Frem, pitched until the ninth inning, not giving up a hit.

Bryan Baudinet was in a position to tie the game in the bottom of the ninth in which he delivered a game-tying RBI single.

"He's one of the guys you can count on to take quality swings," Stone said. "He usually hits the ball hard; they're pitching him tough, they have to be, they know his stats."

When senior pitcher Aaron Smith entered the game in the top of the 12th, with runners on second and third and his team down, 4-3, he did what UMass pitchers before him did, gave his team a chance to win. Smith struck out the first batter he faced and induced the next batter to hit a fly ball to center field to retire the side.

The Maroon and White, in desperate need of a run, played small ball after Baudinet's lead-off single, moving him to second on a sacrifice bunt by Ryan Franczek. After Adam Tempesta flied out to right field, third baseman Jim MacDonald doubled off the left-field wall to tie the game once again.

The game stayed tied until the bottom of the 15th when Andy Tuttken lined a single to right to drive in MacDonald who doubled earlier in the inning.

"I was glad I could get the job done. My teammates were able to make some great plays behind me," Smith said.

UMass is in action again on Wednesday against Northeastern in Amherst.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Senior third baseman Ryan Franczek receives congratulations from his teammates during yesterday's 5-4 win over Dayton. The Minutemen defeated the Flyers Saturday as well after falling in the series opener on Friday afternoon.

Freshman midfielder Ryan Hantverk has started in nine of the Minutemen's 14 games. He has five goals on 25 shots and one assist on the season to help the Minutemen to their 5-9 record.

Minutemen fail to protect lead in finale

LACROSSE from page 10

the net, searching for possible gaps in the defense. On multiple possessions, a UMass player missed a simple pass from a teammate that resulted in a turnover and missed scoring chance.

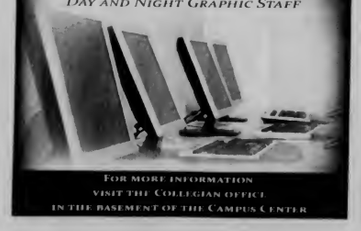
The Maroon and White also failed to take advantage of two separate man-up opportunities over the next three minutes, leaving the door open for a Rutgers comeback.

"We had a couple of opportunities to finish and that was definitely the difference in the game," Cannella said. "At 6-4, I thought we needed one more [to make the lead more comfortable]."

Yet it was a much different story in the first quarter. Rutgers outshot the Minutemen, 10-1, though UMass escaped the first 15 minutes down by a single goal as the Scarlet Knight offense struggled to find the net.

"We did not play well at all early in the game," Cannella said. "We had four or five turnovers just from passing the ball around. And I said to them, 'Guys what are you doing? Let's just handle the ball and run.'"

UMass fell behind, 4-2, toward the end of the second half, but junior attack Tim Balise scored a transition goal to bring the Minutemen within one before the intermission. It was the only goal for UMass's leading scoring, who finished the 2008 campaign with 33 goals and six assists.



Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider kept the Minutemen in the game with several spectacular saves during the second half. Schneider made 11 saves, as Rutgers outshot the Minutemen, 30-28.

Game notes

Balise was the only player to score in 13 of the team's 14 games this season for UMass. He did not score in the team's 15-1 loss to Loyola on March 22 ... Hayes took a team-high six shots, but scored only one goal ... The Minutemen turned the ball over 19 times, including 12 in the first half.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

INTERESTED IN GRAPHIC DESIGN?

For more information visit the Collegian office in the basement of the Campus Center

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Daily Collegian Sports Blog
Check out the Daily Collegian's new sports blog sponsored by MassLive for live updates of UMass games and breaking news about your favorite UMass teams.
http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports/

Good with computers? Need Experience?
Apply here!
The Daily Collegian is now hiring a Web Manager for the '08-'09 school year.
Primary duties include:
- Maintaining the Daily Collegian's website
- Placing online ads
- Supervising up to four web editors.
Training will be provided.
Required Skills:
- Comfortable with computers and general internet practices
- Thorough understanding of HTML and CSS
- Some knowledge of FTP or other file transfer protocols
- Some graphic knowledge and ability to work with the Adobe CS2/CS3 suite.
For more information, contact James Hale at jhale@dailycollegian.com or come down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

Arigato II ありと Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage, Amherst Bagel, Pleasant St, Arigato II, Main St, Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

Get your Sloppy Joes.

	5	3		6
1		9	3	7			6
2	6		9
			5			3
		2			4
	9			1
			8			4	5
4			9	5	8		1
			4		9	7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Bovine lunch
6 Pipe part
10 Sharpen
14 Shrewd
15 Surrealist painter
16 Grace finale
17 Madden
18 Ailments
19 Jack or ace
20 Falsehood
22 Winged singers
24 Pie filler
28 Store lure
29 Plato or Aristotle
31 Dorothy's home
35 Sturgeon eggs
36 "Xanadu" grp.
37 Stand up
38 Sound of a wet impact
41 Hosp. sections
43 Jig or reel
44 North Sea structure
46 Rabble
48 Blue
49 Capital of the Bahamas
50 Calgary
53 Actor Estrada
55 Like Venetian blinds
56 Powerful folk
60 Soviet CIA counterpart
61 Location
62 Not for
64 Psychological states
68 Planter spot
69 Nolan or Meg
70 Hammerin' Hank
71 Give guff to
72 Beach makeup
73 Pittsburgh product

DOWN
1 Juliette Low's org.
2 Flowed
3 Part of GPA
4 Slender and graceful
5 Damascus man
6 Star Wars initially
7 Sprinkle after a shower
8 Logan and Fitzgerald
9 Error
10 Juan's ranch
11 Actor Shanil
12 Dweeb
13 Finishes off
21 Small Great Lake
23 Dull and insipid
24 "Silent Spring" author
25 Perfect society
26 Conch coverings
27 Broad valley
30 Typical patterns
32 Day's end
33 Video-game parlor
34 Sown
39 Weapons store
40 Jeweled crown
42 Heavy imbibers
45 Eddie Van Halen's axes
47 Act malign
51 Molten rock masses
52 Lt. Kennedy's vessel
54 "Out of Africa" locale
56 Large group
57 Opera song
58 Soothes
59 Comic Laurel
63 Neither Rep. nor Dem.
65 Mine product
66 Unknown John
67 NBC classic

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

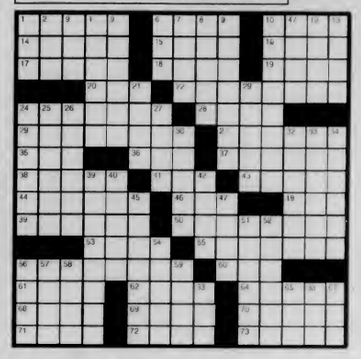
CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Quote of the Day

"I want to be like the patron saint of reality."
— Fiona Apple

Paul By Billy O'Keefe



Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Kid Shay

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Let your love flow like a stinky river in the French countryside.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sweaty men jumping all over each other; no it's not a gay porn, it's a mosh pit.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Youcandoamazingthingswithcopypaste. Youcandoamazingthingswithcopypaste. Youcandoamazingthingswithcopypaste. Youcandoamazingthingswithcopypaste. Youcandoamazingthingswithcopypaste. Youcandoamazingthingswithcopypaste.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The majority of people never really want to know what's in a Nathan's hot dog.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Sleeping near electric appliances decreases your inner chi thus making your sleep less productive.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
There is a three dimensional magic eye puzzle picture of a dancing goat hidden in this page. Look closer.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Sun leads to wrinkles and wrinkles lead to being mistaken for a pedophile. Wear sunblock.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
It's Cinco de Mayo! Holy crap, somebody spiked the burritos.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Milk is a fossil of beverage evolution. Chocolate milk is the king of the lactose kingdom.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Make a "To Do" list comprised entirely of people's names.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Forward all your unwanted penis enlargement emails to various UMass administrative offices.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Be cognizant of your proximity to others. Some people don't like to be groped as much as you do.

Comics stands united, in the name of virtue, integrity and more public nudity.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Cliffside Apartments. 2 Bedroom apt for sublet/ rent beginning June 1st. $915/mo. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED. Directly on bus route. Contact: rplool@student.umass.edu

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact: gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town, 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton.

APT FOR RENT

2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1025+
4 Bedrooms $1225+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Townhouse Apt. 49 for rent $1500 a month lease starts 6/1

APT FOR RENT

Contact Rmelvill@student.umass.edu

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Put up Posters! In Pioneer Valley, Brattleboro, Hartford & Colleges. $9-12/hr. 20 flexible hrs. 15 hrs MUST be during daylight business hrs. Car, references, email, & cell, commit through fall minimum. Excellent attention to detail and follow up. PAID TRAINING MAY 12, 13, 14. Email: postering@artspromo.org

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Looking for an internship? International business publisher in Amherst seeking interns in areas of Management, Publishing, Marketing, IT, Business Development and More. Several opportunities. Call Mike 413-253-3488 and ask for Greg.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES 30-60% LESS

GENERAL

ECO-FRIENDLY AMHERST 413-548-9905 NORTHAMPTON 413-517-0099

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 5, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Home not so sweet

Senior Christina DeRosa finished the 10K in first place as she set an Atlantic 10 record this weekend at the A-10 Championship. DeRosa helped the Minutewomen to a sixth-place finish while the Minutemen took fourth place at the UMass Track and Field Complex

Host men finish 4th, women 6th at A-10 Championship

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts men's track and field coach Ken O'Brien couldn't help but feel like he was on a roller coaster this weekend at the Atlantic 10 Championships in Amherst. The Minutemen took fourth place overall after sinking into sixth place Sunday afternoon.

"The end result was probably the best we could've done," O'Brien said. "We never had a cushion. We're always on a tight-rope."

UMass got the most help at the decathlon events. Freshman Daniel Schwartz won the 1,500-meter run, propelling him into third place overall after finishing fifth on Saturday.

Schwartz finished in sixth place at his first decathlon as a Minuteman at Holy Cross on April 23. O'Brien figured that Schwartz had the potential to do better than his previous decathlon, but did not anticipate a top three finish.

"You never know what's going to happen in a tough event like the decathlon and with freshmen," O'Brien said. "It's almost like we had to resist looking at the numbers we had three weeks ago."

Sophomore Andrew McCann took first place in the 10,000-meter run. His time (30 minutes, 35.82 seconds) broke the record set by La Salle's Dan McGarth in 2005. He also holds the facility record as well as the third-fastest time at UMass.

McCann's time qualified him for the ICAA and New England Championships.

The Minutewomen took sixth overall at the A-10s. Senior Christina DeRosa ran the 10K as well as the 5K this weekend. DeRosa (35:40.68) set an Atlantic 10 record after taking first in the 10K for the Minutewomen.

DeRosa (16:45.08) finished fourth in the 5K. She held second for most of the race before Charlotte's Tsehaye Dagnachew and Richmond's Nicol Traynor passed ahead of DeRosa in the final 200 meters.

"Her event is the 10K and she doesn't have the same wheels as the other kids have," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said.

Redshirt freshman Shiyi Zan (17:21.39) gave an additional boost to the Minutewomen with her seventh-place finish.

In the field events, sophomore Molly Chapin (3.20 meters) replaced redshirt junior Kristen Bakanowski in the pole vault and finished third. Freshman Jenelle Denchy (3.05) finished sixth.

Sophomore Lisa Wilson competed in the discus, hammer throw and shot put. Wilson (45.30) finished second in the discus behind Rhode Island's Sarah Thornton. She also earned a sixth-place finish (47.48) in the hammer throw and placed seventh (12.36) in the shot put.

The Minutewomen ended Saturday night in fourth place, but lost the lead to Temple and Richmond. UMass had a chance to make up a seven-point gap against Richmond (68 points) and take fifth after DeRosa's fourth-place finish.

However, the 4x400-meter relay prevented that from happening.

The relay team was disqualified after Bakanowski cut in one turn too early, going into an opponent's lane on the way to handing off the baton to her sister Brittany Bakanowski.

The disqualification allowed Richmond to extend its lead to eight points with an eighth-place finish.

"Sometimes when you want [to win] so bad, you don't perform," LaFreniere said. "It's sort of like a deer in the headlights."

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmil0@student.umass.edu

Minutemen rally twice, win in 15th

Tuetken double drives in game-winner, clinches series

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It took the Massachusetts baseball team 15 innings, 19 players and two separate comebacks, one an extra innings, but it pulled it off.

"Everyone hung in there, and we found a way to win the ball game," said UMass coach Mike Stone.

UMass	5
Dayton	4
UMass	3
Dayton	1
Dayton	8
UMass	2

The Maroon and White were led in the extra-inning affair by their relief pitchers who pitched 10 nearly perfect innings, propelling the Minutemen to their second win in a row over Dayton (27-20, 10-11 Atlantic 10), 5-4.

Nick Serino, Mitchell Ellenberg, Nathan Monroy and Aaron Smith combined for six strikeouts and no walks, giving up five hits and one unearned run.

"It's a great feeling," Stone said. "We want to feel comfortable going into the bullpen, and when you have a game like that and they come in and do the job it gives you a lot of confidence."

UMass starting pitcher Jared Freni struggled to control his pitch count from the outset. After striking out the first two batters, Freni gave up a single to Dayton shortstop Cole Tyrell and was then forced to pitch from the stretch where he struggled to find the plate.

Freni racked up 22 pitches in the first inning, and 25 in the second, bringing his pitch count to 57. In the second inning Freni found himself in a one out, bases-loaded situation. Freni hit Kevin Miller to give the Flyers a 1-0 advantage, but settled down and got the next two outs without giving up another run.

See BASEBALL on page 6

UMass pitcher Jared Freni gave up three earned runs on six hits and four walks in five innings pitched in UMass's 5-4 win.

UMass stumbles in finale

The ECAC's leading scorer, Tim Balise, falls over a Rutgers player in the Minutemen's 7-6 loss to the Scarlet Knights on Saturday. The junior attack scored a goal at the end of the first half to bring UMass within one goal going into the second half.

Rutgers' fourth-quarter rally spoils Senior Day at Garber

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The season that featured unique on and off-the-field challenges for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team came to a close Saturday afternoon at Garber Field. The 2008 campaign was characterized by an overall inconsistency of play with impressive victories and devastating losses. Saturday's 7-6 loss to Rutgers was a microcosm of the team's season; another game that could have easily went the other way for UMass.

Rutgers	7
UMass	6

The Minutemen (5-9, 3-4 ECAC) overcame a poor first-quarter performance and built a 6-4 lead in the fourth over the Scarlet Knights (6-7, 4-3 ECAC). However, UMass surrendered three consecutive goals over the final seven minutes, as the team's offense wasted multiple scoring chances down the stretch.

For the Maroon and White's six seniors, Saturday marked their final game at Garber Field.

"It's disappointing for the seniors and they deserved a better fate than they had this year," UMass coach Greg Cannella. "I think our guys fought all the way [through the season] and showed a lot of courage."

With the scored tied at 6-6, Rutgers freshman attack Kory Kelly received a pass from behind the net. He rotated around the right side and launched a shot through a jump-and turn motion, finding the top left corner of the net.

UMass senior defenseman Sean Krygier tightly guarded Kelly but could not completely eliminate the 6-foot-5 attackman's shooting angle. It was a frustrating situation for the Maroon and White, as Krygier – one of the Minutemen's best shut-down defenders during his four years – was beat 1-on-1 for the game-winning goal.

At that point, the Minutemen had just let a two-goal lead slip away through a comeback engineered primarily by Kelly, the ECAC's fifth-leading goal scorer. Kelly scored three consecutive goals despite being closely guarded on each shot.

"He's able to free his hands with his size," Cannella said. "Typically we'll get a stick to their hands in that situation and Doc [Schneider] with make the save, but it just didn't happen. It sort of epitomizes our entire season."

Eleven minutes earlier, the Minutemen enjoyed a 6-4 lead and were in control of their own fate. Sophomore midfielder Bobby Hayes fired a laser into the top left corner of the net to give his team the two-goal lead. Yet that goal was unique of the team's offensive strategy as it was a product of an individual creating separation from the defense and sniping a corner of the net.

For much of the game the Minutemen passed the ball around

See LACROSSE on page 6

INSIDE: EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW WITH JONATHAN MEIBURG | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 77 LO: 45 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MAY 6, 2008

Holub welcomed as new UM chancellor

Incoming chancellor meets with campus

BY S. P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After having served in the wake of John V. Lombardi's controversial departure, Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole greeted the press on the 10th floor of the Campus Center yesterday with a quip.

"No one is more delighted than I to welcome you," he said before the announcement of the new chancellor.

President Jack Wilson then introduced Dr. Robert C. Holub, who had been approved earlier Monday morning by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees after having been recommended to the board by Wilson.

Holub, currently the provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, fielded questions pertaining to university

See CHANCELLOR on page 2

Holub was welcomed by UMass president Jack Wilson and Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole.

Incoming chancellor Holub addressed faculty, staff and students and took questions at yesterday's press conference in the Campus Center.

Faculty honored by colleagues, students

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Six Distinguished Teaching Awards have been given to four faculty members and two graduate students at the University of Massachusetts, recognizing their excellence in the classroom.

The winners this year include professor of history Richard H. Minear, professor of plant, soil and insect sciences John M. Gerber, assistant professor of microbiology Wilmore C. Webley, lecturer in biology J. Zane Barlow and teaching assistants Vincent Cee in the music and dance department and Shahnam Beheshti in the department of mathematics and statistics.

"The Distinguished Teaching Award is indeed an honor, especially for anyone committed to undergraduate education," said Gerber. "For me personally, it is also recognition of the emerging academic field of sustainability science. I feel privileged to be part of a revolution driven by students. They are the ones who are creating the demand. My work has largely been in response to their desire to re-create the world."

Since 1962, this prestigious and competitive award honors the individual achievements of faculty and graduate students campus-wide. Both current students and alumni are allowed to nominate faculty, and their opinions contribute to the final selection process. There are over 100 nominations each year that are considered in a two-step process of data collection and analysis by faculty, graduate and undergraduate student committees, who then make the award selections.

"I am deeply grateful to all of my students who have seen it fit to nominate me for this most prestigious teaching award," said Webley. "I also thank the committee for choosing me from among a distinguished list of hard working colleagues, all of whom are certainly worthy of this award."

The four faculty members were acknowledged at the Celebration of Teaching dinner on April 15, and the two teaching assistants will be recognized at a graduate school luncheon. All six of this year's winners will be recognized during both the undergraduate and graduate commencement ceremonies.

In addition, the winners receive a plaque and an award of $3,500 for faculty members and $2,000 for teaching assistants. The winners' names are also permanently

See AWARDS on page 2

Kellogg brings four onboard

Men's basketball recruits three coaches, Ginsburg to return

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Newly hired men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg kicked off the new season yesterday by announcing four members of his coaching staff.

Three of the coaches – Vance Walberg, Andy Allison and Shyrone Chatman – are new to UMass, while Adam Ginsburg will be returning for his fourth year as assistant coach.

Vance Walberg, the former Pepperdine head coach and creator of the "dribble-drive motion" offense that Kellogg is instituting for the upcoming season, will be joining Ginsburg as assistant coach.

Also joining the staff are Andy Allison as director of basketball operations and Shyrone Chatman as director of player personnel. Both were on the staff at the University of Memphis under former UMass coach John Calipari.

Kellogg is still searching for one more assistant, but is excited about the makeup of the group he has now.

"Adam is a very articulate, hard-working young coach, who I see as having a great future in the profession," Kellogg said. "In the short period I've been here, we have become very good friends and very compatible in the work environment. I love the relationships he has with his players and his tenacity in terms of recruiting."

"He just has a special way about him, which makes you want to have him around and be a part of your family."

Although only made official yesterday, Walberg was rumored to be on Kellogg's staff for weeks. Kellogg is looking forward to having Walberg's past head-coaching experience and innovative basketball mind on the staff next year.

"Vance brings an unbelievable knowledge for the game of basketball. He has tremendous enthusiasm, intensity and passion for what we are trying to do here at UMass in growing the basketball program," Kellogg said.

"He is part of the reason why my career is where it is with us implementing his style of play and offense at Memphis."

NEW PLAYERS ON BOARD?

With Ginsburg officially on staff, it appears that star recruit David Gibbs will keep his commitment to UMass. Once former coach Travis Ford left for Oklahoma State, Gibbs was uncertain where he wanted to play next season. But his strong relationship with Ginsburg, who had a hand in recruiting him to UMass, has apparently made up his mind.

Former University of Connecticut guard Doug Wiggins and Oregon State forward Sean Carter could also be candidates for Kellogg's roster. They were both on campus this weekend, receiving a tour.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

UMass men's basketball coach Derek Kellogg officially announced four members of his coaching staff yesterday.

$1.6 million awarded to UMass

Grant supports legal exchange with China

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts has received a $1.6 million grant from the United States Agency for International Development to continue supporting judicial education in China.

Working in cooperation with the Massachusetts Judges Conference and the American Bar Association, the University will use the funds to head up the Enhanced Judicial Education in China Project, a three-year in-depth presentation of Western approaches to evidence, discovery, court information and transparency and alternative dispute resolution techniques.

The award was given after eight years of rule of law programming directed by UMass in China.

"UMass has worked closely with academic partners in China, particularly in the realm of scientific and technological collaboration, but there are many other areas where we can and will work together," said UMass president Jack Wilson in a statement to the media. "This project will allow us to build on the judicial education and reform efforts that we have undertaken in China and elsewhere around the world."

Dr. Edmund Beard, senior advisor to the UMass Office of the President, has been named as the project's principal investigator. The John W. McCormack Graduate School's Center for Democracy and Development at UMass Boston – of which Beard was once the director – received the federal award.

In a statement Beard said the $1.6 million grant will "greatly expand our program's impact, scope and duration."

More than 10,000 students have participated in mock trials conducted according to Massachusetts law in eight different Chinese cities. A mock trial held according to Chinese law has been conducted in Boston as part of the program run in conjunction with the Massachusetts Association of Judges.

"This grant will allow us to engage with the Chinese judiciary system in a way that you can't do in a brief exchange visit," Beard said. "We are pleased that Tsinghua University, with whom UMass has already established a major partnership, will also be involved in this effort."

The judicial education program for Chinese students focuses on three areas, including applying rules of evidence in court procedures and developing enhanced court management of pretrial discovery, improving capacity to implement mediation practices and improving access to the courts for Chinese citizens.

Beard will be working alongside co-directors Adria Warren, of Foley and Lardner LLP, and R. Peter Anderson, a retired associate justice of the Boston Municipal Court.

Warren is the vice chair of the China Committee of the American Bar Associations Section of International Law. Anderson has also participated in rule of law programs in Mongolia, the Slovak Republic as well as previously in China. He has also served as co-leader of two UMass and Massachusetts Judges Conference-planned mock trial programs in China.

Beard has previously managed several U.S. State Department rule of law projects in China, Russia and across Eastern Europe. In addition to serving as a dean at UMass, he authored and contributed to three books and several articles on democratic political institutions and political behavior.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

Cole honors students, staff for contributions to University

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On May 14, Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole will recognize 21 staff members and student employees with awards for their contributions to the University of Massachusetts.

Ten students will be receiving the Gerald F. Scanlon Student Employee of the Year award: Julie Bach, Meghan Connors, Collin Easton, Ross Farinella, Steven Jouhanian, Samantha Lazo, Angela Markley, Johanna Metterville, Sarah Rulfs and Theodore Slowick.

"I'm really honored to receive it," said Bach, a senior who has worked for University Health Services (UHS) as a medical assistant for almost two years.

Bach added that she had even had to occasionally work overnight at UHS.

"It's really good to see hard work pay off," she said.

Bach will be attending UMass Medical in Worcester for her Master's degree after graduation.

Sarah Rulfs, who works in the Public Affairs Office in Whitmore, said she found out about the award in a letter.

"I think it's really flattering," said Rulfs. "I made a huge commitment to the office."

Rulfs is also a senior, majoring in music and theatre, with a minor in Spanish.

Rulfs said that her on-campus job helped her to get an internship that has led to a job as development assistant for a theater in New York for after graduation.

The 11 staff members receiving Chancellor's Citations are Robert Thrasher, Andrew Vernon, Frederick C. Zinn, Gregory W. Brown, Kate Hudson, Sally Linowski, Johanne Menard, Gladys Rodriguez, John S. Rogala and Michael Swain.

"It's an honor, because it comes from your peers," said Brown, who is the director of recruitment and transfer programming.

Brown is also a 1997 UMass alum and will have been working for the University for 10 years this September.

"It was a surprise," said Sally Linowski, associate director of health education, community outreach and marketing, who has been working for UMass for 14 years.

Linowski, who received a call from human resources informing her, said she was "honored and grateful" that she would be

Chancellor Cole has chosen 10 students to receive awards this year, receiving the award.

"It's always nice when work that you do gets recognized by other people," added Bryan Harvey, the associate provost for planning and assessment. Harvey attended UMass as an undergraduate student and has worked for the University since 1978.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 134
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Graphic Specialist Elaine Barba
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Staigin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegian News in 1902, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Meghan Murphy

Copy Editor
Amber Vaillancourt

Production Team
Michael Sarkes
Shaina Jackson

Web Editor
Steve Games

· Write for News
news@dailycollegian.com

Across the Nation Around the World

Second-place horse euthanized on track

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

Big Brown was pulling away from the field, accelerating with every powerful stride toward the finish line in the Kentucky Derby. The crowd of 157,770 was on its feet and cheering as the big, unbeaten, muscular bay crossed the line first, 4 3/4 lengths ahead of the filly Eight Belles.

It took a few minutes to sink in, but anyone watching those horses soon realized that one of them had fallen to the track.

"It's the filly," someone whispered. She went down about a quarter mile past the finish line.

In just a few minutes, the joy of the Derby and the promise of a new Triple Crown season were upended when Eight Belles was euthanized by injection on the track.

She had broken both front ankles and could not be saved.

"This horse showed you his heart," winning jockey Kent Desormeaux said, "and Eight Belles showed you her life for our enjoyment today. I'm deeply sympathetic to that team for their loss."

Eight Belles was attempting to become the fourth filly to win the Derby. Her owners chose to keep her out of Friday's Kentucky Oaks so she could run with the boys in the Derby. And run she did.

Big Brown's start from the outside post did little to hamper his charge when the field turned for home. Under the urging of Desormeaux, the 2-1 favorite cruised to an easy victory to become the seventh undefeated Derby winner. The last one was Barbaro in 2006.

That wasn't the only reason thoughts of Barbaro were hard to ignore on this Derby Day.

The breakdown brought back memories of the 2006 Preakness, where Barbaro shattered his right rear leg just after the start. The colt was euthanized months later, after developing laminitis from the catastrophic injuries.

In two weeks, Big Brown will race in the Preakness as the only 3-year-old with a chance to become the first Triple Crown champion since Affirmed in 1978.

Dr. Larry Bramlage, the Derby's on-call veterinarian, said the filly's injuries were too severe to even attempt to move her off the track.

"She didn't have a front leg to stand on to be splinted and hauled off in the ambulance, so she was euthanized," Bramlage said.

Trainer Larry Jones paid tribute to his fallen filly saying, "She ran the race of her life."

And he defended having her run against 19 colts in the Derby.

"It wasn't that. It wasn't the distance. It wasn't a big bumping match for her. She never got touched," he said. "She passed all those questions ... with flying colors. The race was over, all we had to do was pull up, come back and be happy. It just didn't happen."

All eyes were on Big Brown at the start. Dutrow called his colt the fastest of all and he proved it when Desormeaux gunned him close the lead on the mad dash to the first turn. Desormeaux did a masterful job of keeping Big Brown free and clear of any traffic issues.

"I don't even know what we just did," Dutrow said. "I can't express my feelings, only that it was one of the most incredible feelings I ever had, and I can't wait to feel it again."

Cyclone devastates Myanmar

Death toll may exceed initial expectations

YANGON, Myanmar – The death toll from a devastating cyclone in Myanmar could reach more than 10,000 in the low-lying area where the storm wreaked the most havoc, the country's foreign minister warned Monday.

Tropical Cyclone Nargis hit the Southeast Asian country, also known as Burma, early Saturday with winds of up to 120 mph. It knocked out electricity to the country's largest city, Yangon, and left hundreds of thousands of people homeless.

Some sought refuge at Buddhist monasteries while others lined up Monday to buy candles, which had doubled in price, and water since the lack of electricity-driven pumps had left most households dry.

Myanmar is not known to have an adequate disaster warning system and many rural buildings are constructed of thatch, bamboo and other materials easily destroyed by fierce storms.

"The government misled people. They could have warned us about the severity of the coming cyclone so we could be better prepared," said Thin Thin, a grocery store owner.

The radio station broadcasting from the country's capital, Naypyitaw, said 3,939 people had been killed. Another 2,879 people were unaccounted for in a single town, Bogalay, in the country's low-lying Irrawaddy River delta area.

But Foreign Minister Nyan Win told Yangon-based diplomats that the death toll could rise to more than 10,000 in the Irrawaddy delta, according to Asian diplomats at the meeting who spoke on condition of anonymity because it was held behind closed doors.

–Associated Press

Holub advocates greater aid for public higher education

Chancellor from page 1

Brian Tedder/Collegian

Newly arrived chancellor Holub answered questions on his plans for the future of the University of Massachusetts yesterday.

funding, undergraduate education and student safety, among others.

Holub spoke first about public higher education, for which he said he has a "particular passion."

"Public higher education has experienced a steady ascendency," said Holub. "There are more students educated at public universities every year, and the percentage of students who are educated at public universities increases every year."

"Public higher education in my view is the most powerful dimension of the American Dream, which allows individuals with talent and ambition to achieve success no matter where they start in life," said Holub.

Holub said that an investment in public higher education provides – better than private institutions – an opportunity to "alleviate health issues, augment the wealth of the state and even to increase things such as volunteerism."

"Truly, public higher education is the key to a citizenry that is healthy, wealthy and wise," he said.

Holub also spoke about funding, a particularly large issue for the University after the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) brought several hundred UMass students to Boston to lobby for affordable public higher education.

"At the end of the day, it's just as important or more important to use the funding that you have in as effective a manner as possible. My experience is that if you use the funding that you have effectively, that you are going to be able to secure more funding, both private and public funding, more easily," he added. "So I think those kinds of decisions are going to be paramount for me."

When asked what he thought was the primary issue facing the University, Holub was undecided.

"It's difficult for me to say precisely because I haven't been on campus and I haven't spoken with enough people to see what I'm going to have to do," he said. "I can say that in the next year, the most important thing for me will be to put together a good team. There are a number of people in interim positions; I'll need to find people for permanent positions."

Holub said he was unfamiliar with security issues that have arisen in the past after sporting events, but spoke of the importance of preserving student safety.

"Safety on campus of course is a rather large issue, and relates to more than winning championships. It relates to a lot of rather tragic events that have happened on other campuses during the last year or so, and it's something I think leaders of all campuses have to take very seriously," he said.

Addressing concerns that improving UMass as a research institution would take focus away from its undergraduate programs, Holub said he was confident that the two could coexist, and in fact compliment each other.

"I don't think there's an antagonism between great teaching and research," he said. "More often than not, I think that the people that are doing pioneering and cutting-edge work in their fields are better teachers," he said, "because they're very excited about the research and very excited about communicating it to students."

President Wilson said later that "one of the things that impressed me about [Holub] is that when he was at Berkeley he actually increased the contact between senior faculty and undergraduates."

"He facilitated all these undergraduate programs to get students in contact with faculty and into undergraduate research," said Wilson.

Holub said that affordability is another important issue for the University to address in order to improve the quality of the education it provides.

"We don't want students not to be able to come to this campus because they're too poor for this campus," said Holub, adding that the most important way to prevent this from happening is to pay attention to the structure of financial aid.

Holub met with students, faculty and community members at a reception after the press conference, though few students were in attendance.

Most recently a provost and vice chancellor at the University of Tennessee, Holub also spent 27 years at the University of California Berkeley, first as a faculty member in the German department and later holding several administrative positions. In 2003, he was named dean of Berkley's Undergraduate Division of the College of Letters and Sciences.

Holub's specialization is in 19th and 20th century German intellectual, cultural and literary history. He has researched and written on the poet Heinrich Heine, philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche and social theorist Jürgen Habermas. He holds an undergraduate degree in natural science, two M.A.s in comparative literature and German and a Ph.D. in German. He was born in Neptune, N.J.

Holub will replace Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, who has filled the position vacated by John V. Lombardi last fall.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com

Recipients 'honored' by prestigious award inscribed on a display wall in the Campus Center.

Awards from page 1

"I'm delighted and honored," said Minear. "I'm grateful to the students who nominated me and the students, current and former, who wrote letters on my behalf. There are a lot of excellent teachers in the history department and the college. I accept the award with them in mind."

In past years, only three faculty members and two teaching assistants are selected to receive the award. This year a fourth faculty member was added to the list by Provost Charlena Seymour in order to make note of the efforts of non-tenure track instructors, according to a press release.

"We are privileged as faculty members to be in a position to assist in the process of directing and molding these inquisitive minds as they search for their niche in a world that eagerly awaits their contribution," added Webley. "To be recognized in this fashion by my students who both challenge and inspire me each day to strive for educational excellence is the greatest validation and honor that a teacher could ever receive, and I will continue to work hard to be worthy of it."

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu.

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking hard-working, motivated
undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley
or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

Recognizing humanity

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

Countless bullet holes penetrated the grey walls of abandoned apartment buildings as we walked in heavy silence throughout a Jewish settlement in the West Bank. "Gas the Arabs" was written on a wall in graffiti, and anti-Semitic messages were displayed at every street corner.

While touring the West Bank with American University in Cairo friends in the middle of my spring break, which also included stops in Israel and Jordan, I was exposed to the darker sides of humanity manifested by the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

We first visited Ramallah, the de facto capital of Palestine, where we saw the grave of former Palestinian Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat as well as the current headquarters of the Palestinian Authority.

In general, Ramallah was noticeably more industrialized than either my AUC friends or I had anticipated. Its downtown was bustling with countless Palestinians roaming the sidewalks searching for the perfect shawerma or comfortable pair of shoes. I, myself, downed freshly squeezed orange juice that tasted better than any fruit drink I have ever consumed in America.

In addition, although the presence of hijab-wearing women was evident, there were many Palestinian women without veils who wore clothes similar to those sported by Western females. In this fashion sense, Ramallah is much more Westernized than Cairo is.

Next we headed to Hebron, another busy city near where Jewish settlements were established by the Israeli government. First we passed through a small checkpoint, manned by two Israeli soldiers wielding guns. They checked our American passports and then let us through to the settlement areas.

This is where we noticed the endless bullet holes and ethnically derogatory signs. Hardly any people walked in the streets as we passed by the settlements.

Did my experiences traveling throughout the West Bank change my mindset about the Palestinian–Israeli conflict?

The eerie silence and lack of movement in the neighborhood resembled a ghost town haunted by a sepulchral past.

Throughout our walk we were confronted multiple times by Israeli soldiers, each instance in a respectful manner. The Israeli government is extremely cautious about movement of Arabs within the settlements, since Palestinians have been accused of inciting violence and targeting innocent Israelis in the West Bank.

After we passed by one group of Israeli soldiers, I saw from the corner of my eye, a Palestinian being interrogated by the same two soldiers, again in a relatively polite way.

Afterwards we arrived in Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus, and visited the Church of the Nativity. Not even five minutes from the church was a small Arab marketplace, where we could easily see large posters on buildings of Palestinian men proudly waving their weapons in the air.

These posters are printed by jihadist movements, like the terrorist group Hamas, and political parties, like Fatah, and its paramilitary proxies. The Arabic writing on these posters labeled the Palestinian men who had died in fighting the Israeli military as martyrs.

The prevalence of these images expanded dramatically in Nablus, a city north of Ramallah where heavy fighting between Israel and Palestine broke out a few years ago.

Hamas and Islamic jihad posters lined the walls of buildings everywhere – downtown, side streets, school zones, etc. Because I came from a background where I never had similar looking posters, I was shocked at the public displays of pictures of weapons.

What was most tragic was the juxtaposition of smiling and laughing children who were no more than six years old walking through an alleyway on the way home from school, with these posters lining the alleyway.

At the very least, Nablus authorities could have removed these posters from school zones. But their failure to do so and the militant/political movements response for putting them up there in the first place, is an awful commentary on the indoctrination of impressionable youth within Palestinian society.

That being said, the signs of ethnic hatred of Arabs I observed while walking throughout Jewish settlements is as equally as tragic. In fact, protective netting had been placed previously over Arab marketplaces we passed through in Hebron because Jews from apartments above had thrown bricks and other dangerous objects down at the Arab quarters.

We could clearly see these bricks and other piles of trash resting on top of the netting, knowing full well that without this protection, the Arabs living in this area would be threatened.

Without comprehending at the time how contentious the area's environment was, I learned three days ago a Palestinian was killed in Hebron by Israeli soldiers after refusing their orders to lay down his knife.

Did my experiences traveling throughout the West Bank change my mindset about the Palestinian-Israeli conflict? I still believe the Israeli military does not target innocents nearly as frequently as Hamas does.

Ideologically, however, the deeply ingrained prejudices of both Palestinians and Jews against each other, as evidenced by the bullet holes and "Gas the Arabs" signs, will undermine any attempts for a permanent peace. And until both sides see the other side as people first, and not objectified, faceless enemies, any hopes for long-term tranquility are just that – empty hopes.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Spring let down

Joshua H. Wilder

The last few weeks of spring semester can be a stressful time for everyone here at UMass. Between cramming for final exams, writing term papers and pondering the uncertainty of impending graduation for seniors, May is definitely a hectic time.

On the bright side, the end of the semester is also filled with time to celebrate the closing out of another solid year – and to welcome summertime. Along with the above mentioned rites and rituals of the semester's close, students can come to expect a "one last hurrah" event to send everyone home on a high note.

Here at UMass that event is known as Spring Concert, and it is supposed to exemplify everything great about a spring weekend at a university.

Instead of being cooped up in the library under harsh fluorescent lights, co-eds can revel in the nice weather, have a few tasty ales – if they are of age, of course – and enjoy an evening full of great tunes.

An event of this nature is supposed to bring the entire student body together in a sign of solidarity and civic pride, and hopefully no rioting. Considering the significance and symbolic nature of the concert, one would think the administration would pull out all the stops in ensuring that an all-star lineup hits the stage, right?

Well, not exactly.

While diverse and nostalgic, for some reason this year's lineup seemed a bit off. Instead of finding bands that push the envelope for creativity and ability, it seemed like the administration simply closed their eyes and picked names out of a hat.

Take alternative pop-emo-punk rockers Jimmy Eat World. While the band has enjoyed some moderate success over the years, perhaps their biggest accomplishment was the track they contributed to the soundtrack for "Never Been Kissed," a forgettable Drew Barrymore movie. And while the band is touring to support its new album "Chase the Light," you would be hard pressed to find anyone at UMass listening to it.

It seems peculiar that the University put together such a dysfunctional and unappealing show.

Next on the list is Paramore, a pop-punk collaboration with a sound very similar to that of Jimmy Eat World. Interestingly enough, the two bands have been touring together since April.

And while the band has been nominated for a Grammy, some questions remain. Is this band playing only because Jimmy Eat World is also? And better yet, how would a band generally known for softer, more melodic music be able to keep a basketball arena full of drunken students interested for a whole set?

Finally, here comes the true meat and potatoes of the lineup, literally. Rounding out this list is none other than "acclaimed" rapper Fat Joe. This lyrical wizard goes by various nicknames such as Joey Crack and Fat Joe da Gangsta, and has touched us all with his words of wisdom over the years. My roommate, a rap connoisseur of sorts, upon hearing that Fat Joe would be playing, simply threw up his arms in desperation and replied, "Are you kidding me?"

Granted, musical taste is a subjective emotion, that is, everyone has their own likes and dislikes. Yet it seems peculiar that the University put together such a dysfunctional and unappealing show. Considering the resume of bands that have played here in years past, it seems as though we all got burned.

The Mullins Center stage has hosted some acts that make Fat Joe look, uh, well fat and useless. The Red Hot Chili Peppers brought the roof down in 2003, and jamband legends Phish played two great nights here in 1995. Other acts include Jurassic Five and legendary piano player Elton John.

Obviously it is impossible to put together a concert that would make every student happy. No matter how much work the administration put into the search and how many big names they secured, there would always be jerks like me who complain about it. Nobody can fault them for trying, but in this case they really dropped the ball.

Who did they get the band ideas from? It was certainly not the student body. Polling students on who they would like to see at their own concert seems like the fairest way to go about it. If 40 percent of students said they want Fat Joe, bring him on. Is that how this whole operation went down? That's doubtful.

The University clearly has the funds to bring some great artists to the Spring Concert, or any concert, for that matter. If they can put up groundbreaking new buildings at the drop of a hat, surely they can foot the bill for this as well.

The University of New Hampshire, for example, had Snoop Dogg perform just this past weekend. If they are able to convince Snoop to leave sunny California for the sticks up in New Hampshire, we can get other great acts to come tip cows out in Amherst.

Unfortunately for this humble columnist, my last spring concert was a dud. But hopefully these words will inspire underclassman to work to avoid such a catastrophe from ever happening again. Heed these words – your eardrums depend on it.

Josh Wilder is Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

Gas-guzzling yuppies, beware

Devon Courtney

At this point in time, I don't understand how a self-reliant college student could possibly be financially capable of owning a car. Gas prices, just like Reverend Jeremiah Wright's career, reached their highest point last week. Compare that with the value of the dollar (wait a minute – what value?), and you've got a recipe for making mobility impractical.

Yesterday, I went to fill my gas tank being only casually aware of the slight possibility that I may soon have to file for bankruptcy. After looking at my total, I felt genuinely depressed. I proceeded to go inside and see the clerk and asked if I could write a check for $43 million to HESS Corporation.

It got me thinking as I coasted in neutral back to my parking space in lot 13. If there are people like me who feel this way about gasoline, why isn't there more urgency behind alternative fuel research?

Despite not being qualified, I decided that I would conduct my own research. Through extremely scientific reasoning, I decided that methane would be an awesome fuel. Like butane and propane, they all end in "ane," and therefore must be flammable.

If butane was able to be utilized as a stinky wonder fuel, I know for sure that my roommate would be able to travel to anywhere in the world. He could probably corner the global energy market every time I see the La Piazza delivery guy leaving my building.

I thought of some other fuels we could put in our cars, but none of them made any sense. For example, I noticed at actual college parties that Bacardi 151 burns very easily.

In fact, I noticed that most hard liquor burns on the way down, but I digress. I did some more actual research and found out that ethyl alcohol is one of the most plentiful substances in the known universe and has the highest concentration in Southwest.

I did some more thinking and came to a conclusion with several seeming non-sequitors. The first random thought was there is an obesity epidemic in the United States and one out of three adults are clinically obese. The second thought I realized was most gerbils have wheels in their cages that they run on. The third thing was that I was hungry.

Using the first two realizations, I reasoned that killing two birds with one stone (the two birds being obesity and the desperate need to come up with a solution to foreign oil dependence funnier than "switchgrass") was very possible.

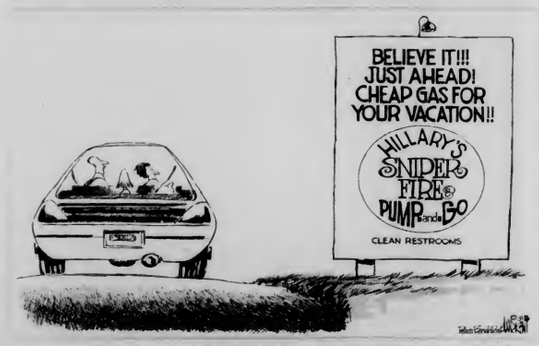
If there are people like me who feel this way about gasoline, why isn't there more urgency behind alternative fuel research?

If people were required to run for a certain amount of time on large gerbil wheels to charge up their cars, there would be less obesity and a whole lot more of people being late for things.

Gasoline and electric hybrids are the newest craze in the car market, yet for some reason they're not selling as well as the rugged and unnecessarily large sport utility vehicle.

Ignoring the fact that the phrase "sport utility vehicle" does not make sense and that less than three percent of them actually leave the pavement, (I'm not even going to get into fuel consumption, fooled you) people are buying them anyway.

I discovered why hybrid cars are a lost cause and destined to live forever. In some ways, they are literally in the SUV's shadow. First of all, they're ugly as sin, thus making it uncool to help the environment.



Secondly, California gives hybrid cars carpool lane privileges, which drivers like because the lack of traffic is conducive to travel at speeds above 65 miles per hour. By the way, at that speed, hybrid cars use just as much fuel as non-hybrids, which comprises the textbook definition of "defeating the purpose."

I only ask that these ideas are given some thought, simply because actual scientists believe oil isn't infinite. Many people don't believe this, but this idea haunts me. I've seen things run out before.

It kind of makes me angry now that I think about it. You might assume that if gasoline is really running out people like me are going to use less of it and try to be more creative about how they get from place to place.

